

Über dieses Buch

Dies ist ein digitales Exemplar eines Buches, das seit Generationen in den Regalen der Bibliotheken aufbewahrt wurde, bevor es von Google im Rahmen eines Projekts, mit dem die Bücher dieser Welt online verfügbar gemacht werden sollen, sorgfältig gescannt wurde.

Das Buch hat das Urheberrecht überdauert und kann nun öffentlich zugänglich gemacht werden. Ein öffentlich zugängliches Buch ist ein Buch, das niemals Urheberrechten unterlag oder bei dem die Schutzfrist des Urheberrechts abgelaufen ist. Ob ein Buch öffentlich zugänglich ist, kann von Land zu Land unterschiedlich sein. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher sind unser Tor zur Vergangenheit und stellen ein geschichtliches, kulturelles und wissenschaftliches Vermögen dar, das häufig nur schwierig zu entdecken ist.

Gebrauchsspuren, Anmerkungen und andere Randbemerkungen, die im Originalband enthalten sind, finden sich auch in dieser Datei – eine Erinnerung an die lange Reise, die das Buch vom Verleger zu einer Bibliothek und weiter zu Ihnen hinter sich gebracht hat.

Nutzungsrichtlinien

Google ist stolz, mit Bibliotheken in partnerschaftlicher Zusammenarbeit öffentlich zugängliches Material zu digitalisieren und einer breiten Masse zugänglich zu machen. Öffentlich zugängliche Bücher gehören der Öffentlichkeit, und wir sind nur ihre Hüter. Nichtsdestotrotz ist diese Arbeit kostspielig. Um diese Ressource weiterhin zur Verfügung stellen zu können, haben wir Schritte unternommen, um den Missbrauch durch kommerzielle Parteien zu verhindern. Dazu gehören technische Einschränkungen für automatisierte Abfragen.

Wir bitten Sie um Einhaltung folgender Richtlinien:

- + Nutzung der Dateien zu nichtkommerziellen Zwecken Wir haben Google Buchsuche für Endanwender konzipiert und möchten, dass Sie diese Dateien nur für persönliche, nichtkommerzielle Zwecke verwenden.
- + Keine automatisierten Abfragen Senden Sie keine automatisierten Abfragen irgendwelcher Art an das Google-System. Wenn Sie Recherchen über maschinelle Übersetzung, optische Zeichenerkennung oder andere Bereiche durchführen, in denen der Zugang zu Text in großen Mengen nützlich ist, wenden Sie sich bitte an uns. Wir fördern die Nutzung des öffentlich zugänglichen Materials für diese Zwecke und können Ihnen unter Umständen helfen.
- + Beibehaltung von Google-Markenelementen Das "Wasserzeichen" von Google, das Sie in jeder Datei finden, ist wichtig zur Information über dieses Projekt und hilft den Anwendern weiteres Material über Google Buchsuche zu finden. Bitte entfernen Sie das Wasserzeichen nicht.
- + Bewegen Sie sich innerhalb der Legalität Unabhängig von Ihrem Verwendungszweck müssen Sie sich Ihrer Verantwortung bewusst sein, sicherzustellen, dass Ihre Nutzung legal ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass ein Buch, das nach unserem Dafürhalten für Nutzer in den USA öffentlich zugänglich ist, auch für Nutzer in anderen Ländern öffentlich zugänglich ist. Ob ein Buch noch dem Urheberrecht unterliegt, ist von Land zu Land verschieden. Wir können keine Beratung leisten, ob eine bestimmte Nutzung eines bestimmten Buches gesetzlich zulässig ist. Gehen Sie nicht davon aus, dass das Erscheinen eines Buchs in Google Buchsuche bedeutet, dass es in jeder Form und überall auf der Welt verwendet werden kann. Eine Urheberrechtsverletzung kann schwerwiegende Folgen haben.

Über Google Buchsuche

Das Ziel von Google besteht darin, die weltweiten Informationen zu organisieren und allgemein nutzbar und zugänglich zu machen. Google Buchsuche hilft Lesern dabei, die Bücher dieser Welt zu entdecken, und unterstützt Autoren und Verleger dabei, neue Zielgruppen zu erreichen. Den gesamten Buchtext können Sie im Internet unter <http://books.google.com> durchsuchen.

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

36105010104052

Acquired through the
HOOVER INSTITUTION

STANFORD UNIVERSITY LIBRARIES

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

VOL. LXXX.
JANUARY TO JUNE,
1882.

PRINTED & PUBLISHED BY
GEORGE C. LEIGHTON 198 STRAND
LONDON.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY LIBRARIES

STACKS

JUL 10 1968

.012

127

V. 80

127

INDEX TO ENGRAVINGS IN VOL. LXXX.

FROM JANUARY 7 TO JUNE 24, 1882.

EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS.

Albany, Portraits of the Duke and Duchess of, April 29
B. g. Jan. 28
Children's Hospital, The, March 18
Deal Leap, A. Coloured Picture, March 25 [The Frontispiece]
Epping Forest (Opening of) by the Queen: Views in the Forest, 446-447, May 6
Funeral of Lord Frederick Cavendish in Edensor Churchyard, Chatsworth, 502-503
Garibaldi, Portrait of, June 10
Helena (Princess) of Waldeck, Duchess of Albany, April 29
Insurrection in the Herzegovina: Insurgents of the Crivooie Returning Home, April 15
Jeannette Search Expedition, The: Sketches by Our Special Artist in North-Eastern Siberia, June 17
Leicester (Views of) and the New Park, 530-531
Leopold (Prince), Duke of Albany, April 29
Longfellow, The late Henry W., April 1
Pandora, June 24
Queen, Attempts on the Life of the (with Portrait), March 11
Rabbit Hunt, The, June 3
Ripon Cathedral, April 23
Rochester Cathedral, Jan. 7
Street (The late Mr. George Edmund), R.A., Architect, Jan. 14
Volunteer Review at Portsmouth (Ten Illustrations), 345-347
Wales (The Prince of) at the Savage Club, March 4

A

Aberdeen Public Market, Burning of the, 433
Aesthetic Quadrille Party, The, 209
Agricultural Hall, Horse Show at the: The Arabs in the Ring, 524-525
Albert (Royal) Hall, Sketches at a Fancy-Dress Ball at the, 212
Ambulance Drill at Guildhall, 96
Arctic Exploration—
Eira Harbour, Franz Josef Land, the supposed Winter Quarters of Mr. Leigh Smith, 13
Eira (The), Mr. Leigh Smith's Yacht, 9
Jeannette (The), Mr. J. Gordon Bennett's Vessel in the Pack of Ice, 12
Kara (Departure of the) to Search for Mr. Leigh Smith, 565

Arms—

Beaumont, Sir G. H., 602
Bourne, Sir James, 294
Brown, Sir William, 626
Christison, Sir Robert, 115
Clerke, Sir W. H., 170
Clifford, Admiral Sir W., 364
Conyngham, the Marquis, 578
Dashwood, Sir E. H., 504
Dyer, Sir S. H., 318
Erskine, Lord, 348
Gipps, Sir E. T., 394
Grafton, Duke of, 554
Hort, General Sir J. J., 48
Lonsdale, Earl of, 170
Lurgan, Lord, 70
Mostyn, Sir P., 532
Netterville, Viscount, 394
Robertson, Lord, 270
Threipland, Sir P. M., 476
Wilton, The Earl of, 270
Wrexall, Sir H. H. W., 394
Arms (Where the Seizure of) Took Place, Rydon-crescent, Clerkewell, 618
Ashburnham House (The Garden of), Westminster, 406
Austria (A Day with the Empress of) and Sir Watkin Wynn's Hounds, 184

B

Ball at the Royal Albert Hall, Sketches at a Fancy-Dress, 212
Calico Printers', at the Manchester Townhall, Sketches at the, 104
Juvenile, at the Manchester Townhall, 97
Regimental, of the Honourable Artillery Company, 185
Balloon Voyage (The Attempted) Across the Channel, 241

Bazaar and Fancy Fair (Masonic) at Dublin, 352
Beaumont and English's Compressed-Air Tunnelling Machine, 224
Beaumont Compressed-Air Locomotive used in the Channel Tunnel Works, 218
Beg! Extra Supplement, Jan. 28
Bell (The Great) for St. Paul's: A Rest on the Road, 517
Arrangements for Getting the Bell into St. Paul's Cathedral, 517
Procession on the Road to London, 516
Raising the Bell in the Tower of St. Paul's Cathedral, 537
Testing the, 25
Berne, Grand Historic Procession at, 500
Blind Minstrel (The) and his Daughter, 33
Boat-Race, The Oxford and Cambridge. (See Oxford and Cambridge Boat-Race.)
Booth New Townhall, 516
Bosnia and Herzegovina, Sketches in, 140, 149
Boston, Festivities at: Beginning the Construction of the New Dock, 502
Bradford, 621
Muningham Hall and Park, 621
Mayor (The) of, 631
New Technical School, Opened by the Prince of Wales, 617
Views in, 624-625, 628
Buenos Aires (View of), with the Exhibition Building, 261
Burdwan, Bengal, Installation of the Maharajah of, 80
Burke, Funeral of Mr. T. H., 490
Procession (The) Entering Glasnevin Cemetery, Dublin, 490
Burmah (British), Visit of the Viceroy of India to: Sketches at Rangoon, 128
Burmese Ballet-Girls as they Performed before the Viceroy of India, 153

C

Cairo. (See Egypt.)
Calico Printer's Ball at the Manchester Townhall, Sketches at the, 104
Cambridge (Duke of) Inspecting Penitents of Chelsea Hospital, 159
Canterbury, New Zealand, Christchurch Cathedral, 386
Cape Finisterre, where the Douro was Sunk by a Collision, 383
Carnival (The) at Düsseldorf, 229
Cart-Horse Show at the Agricultural Hall, 226
Casket Presented to Mr. Gladstone by the City of London, 128
Cavendish (The Murder of Lord Frederick) and Mr. T. H. Burke in Phoenix Park, Dublin—
Car Drivers' Meeting in Phoenix Park, 483
Chapelisod, near Phoenix Park, 493
Conveying the Dead to Stevens's Hospital, 449
Dragging the River Liffey, to Search for the Daggers Used in the Murders, 488
People Visiting the Scene of the Murders, 460
Phoenix Park, Map of, 454
Residence of the Chief Secretary in Phoenix Park, 456
Residence of the Under-Secretary in Phoenix Park, 453
Scene of the Murders in Phoenix Park, 449, 489
Spot where the Murders took place in Phoenix Park: View Looking towards the Phoenix Monument, 484-485
Viceregal Lodge, Phoenix Park, the Residence of the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 489
Funeral of Lord Frederick Cavendish in Edensor Churchyard, Chatsworth, 502-503
Lying in State of the Body of Lord F. Cavendish at Chatsworth, 477
Procession (The) Passing Through Chatsworth Park to Edensor Churchyard, 481
Funeral of Mr. T. H. Burke, 490
Procession (The) Entering Glasnevin Cemetery, Dublin, 490

Channel (The) Tunnel Works at Dover, 217
Beaumont and English's Compressed-Air Tunnelling Machine, 224
Beaumont Compressed-Air Locomotive, 218
View from the Admiralty Pier Showing how the Tunnel is Defended by Existing Works, 220-221
View showing where the Shaft is Sunk, 224
Chelsea Hospital, Bicentenary of: the Duke of Cambridge Inspecting the Pensioners, 189
Child (Body of a) Found in Excavating a Street in Pompeii, 228
Children's Hospital, March 18.
China, Funeral Procession of the late Empress of, 84
Chinese Festival (A) at Sourabaya, Java, 140
Christchurch Cathedral, Canterbury, New Zealand, 386
Christie and Manson's, The Hamilton Palace Sale at Messrs.: Works of Decorative Art, 608
Claremont, Mausoleum of Princess Charlotte at, 408
Clenkenwell (Stable at Bydon-crescent), where the Seizure of Arms took place, 618
College of Music (The Royal), Meeting at St. James's Palace to Establish, 244-245 Colliery Explosion: Volunteers to the Rescue. Extra Supplement, Feb. 25
Colombo, Environs of, 96
Commons, The House of. (See House of Commons.)
Conversations at the Mansion House, 241
Coursing-Matches, 180
Crystal Palace, Electric Exhibition at the. (See Electric.)

D

Dartmoor, The Harrier Week on, 463
Derby, Shotover, the Winner of the, 536
Dover, The Channel Tunnel Works at. (See Channel Tunnel.)
"Dramatic Notes, 1861-2," Illustrations from, 222
Deal Leap, A. Coloured Picture. Extra Supplement, March 25
Dublin Exhibition Palace, Masonic Bazaar in the, 352
Chapelisod, near Phoenix Park, 493
Murder of Lord F. Cavendish and Mr. T. H. Burke in Phoenix Park. See Cavendish.
Residence of the Chief Secretary in Phoenix Park, 456
Residence of the Under-Secretary for Ireland in Phoenix Park, 453
Viceregal Lodge, Phoenix Park, 489
Düsseldorf, The Carnival at, 229

E

Easter in Russia, 339
Eclipse of the Sun (Station for Observing the) at Sohag on the Nile, 537
Eddystone Lighthouse (Opening of the New) by the Duke of Edinburgh, 505
Douglass's Six-wick Burner, 1882, 508
Section of the New Tower, 508
Section of the Old Tower, 508
Smeaton's Chandelier, 1759, 508
United States' Ships of War Saluting the Duke of Edinburgh, 505
Edinburgh, The Duke of, inspecting the New Dock at Milford Haven, 276
In the Isle of Man: Castle Rushen, 125
Lively, The, Entering Douglas Harbour, 125
Peel Castle, 125
Port St. Mary, 125
Opening the New Eddystone Lighthouse. (See Eddystone.)
Visit to the Shetland Isles, 92
Egypt, As it Is, 597, 604, 612
Alexandria, Street Sketches in, 618
Arab Baker (An) in Cairo, 600
Corn Merchant (A) in Cairo, 600
Ploughing in Lower Egypt, 601

Egypt, The Crisis in—Alexandria from the Sea, 609
Grand Square in, 608
Plan of, 623
British Fleet Available to Defend our Interests in the East, 564-565
Cairo (From) to Beni-Souef, 557
Cairo, Sketches in, 512
English and French Sailors at Alexandria, 606
Guard-House (A) of Soldiers of the Line in Cairo, 589
Nile Sketches, 557
Santon (A) Preaching in the Street of Sittah Zeineb, Cairo, 561
Types of the Egyptian Army, 533
Egypt, Our Special Artist in, 380
Character Sketches Along the Road from Alexandria to Cairo, 284, 293
Pyramids (The) During an Inundation of the Nile, 540
Third-Class Carriage (A) on the Railway Between Alexandria and Cairo, 277
Egyptian Antiquities, Discovery of: Twelve Illustrations, 113, 116, 117, 118, 120.
Election Sketches in the North Riding, 89
Electric (International) Exhibition at the Crystal Palace, 204, 205, 268, 272
Great Chandelier in Alhambra Court, 201
King's Electric Signal for Railways, 266
Epping Forest, The Queen's Visit to: Her Majesty Receiving the Address of the Corporation, 457
Leaving Chingford, 460
Scene (The) at High Beech, 470
Views in the Forest, 446-447.
Extra Supplement, May 6
Exhibition at Buenos Aires: View of the Building, 261
Exhibition of the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours, Sketches from the, 585

F

"Fan," the Pet Antelope of the 2nd Batt. Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, 309
Fancy-Dress Ball (Sketches at a) at the Royal Albert Hall, 212
Fine Arts—
Marmion's Defiance to Douglas, 193
Orphan, The, 392-393
Finisterre (Cape), where the Douro was Sunk by a Collision, 383
Fisher-Girl (A) of Lisbon, 406
Football, A Maul in Goal, 41
Futh, Proposed Railway Bridge over the, 76
Elevation and Sectional Plan of, 76
Fossil Remains (Discovery of) at Leghorn, Tuscany, 85
Freemasons' Lodge in Morocco, Brethren of the First, 365
Funeral of Lord Frederick Cavendish. (See Cavendish.)
Of Mr. T. H. Burke, 490
Procession Entering Glasnevin Cemetery, Dublin, 490
Of Garibaldi. (See Garibaldi.)
Of Longfellow at Boston. (See Longfellow.)

G

Garibaldi, The Funeral of—
Body (The) Lying in State, 561
Caperna on the Day of the Funeral, 588
Conveying a Bust of Garibaldi to the Capitol of Rome, 617
Grove where the Speeches were Delivered, 588
Place where the Body was to have been Cremated, 561
Gladstone's Casket Presented to the Right Hon. W. E. by the City of London, 138
Goats (Pyrenean) in London: Selling the Milk, 569
"Great Paul" (Journey of) to London. (See Bell.)
Great Yarmouth. (See Yarmouth.)
Greek Church of Agia Sophia, Moscow-road, Consecration of the, 138

H

Hamilton Palace Sale (The) at Messrs. Christie and Manson's: Works of Decorative Art, 608
Hamilton Palace, Scotland, the Seat of the Duke of Hamilton, 568
Hamilton Palace, from Bothwell, 563
Harrier Week on Dartmoor, 463
Herzegovina and Bosnia, Sketches in, 149
Herzegovina, The Insurrection in—
Ambuscade, An, 301
Bringing in a Prisoner to an Austrian Gendarme Station, 293
Fort Dragalj, 320
Fort Ledenice, 320
Inspecting the Ammunition of an Austrian Regiment, 308
Insurgents of the Crivooie Returning Home, April 15
Insurgents Retiring with their Wounded and Dead Comrades, 308
Panorama of the Illyrian Theatre of Insurrectionary War, 320
Skirmish with an Austrian Outpost, 295
Historic Procession at Berne, Switzerland, 500
Hogs (Pigmy) from India at the Zoological Gardens, 541
Hong-Kong Festivities in Honour of the Sailor Prince, 188
Honourable Artillery Company, Regimental Ball of the, 185
Hoo Railway, Views on the Hundred of, 325
Horse-Herd (A) Seeking Shelter from a Snowstorm in Central Asia, 48
Horse Show at the Agricultural Hall: The Arabs in the Ring, 524-525
Houndsditch, Old Clothes Exchange, Phila Buildings, 72
House of Commons, Sketches in the, 121, 137
Bar (The) of the House, 161
Division (A) in the: Members Passing the Tellers, 163
Division Barrier and Lobby, 163, 169
In the Lobby of the, 283
Leader (The) of Fourth Party, 163
Members' Private Corridor, 161
Mr. Biggar, 161
Mr. O'Donnell, 161
Out in the Cold, 134
Petition Bag, The, 165
Post Office, The, 165
Question-Time, 172
Reporters' Gallery, The, 173
Reporters' Room, The, 173
Smoking-Room, The New, 161
Tea-Room, The, 164
Tellers (The) Reading the Result of a Division, 169
"The House Left Sitting," 313
Hundred of Hoo Railway, North Kent, Views on the, 325
Hyde Park-Corner, Plan of the Projected Improvement at, 367

I

India (Visit of the Viceroy of) to British Burmah. (See Burmah.)
Insurrection (The) in Herzegovina. (See Herzegovina.)
Inverness New Municipal Buildings, Opened by the Duke of Edinburgh, 98
Ireland, State of—
Bourke (Scene of the Murder of Mr. Walter) and Corporal Wallace, at Ardahan, County Galway, 564
Demonstration on Mr. Parnell's Estate, Avondale, 20-21
Landlords' Meeting at the Exhibition Building, Dublin, 29
Seizure of Arms in Dublin: The Prisoners before the Magistrate, 24
Prisoners in Police Cell, 21
Working (The) of the Land Act, 28
Isle of Man, The Duke of Edinburgh in the. (See Edinburgh.)

J

Jeannette Relief Expedition, Our Artist with the, June 17, 290-291, 474-475
House of a Russian Exile at Werholanah, Siberia, 452

Jeannette Relief Expedition, Our Artist with the (continued)—
Hut at the Lena Mouth, where Lieutenant Danenhauer Lived Six Weeks, 509
Kirghis Bridal Party, A, 268
Kirghis (Group of) in Front of their Felt Tent, 268
New York Herald Express (The) on the Road, 148
Sketches on the Way to Siberia, 145
Tiumen (Town of), Siberia, 268
Jeypore, The Viceroy of India's Visit to, 109
Jumbo (Sketches of), the African Elephant, at the Zoological Gardens, 197
Attempt to Remove Jumbo from the Zoological Gardens, 200
Farewell Ride on, 249
Departure of: Hoisting his Box from the Barge to the Quay at Millwall, 297
From St. Katherine's Docks to Millwall, 297
Journey to the Docks, 316-317

K

Kingston-on-Thames, Fountain at, 508

L

Lace: The Maker and the Wearer, 401
Lamson (Trial of Dr.) at the Old Bailey for Poisoning, 280
Launch of H.M.S. Edinburgh: The Chief Instructor Explaining the Mode of Launching to the Duchess of Edinburgh, 273
Leeds, Fountain in Roundhay Park, 508
Leghorn, Tuscany, Discovery of Fossil Remains at, 85
Leicester (Views of), and the New Park, 69, 530-531
Visit of the Prince of Wales to (See Wales.)
Leigh Smith (Mr.), Departure of the Arctic Yacht Kara to Search for, 568
Leopold, Marriage of H.R.H. Prince. (See Marriage of Prince Leopold.)
Light-Ships and Lighthouses, Relieving the, 44-45
Liverpool New Conservative Club-House, 396
London, Bits of Old, 361
Longfellow (The Funeral of) at Boston, 373
Longfellow's House at Boston, 373
Lord Mayor (The) Presenting a Bust to Alderman Sir F. Truscott, for the City of London Art Society, 37

M

Maclean (Trial of Roderick) at Reading for Shooting at the Queen, 397
Maharajah of Burdwan, Bengal, Installation of the, 80
Manchester Townhall, The Mayor's Juvenile Ball at the, 97
Mansion House, Conversations at the, 241
Marmion's Defiance to Douglas, 193
Marriage of H.R.H. Prince Leopold and Princess Helen of Waldeck—
Bridegroom's (The) Procession to the Altar, 428
Congratulations, 421
Marriage Ceremony (The) in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, 440-441
Newly-Married Pair (The) Leaving the Chapel, 428
Arrival of at Claremont, 429
Departure of from Windsor, 432
Passing through Esher, 432
Princess Helen (Arrival of) at Queenborough, 424
Arrival of, at Windsor, 424
Pymont, General View of, 49
Brunnen-Temple, 49
Cloister Avenue, 49
Queen's (The) Procession to St. George's Chapel, Windsor, 425
Wedding Presents—
Badge of Order of the Thistle, 489
Beakers (Silver), Given by the Freemasons of Wiltshire, 414

- Marriage of Prince Leopold: Wedding Presents (continued)—
Candelabra (Massive Silver), Presented by Christ Church, Society, Oxford, 433
Card-Basket (Leather), 439
Casket (Silver), Given by Freemasons of Oxfordshire, 444
Centrepiece, Presented by Noblemen and Gentlemen of Scotland, 433
Chair Given by the Windsor Tapestry Manufactory, 444
Pianoforte Given by Workpeople of Messrs. Brinsmead, 444
Plaque in Repoussé, Given by Sir Albert Sassoon, 444
- Masonic Bazaar and Fancy Fair at Dublin, 352
Mausoleum of Princess Charlotte at Claremont, 408
May-Day Procession of Horses at Newcastle-on-Tyne, 461
May Moon, The, 518
Meeting at St. James's Palace to Establish the Royal College of Music, 244-245
Mentone (Olive Gathering at), in April, 360
Queen's (The) Visit to. (See Queen.)
- Milford Haven, Looking towards Pembroke Dock, 276
Edinburgh (The Duke of) Inspecting the New Dock at, 276
Looking Towards the Entrance, Showing the New Dock, 276
Pembroke Dock, 273
Minstrel (The Blind) and his Daughter, 33
Montenegrins Stealing Across the Austrian Frontier, near Crivoscio, Herzegovina, 140
Moscow-road Greek Church, Consecration of the, 133
Mummies (Royal) and other Egyptian Antiquities, Discovery of, Twelve Illustrations, 113, 116, 117, 119, 120
Murder (The) of Lord F. Cavendish and Mr. Burke in Phoenix Park, Dublin. (See Cavendish.)
- N
Naga Hills, Expedition to the, 269
Naval and Submarine Engineering Exhibition at Isington, 376
Newcastle-on-Tyne, May-Day Procession of Horses at, 461
New Year, A Song for the, 1
New Year's Day in Paris, 4
New Zealand Sketches—Native Troubles in Taranaki, 77
Nile Sketches. (See Egypt.)
Northampton Election, Sketches at the, 208
- O
Oil on Troubled Waters: Peterhead Harbour, 252
Old Clothes Exchange, Houndsditch, 72
Olive Gathering at Mentone in April, 360
Opium Traffic, The: Chinese Selling Opium, 108
Orkney Islands, A Westerly Gale in the: Roray Head, Hoy, 56
Orphan, The, 392-393
Oxford and Cambridge Boat-Race—After the Race: the Press-Boat Returning with the News, 321
Attractions of the, 305
Oxford Begins to Lead, 321
Sketches Taken Last Year, 304
- P
Paigley, George A. Clark, Townhall, 133
Pandora, June 21
Pantomimes. (See Theatres.)
Paris Salon (The) of 1882: Selections from the Illustrated Catalogue, 545
Parliament (Opening of) Sketches at the, 121, 137
Parliament, Sketches in. (See House of Commons.)
Pembroke Dock, Milford Haven, 273. (See also Milford Haven.)
People I Have Met—
Dowager, The (Two Illustrations), 359
- People I have Met (continued)—
My Maiden Aunt (Two Illustrations), 101
Promising Son, The (Two Illustrations), 17
Younger Son, The (Two Illustrations), 157
Peterborough, Industrial and Fine-Arts Exhibition at, 409
Peterhead Harbour: Oil on Troubled Waters, 252
Pete, 381
Pipes of All Peoples, 189
Polo in India, 400
Pompeii, Body of a Child Found in Excavating a Street in, 228
- Portraits—
Abdullah Halim Bey, Egyptian Minister of Public Instruction, 177
Ahmed Arabi Bey, Egyptian Minister of War, 177, 537
Ainsworth (The late Mr. Harrison), Novelist, 41
Aitchison (Mr. G.), A.R.A., 404
Albany, The Duke and Duchess of, April 29.
Ali Tahmi Bey, Egyptian Minister of Justice, 177
Arabi Pasha, the Would-be Dictator of Egypt, 177, 537
Armenians, Patriarch of the, 284
Ashford (Private), V.C., Royal Fusiliers, 52
Bishop of Sydney, The late, 452
Bodley (Mr. G. F.), A.R.A., 404
Bourke (Mr. Walter M.), Recently Murdered at Ardahan, County Galway, 584
Brackenbury (Colonel Henry), the New Assistant Under-Secretary for Ireland, 593
Bradford, The Mayor of, 621
Brown, The late Dr. John, 508
Burke (The late Mr. T. H.), Under-Secretary for Ireland, 453
Busk, The late Captain Hans, 284
Cannon, The late Lieutenant-General, 393
Cavendish (The late Lord Frederick), M.P., Chief Secretary for Ireland, 456
Cole (The late Sir H.), K.C.B., 417
Countess of Essex, The late, 228
D'Amico (Dr. Carlos), Minister of the Interior, Buenos Aires, 261
Darwin (The late Mr. C. R.), F.R.S., LL.D., 416
De Long (Lieutenant), Commander of the Jeannette, 18
Douglas, Mr. W. Fettes, 404
Dugdale, The late Mr. W. S., 516
Duncan (The late Mr. Edward) Artist, 404
Edgecombe, The late Dr. James, 85
Egyptian Government, The New, 177
Emerson, The late Ralph Waldo, 437
Essex, The late Countess of, 228
"Fan," the Pet Antelope of the 2nd Batt. Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, 309
Firth (Mr. J. F. B.), M.P., Mover of the Address in the House of Commons, 124
Garibaldi. Extra Supp., June 10.
Grove (Mr. George), D.C.L., Director of the Royal College of Music, 252
Gurney, The late Mr. Samuel, 409
Hamilton (Mr. E. G. C.), Under-Secretary for Ireland, 485
Hammond (Major A. G.), V.C., 13
Hart (Sir Robert), K.C.M.G., 452
Helen (Princess) of Waldeck, Duchess of Albany, 49.
April 29.
Henry (Private), Royal Fusiliers, 52
Lamson, Dr. G. H., 260
Lawes, Sir J. B., Agricultural Chemist, 569
Leopold (Prince), Duke of Albany. Extra Supplement, April 29.
Linnell (The late Mr. John), Artist. Extra Supplement, Feb. 4.
Longfellow, The late Henry W. Extra Supplement, April 1.
McCabe (Cardinal), Archbishop of Dublin, 373
McCrea (Surgeon J. F.), V.C., 13
- Portraits (continued)—
Maclean (Roderick), who Attempted to Shoot the Queen, 225
Malins, The late Vice-Chancellor Sir R., 85
Manchester, The Mayor of, 97
Marjoribanks (Hon. E. C.), M.P., Mover of the Address in the House of Commons, 124
Mayor (The) of Bradford, 621
Mayor (The) of Manchester, 97
Morley (Mr. Charles), Hon. Secretary of the Royal College of Music, 252
Muir (The late Dr. John), LL.D., D.C.L., 352
Nereus (Monsignor), The Patriarch of the Armenians, 284
North (Miss Marianne), Donor of the Botanic Picture Gallery, Kew Gardens, 618
Osborne, The late Mr. Ralph Bernal, 61
Patriarch of the Armenians, 284
Pitchford (Lance-Corporal), Royal Fusiliers, 52
Pogmore, The late Mr., 516
Queen Victoria, March 11
Rice, the late Mr. James, 452
Rocha (Dr. Dardo), Governor of Buenos Aires, 261
Rossetti, The late Mr. Dante Gabriel, 373
Russell (The late Mr. Scott), Civil Engineer, 616
Selby (The late Commander), R.N., 369
Siam, The King and Queen of, 584
Spencer, Countess, 485
Spencer (The Right Hon. Earl), K.G., Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, 484
Street (The late Mr. George Edmund), R.A., Architect. Extra Supplement, Jan. 14.
Sydney, The late Bishop of, 452
Taylor (Private), Royal Fusiliers, 52
Te Whiti, the Maori Prophet, 76
Tissot (M.), New French Ambassador to London, 373
Tievelyan (Mr. G. O.), M.P., Chief Secretary for Ireland, 484
Uriburu (Francisco), Minister of Finance, Buenos Aires, 261
Walters (The late Mr. S.), Artist of Liverpool, 284
Wenlock (Lord), Second of Address in the House of Lords, 144
Wilhelm (The late Princess) of Wurtemberg, 493
Woods (Mr. Henry), A.R.A., 404
Wurtemberg, The late Princess Wilhelm of, 493
Portsmouth, The Prince of Wales at the Miners' Club, 353
Volunteer Review at. (See Volunteers.)
Pyrenean Goats in London: Selling the Milk, 569
- Q
Queen, Attempts on the Life of the (with Portrait). March 11
Attempt to Shoot the Queen at Windsor Railway Station, 225
Maclean at Windsor Police Station, 228
Before the Magistrates at Windsor, 253
Seizure of, 228
Trial of, 397
Epping Forest (Opening of) by the Queen. (See Epping Forest.)
Mentone, Visit to—
Bennet's (Dr. H.) Garden, near Mentone, 333
Bordighera, 300
Châlet (The) des Rosiers, The Residence of the Queen at, 213
East Bay: Showing the Position the Châlet des Rosiers, 213
Illuminations in Honour of the Queen's Visit, 309
Mentone, Views of, 238, 256
Monaco, 280
Palazzo Orongo, at Mortola, 333
Roccambruna, near Mentone, 289
San Remo, 300
Torre di Grimaldi (The), near Mentone, 333
Ventimiglia, 300. (See also Mentone.)
- R
Rabbit-Hutch, The. June 3
Race for the Sculling Championship on the Tyne, 356
Railway Bridge (Proposed) over the Firth, 70
Elevation and Sectional Plan of, 76
Railway, Views on the Hundred of Hoo, 345
Rangoon, Sketches at: Visit of the Viceroy of India to British Burmah, 128
Burmese Ballet Girls as they Performed before the Viceroy of India, 153
Ripon Cathedral. April 22
Roccambruna, near Mentone, 289
Rochester Cathedral, Jan. 7
Rome, New English Church, 385
Royal Buckhounds, With the Sketches in the Field, 73
Meet of the, 80-81
Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours, Sketches from the Exhibition of the, 585
Russia, Easter in, 332
Life in, 32, 53, 156, 377
Russian Convicts Waiting to be Ferried Across the River Yenisei, in Siberia, Feb. 11
Ryde Art-Treasures Exhibition, Objects of Interest at the, 100
- S
Sailor Princes, With the. (See Wales's Sons, The Prince and Princess of.)
St. Gothard Tunnel, Opening of the—Bridge and Tunnel at Wasen, 521
Bridge at Wasen, Over the Mayen Reuss, 493
Bridge over the Reuss near Amsteg, 469
Compressed-Air Engines used in Boring the Tunnel, 407
Italian Approach to the Tunnel, near Airolo, 495
Lake of the Four Cantons, 468
Miners Leaving Work, 468
Swiss Entrance to the Tunnel, near Göschenen, 496
Tunnels and Zigzag near Monte Piottino, 528
Viaduct on the Maderan Valley, 544
Viaduct over the Rohrbach, 521
St. James's Palace (Meeting at) to Establish the Royal College of Music, 244-245
St. Paul's, The Bell for. (See Bell.)
Salon (Paris) of 1882: Selections from the Illustrated Catalogue, 545
Sandown Park Grand Military Steeplechases, 237
Savage Club, The Prince of Wales at the. March 4.
Sculling Championship (Race for the) on the Tyne, 356
Shetland Isles, The Duke of Edinburgh's Visit to the, 92
- Ships—
Austral (The New Steam-ship) of the Orient Line, 509
British Fleet Available to Defend our Interests in the East, 564-565
Edinburgh, Launch of H.M.S., 273
Eira (The), Mr. Leigh Smith's Yacht Engaged in Arctic Exploration, 9
Jeannette (The), Mr. J. Gordon Bennett's Vessel in the Pack of Ice, 12
Mee-Foo, Chinese Tea-Ship, 118
Triumph (H.M.S.), on Board which the Fatal Explosion took place, 61
Shipwrights' Company (Exhibition of the) at Fishmongers' Hall, 472
Shotover, Winner of the Derby, 536
Siamese Medal to Commemorate the Centenary of the Capital, Bangkok, 598
Siamese Order of the Maha Chakrakri, Badges of the, 598
Siam, The King and Queen of, 584
Siberia, Our Special Artist in—Horse-racing at Irkutsk, 514
Natives of, 384
Russian Criminals on the March in a Snowstorm, 181
- Siberia, Our Special Artist in (continued)—
Travelling in: Changing Horses at a Post Station, 181. (See also Jeannette Relief Expedition.)
Sicilian Vespers, The, 320
Smith (Mr. Leigh), Departure of the Arctic Yacht Kara to Search for, 508
Song (A) for the New Year, 1
Spring-Time, 357
Stable at Rydon-crescent, Clerkenwell, where the Seizure of Arms Took Place, 618
- T
Tapestry Manufactory (Sketches of the Royal) at Windsor, 413
Design for Windsor Tapestry: "Men of Kent Marching in Front of the Army of Harold," 420
Tapir (The New-Born) and its Mother, in the Zoological Society's Gardens, 177
Telephone, New-Year's Greetings by, 9
Testing the Great Bell for St. Paul's Cathedral, 25. (See Bell.)
- Theatres—
Covent Garden Pantomime, Poor Children at the, 65
Scene from the Pantomime, 8
Drury Lane, Scene from the Pantomime at, 8
Haymarket, Sketches from "Ours" at the, 105
Her Majesty's, Sketches from "Morro, The Painter of Antwerp," at, 132
Lyceum, Scene from "Romeo and Juliet" at the, 257
Pantomime at the Woolwich Artillery Barracks, 37
Royal Avenue, Charing-cross, 205
St. James's, Sketches from the New Play of "The Squire" at the, 57
Trial of Dr. Lamson at the Old Bailey, 290
Trial of Roderick Maclean for Shooting at the Queen, 397
Tunis, The War in—
French Column on the March, 152
- U
University Boat-Race. (See Oxford and Cambridge Boat-Race.)
- V
Valentine's Day, 129
Great Expectations, 141
Viceroy (The) of India's Visit to British Burmah. (See Burmah.)
Visit to Jeypore, 109
Volunteers—
Ambulance Drill at Guildhall, 96
Honourable Artillery Company, Regimental Ball of the, 185
Review of at Brighton, Incidents of Last Year's, 325-329
Review of at Portsmouth—
Affair (An) of Outposts, 349
Arch at Kingston-Cross, 372
Artists' Corps (The) Advancing to the Attack, 368-369
Coshum (Lower Road to), from Portsdown Hill, 347
Coshum, Village of, 348
Arch in, 372
En Route for the Review, 324
Garrison Church, 344
George Inn, Portsdown Hill, 346-347
Gosport Arch, 372
Gun-Boats Opening Fire on the Enemy, 365
High-street, Government House, 357
Hilsea Lines, from Port Bridge, 346-347
From the Portsmouth Side, 346-347
Viewing the Ground, 346-347
House where the Duke of Buckingham was Assassinated, 344
Last Post (The), 10.30, 344
Masonic Arch in Commercial-road, Landport, 372
Mid-Day Gun on the King's Bastion, 341
Off Duty, 344
Plan of the Review Ground, 361
- Volunteers, Review of, at Portsmouth (continued)—
Porchester Castle, 346
Portsea, The Hard, 341
Portsdown Dock, Floating Bridge, 344
Portsdown, from Pembroke Road, 340
Entrance to the Harbour, 340-341
Old Church at, 344
Purbrook (Fort) and Road to Havant, 347
Railway Station, The, 337
Southsea Beach, 340-341
Southwick Fort, 348
Town Quay Gate, 340
Tudor Arch, High-street, 372
Victoria Park, Recreation Ground, 340-341
Fountain in, 344
Western Division Moving on Portsdown Hill, 368-369
Widley, Fort, 347
- W
Wales (Prince of) at the Miners' Club, Portsmouth, 353
At the Savage Club, March 4
At Yarmouth. (See Yarmouth.)
Wales (The Prince and Princess of) at Leicester, 580
Bradgate Hall: Arrival of the Prince, 68
Children singing the National Anthem in the Market-Place, 511
Passing Through Leicester, 68
Princess (The) of Wales Planting an Oak in the Abbey Park, 573
Wales's Sons, With the Prince and Princess of—
At a Picnic at Amoy, 108
At the Fiji Islands: Incantation of the Yungona, or Kara Bowl, 5
War-Dance by Electric Light, 36
H.M.S. Cleopatra Shifting her Foretopmast by Electric Light, 536
Hong-Kong Festivities in Honour of, 183
In Ceylon, 249
Colombo, Environs of, 96
Kandy, View of, 144
In Japan: Flying Squadron Passing through the Narrows of the Inland Sea, 93
Wandsworth New Townhall, 52
Wedding, The Royal. (See Marriage of H.R.H. Prince Leopold.)
Westerly Gale (A) in the Orkney Islands: Roray Head, Hoy, 56
Westminster, The Garden of Ashburnham House, 408
Wild-Duck Shooting, 196
Windsor, Sketches of the Royal Tapestry Manufactory at. (See Tapestry.)
Woolwich Artillery Barracks, Pantomime at the, 37
Wynn's (Sir W.) Hounds, A Day with the Empress of Austria and, 184
- Y
Yachting Season, The. Three-Tonner Race on the Thames, 616
Yarmouth, Visit of the Prince of Wales to, 576-577
New Municipal Buildings, 52, 556
Old Townhall, The, 556
Shadingfield Lodge, Visited by the Prince of Wales, 550
Sketches of, and its Neighbourhood, 552-553
View from Gorleston, 549
- Z
Zoological Society's Gardens—
Jumbo (Sketches of), the African Elephant at the, 197, 200. (See also Jumbo.)
Pigmy Hogs from India, 541
Tapir (The New-born) and its Mother, 177
- THE HOLIDAY NUMBER.
An Original Novel, "They Were Married!" by Messrs. Besant and Rice, with a Coloured Picture, "Married for Love," by Marcus Stone, A.R.A., and Numerous Illustrations.

TO THE BINDER.

FRONTISPIECE—The Dual Leap. (Extra Supplement, March 25.)

The Two-page Engravings should be folded in the ordinary manner and mounted on guards or pasted in at a little distance from the fold of the middle, so that they may be neither stitched through nor gathered in at the back when the volume is bound.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.

No. 2227.—VOL. LXXX.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1882.

WITH (SIXPENCE.
TWO SUPPLEMENTS) BY POST, 6½D.

A SONG FOR THE NEW YEAR.—SEE PAGE 6.

BIRTHS.

On the 4th ult., at St. Ann's Bay, Jamaica, Mrs. William A. Conran, of a son.

On the 31st ult., at Wilderton, Bournemouth, Mrs. Richard Ovey, of a son.

On the 31st ult., at Freshwater, Isle of Wight, the wife of Sergeant-Major W. W. Tomlinson, A.M.D., of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

At Rathbarnan church, by the Very Rev. the Dean of Achoury, assisted by the Rev. P. Heany, Sir Charles Larem, Bart., to Jennie, eldest daughter of the late Alexander Perceval, of Temple House, in the county of Sligo, Ireland.

On the 29th ult., at Tullylish, by the Rev. J. Morrison, M.A., George Smyth, Bengal Civil Service, to Helen, second daughter of T. Ferguson, Esq., J.P., Edenderry House, Banbridge, in the county of Down.

DEATHS.

On the 30th ult., at Albion House, The Downs, Bowdon, Susan Jane, the beloved wife of Duncan Matheson, Manchester.

On the 30th ult., at Croydon, in the 81st year of her age, Anne Gilbert, relict of the late Rev. David Perkins, D.D., Vicar of Dawlish, and eldest and last surviving child of the late Sir Walter Roberts, Bart., of Roberts Cove, in the county of Cork, and Courlands, Devon.

*. The charge for the insertion of Births, Marriages, and Deaths is Five Shillings for each announcement.

BRIGHTON.—EVERY SUNDAY.—A Cheap First-Class
Train from Victoria at 10.45 a.m., calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon.
Day Return Tickets, 10s.

A Pullman Drawing-room Car is run in the 10.45 a.m. Train from Victoria to Brighton, returning from Brighton by the 4.30 p.m. Train. Special Cheap Fare from Brighton, including Pullman Car, 15s., available by these Trains only.
Special Cheap Return Tickets by Pullman Limited Express every Sunday, from Victoria, 12.30 p.m., returning from Brighton by any Train the same day, including the Pullman Limited Express, at 9.30 p.m. Fare there and back, 15s.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM at BRIGHTON.—EVERY
SATURDAY. Cheap First-Class Train from Victoria at 10.35 and 11.50 a.m. and London Bridge at 9.30 a.m. and 12.0 noon, calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon.
Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea (including Admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavilion Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds), available to return by any Train the same day, except the Pullman Car Trains.

TICKETS and every Information at the Brighton Company's West-End General Offices, 25, Regent-street, Piccadilly, and 8, Grand Hotel-buildings, Trafalgar-square, the Victoria and London Bridge Stations.
(By order) J. P. KNIGHT, General Manager.

GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY.

DELIVERY OF PASSENGERS' LUGGAGE IN LONDON.
On and after MONDAY, JAN. 2, 1882, Passengers travelling by this Railway to London, can, if they so desire, book their Luggage at the starting station for delivery in London, within the cartage delivery limits of the company, which are defined on maps exhibited at the stations.

Luggage for delivery must be distinctly addressed to its destination, and the Passenger should see that the Luggage Porter affixes to it a red label with the letter D, which signifies "For delivery," printed on it in black ink.
No charge will be made for the conveyance of the Luggage by Railway if it be within the weight allowed to be carried free, viz.:—120 lbs. First Class, 100 lbs. Second Class, and 60 lbs. Third Class or Paraffin carrier.

The charges for delivery will be as under:
Packages not exceeding 14 lbs. 4d. each.
Ditto from 14 lbs. to 28 lbs. 6d. "
Ditto " 28 lbs. to 56 lbs. 8d. "
Ditto " 56 lbs. to 112 lbs. 1s. "
Ditto exceeding 112 lbs. 1s. " up to 112 lbs. and 4d. for every 28 lbs. in excess of that weight.

Luggage Delivery Carts will leave the Liverpool-street Station Six Times every Week Day, viz.:—8.0 a.m., 11.30 a.m., 1.0 p.m., 3.0 p.m., 5.0 p.m., and 7.0 p.m.
As a rule, delivery will be made within three hours from the starting time of the next cart leaving the Liverpool-street Station after the arrival of the train by which the Luggage is conveyed.
Passengers must produce their Railway Tickets at the time of the Luggage being booked.
The charge for delivery to be paid at the time of booking.

WILLIAM BIRT, General Manager.
Liverpool-street Station, London, December, 1881.

INMAN ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS.

LIVERPOOL TO NEW YORK.
City of Berlin ... Thursday, Jan. 12. City of Brussels ... Thursday, Jan. 26.
City of Paris ... Tuesday, Jan. 17. City of New York ... Thursday, Feb. 2.
Saloons and State Rooms amidships with every modern comfort and convenience.
Apply to THE INMAN STEAMSHIP COMPANY, Limited, 24, Water-street, Liverpool: A. H. JOHNSON, 9, Rue de la Harpe, Paris, or to LIVES and ALLEN, 90, Cannon-street, London, E.C.

DORÉ'S GREAT WORKS.—"ECCE HOMO" ("Full of divine dignity.—The Times) and "THE ASCENSION." "CHRIST LEAVING THE EARTHLY TEMPLE." "ENTERING JERUSALEM," with all his other Great Pictures.—DORÉ GALLERY, 35, New Bond-street. Daily, 10 to 6. 1s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.—The EXHIBITION of
WORKS by the OLD MASTERS and by DECEASED MASTERS of the BRITISH SCHOOL is NOW OPEN. Admission (from Nine a.m. till six p.m.), 1s. Catalogue, 6d.; or bound in cloth, with pencil, 1s. Season Tickets, 6s. At dusk the galleries are lighted by the electric light.

GROSVENOR GALLERY WINTER EXHIBITION.
The Winter Exhibition at the Grosvenor Gallery NOW OPEN, from Ten till Six, with a Collection of WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS and a COMPLETE COLLECTION of the WORKS of G. F. WATTS, R.A., forming the first of a series of Annual Winter Exhibitions illustrating the works of the most eminent living painters. Admission, 1s.; Season Tickets, 6s.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, PICCADILLY.

GREAT and GLORIOUS TRIUMPH OF THE
MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS'
HOLIDAY ENTERTAINMENT.

Pronounced by the whole of the leading metropolitan Journals
THE BEST EVER PRODUCED by this company.
See the Times, Dec. 27. Daily News, Dec. 27.
Telegraph, Dec. 27. Chronicle, Dec. 27.
Standard, Dec. 27. Post, Dec. 27.
Morning Advertiser, Dec. 27.

The same magnificent programme will be repeated
MONDAY, TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY, and SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at THREE; and EVERY NIGHT at EIGHT.

Places can be secured at Austin's Ticket Office, St. James's Hall, one month in advance. No fees for booking. No charge for programmes. Notices of any description in Fautouls, 5s.; Sofa Seats, 2s. Area, 2s.; Gallery, 1s.
Doors open for this Day Performances at 7.30.
Evening.
Children under Twelve half price to Area and Stalls.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 10, AT THREE.
ST. JAMES'S HALL, PICCADILLY.

THE MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS will give a

SPECIAL DAY PERFORMANCE of their most successful Holiday Performance.
Doors open at 2.30.

LYCEUM THEATRE.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr.

Henry Irving. Every Evening, at Half-past Eight, James Albery's Comedy, TWO ROSES.—Mr. Digby Grant, Mr. Irving, Mr. Mr. Jenkins, Mr. David James, Mr. Howe, Mr. Terrie, Mr. George Alexander, Miss Winifred Emery, Miss Helen Mathews, Mr. Faurel, Miss Ewell. At Half past seven, THE CAPTAIN OF THE WATCH.—Messrs. Terrie, Andrews, Carter, Miss Louisa Payne, and Miss Helen Mathews. Box-office (Mr. Hurst) open Ten to Five. Seats also booked by letter or telegram.

SANGERS' GRAND NATIONAL AMPHITHEATRE

(late Artley's), Westminster-bridge-road.—THE GREAT CIRCUS COMPANY.—The MENAGERIE and GORGEOUS PANTOMIME, BLUE-BEARD. The Spectacular display in the marriage scene does by far eclipse any production ever previously submitted to the public, the Company and Auxiliaries, numbering 200 People, 30 Magnificent Horses, 50 of the smallest and Handsomest Ponies to be found in any Establishment, 100 of Lilliputian Army, 100 Circassian Ladies in the Extravagant Oriental Costumes, 50 Savages, 50 Staff-Bearers in attendance on Blue-Beard, Selim, and his 250 followers in Gold and Silver Armour, 100 Ladies-in-Waiting upon Felima, in Costumes composed solely of jewels, producing an effect perfectly bewildering; 12 Camels and Dromedaries, and the pure White Horses of the Sun. The Marriage Procession of Blue-Beard, in which will appear 20 Elephants, Zebras, Blue Bears, Fatimas, with their numerous Attendants, seated in magnificent array upon the back of the monster elephant Ajax. There is nothing like it under the sun. Two Performances daily, at Two and Seven o'clock.
Proprietors and Managers, J. and G. SANGER.

SANGERS' GRAND NATIONAL AMPHITHEATRE.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.—As a preventive to fire, which of late has been so lamentably prevalent in theatres, &c., the Proprietors have entirely dispensed with the use of gas in their large theatre, which is entirely illuminated, inferiorly and exteriorly, with the ELECTRIC LIGHT (Brush system), the aid of which considerably improves the brilliancy of the magnificent Pantomime and Circus performance. No danger of fire or explosion.

MR. and MRS. GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.

Managers, Messrs. Alfred Reed and Corney Grain.—ST. GEORGE'S HALL, Lambeth-place, AGES AGO, by W. S. Gilbert and Frederic Clay; MASTER TOMMY'S THEATRICALS, A new Musical Sketch by Mr. Corney Grain. Concluding with OUR DOBBLIN HOUSE, by W. S. Gilbert. Music by Corney Grain. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday at Eight. During Christmas Holidays, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday at Three. Admission, 1s., 2s., 3s., 4s., and 5s.

INSTITUTE OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.
THE SIXTEENTH WINTER EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, from Ten till Six. Admission, 1s.; Catalogue, 6d.
Gallery, 23, Pall-mall, S.W. H. F. PHILLIPS, Secretary.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1882.

1882 opens under very different and more agreeable conditions than did 1881. This time last year we were beginning to feel the first rigours of a most severe and disagreeable winter season. It was ushered in by stifling fogs, and reached its climax in the unprecedented snow-storm of Jan. 18, that inflicted much suffering on the young and aged, vastly swelled the bills of mortality, and to a great extent disorganised many of the staple industries of the country. For the present season, as everyone knows, fogs have been rare, frost an occasional visitant, snow an almost unknown quantity, and sunshine a frequent and welcome blessing. Though these are the early days of the New Year, we can gratefully rejoice in the auspicious prospect, even if experience discourages a sanguine forecast of the unknown and uncertain. We are, at least, making a fairer start at this fresh epoch of our national life than we were a twelvemonth ago, and even if in the actual result we should be doomed to disappointment, buoyant cheerfulness is in itself a distinct advantage. By steady strides, rather than by "leaps and bounds," trade and commerce are extending. Although old markets for the vast products of England may here and there be closed, others are being opened by mercantile enterprise; so that even the probable failure to renew the Treaty of Commerce with France—owing to the political necessities of M. Gambetta, who is just now bent on conciliating the Protectionists of the Senate, and cannot carry the two Chambers with him in his free-trade aspirations—will not, it is expected, seriously restrict our external trade.

Our solid national prosperity is, happily, little hampered by industrial conflicts. Workmen's strikes have become rarer as employer and employed, not unassisted by recent legislation, have discovered amicable methods of settling their differences. Better education, practised skill, mechanical inventions, unflinching enterprise, and an unmatched mercantile marine, supply our merchants and manufacturers with resources and facilities that defy competition, and enable us to hold our own against the rivalry of protected interests all the world over. The evidence of this material improvement is to be seen in the Board of Trade statistics, which reveal the vast extent of our commerce, and in the revenue returns, that are not less gratifying to the nation in general than to the Chancellor of the Exchequer in particular. For the three quarters of the financial year the revenue has shown a progressive increase. There is thus far an apparent surplus of more than two and three quarter millions sterling, which compares most favourably with the same period last year; and although, owing to various contingencies, the fourth quarter may somewhat dim the present brilliant prospect, Mr. Gladstone will, no doubt, next April have a handsome surplus to give away for the relief of taxation or the reduction of debt. If there were in existence any weather prophet who could unerringly promise an auspicious season next summer and autumn, we might anticipate a marked revival of British agriculture, the welfare of which is so closely interwoven with that of the nation at large, for while our foreign commerce is greatly expanding the home trade somewhat languishes. Up to the present time our farmers are cheerful, if not sanguine. May the seasons in due time second their persevering energy, and bright skies at length fulfil their long-deferred hopes of an abundant harvest!

The Cabinet Councils that precede the meeting of Parliament have begun in earnest, and under somewhat depressing circumstances. These Ministerial consultations have been preceded by a great Liberal demonstration at Birmingham, at which Mr. Bright and Mr. Chamberlain, who, of course, met with an enthusiastic reception from their constituents, vindicated the policy of the Government, particularly in relation to Ireland; and the somewhat weary party controversies, which the Christmas season suspended, have been resumed with redoubled vigour, and are not likely to abate before the Session opens. The "great difficulty" of every Cabinet still confronts Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues. Even the urgent question of a reform of the procedure of the House of Commons is more or less mixed up with the Irish problem, and it would be as safe to predict the weather of next summer as to cast the horoscope of the ensuing Session. For some weeks, probably, obstruction, not altogether limited to Irish Irreconcilables, will be practised, and the walls of St. Stephen's will echo their clamour for the release of the "suspects" in Kilmainham Prison and elsewhere. The Land Act will be doubly on its defence; for, while Mr. O'Donnell and his confederates will complain that it falls short of justice to the tenant farmers, the Opposition will be the mouthpiece of the Irish land-owners who at a great meeting held in Dublin on Tuesday bitterly bewailed the rigid application of its provisions in a serious reduction of their rents, and hinted at a demand for State compensation.

Meanwhile, the landlords of Ireland are preparing to enforce evictions on a large scale, and there is scarcely an estate in county Clare on which rent processes or ejectments have not been served for the present Hilary Sessions. Although Mr. Herbert Gladstone, who for nearly a month was travelling through the western counties, declares that the condition of Ireland is represented to be tenfold worse than it is in reality, outrages of a peculiarly atrocious character are unquestionably still perpetrated, the no-rent conspiracy does not appear to abate, and—most important of all—we are told that within the twelve scheduled Irish districts there are more than 900,000 young persons, besides adults, who are without employment. There are, however, visible signs of greater vigour at Dublin Castle in vindicating the law. Many more districts have been proclaimed with a view to the seizure of arms; five resident magistrates, who are to be intrusted with large powers, have been appointed to as many disturbed counties; one of the most desperate leaders of the "moonlight" brigands has been captured with important criminal documents in his possession; and several leaders of the proscribed Ladies' Land League, who have openly resisted the law, have been placed under arrest. Two bright gleams to some extent relieve this sombre picture. One of these is the Treasury minute detailing the conditions on which Government loans will be granted to occupiers of land in Ireland, which, if accepted on a large scale, will enable tenants to tide over present difficulties; and the second, a statement that one fourth of the Irish tenants who need protection have come under the operation of the Land Act—a multitude of cases being settled out of court—and that, in the opinions of competent persons who have studied the subject, the whole land problem will be virtually solved within two years. We devoutly hope this sanguine expectation will be realised.

The external relations of England, though in the main satisfactory, are in two directions a source of anxiety. No one can safely contend that Egypt will not soon evolve one of those "burning" questions the settling of which is the test of skilful diplomacy. The assembly of Notables at Cairo, which is little more than the delusive shadow of a Parliament, can do nothing to strengthen the independent attitude of the nerveless Khedive, who seems to be either under the spell of artful intriguers at Constantinople, or subject to the stronger will of the ambitious Arabi Bey—an enthusiast who actually unfolds his ideas in the Times. The exigency must indeed be great that has induced the Governments of France and England to discuss the policy—for as yet no decision has been taken—of dispatching to Tewfik Pasha an identical note, promising their joint and effectual support in the event of his authority being menaced or subverted. It is possible that this threat of a Protectorate by the Western Powers may avert an outbreak, and be an effectual warning to the Sultan and his scheming entourage. But the intervention suggested by M. Gambetta, under certain circumstances, would bring into view international questions of great magnitude and delicacy; not the least important of which is the ultimate issue. France and England have a common object in maintaining the independence of the Khedive; but their respective interests in Egypt at a certain point diverge, if they do not conflict; and action which was commenced in harmony would probably end in discord. If these Powers should disagree—what next? In South Africa, also, though the clouds are less black, they have not dispersed. The Boers of the Transvaal have in their National Assembly shown good sense and prudence by acquiescing in the Convention with England, without any apparent intention of secretly setting at naught its provisions. The hope that complications may be averted elsewhere in this vast region rests on the choice of Sir Henry Bulwer as Governor of Natal, a position for which his great experience in South Africa pre-eminently fits him. His acceptance of this onerous post is a credit alike to himself and to the Colonial Office. Sir Henry has little sympathy with the autocratic Imperialist policy of Sir Bartle Frere, which has cost this country so dear. If his influence and experience should be able to solve the Zulu problem, he will prove to be a meritorious Pro-Consul.

It would be pleasant, if it were possible, to glance without misgiving at the European situation. Like another Atlas, the veteran Prince Bismarck totters under the State responsibilities he has assumed—to which he has now added the guardianship of the Sultan, who clings to his skirts, and the protection of the Pope, who expects from him concessions; and the entire Continent is watching with anxiety the issue of his complicated policy both at home and abroad. Whatever may be the object of his "benevolent neutrality" as regards the Vatican, the German Chancellor must be disconcerted by the firm announcement of King Humbert at his New-Year's reception that the Rome Government would not admit even of the discussion of certain questions that involve the internal policy of Italy—referring, no doubt, to the partial restoration of the temporal power of the Pope. Looking nearer home, the French Prime Minister, even before he has secured an indispensable majority in the Senate, is beginning to lose his prestige, which has been damaged by the sending back of M. Roustan to Tunis, and by his obnoxious official appointments. The failure of M. Gambetta to maintain his personal ascendancy as a ruler would be quite as disastrous to France as would be the break-down of Prince Bismarck to Germany.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

To the Christmastide death-roll must be added the name of Mr. William Harrison Ainsworth, the novelist, who passed away on Tuesday last, at the ripe age of seventy-seven. As a young man of twenty he wrote a romance called "Sir John Chiverton," which earned the warm admiration of Sir Walter Scott. Sir Walter, you know, has been dead fifty years. Mr. Ainsworth had achieved popularity, as a novelist, before Charles Dickens had been heard of in the world of letters; for "Rookwood," I believe, appeared in 1834; whereas the first of the "Sketches by Boz" did not appear in the Morning Chronicle until 1836. I suppose that William Harrison Ainsworth was about the most indefatigable worker in the field of historic fiction that our age has seen. G. P. R. James (who, on the appearance of his first romance, "Richelieu," was also complimented by the good-natured author of "Waverley") put forth a hundred volumes in the course of a literary career extending over some thirty years. But many of G. P. R. James's works were historical essays and biographies—such as his "Life of Edward the Black Prince" and "Life and Times of Louis XIV." Harrison Ainsworth, on the other hand, beyond writing some picturesque "touch-and-go" ballads, produced nothing, it would seem, but novels.

"Rookwood," "Crichton," "Jack Sheppard," "The Tower of London," "Guy Fawkes," "Old St. Paul's," "Windsor Castle," "The Miser's Daughter," "Revelations of London," "St. James's," "Whitehall," "The Lancashire Witches," "The Flitch of Bacon," "Ovingdean Grange," "John Law," "The Lord Mayor of London," "The Star Chamber," "The Spendthrift," "Cardinal Pole," "The Constable of the Tower"—I quote these from memory; yet, possibly, I have not mentioned a third of the Ainsworthian romances.

I am old enough to remember William Harrison Ainsworth as a very handsome man; almost as handsome, indeed, as Count d'Orsay. It was an Irish gentleman I believe who, at a conversation at Gore House, observing the beautiful hostess engaged in conversation with the handsome d'Orsay, the handsome Ainsworth, the handsome Frank Sheridan, and the handsome "Tom" Duncombe, compared her Ladyship to "Venus surrounded by the Three Graces; only there were four of them."

There is a smirking portrait of the late Mr. Ainsworth, by Daniel Machse, R.A., which has been engraved in line. I think, too, that there is a head, in profile, of the novelist, drawn by d'Orsay and lithographed by R. J. Lane, in the d'Orsay gallery of portraits, published some five-and-thirty years since by Mr. John Mitchell, in New Bond-street. But the most lifelike presentment, to my mind, of Harrison Ainsworth is the figure in the little vignette which forms a standing title to the monthly editorial gossip in the early numbers of "Ainsworth's Magazine." The vignette was drawn by George Cruikshank.

"De mortuis nil nisi bonum" is a very excellent, although wholly illogical maxim; so I will not enlarge on the social harm which Mr. Harrison Ainsworth did by the publication of the flagitious romance of "Jack Sheppard." He had, I am certain, no mischievous intention in putting forth a work the cheap imitations of which have done such an immense amount of mischief among foolish lads.

With an amusing flourish of trumpets the estimable "Atlas" in the World publishes what, through some odd hallucination, is called a recipe, hitherto unknown in England, for making bouillabaisse. "It comes to me," writes the excellent "Atlas," "under the hand and seal of the great Roubion himself." It may be incidentally observed that there is nothing "great" about the respectable restaurateur in question, except perhaps the expense to which people are put who dine at his house. His prices are extravagantly dear; and you may eat bouillabaisse quite as good, and much less costly, at the Maison Dorée in the Cannebière Prolongée, and at a dozen other restaurants at Marseilles.

But let that pass. The recipe's the thing. The much-vaunted bouillabaisse formula of the "great" Roubion is only a réchauffé of a well-known recipe in "La Cuisine Française," written by Gogué, who, in the early years of the present century, was cook to the Count de Cayla and to Lord Melville. A second edition of "La Cuisine Française," published by Hachette two-and-twenty years ago, is now before me, and the book enables me to institute a few parallels of the respective methods of making bouillabaisse.

Roubion.	Gogué.
In a wrought-iron pot put—	Souvent, au lieu de se servir d'une casserole, on fait cuire le bouillabaisse dans un poëlon. . . . Nous croyons que c'est là le meilleur; roçé: le poëlon vaut mieux que la casserole de cuire.
Half a pint of olive oil, two tomatoes, an onion, and a clove of garlic, all minced up together; three or four bay leaves dried, and a dried piece of orange-peel. Add a pinch of saffron.	Un verre d'huile d'olive, deux oignons moyens coupés en morceaux, une gousse d'ail et du persil hachés très fin, un peu d'écorce d'orange. Une cuillerée à bouche de safran (plus ou moins, suivant votre goût).
Three or four bay-leaves; pepper and salt according to taste; A glass of water for each person.	Deux feuilles de laurier. Sel et poivre. Mettez dans la casserole autant de verres d'eau que vous avez de convives.
Put the stew-pan on a very brisk fire.	Mettez la casserole sur un grand feu bien ardent (il ne faut pas que le bouillabaisse languisse: le mot vous l'indique).
Let it boil half an hour.	Laissez cuire une demi-heure.

Every item of the process (too long to quote in its entirety) ordained by Gogué is re-echoed by the "great" Roubion. The variations in the ingredients are (1) that Gogué omits tomatoes; but those esculents are prescribed in the "Cuisinier Durand," compiled a hundred years ago (une pomme d'amour coupée a morceaux); by Urbain Dubois ("two peeled tomatoes: "Cosmopolitan Cookery," art. 139), in "Cassell's Dictionary of Cookery" ("two or three tomatoes, or a little tomato sauce"). (2) Gogué and the vast majority of authorities prescribe a glass of white wine (un bon verre de vin blanc sec). The "great" Roubion omits this excellent ingredient. With these exceptions, the two bouillabaisse recipes are identical. "Atlas" has reckoned without the people who have a practical knowledge of cooking and large culinary libraries.

Mem.: One of the fish used in Bouillabaisse is the bandroie. With "Atlas's" translation of bandroie as a "gurnet," an "angler," or a "fishing frog," I will not quarrel. Some fishes have as many names as a Spanish hidalgo. But, in the very latest of French and English dictionaries (Cassell's) the bandroie is translated as "the sea devil" or "frog fish."

I am heartily sorry to read in the New York correspondence of the well-informed Era that the Hon. Lewis Wingfield's drama of "The Bondman," founded on the story of Jack Cade, which was recently produced at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, New York, did not meet with all the success which the ingenious and picturesque manner in which Mr. Wingfield has treated the legend of the insurrection of the Men of Kent, and the talent of Mr. John McCullough, who played the part of the hero, should have secured for the drama. In a premonitory address issued by the author to the press and the public Mr. Wingfield tells us, on the authority of Sir Richard Baker's Chronicle, that Cade was transported in early life to Italy, and reared in comfort by the Italian doctor who had adopted him, but that, "like Moses, his prototype, he conceived himself called upon to free his brethren from slavery, and returned to England to raise the standard of revolt."

Other authorities have held that Jack Cade was an Irishman, who had served some time in France as a soldier under the English flag. Others declare him to have been an outlaw. "We have no clue," Mr. Wingfield goes on to say, "as for Cade's reasons for assuming the title of Mortimer." But surely most people are aware that Jack Cade assumed the illustrious name of Mortimer in order to claim a descent which made him a relation (although illegitimately) of the Duke of York, at that time Governor of Ireland, and whom Cade wished to be thought the instigator of the revolt which he stirred up among the men of Kent.

Mr. Wingfield should be deeply interested in the Irish Land question. Is he aware that Jack Cade was the "prototype" rather of Mr. Parnell than of the Prophet Moses, and that he was the original President of an English Land League? A curious reason has been assigned for the readiness shown by the men of Kent to join him—to wit, the law of Gavelkind prevailing in that county. "The incensate custome of gavelkind," as it is called in an old book entitled "The Glorie of Generositie," "tendeth to the destruction of auncient and gentle houses:"—by tending, I suppose, towards the multiplication of a peasant and democratic proprietary. On this head see Amédée Thierry's "Norman Conquest."

The object of Mr. Oscar Wilde's visit to the United States—he sailed for New York a fortnight ago—is, I am told, to lecture on the progress of Art in England during the past few years. Had I seen Mr. O. Wilde just before his departure, I would have repeated to him that which Horace Greeley used to say to every youthful aspirant for fame or fortune who sought his counsel:—"Go West, young Man, go West." In the Eastern and Middle States Mr. Wilde will find, I suspect, some social but not much public acceptance. The New York press is desperately cynic and satirical; and the good people of Boston so overbrim themselves with culture (pronounced "cultchaw") that there is a greater likelihood of their teaching Mr. Wilde how to serenade a sunflower; how to carry a jerked feather (a peacock's, of course, "swaling in the bonnet," as Leigh Hunt put it, in the "Story of Rimini"); how to lunch on a lily and dine on an Æolic Digamma, than of their caring to be instructed in such matters by the accomplished Coryphæus of British Æstheticism. But in the Far West, where folks are more unsophisticated, Mr. Oscar Wilde should do well.

In any case, he ought to have taken with him a very lucid and compendious little handbook, which has just been published, entitled "The Year's Art, 1881," of which the compiler is Marcus B. Huish, LL.B. Herein Mr. Huish gives us an epitome of all occurrences during the year last past in the departments of painting, sculpture, and architecture. The "Artist's Calendar" is an especially complete and instructive feature in the work. For example, I open it, refer to the first week in May, and read how the British Museum was to be closed for a week from the 1st; how the Royal Academy opened at ten a.m.; likewise the Grosvenor Gallery; how the Royal Institute of British Architects held their annual meeting; how a course of lectures on the chemical materials used in painting began at University College on the 4th; and how the Flaxman Gallery of Sculpture was open from ten till four on the 7th. I had the curiosity to count how many weeks out of the fifty-two were utter blanks so far as art occurrences were concerned. There were but nineteen. A list of books connected with the Fine Arts published in '81 is another valuable addition to Mr. Huish's manual.

Not at all a pretty but, on the contrary, a very ugly quarrel as it stands is that between Messrs. Hare and Kendal, managers of the St. James's Theatre, and Mr. Pinero, actor and dramatic author, on the one hand; and between Mr. Thomas Hardy, novelist, and Mr. Comyns Carr, art critic and novelist, on the other. Messrs. H. and K. bring out a very well-written play called "The Squire," by Mr. P. Gusher, Tusher, and Crusher, the theatrical critics, notice a very strong similarity between Mr. P.'s "Squire" and Mr. T. H.'s well-known and delightful novel "Far from the Madding Crowd." Then Mr. C. C. comes forward (in the press) to state that some time since he submitted a dramatic version of Mr. H.'s novel to Mr. K., who, personally, approved of it very much; but that the partnership of H. and K. "didn't see it." Then Mr. P. writes to say that he had never read Mr. H.'s novel when he settled the scenario of the "Squire," and that he evolved the plot of the piece entirely "out of his own head." This Mr. T. H. seems to doubt very gravely, and Mr. C. C. more gravely still; and they are all "at it," figuratively speaking, with hammer and tongs, brickbats and bludgeons, in the daily papers; passing from the "retort courteous" to the "quip modest;" thence to the "reply churlish" and the "reproof valiant," and so on to the "counter-check quarrelsome" and its disagreeable etceteras: the last of which is not a weapon that should be used in a newspaper controversy between gentlemen.

Of course, the resemblance between Mr. Hardy's novel and Mr. Pinero's drama was an accidental coincidence, and nothing more. There is a coincidence quite as curious between the picture of the "Canterbury Pilgrims," painted by Stothard, and the drawing of the same subject made by William Blake, pictor ignotus. There was something more than an accidental coincidence between the plot of Mr. Tom Taylor's "Mary Warner" and Mr. William Gilbert's "Tales for the Pharisees." But perhaps the strangest literary coincidence which I can call to mind is that between Alexandre Dumas the Elder's "Dame au Collier de Velours" and Washington Irving's "Tale of the German Student," in the "Tales of a Traveller." In all probability, Dumas père had never read a line of Irving; yet it is just possible that both the brilliant French romancier and the illustrious American had read Hoffman's "Contes Nocturnes."

I came across, myself, a very odd coincidence of a philological kind this very week. For a long time I had been hunting up the conflicting derivations and obscure history of the word "bullion." I defer what I have to say about the word until the appearance of Professor W. W. Skeat's completed Larger Etymological Dictionary, which will be published early in February. The parts which have already been issued I have not yet seen; but it may be assumed that the learned professor has set us all right as regards the derivation and meaning of "bullion," including the late John Milton, who has "bullion" in the sense of an adjective, and seems to think that it means the scum of molten metal:—

A second multitude
With wondrous art found out the massy ore,
Severing each kind, and scum'd the bullion dross.

A poetic license, evidently, which led a Miltonian commentator to derive bullion from the Latin "bullio" to boil.

But now for the odd coincidence. I find in the "Nouveau Dictionnaire Universel" (20 vols., Paris, 1810) that the name of the Superintendent of Finances who, A.D. 1640, first caused the coin known as the Louis d'Or to be coined in France, was Claude de Bullion. This is manifestly a coincidence: since Professor Skeat tells me privately that the word bullion occurs in the ninth year of Edward III.

Why is a paragraphist in the World so hard upon a writer in the Pall Mall, who, in noticing Mr. David James's impersonation of "Our Mr. Jenkins," in the "Two Roses," at the Lyceum, spoke of the "ill fitting assumption of sanctimony which he puts on with his clerical garb?" "The italicised word is pretty," sneers the writer in the World, "but a little too novel for the penny public. Sanctity we know, and sanctimoniousness; but sanctimony is a stranger."

What does this signify? Sanctimony and Sanctimoniousness mean, according to the oldest and the newest dictionaries, precisely the same thing. The word Sanctimony occurs three times in Shakespeare—in "All's Well that Ends Well," in "Troilus and Cressida," and in "Othello." Is "Othello" a "strange" play? It is one that has always been immensely popular with the "penny public," in the pit and gallery. Of course, most students are aware that "sanctimony" and "sanctimoniousness" may be so put as to mean, not holiness and devoutness, but the opposite qualities of hypocrisy and insincerity. Thus Shakespeare, when, in the "Tempest" (act iv. sc. 1), he makes Prospero say:—

All sanctimonious ceremonies may
With full and holy rite be ministered, he means real sanctimony; but when, in "Measure for Measure," he makes Lucio speak of "the sanctimonious pirate that went to sea with the Ten Commandments, but scraped one out of the table," he means such sham sanctimony as "our Mr. Jenkins" assumes when he puts on his clerical garb.

We have heard a great deal lately, and I hope we shall hear a great deal more before the close of the coming season, of a National Academy for Teaching the Dramatic Art. Well organised, and starting with a sufficient capital (certainly not less than five thousand pounds, but ten thousand would be better) such a Dramatic Conservatoire should prove a brilliant success. Meanwhile, I have the greatest pleasure in acceding to a request that I should make known in this column that Miss Glyn (Mrs. E. S. Dallas) is giving lessons in dramatic reading and elocution, and is anxious to increase her connection. Miss Glyn, most students of the drama know, is a most accomplished and scholar-like professor of the Kemble school of acting. Her professional fame is closely associated with that of the late Samuel Phelps, and she was one of the finest Cleopatras ever seen on the modern stage. I hope that this gifted lady, estimable and high-minded as she is in every relation of life, will obtain more pupils. Miss Glyn's address is 13, Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, W.

We—the man who blew the bellows claimed a co-partnership, you will remember, with the organist—intend to give the poor school-children of London a treat next week. On Thursday, the Twelfth instant, there will be a gratuitous afternoon performance of the pantomime of "Little Bo-Peep," at Covent Garden: the guests being the poor school-children and the hosts the Proprietors of THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, at whose costs and charges the entertainment will be provided.

G. A. S.

NEW-YEAR'S DAY IN PARIS

1. The "Baraque," or shop on the boulevard.
5. "A Camelot," or toy-vender.

2. The Concierge on New-Year's Day.
6. Going shopping.

3. A New-Year's Salutation.
7. A happy New-Year to dear Mamma.

THE SAILOR PRINCES AT THE FIJI ISLANDS : INCANTATION OF THE YANGONA, OR KAVA BOWL.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

A SONG TO THE NEW YEAR

To her guitar a minstrel singing
Made echo to the joybells ringing,
Low-blending with their message clear
Of welcome to the new-born year:—

"Dear gentlemen and ladies all,
A bright new year for you I call.
But will it come, you ask of me,
Because I call it? You shall see.

"O yes, I know a certain spell
Which will the churliest year compel
(A fairy told me—so 'tis true)
To yield rich treasures up to you.

"Be loving, good, and true to all,
And then no matter what befall,
My fairy lore will serve you well,
And all who in your household dwell.

"The bitter word, the tart reply,
Unspoken, on your lips will die;
And tongue and eyes most truly tell
What sweet thoughts in your bosoms dwell.

"So living, sure the opening year
To you and yours must bring good cheer:
The spell will penury disarm,
And give to wealth an added charm.

"All discord straight will die away,
As ugly dream at break of day;
Each household, at its touch of might,
Will move to music, love, and light."

As thus the minstrel played and sang
The bells more jubilantly rang;
Guitar and voice and bells sonorous
Uniting in a hopeful chorus.—J. L.

THE SAILOR PRINCES IN THE FIJI ISLANDS.

A telegram from Hong-Kong states that H.M.S. Bacchante, with Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales on board, sailed on Saturday for Suez. A public ball was given in their honour on their previous night.

We are indebted to an amateur artist on board H.M.S. Inconstant, or rather to his friends in England, for some interesting sketches and notes, dated Sept. 12, to illustrate the visit of the Flying Squadron to the Fiji Islands. The squadron, it should be remembered, was composed of the Inconstant, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral the Earl of Cornwall, C.B.; the Cleopatra, the Carysfort, the Tourmaline, and the Bacchante, having on board their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales. On Sept. 4 they arrived at the Fiji Islands, and the young Princes had an opportunity of witnessing some of the most curious and striking native ceremonies. On the arrival of the squadron at Levuka, thousands of natives came in from all the neighbouring islands, and testified their loyalty by giving presents and by performing various festive acts of homage. The subject of our illustration is Ratu Timoce, second son of the abdicated King Thakumbau, presenting the yangona, or bowl of kava, to their Royal Highnesses, which is considered the most sacred of Fijian customs. The mixing and preparation of kava, however, is somewhat revolting to English taste. Young women chew the root up, spitting out the juice into a large bowl, and then a native, selected for his skill in mixing it, adds sufficient water, and goes through a lengthy process of straining it with fibre. During this time, the assembled tribe to which he belongs chant an incantation, accompanying it with a graceful swaying motion of the body and arms, and keeping wonderful time in every movement. In the foreground of the scene is a heap of presents, consisting of yams, coconuts, pineapples, bananas, fowls, pigs, turtle, and the kava root. When the beverage was prepared, Ratu Timoce first handed a portion of it to his father, Thakumbau, afterwards to the English Princes, to the Admiral, to the Governor, and to other persons of rank. On the Sunday their Royal Highnesses, who were guests of Mr. Des Vœux at Government House, attended public worship at a native Christian church, and on the following day a meeting was arranged at Nasova, to allow the native chiefs to make their acquaintance. At this meeting, the Vuni Valu, in the names of the assembled chiefs and people, heartily welcomed the Princes to Fiji, at the same time presenting a magnificent "tabua," which was received and acknowledged with an appropriate expression of thanks by his Royal Highness Prince Albert Victor. The squadron left Fiji on Sept. 10. One of the finest exhibitions was a grand war dance of the natives, in full martial array, illuminated by the electric light from H.M.S. Inconstant; of which scene we have an illustration in hand.

THE PANTOMIMES.

Our well-informed contributor, G.A.S., in the article "Echoes from the Pantomimes," published last week, filled a column and a half with his descriptive commentary upon "Robinson Crusoe," as performed at Drury Lane Theatre. In the present Number of this Journal the same writer's review of what is going on at "The Playhouses" includes a sufficient notice of the Covent Garden Pantomime, which is a compound of three familiar nursery legends—namely, those of "Little Bo-Peep," "Little Boy Blue," and "The Little Old Woman who Lived in a Shoe." We shall therefore merely invite the reader's attention to our Artist's Sketches of scenes and figures at Drury Lane and Covent Garden Theatres, and to the account which G. A. S. has given of those performances; but, if they want to know anything more, as it is to be hoped they will, let them hasten to purchase tickets and go to see for themselves. There is Robinson Crusoe, sure enough, personated by Miss Fanny Leslie, conversing in the island forest with a noble Cockatoo, whose grand beak and plumage, with the dignity and gravity of his birdly bearing, cover the main presence of Harry Jackson. On the other side, there is, most conspicuously big in the very middle of the mimic universe, that capacious Shoe, crammed full of so many children, which perplexed the Malthusian old woman to know what she could do with them. She had no colonies—no Manitoba, Queensland, or New Zealand—for the surplus juvenile population: so she "whipped them all round and sent them to bed." There are some political old women, now as in former generations, who could find no better remedy for the pressure of population on the means of subsistence in Great Britain and Ireland. But Little Bo-Peep and Little Boy Blue must not be forgotten; and G. A. S. may be trusted for all the rest of the mixed entertainment. Another illustration, that of "Rehearsing for the Pantomime," which we presented last week, was sketched on the stage of Covent Garden Theatre.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Tuesday, Jan. 3

New-Year's Day was as bright and mild as a spring day, and so the fêtes of the "Jour de l'An" passed off most agreeably. What these fêtes are it is not very easy to say. For the majority of the Parisians they consist in passing the day in the open air, and doing nothing, an occupation in which the French have the blessed privilege of excelling. Of course there are people who are pestered by social duties. President Grévy, for instance, stood up in the reception-rooms, at the Elysée, at ten o'clock precisely, and remained on his feet for some six hours. His first visitors were the Senators and Deputies; and then, after a brief interval for breakfast, M. Grévy, surrounded by his military household, the Ministers, the Marshals of France, the Grand Chancellor of the Legion of Honour, the Governors of Paris and the Invalides, and other high dignitaries, received the seasonable compliments of the diplomatic corps and of deputations from all the great institutions of France, the Army, the Church, the Stock Exchange, the Comédie Française, the Opera, the municipalities, &c. These receptions are a terrible weariness to the flesh for all parties concerned, even for the crowd of idlers who loaf round the approaches to the Elysée all day to see the bigwigs, the robes, uniforms, ribbons, and stars. This year most of the Ministers did not, as usual, receive the employés of their departments. On New-Year's Day cabs were not to be had for love or money; they were all engaged in advance by those who had a series of visits of ceremony to pay. Commissioners, too, were rare, and their services were in great request for carrying presents, whether of bouquets of flowers or of bonbons. This year there has been a certain reaction against insipid sweetmeats encased in silk and satin envelopes, and boxes of the most lamentably bad taste; and books and flowers have been largely employed for presents to fair friends and esteemed hostesses. But, after all, every Parisian is not in society, and there are a few thousand inhabitants of the great city who have no social relations, and who send neither sweetmeats nor visiting cards to their friends. These pass New-Year's Day in the open air, in the wine-shops, in the cafés, on the Boulevards with their wives and children, gazing at the wonders of the "Foire aux étrennes," and making the little ones happy for the modest sum of thirteen sous. L'oyez la vente! Tout est à treize! The Frenchman is, above all, industrious. He likes to respect Saint Monday, Sainte-Féine as he calls it, but the next day he resumes work valiantly. In Paris, the morrow of a fête does not mean an extra full day for the police magistrate. Nothing could be more sober, decent, and well-behaved than the immense concourse of people that filled the streets and boulevards of Paris on Sunday. There was only one disagreeable feature to be noticed, and that was the swarm of beggars that invaded the church doors and all the thoroughfares. Although mendicity is prohibited in Paris, there are always some beggars even on the grand boulevards, but on New-Year's Day the police regulations are tacitly suspended, and the beggars take the town by storm.

Although the New-Year's fêtes are over, the fair along the boulevards will continue until the end of the week. Meanwhile, another fair has sprung up, as if by magic, on the open space around the Panthéon and the Church of Saint Etienne du Mont. The usually tranquil Rue Soufflet is full of stalls for the sale of rosaries, relics, fragments of the true cross, medals, images, and religious prints; for it is to-day, Jan. 3, that the neuvaine of Saint Geneviève begins. Saint Geneviève was a shepherdess of Nanterre, who led her contemporaries to victory against Attila's Huns, and who transformed Lutetia into Paris. In recognition of her valour and virtue she was made the patron saint of Paris, and her bones were reported to have miraculous healing powers. In 1792, in the heyday of the Age of Reason, the Commune ordered the bones of the Saint to be burned on the Place de Grève; but, thanks to some pious fraud, some of the bones were saved, and after the Revolution they were divided equally between the Church of Saint Etienne and the Panthéon, both of which possess a shrine of Saint Geneviève; and ever since 1852 the annual neuvaine has been celebrated with great solemnity. Pilgrimages to the shrine are organised from all the districts around Paris and from the different metropolitan churches, and every means taken to render the manifestation imposing. This very morning, in sceptical Paris, in the year of progress and enlightenment, 1882 sick folk, halt, lame, and blind were brought to the Church of Saint Etienne to touch the shrine of the saint; women had articles of clothing rubbed against the shrine in the belief that some miraculous virtues would be imparted to them. And these phenomena will continue for the next week, until the nine-days' prayer and thanksgiving are completed.

Before leaving the subject of the New Year, a word or two must be said about those who have received the red ribbon of the Legion of Honour by way of étrennes. At the head of the list is the name of Edouard Marnet, a painter whose talent and originality have at length gained universal acknowledgment. Then follow the names of Félix Bracquemond, the etcher; Olivier Merson, the painter; Faure, the singer; and Ferdinand Poise, the composer. Sir Henry Sumner Maine has also received étrennes from France, the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences having unanimously elected him a corresponding member in the jurisprudence section.

M. Ferdinand Hérol, Senator and Prefect of the Seine, died on New-Year's Day, after a long illness, in his fifty-fourth year. Death has also carried off within the past few days two painters of high talent—Eugène Giraud, one of the celebrities of the Romantic epoch, a great friend of Alexandre Dumas the elder, and Alfred Delencq, whose pictures are very highly esteemed here.

The theatres brought the year to a close with a number of new pieces, amongst which may be noticed an amusing comedy, "Le Mari de Babette," by MM. Meilhac and Gille, which has at length replaced Sardou's "Divorçons!" at the Palais Royal. At the Opéra Comique two mediocre pieces have been produced, "Les Pantins" and "La Taverne du Trabans," the libretto of the latter being by MM. Erckmann-Chatrian. On the other hand, an excellent singer, Mlle. Merguillier, has made her début at that theatre, and been proclaimed a "star" without hesitation.

Parliament will meet this day week. The wisdom of ages which says that the more things change the more they remain the same will probably be exemplified once more in the ensuing Session. No less than six interpellations are already announced; the appointment of a former Opposition journalist, M. J. J. Weiss, to an important position in the Foreign Office has called forth storms of abuse against M. Gambetta; the newspaper writers are frequently tearing each other's eyes out; there is a constant clashing of swords in the Bois de Boulogne and the wood of Vincennes; Henri Rochefort has been trying to get up a duel in order to keep his hand in; the fencing masters are in high glee; several prominent Deputies have been observed at the Zoological Gardens studying attentively the cries of animals, with a view to their Parliamentary duties; in short, 1882 promises to resemble 1881 in its leading characteristics. T. C.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

"Little Bo-Peep, Little Boy Blue, and the Little Old Woman that Lived in a Shoe," is, in addition to its brilliant merits as a spectacle, essentially a Children's Pantomime. The array of "small infantry" who occupy the huge stage at Covent Garden at intervals during the evening seems even more multitudinous than the cognate lilliputian muster at Drury Lane; and the Covent Garden juveniles, while they seem to have been as well drilled, choregraphically, as the clever little pupils of Madame Katie Lanner, not only enliven Little Bo-Peep with dancing and posturing, but likewise with singing. Very sweet and silvery were the choruses the children sang, especially in the scene of the "Village of Content," which is described as a "realistic" one, illustrating the homing of the harvest in the olden time. I have no pretensions to know anything about music, scientifically considered; but as an auditor of juvenile vocalisation I have had considerable experience. It happens that I live next door but one to the Foundling Hospital; and I know few treats more delightful than to hear the Foundling children practising their hymns on fine spring and summer mornings. There is plenty of agricultural "live stock," too, in the Covent Garden pantomime—live pigeons, a live donkey, a live flock of sheep and a dog, very much alive indeed. With plenty of gay scenery and dresses, and a liberal allowance of spangles, foil paper, Dutch metal, and coloured fires in the Grand Transformation scene, what more could the children desire? The Covent Garden pantomime is, to my thinking, entitled to a most liberal extension of popular support. A vast amount of money must have been spent on its production; and the entertainment is itself very carefully constructed, and as graceful as it is diverting. From beginning to end, the story of Little Bo-Peep is never lost sight of, although it is intertwined with the myth of Little Boy Blue and the legend (with that terrible warning to children in the castigation between supper and bed time) of the Little Old Woman that Lived in a Shoe, a mediæval forecast, as Mr. Blanchard Jerrold found out long ago, of the embarrassments occasionally experienced by Britannia in dealing with her numerous and frolicsome young colonies. Mr. William Younge is the writer of the Covent Garden pantomime, which has been produced entirely under his supervision and management. Let not a "real live waterfall"—a very charming cascade indeed—be forgotten in the scene of the City of Acanthia and Honey-suckle, in which there is a most gorgeous Dream of Fairyland painted by Mr. William Telbin, and a grand floral ballet arranged by M. Henri Dewinne, and in which the premières danseuses are Mlles. Rosa and Allcroft. A pas seul is also executed with much spirit and grace by "the wonderful infant danseuse," Violet Tyrell. In the scene of the "Boot in the Broken," painted by Mr. Bruce Smith, an amusing parody of a Board School examination is given; and the marvellous Girards and the talented Nelson troupe go through some extraordinary "Demon Revels." Another very fine tableau is "King Hategood's retreat in Reptile Hall," painted by Mr. W. Perkins. Here there occurs a glittering procession and a "Ballet of Indescribables." The artist of the Transformation Scene is Mr. Charles Brew. In the opening King Hategood was capably played by Mr. Julian Girard; and pretty Miss N. Claremont in Little Bo-Peep; Miss Lizzie Collins (who sang "La-di-da" very charmingly) as Margery Daw, and Miss F. Trevelyan all filled their parts satisfactorily. Not less efficient were Mr. G. Bradshaw as Granny Grin, Mr. F. Girard as Gabriel Grin, Mr. M. Girard as Gonomy Gron, and Mr. E. Girard as Gorton Gren. In the "comic business" the "great" Walter Hildyard was clown; Mr. De Voy, pantaloone; Mr. G. Canning, harlequin; Miss Harriet Lauri, columbine; Mr. Moss, the now inevitable policeman; and Messrs. Fisk, Ricardo, Mather, and Meeham, the sprites.

Splendid, artistically arranged, and deservedly successful as was "Little Bo-Peep," it is difficult to avoid the impression that pantomimes, properly so called, are, literally as well as figuratively speaking, "on their last legs," and that ere long the harlequinade will be entirely eliminated from our Christmas "annuals." That which remains will be the spectacular extravaganza; but it is necessary to warn theatrical managers, in their own interest, that, if they wish to have full houses and make their spectacles pay, they must refrain from wearying and harassing their audiences by unconscionably long performances. The Covent Garden pantomime, and that at Drury Lane, to boot, ought to be preceded by a laughable farce, or some other levée de rideau, which would allow the habitual occupants of the boxes and stalls to have their dinner before coming to the theatre. As it is, "Little Bo-Peep" begins at the unreasonably early hour of seven, and plays, without the curtain once falling for a few minutes' interval, for three hours and twenty minutes. Managers of theatres, where spectacular pantomimes are played should take a leaf out of the book of Mr. John Hollingshead, and divide their pantomimes, as the shrewd impresario of the Gaiety does his burlesques, into three acts. The brief intervals of rest between the acts would be a relief and a boon, not only to the ladies and gentlemen before the curtain, but also to those behind it.

A really astonishing triumph was the lot last Saturday, at the Adelphi Theatre, of the new and original drama, in five acts, entitled "Taken from Life," written by Mr. Henry Pettitt. There had been bruited about town a rumour that Mr. Pettitt had laid his dramatic lines on those of Mr. Frith's Hogarthian series of pictures, "The Road to Ruin;" but this turned out to be by no means the case. The most conspicuous "sensational," and almost unprecedented "situation," in "Taken from Life" is a simulation of the blowing down of the wall of the House of Detention, facing Corporation-row, Clerkenwell, in the winter of the year 1867. I watched the scene—superbly "set" and admirably stage-managed—with exceptionally lively emotion, from the stalls of the Adelphi, on Saturday; for I can say with the bluff man-at-arms who in a well-known French painting is looking at the picture of a battle scene, "J'y étais." I was there—not "All the while; all the while," like the man at the Siege of Belleisle, but within an hour of the occurrence of the explosion; and remember standing close to Captain Shaw on the summit of a great heap of debris, with the shattered houses in Corporation-row on one side, and the prison wall, with that horrible gap in it, on the other. Across the yard, high up in the grim wall of the jail itself, they pointed out to you the gas-lit window of the cell in which the Fenian Head Centre, who was to have been rescued, was confined. The gloomy prison yard—that window, and Corporation-row all ablaze with the gas turned on from the main, and lighting up a multitude of police and firemen, and the scarlet uniforms of the Guards, have long haunted me. I shall never forget that scene in Clerkenwell in '67. The next best thing to it in the way of picturesqueness was the sham explosion in "Taken from Life." It literally took the crowded house by storm. In the interpretation of a very simple and moving, and not very improbable, story of Vice punished and Virtue rewarded Mr. Henry Pettitt has been extremely fortunate in the cooperation of Mr. Charles Warner as Walter Lee, the virtuous and much-persecuted hero; of Mr. J. D. Beveridge as Philip Radley, a sporting character and most atrocious villain, ultimately and happily arrested for forgery; of Mr. E. H. Brooke as William Maguire, a "Socialist;" of Mr. Fred. Thorne as Titus Knott, a "nondescript;" of Mr. Edward Price as John Denby, a country gentleman; of Mr. Otway Compton as Robert Channell, a country gentleman; of Miss Gerard as Kate Denby, the wife of the virtuous Walter Lee; of Miss Florence Chalgrove as Bella Greystone, an heiress; of Miss Edith Bruce as Mary Maguire, a pert femme de chambre; and especially of Miss Jenny Rogers, a very young actress, who played with surprising vivacity and appreciativeness the part of Jack, an ill-used little stable-boy, who eventually turns out to be the long-lost child of Walter Lee. Norlet me forget Mr. Harry Proctor's very bluff and genial rendering of an old trainer by the name of Joe Gallon. There is much more to be said about "Taken from Life," both as a play and in regard to the manner in which it is played. This week I must content myself with remarking that the management of the Adelphi and Mr. Henry Pettitt have scored a splendid success in a drama altogether of the old Adelphi school, and which should have as long and as prosperous a career as Mr. Dion Boucicault's "Colleen Bawn."

G. A. S.

We have only space to add this week that the brilliantly-successful author of "The Lights of London," Mr. George R. Sims, has now four plays running in London, the quartet being completed by the uproariously funny "frivolous comedy" of "Mother-in-Law," which moved a large audience at the Opéra Comique to continuous laughter on Saturday, and by a revival of the comical "Member for Slocum" at the Olympic on Monday.

Mr. Brandram announces eleven afternoon recitals, mostly of Shakespeare's Plays, to be given at Willis's Rooms; the first, on Tuesday, the 17th inst., to be the First Part of "Henry IV."

MUSIC.

The final performance of last year was one of Mr. John Boosey's ballad concerts, which took place at St. James's Hall on Saturday afternoon, and included the co-operation of Misses M. Davies, C. Samuelli, Mesdames Patey and Antoinette Sterling, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. F. B. Foote, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Maybrick—with good part-singing by the South London Choral Association. The programme was of the usual popular character, and drew the customary full attendance. Another afternoon ballad concert is to be given on Jan. 11, and an evening concert (of Irish music) on the following Wednesday.

The earliest musical event of the year just opened was the resumption this week, of the Monday Popular Concerts. The performances comprised Mdlle. Marie Krebs's fine rendering of Beethoven's solo sonata in E flat (from op. 31), and her co-operation in Hermann Goetz's Pianoforte Quintet in C minor and Chopin's Introduction and Polonaise for Piano and Violoncello, the latter instrument sustained by Signor Piatti. Mdlle. Krebs was warmly welcomed on her first appearance at this series of concerts, having been encored in her solo, which she replaced by playing a piece by Scarlatti. Mr. E. Lloyd was the vocalist, and M. Hollander the leading violinist. The first of the Saturday afternoon performances also takes place this week.

For Thursday evening an attractive "New-Year's Festival" was announced—for the benefit of Mr. W. Carter—at the Royal Albert Hall, where, on Saturday afternoon, an interesting choral and orchestral concert will take place in aid of the sufferers from the burning of the Ring Theatre, at Vienna. Many eminent artists contribute to the performances, which will be conducted by Herr Hans Richter.

Yesterday (Friday) evening the fourth concert of the fiftieth season of the Sacred Harmonic Society took place, "Elijah" having been the oratorio announced, with Misses A. Williams, Leebe, and Hancock, Madame Patey, Mr. Maas, Mr. Carter, Mr. Santley, and Mr. C. Henry as solo vocalists.

As we remarked last week, the year 1882 promises to be one of unusual musical activity, opera and concert announcements of unprecedented extent being already issued. On the commencement of a new year some reiteration of our previous statements may, perhaps, be admissible.

Among the earliest important events of this year will be the sixth London season of Mr. Carl Rosa's Opera Company, the performances of which (in English) have hitherto been so successful, both here and in the provinces. We last week drew anticipatory attention to some features of the prospectus (just published), which promises adaptations of four of Wagner's operas—"The Flying Dutchman," "Rienzi," and "Lohengrin," as previously given by Mr. Rosa—and the same composer's "Tannhäuser," for the first time in English, besides the production of Bulfe's yet unheard opera, "The Painter of Antwerp," and an adaptation of Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini," with repetitions of other more familiar works. As before stated, Mr. Rundegger will be the conductor, and Mr. Carrodus the leading violinist. The company comprises Madame Alwina Valleria, Misses Gaylord, Yorke, Burns, Warren, Warwick, and Perry; Herr Schott, Messrs. McGuckin, Packard, Lyall, Turner, Thomas, Ludwig, Bolton, Pope, Snazelle, Crotty, Brooklyn, and Leahy; with the first appearances of Misses La Rue and E. Kemble, and Messrs. B. Davies and H. d'Egville. The offices of stage director and acting manager are again in the competent hands, respectively, of Mr. G. H. Betjemann and Mr. J. D. McLaren. As mentioned last week, "Lohengrin" will be given on the opening night (Jan. 14) and Wednesday, "The Flying Dutchman" on Monday, and attractive operas during the week.

We have already spoken of the scheme of German opera performances at Her Majesty's Theatre during May, and at Drury Lane Theatre during that month and June; the former entirely consisting of Wagner's four Nibelungen operas: four times rendered, the former of his "Der Fliegende Holländer;" "Tannhäuser," "Lohengrin," "Die Meistersinger," and "Tristan und Isolde," supplemented by Beethoven's "Fidelio," Weber's "Euryanthe," and Mozart's "Così fan tutte." As previously said, Herr Richter will be the conductor at Drury Lane, and Herr A. Seidl at Her Majesty's Theatre, where the rehearsals will be superintended by Wagner.

The seventieth season of the Philharmonic Society begins on Feb. 9; the Crystal Palace Saturday afternoon concerts will be resumed on the 18th of that month; the oratorio performances of the Sacred Harmonic Society and the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society will be continued during the first four months of the year, as will Mr. W. Carter's National concerts at the latter place; a new series of the now celebrated Richter concerts will be given in May and June; and grand orchestral "Symphony concerts" are announced (also at St. James's Hall) for the same months, conducted by Mr. Charles Hallé. Mr. W. Ganz will give a new series of his excellent orchestral concerts, three similar performances being announced by Mr. W. Macfarren; and interesting concerts will be given by the Bach Society and the London Musical Society. Of this year's Italian opera season there is as yet no authentic information.

The autumn will bring with it a recurrence of the triennial Festivals at Birmingham, Hereford, and Bristol—there being a rumour of similar performances at Preston. The programme of the first-named celebration will be of special interest, as including the production of Gounod's new oratorio "The Redemption" (specially composed for Birmingham); besides which, new works will be produced—"Graziella," a cantata by Sir J. Benedict, "Psyche" by Herr Gade, and an orchestral piece by Mr. C. V. Stanford.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

THE MOON.

Professor R. S. Ball's second lecture on the Sun, Moon, and Planets, given on Thursday, Dec. 29, was devoted to the Moon. He began by commenting on the importance of our Satellite in producing the tides, stating that if it were carried off the commercial activity of our seaports would cease. He said that the Moon was our nearest neighbour, and one of the smallest of the heavenly bodies; he next explained how Eclipses are produced, and how they are foretold, and the assistance rendered by the Moon to sailors. As the face of the Moon is always the same to us, we do not know what is on the other side. He then described how photographs of the Moon had been taken by its own light, adding that from its continued motion it was not a good sitter. Many views were shown by the electric light in illustration of the Eclipses of the Moon, and of the various craters and other objects on its surface. A large model of a crater was exhibited, and by the Electric Lamp the shadows were produced in illustration of the method by which the altitude of the Moon's mountains has been ascertained. By a comparison between volcanic districts on the Earth, it is shown that great volcanic activity once reigned on the Moon. The volcanoes on the Moon are now all extinct. A photograph of Plato and the adjoining mountains on the Moon was then exhibited; and a comparison was also made by pictures of a crater in the Moon with an extinct crater in the Sandwich Islands. The Professor also described an imaginary walk on the Moon by earth light, and the reddish colour of the Moon sometimes observable during an eclipse was attributed to the same illumination. Finally, the absence from the Moon of water and of air was demonstrated, and the question as to the habitability of the Moon was discussed.

MERCURY, VENUS, AND MARS.

Professor Ball began his third lecture, given on Saturday, Dec. 31, by describing the apparatus by which we have learnt so much about the heavenly bodies. He exhibited a view of the orbits of the four inner planets around the sun, pointing out that the orbits are nearly circles, all lying in nearly the same plane, and that the planets all move in the same direction. The Professor also described how observations are made on the planets, both with equatorial telescopes and with meridian circles. Both these instruments were illustrated by diagrams and by models. Telescopic views of Venus were then exhibited, and remarks were made of the physical qualities of the planet, and the possibility of life existing upon it. An interesting account was next given of the circumstances connected with the transits of Venus in 1874 and in 1882, and illustrated by a model. The transits of Mercury across the Sun during the nineteenth century were adverted to. After describing how a planet may be weighed, the Professor alluded to the determination of the mass of Mercury by the disturbance of a comet. Illustrations of the physical conditions on Mercury were given. The Professor then commented on the search for Vulcan, the planet of romance, which was believed to have been detected during a recent solar eclipse by the late Professor Watson. The planet Mars was next considered, and reference was made to the observations of Tycho Brahe; the movements of Mars were explained, and the very remarkable discovery of its two satellites by Professor Asaph Hall at Washington, U.S., Aug. 11, 1877, was described. Kepler's great discovery of the elliptic movements of the planets was briefly noticed, and illustrated, showing that the planets revolve in ellipses, with the sun as the focus. The continents and polar regions of Mars, and its physical condition, were commented on. It was next explained how Mars helps us in determining the distance of the Sun.

JUPITER, SATURN, URANUS.

Professor Ball, in his fourth lecture on Astronomy, considered the greater planets. The enormous size of Jupiter was noticed, and illustrations were shown of his surface, of his satellites, and of their eclipses. His density was stated to be little more than that of water. The observations of the variations in the times of the eclipses of the satellites by Bradley led to his great discovery of the aberration of light and the determination of the velocity of light. A model of Saturn and his ring was shown, and it was explained that the ring must consist of a vast multitude of minute bodies. From the great lightness of this planet as compared with its bulk, it was demonstrated that, as we see it, it cannot be a solid body: we only see the surface of clouds apparently surrounding the more solid planet. The satellites of Saturn were next noticed, and reference was made to Mr. Lassell's discovery of several of them. The orbit of Saturn was long thought to be the boundary of the solar system. An interesting account was then given of the life and labours of William Herschel and his sister Caroline, and his splendid discovery of the planet Uranus, which had been observed on many former occasions, but was detected by Herschel studying its disc. His great 40 ft. telescope near Windsor was described, and reference was made to the magnitude and importance of his astronomical labours.

LIFE-BOAT SERVICES.

Last week we briefly alluded to the furious gales which, during the closing weeks of the year, were a disastrous feature in the events of 1881. Mr. Lewis, the indefatigable secretary of the National Life-Boat Institution, tells the painful story of disasters by sea in a more definite form. From his record of destructive storms and from other sources, we gather that more than a thousand British-owned vessels, including 191 steamers, were lost last year, and of these the great majority foundered or went ashore off the coasts of the United Kingdom. This gloomy catalogue of sea fatalities is, however, relieved by the noble services of the life-boats connected with the organisation referred to, which resulted in the saving of 996 lives and 33 vessels. This admirable institution also granted awards last year for saving 155 shipwrecked persons by fishing-boats and other means, making a grand total of 1121 lives saved during the year. So splendid a record of gallant achievements at the risk of dear life suggests its own moral. The fleet of life-boats now numbers 270, to sustain which public support has been freely given, and is still urgently needed. This meritorious institution will, we are sure, never lack liberal and prompt assistance from those who "live at home at ease," and are not exposed to "the dangers of the seas."

THE CHURCH.

Numerous meetings were held in London last Monday to inaugurate a week of universal prayer, arranged by the Council of the Evangelical Alliance.

The Bishop of Winchester has conferred on the Rev. George Raymond Portal, Rector of Burghclere, Hants, and Rural Dean, an honorary canonry in Winchester Cathedral; and the Rev. M. G. Watkins, Rector of Barnoldby-le-Beck, has been appointed by the Bishop of Lincoln Rural Dean of Grimsby.

The Rev. C. W. Markham has received £100 from the High Sheriff of Lincolnshire (Mr. N. Clayton) towards the Southwell Endowment Fund.

Lord Hastings has contributed, through the Archdeacon of Northumberland, £500 to the Newcastle Bishopric Fund.—The Additional Home Bishops' Endowment Fund, 7, Whitehall, has recently received a contribution of £1000 from Mr. R. Foster, which has, in accordance with the condition under which it was originally promised—namely, that it should be given to the Bishopric Fund first completed from the date of promise—been assigned to this fund.

The children's service in Westminster Abbey associated with the Festival of the Holy Innocents took place last week, when Dean Bradley preached the sermon from a passage in Baruch—"Be of good cheer, O my children." The greater portion of the sermon was taken up by references to his lamented predecessor in the pulpit, a kindly tribute of reverent acknowledgment of the estimable qualities possessed by Dean Stanley being tendered.

The Rev. A. P. Robinson, on leaving the senior curacy of Outcham for Bicester, has received a solid silver tea-service from the parishioners; a handsome horseshoe inkstand from the first class of the boys' school; and from Egleton a Russian leather writing-case; besides numerous useful presents from individual friends.—The Rev. J. E. Robinson, who has resigned the vicarage of Chieveley, Berks, after an incumbency of forty-five years, has been presented with a handsome testimonial and address, expressive of the esteem and regard of his late parishioners.—The Rev. S. L. Dixon, Vicar of St. John's, Lynn, has been presented by his parishioners with a purse of £75 as a Christmas offering, by way of augmentation of the miserably small stipend attached to the "living."

A handsome new church in the Norman style, capable of seating 550 persons, was opened on St. Thomas's Day, in Litchurch, Derby, by the Bishop of Lichfield. It has been erected at the sole cost of the Rev. A. and Mrs. Olivier, in memory of the late revered Archdeacon Hill, after designs by Mr. J. Peacock, of Bloomsbury-square, London, who was also the architect of the mother Church of St. James. The large wheel window and three lancets underneath are filled with very beautiful stained glass, by Messrs. Mayer and Co., and are the gift of the architect.

The parish church of St. Pancras, the first stone of which was laid by the Duke of York in the year 1819, and the cost of which is said to have been £90,000, has received some internal ornamentation. In its general plan, the building follows the lines of the Erechtheum, with the Temple of the Winds added to it by way of steeple. Its ceiling has now been decorated, and on the walls, in letters of gold, are verses from the "Te Deum," beginning "The glorious company of the Apostles." The windows, which are, of course, mere sashes, have been adorned by Messrs. Clayton and Bell with the effigies of apostles, prophets, martyrs, and early members of the Church.

BENEVOLENT OBJECTS.

Lord Gort yesterday week opened six almshouses at the rear of the Townhall, Cowes, which the Rev. T. B. Macnamara has erected for the accommodation of twelve old persons. The houses are well situated, with a lawn before them, and have every accommodation for the inmates.

The anniversary festival in aid of the funds of the City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, Victoria Park, is appointed to take place at the Cannon-street Hotel, on March 28, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, supported by the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex.

Yesterday week the annual dinner of the Commercial Travellers' Benevolent Institution took place at the Freemasons' Tavern—Alderman Sir Thomas White in the chair. Subscriptions and donations amounting to upwards of £1700 were announced. In addition to this total made up at the dinner, subscriptions amounting to nearly £1000 were announced by telegram from Leeds. The institution grants pensions to necessitous commercial travellers of £50 per annum, and to the widows of members not exceeding £30 per annum.

A most successful concert was given at Leigh Court, near Bristol, last week, in aid of the funds of the East London Hospital for Children, so well known through Charles Dickens's description of a chance visit that he paid to it. The ladies and gentlemen who generously gave their services were Lady Colin Campbell, Miss Miles, Mrs. Arthur Goodeve, Miss Ada Brownrigge, Mrs. Villiers, Mrs. Pomeroy, Mr. Robert Miles, Mr. Morgan, Signor Mortello, and Mr. Pomeroy. The idea of assisting so deserving an object originated with Lady Miles, who, with Sir Philip Miles, Bart., M.P., used their utmost exertions to obtain the success which was achieved. The entire house was thrown open for promenade, and the magnificent collection of pictures, which has been lately rearranged, was especially lighted up for the occasion.

The revenue accounts, which were made up to last Saturday night, show that the receipts during the past quarter amounted to £20,919,560, as against £19,533,654 in the corresponding quarter of 1880. There has been an increase of £1,512,000 in the Excise, £82,000 in stamps, £63,000 in the Post Office, and £5000 in the telegraph service; but the Customs show a decrease of £146,000, land tax and house duty £5000, and property and income tax £42,000. There are decreases in other departments, the result being a net increase of £1,379,896. During the nine months of this financial year the receipts show a net increase of £2,640,891.

There will be two eclipses of the sun this year, one of which will be visible and the other invisible in England; and there will also be a transit of Venus across the sun's disc. The first, a total eclipse (but only observable in England as a partial one), will occur here on May 16, and be visible throughout Europe, Asia, and Northern Africa, the line of the central eclipse passing through the equatorial regions of Timbuctoo, Egypt, the Arabian Desert, and China. The second, or annular eclipse, on Nov. 10, will be invisible at Greenwich, but it will be generally perceptible throughout Australia and New Zealand, the line of central eclipse in this case passing through the island of New Guinea. The transit of Venus across the sun's disc will take place on Dec. 6, and will be partly visible in England. The first contact with the outer edge of the sun's disc occurs at about four minutes to two in the afternoon. The ingress only can be seen at Greenwich as the sun sets on Dec. 6 at ten minutes to four. There will be no other transit of Venus until the year 2004.

SCENES FROM THE DRURY-LANE AND COVENT-GARDEN PANTOMIMES.—SEE PAGE 6.

NEW-YEAR'S GREETINGS BY TELEPHONE.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

ARCTIC EXPLORATION: THE EIRA, MR. LEIGH SMITH'S YACHT.
FROM A PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN BY MR. W. J. A. GRANT, IN 1880.

The Extra Supplement.

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL

The Roman high road from the Kentish seacoast to Londinium and Verulamium, and to the north-west, the road which is now called Watling-street, crossed the river Medway at Stroud; and there, on the opposite or right bank of the river, a fortress was built, which afterwards became the stronghold of Hrolf, a Saxon Chieftain or King, and which got from him the name of Rolfcheester, shortened into Rochester. When the Papal missionary St. Augustine came to England, towards the beginning of the seventh Christian century, he established a Bishopric of Rochester for the religious rule of West Kent. The first Bishop was Justus, from the year 604 to 621; Paulinus, the apostle of Northumbria, was Bishop of Rochester from 633 to 644. The excellent Bishop of the diocese now is the Right Rev. Anthony W. Thorold, D.D., who signs himself "A. W. Roffen." He was, till five years ago, Vicar of St. Pancras, Euston-square, and one of the best of London clergymen, which is saying a great deal. Between the seventh-century Bishops and this present incumbency of Bishop Thorold, who has all South London and suburban Surrey to look after, together with West Kent, many famous prelates have occupied the See; Gundulf, who built the Cathedral and the fine Norman Castle, as well as parts of the Tower of London and of Dover Castle; Walter de Merton, who became Lord Chancellor under Henry III. and Edward I., and founder of Merton College, Oxford; Bishop Fisher, the chief adviser of "the Lady Margaret," Countess of Richmond and Derby, King Henry VII.'s mother, in her pious gifts and labours; he was the blameless victim, with good Sir Thomas More, of Henry VIII.'s bloodthirsty tyranny in 1535; Bishop Sprat, the time-serving trimmer of the Revolution period; and Bishop Atterbury, the Jacobite intriguer; besides many learned and devout men of no special renown.

The Cathedral, of which Mr. S. Read has drawn a capital view, is composed of the Norman nave and crypt, and the choir and transepts of Early English or primal Gothic style, with some Decorated Gothic in the choir windows and in the chapter-house doorway. It is worth while to go to the top of Rochester Castle, and thence look down upon the whole edifice of the neighbouring Cathedral, which can hardly be seen to much advantage from any other external point of view, being inclosed with other buildings. The west front, except the great window, is of the Norman period, from 1077 to 1130; and consists of a centre flanked by two turrets, and of two wings, the latter containing the entrances to the side aisles. The middle doorway presents five receding arches, moulded with rich sculptures, in the manner of some French Cathedrals. The interior of the Cathedral is generally plain, but the Norman arches, more especially the upper tier of the nave, display some elaborate ornamentation; the north transept is also decorated. The tombs of Bishop Merton and others, here and in the chancel, are worthy of attention. In the south transept is the admired doorway of the Chapter-house. A monument of Charles Dickens, who was born at Rochester and died at Gad's Hill, and whose last unfinished story, "Edwin Drood," contains more than one scene in the Cathedral, will be regarded with much interest by the visitors to this fine old place.

NEW-YEAR'S GREETINGS BY TELEPHONE.

The wonderful performances of applied physical science at the present day have gone far towards annihilating both space and time, as natural obstacles to human correspondence and intercourse of thought. One kind of apparatus succeeds to another, with the progress of invention from year to year, providing new facilities of distant communication, which is effected almost instantaneously, and so as to give the sense of being in the immediate presence, though not in sight, of the persons with whom conversation is held. It may be remembered how, two or three years ago, some directors of electric telegraphy in London invited an evening party of ladies and gentlemen to a grand telegraphic séance at Westminster, at which one or two of the Royal Princes and other distinguished visitors were among the company. They were entertained during several hours with sending and receiving complimentary messages, or exchanging kind inquiries and replies to and from New York, Washington, Calcutta, Sydney, Melbourne, and Hong-Kong, if our recollection be correct, and many other remote places; but the messages were delivered at various hours of the day or night, from the differences of latitude and longitude all over the earth. The President of the United States, for example, could receive at six o'clock, or thereabouts, a telegram dispatched to him from England at nine o'clock the same evening; but the Viceroy of India had not risen from his morning sleep—to him, in the East, it was to-morrow morning—when the London evening assembly bade his Excellency a fair "Good-night." The reader will now look at our Artist's illustration of a scene which actually took place not many days ago, where people gathering at a similar invitation, to satisfy themselves of the powers of the telephone, were enabled to use the miraculous hearing-tubes, applied to their own ears, and could listen to words spoken in another place, by the aid of the conducting wires. It may readily be conceived that New-Year's Greetings, if such a telephonic séance were appointed for the eve of the First of January, would be a most appropriate matter of conversation, within certain geographical limits. But, if the range of communication by telephone should ever be so far extended as is that of the electric telegraph, there would be some embarrassment in the exchange of congratulations upon New-Year's Day. The clock does not strike twelve simultaneously all round the world, nor has the sun been ordained to perform the impossible task of shining, at noon, upon all places at once. The night of one country is the yesterday of another, and the to-morrow of a third. A whole day's reckoning is lost, in "Meeting the Sun"—to quote the title of Mr. W. Simpson's pleasant book—when the traveller by ocean steamer from Yokohama crosses the 180th degree of longitude—west or east—on his voyage to San Francisco. The instantaneous circulation, therefore, of New Year's Greetings, may prove to be not a very simple matter, let Science do whatever she will.

The West African mail brings news that a force of Houssas has left Elmina for Danoe, and that other troops are to be dispatched there as soon as possible, to punish the natives of for having killed two English Customs officials.

The Queen has approved the appointment of Sir Henry Bulwer, K.C.M.G., to be Governor of Natal. Sir Henry Bulwer, has already served as Lieutenant-Governor of Natal for upwards of five years.

A prize of £200 is offered by the Institute of Science and Art of Milan for the best life of Leonardo da Vinci. The time allowed is four years. It can be written in Latin, English, French, or German.

WORKS OF THE OLD MASTERS.

For the first time, we find the Winter Exhibition at Burlington House disappointing, comparatively speaking, though there is much to delight and instruct. We miss the usual proportion of works of engrossing interest to the more serious students of art and its historical development. In Room IV., for instance, which is customarily devoted to works illustrating the progress of painting from its revival, and the tentative efforts of the leading painters of the several schools, till the technical perfection of the cinque-cento was attained, there are much fewer examples than usual. Obviously, a most important function of these exhibitions is to bring to light from the obscurity of private collections, and to place together for comparison, all and any works that may serve to fill up lacunæ in, or correct and complete the fascinating story of art through the centuries of its naïve, pious, struggling growth. To provide a display of popular and attractive pictures would always be easy for the Academicians; but they have a higher duty to perform. Again there are comparatively few works of the nobler and ampler Italian schools which, with their pure sentiment, their sense of beauty, and aim at ideal form, and their splendour and harmony of colour, afford the best corrective to so much that is little, commonplace, and crude in recent art. It is true the Academy has not here a wide, inexhaustible field to select from, for the taste of the earlier collectors of this country, with few exceptions, unhappily, as we must think, preferred the genre pieces and landscapes of the Low Countries. The Exhibition contains, on the other hand, a rich and varied show of works by deceased masters of the British school; but it must be confessed that the living painter has less to learn from our insular art than from that of Rome and Florence, Venice and Bologna.

The collection is, in short, relatively to most of its predecessors, more numerous than select; and we have not before seen in Piccadilly so many pictures neither important nor representative. This remark applies especially to Room No. I. The half-length of Richard Brinsley Sheridan (17), by Sir Joshua Reynolds, should, of course, be interesting on account of the subject; but both the physiognomy and the painting are somewhat disappointing. We need not dwell, at least for the present, on other works by Sir Joshua in this room, nor on those by Romney and Gainsborough, although the portraits of the wife (12) and daughter (49) of the last awakened pleasant associations—so much more worthily are these masters represented further on. Wilkie's early "Card-Players" (34) and his later "Old Man Teasing a Girl" (31), both well known from the engravings, seem to have acquired a little heaviness from the too free use of bitumen in the preparatory painting, but the first has entirely escaped the cracking that so frequently follows the use of that fascinating but treacherous pigment. For character and for the humorous significance of the expressions, this picture is decidedly superior to the card-playing groups by Teniers in the next room; only in freedom of touch does it fall short of the Dutchman. "The Unpaid Bill; or, the Doctor Reproving his Son's Prodigality" (30) is curious as an attempt by Turner (made in 1808), and almost his sole attempt, to deal with an interior figure-subject. The figures, as might be expected, have but a sort of comical expressiveness; yet a keen sense of the effects of light is already apparent in the illumination of the laboratory shelves, bottles, and implements from the window. This gallery contains, however, one work—another example of Turner—impossible to overlook if only on account of its size—i.e., the "Autumnal Morning" (41), in his classical manner, lent by Mrs. Morrison from the little-known collection at Basildown, whence are derived several other very remarkable pictures here. The sapient authorities who seek to elevate Turner at the expense of Claude forget that the English painter could not have been of their opinion or he would not have imitated the Lorrainer so often and so strenuously; they forget that "imitation is the sincerest form of flattery," or admiration. This whole composition, as well as the classical ruin, the altar, and the round of dancing female figures, all testify that emulation of Claude was paramount in Turner's mind during its execution. We may, however, accord to the English artist as more emphatically his own the application of the principle of repetition of similar forms in succeeding planes of diminishing distinctness, whereby he attained the expression of aerial vastness and varied suggestiveness. Still this grandiose composition is not so impressive, sympathetic, or poetic as some Turners of its class, while it has little of the simple, broad, and sweet purity of Claude. It is much obscured, however, by darkened glazes, or brown varnish.

The interest of the exhibition increases greatly in Gallery II. We have here gems of the Dutch and Flemish schools from the Royal collection and from those of Lords Strafford and Norwinton, Mr. Walter, M.P. (of the Times), and others. Bearing in mind the lower aims of these northern painters, their grey and leaden skies compared with the gold and azure of Italy, their common life and associations, and accepting their frequently debased tastes as best we may, we must yet admit that their truth of representation is entitled to sincere respect; and that their patient, loyal, and exquisite workmanship supplies almost faultless models to the realistic painter for all time. The first work that arrests our attention is "The Marriage Feast at Cana" (55), by Jan Steen, a composition of innumerable small figures, full of character, invention, and incident; though, of course, there is no sign of reverent imagination, no attempt at idealisation or historical propriety. There are few works of the master so elaborately finished as this; and when we trace the loving care lavished on every part, and recall the number of able works from the same hand, we can but feel assured that the habits of the artist, innkeeper though he was, were very different from those imputed to him. No. 62 is the first of three Hobbemas. In this, a rich picturesque "Landscape with Figures," the greens employed (which are known to have proved fugitive) have in parts faded, leaving a prevalent dark-bluish tone. No. 77 has been injured by rubbing. No. 80 is unusually rich in tone; a thicker impasto and more varnish have been used in the vehicle, and have "locked up" the colours. "The Painter's Daughter" (63), by Rembrandt, is not specially remarkable. But in the highest degree characteristic are No. 101, the Holy Family, illustrating, in a candle-light subject that must have been painted in great measure from memory, the master's scientific knowledge of the effects of light and shade; No. 117, "Christ and Mary Magdalen at the Tomb," showing that rare compound the realistic poet-painter; and No. 234, "Rembrandt's Cook," a slight but marvellous example of matured power in its loaded impasto and brilliant handling. "A Young Lion" (77) lying prone on the ground, and twisting its lithe though massive body in play after the manner of feline creatures, is a most admirable study by Rubens, far surpassing anything by his pupil Snyders.

We have now reached several excellent examples of Teniers. But first we would invite the visitor's attention to a half-length portrait of himself by Franz Hals (87), unaccountably placed above "the line," though an exceptionally fine piece of portraiture. There is no demonstrative dash or bravura of execution here; only the hand is rather sketchily treated, to place it in due subordination. The good-looking face is modelled with the utmost completeness, the twinkling eye of the bon vivant and the suggestive smile are instinct with vitality. The pictures by Teniers represent his different manners, and include the well-known "Kermesse" (88), from Buckingham Palace; "Le Chapeau Rouge" (85), belonging to Mr. S. Sanders, full of character and with capital effect of light; and "Le Bonnet Rouge" (89), lent by the Earl of Stratford, in the painter's greyer silvery style—both so named from the red cap suspended on a chair back of one of the party in each of drinkers, smokers, and card-players—together with the unusually careful "Old Woman Peeling Turnips" (105), sent by Mr. Lewis Fry; and Lord Penrhyn's "Village Fête" (128), in the next room, which is on that larger scale in which Teniers does not appear to the greatest advantage. The extraordinarily crisp, airy, yet precisely descriptive touch displayed in Teniers' works must always give him a place apart among the many Dutch masters of technique. The microscopic elaboration of F. Mieris (110), and of that analogously minute but rarer stippler Ary de Vos (98 and 100), does not compensate for the absence of the freedom, spirit, and concomitant suggestiveness to which we allude. We must pass with bare mention the quaint "Nativity" (91), by Adrian Ostade; the Gabriel Metzu (92), which has been much injured by restoration; an excellent small Paul Potter (112), marvellous for the rendering of the animals' coats, and the bull in which recalls the large picture at the Hague, and other works by the "little masters" of the Netherlands. An interior subject, a "Girl Peeling Apples" (103), shows an ill-drawn face, the light and shade, however, due probably to the influence of Rembrandt, is effective. But the equal intensity of shade in the open-air subject, "The Milkmaid" (36), is misplaced. Passing into the third or great room, we find, as usual, a number of large works of various schools. First to meet the eye is Vandyke's pretty allegory, since so often repeated, of "Time clipping the wings of Love" (125). In the next picture the master is seen at his best as a portrait-painter; i.e. in a group, of Lords John and Bernard Stuart, a stately presentation, if, as often, the attitudes are a little affected. To Reynolds's "Death of Dido" has been rather injudiciously accorded the post of honour; and flanking it are "Charity" and "Fortitude," two of the designs for compartments of the west window of the chapel of New College, Oxford. The masses of rich colour in all three pictures do not compensate for their conventionality. The higher and more ideal Sir Joshua's aim the more his studied breadth inclined to emptiness. The fine Cuypp from the Queen's collection; an "Immaculate Conception," of the usual type turned out from Murillo's studio, brings us to a half-length "Female Figure," by some inferior follower of Leonardo da Vinci, though attributed to the master himself. Probably by his able scholar, Andrea Salaino, there is a "Virgin and Child" (200) in the fourth room, beautiful in feeling and finish, and worthily supporting the high character of the Lombard school. What haunting fascination must there not have been in the inscrutable smile of Leonardo's favourite model that it should appear so often in his works; and how subtle must be the master's rendering, or idealisation of that smile, that these and all his followers should have constantly sought to reproduce it! "The Triumph of Pan" (141) is one of the finest Nicholas Poussins in existence—wonderful for spirit of conception, composition, and mastery of the figure. Near this is "Venus and Adonis," by Titian—the repeatedly-painted design, of which we have in the National Gallery a version. This was probably the finer picture original, has suffered terribly. A "Holy Family" (150), in a reddish tone, is an exceptionally good example of Ridolfo Ghirlandajo; but the same certainty cannot exist respecting succeeding works attributed to Giorgione (151) and Paul Veronese (153). No. 156, a half-length female figure from Blenheim, is of great interest. It is called "La Fornarina," presumably on the uncertain ground of the face resembling somewhat that of the large moulded bella, so styled, the reputed mistress of Raphael, represented in the picture of the Uffizi. Really the two works have little in common, and the costume here is that of a lady of rank. The portrait was formerly attributed to Raphael, like the picture in the Uffizi; but Dr. Waagen rightly gave it to Sebastian del Piombo, under whose name it now appears. Some recent critics have in like manner claimed the world-famous Uffizi picture for the great scholar of Michael Angelo. Close by is another work of much interest—a half-length group, from the Duke of Grafton's collection, of "Ferry Carondelet and his Secretary," which is ascribed to Raphael. Of the pristine execution of the principal head it is difficult to form any opinion, so much has it been tampered with; but of its original merit we can guess from the admirably-characterised and better-preserved heads in shadow. In some respects, the treatment has affinity to Raphael's portrait of Pope Julius II., to whose Court Carondelet was sent as Envoy by the Emperor Maximilian; but the resemblance is too remote to render it probable that this is either in whole or in part (as some say) the work of Raphael. We have, however, as we think, not far to seek for its authorship. On comparing it with the so-called Fornarina, last noticed, there can, we think, be little doubt that we have here another production by the great frate; even the execution of the fur-trimmings of the robe in one, and of the mantle in the other, seems conclusive on the point. We need not add that the portraits of Sebastian del Piombo are extremely scarce; and the discovery here made, if it be a discovery, exemplifies the value of these exhibitions in bringing together rare treasures that could never otherwise be compared except in memory. In No. 161 we have a full-length portrait, with a strongly individualised head, by the rather rare Spanish master Alonso Cano. Vandyke's full-length of Queen Henrietta Maria, Charles the First's unhappy consort, is quite pathetic in its singular pallor and morne expression. A "Flight into Egypt," by Murillo, from models drawn from the streets of Seville, presents the naturalness which has rendered the painter popular, and which was so dear to the old-fashioned amateur.

The remaining pictures in this room consist of a splendid group of works of the British school. Romney's full-length of Lady Rouse-Boughton strikes us, like other of his works this year, as rather commonplace, or, at least, as revealing a too obviously intentional simplicity and breadth. Even his Emma Lyon, as a shepherdess (No. 247, in Gallery V.)—the model who so fascinated the painter, as she afterwards fascinated Sir William Hamilton and Nelson—is not quite so captivating as usual, though the glance she throws over her shoulder is designed, only too palpably, to bewitch the spectator.

Returning to the Great Room, two pictures here, out of several by Gainsborough, that are entitled "The Cottage Door" (172 and 177), suggest comparison, which, however, is hardly permitted, owing to the height of the latter. The foliage in the first is heavily massed, and even more conventional than is the painter's wont. But the ray of golden light that glorifies the group of mother and children about the threshold is as beautiful technically as the effect is poetical in sentiment. The other picture is also rich in colour and perhaps more equally excellent. As a portrait-painter Gainsborough is equally well represented in the full-length of Mr. A. Moysey, painted, very likely, soon after Mr. Moysey became member for Bath, in 1774, the year the artist left that town for London. If so, Gainsborough had nothing of his art to learn in the metropolis. The portrait is admirable; the head full of animation and refined character. We cannot resist digressing again to mention, in this connection, the two family portraits in the fifth room sent by the present Earl of Kilmorey. Nothing can be more felicitous than the genial, humorous, kindly, and intelligent, if plain, physiognomy of "Jack," tenth Viscount Kilmorey (253), as he stands with legs astride, in his blue coat and breeches, and his capacious scarlet waistcoat, trimmed with gold lace. Hardly less striking is the pendant of his eldest son, the Hon. Thomas Needham (256), in the uniform of the Grenadier Guards, holding the long pike that was still carried. We all know the airy grace and refined charm of Gainsborough's female portraits; but in these exceptional works he proves himself equally at home in dealing with strong masculine character. Of his great rival, Reynolds, there are no less than twenty-four examples, at a few of which we have already glanced. In these we may trace the master's progress from his early careful attention to modelling—often too fully exposed by the faded glazings; to his mature power—the fruits of which are, also, often damaged by experiments with dangerous media and pigments; and thence to his latest development or decline—when theories of indicative generalisation held dangerous sway. But it is plain that these examples are generally but gleanings left from abundant harvests of previous years. At all events, we experienced no surprise from the Reynoldses, with one most salient exception—at which we have now arrived—i.e., the group of Lady Smyth and her children (176), painted in 1787, therefore at the acme of Sir Joshua's power, and, so far as we know, one of his two greatest masterpieces—the group of Lady Cockburn and her children being the other. It would be difficult to overpraise this picture. The quiet, gentle air of maternal love in Lady Smyth is in charming contrast to the romping vivacity of the children: the two little girls holding their brother on their shoulder; and the dashing mouvement execution of the children is as appropriate as the more deliberate handling reserved for the mother—though the picture loses, perhaps, a little in harmony as a whole from this disparity. Lady Smyth sits in a simple white dress with black mantilla—her head covered with a hat and feathers of the period. But from the broad brim of this hat falls a shadow over nearly the whole face—tender, diaphanous—impossible to describe. Reynolds introduced this effect—borrowed, perhaps, from Rubens's miscalled "Chapeau de Paille"—in one of his portraits of Nelly O'Brien and other works, but he never mastered it as in this technical triumph. The picture is the property of Mr. W. S. Stirling Crawford, and, happily, in perfect preservation. Strange that it is so little known. Mr. Crawford also sends another fine Reynolds, close by, a full-length of Mrs. Mathew, charmingly graceful, unusually complete, and likewise in wonderful preservation. After these, the intervening full-length of Lady Beauchamp cannot interest us much, good as it is. Reynolds must have used vermilion in the cheeks and lips instead of the customary carmine, or the red could hardly have remained so vivid.

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.

DRAWN BY S. READ.

S. READ.

Two other masterpieces by Constable and Turner remain to be noticed in this room. The "Pope's Villa" (175), by Turner, evinces the master's command of the resources of picturesque composition in a high degree, and the figures are unusually well done. Its chief beauty, however, and that is great, consists in the gorgeous glow of sunlight that suffuses the earth, and sleeps, suspended as it were, in the misty air. The "Sea Coast, Hastings," from the same prolific hand, forms but a comparatively commonplace pendant, yet it is full of windy movement and incident. "The Lock," by Constable, the finest of his pictures of this subject, will be a surprise to many. Even now Constable is not appreciated in his own country, as he has long been and is appreciated by the fine judges of France—where his works helped essentially to form some of the best landscapists of modern times. What truth to nature—forgetting all studio conventions and traditions of the schools (as Turner never forgot them until he forgot nature too); what crystalline atmosphere; what shimmer of living daylight, reflected triumphously from blade and leaf; what force of colour; what solidity of factice are there not in this very powerful landscape!

The contents of Galleries IV. and V. we must reserve for a future article.

THE GROSVENOR GALLERY.

The leading feature of the Winter Exhibition at this gallery is a collection of the works of Mr. Watts—probably the most complete representation of any painter that has ever been brought together. A large proportion of the works have been exhibited before, some of them more than once; and these are, therefore, more or less familiar to the public. But some, especially of the portraits, are new, at least to us. It is announced that the present is the first of a series of retrospective exhibitions of the works of selected living artists that are intended to be held at the same gallery. The series is worthily inaugurated, and Mr. Watts well deserves such commemoration.

Although, perhaps, no English painter of eminence has had so slender a following in precisely his own path, his influence, so far as it has extended, and however indirectly, must have been for good. At the very outset of his artistic career in Italy Mr. Watts evidently became deeply impressed with the qualities of the great Italian masters of the sixteenth century—their lofty conceptions, their idealised form and largeness of treatment, the grave dignity of their portraiture, the sober harmony of their colouring. And ever since, true to the spirit with which he thus became imbued, his works have been an eloquent protest against the vulgar aims, the pettiness, and garishness of much of the art of the day. An imagination at once elevated and almost morbidly refined helped both to strengthen his predilections and to supply him with motif in his unaided isolation, though probably the long-delayed lack of recognition and continued absence of opportunity have prevented him employing that imagination on any extensive work or sustained scheme. A strong tinge of melancholy, and sympathy with sorrowing and suffering humanity, found congenial food for assimilation in the classical myths of fate and destiny, and also in the morbidness of the Italians, the twilight skies of the Venetians; and the suggestiveness that has doubtless accrued to Italian pictures by the dimming and darkening of Time, by the obscuration of repeated varnishing, by abrasion, and other ill-usage. Here, indeed, the poet painter found a stumbling-block. The low key of much of Mr. Watts's flesh painting can hardly be accounted for except on the supposition that he has sought to reproduce the present aspect of those old masters, forgetting the effect that Time will in turn have on his own works. Owing perhaps, also, partly to some original defect of training, and partly to an over-fastidious temperament, Mr. Watts's technical method is imperfect; it has not the direct simplicity which that of all the old masters certainly possessed, however obscured now by his works have not the aspect of a rendering of nature at first hand; his transparent and opaque tints are embroiled; there is little pure and simple breadth of tone; and though some suggestive poetical qualities are obtained, others essential to technical excellence are sacrificed. It is this peculiarity that has retarded the painter's acceptance by many artists and the public. With these general observations we must be content, at least for the present. To review the whole collection would be impossible within our limits; nor is it imperatively necessary, many of them, as already remarked, being more or less familiar to our readers.

The few water-colour drawings that find a place in the gallery hardly demand detailed criticism.

A collection of 600 pictures and other works illustrative of British Field-Sports has been added as a free exhibition to the attractions of the Alexandra Palace. As will be readily conceived, the exhibition is of a novel, varied, interesting character; and, indeed, of considerable importance when we recollect how large a space field-sports have always occupied in British life, and how many able artists have engaged in their representation. The collection illustrates hunting, shooting, racing, and other British sports, and comprises pictures or designs by Morland, Gillray, Rowlandson, James Ward, Landseer, the two Seymours, Cruikshank, and very many other artists of note.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

ITALY.

The King and Queen on Saturday last received the members of the diplomatic body in Rome. At King Humbert's reception on New-Year's Day of the deputation of the Lower House, alluding to Prince Bismarck's reported designs of interference on behalf of the Vatican, his Majesty said the Italian Government was firmly decided not to admit of the slightest discussion on certain questions touching the internal order of Italy.

SPAIN.

A Royal decree was read in the Cortes yesterday week suspending the sitting of both Chambers, in accordance with Article 32 of the Constitution.

The Mineralogical, Ceramic, and Glass Exhibition in the Retiro Park, Madrid, will be open for three months. Specimens will be received until April 15.

PORTUGAL.

The King opened the Cortes on Monday with a speech, in which he dwelt upon the friendly relations with Spain, evidenced by the interchange of visits between the Monarchs of the two countries. Projects of various reforms, and of measures tending to the development of the internal resources of the country, would be laid before the Cortes, and a scheme for establishing a balance between income and expenditure.

GERMANY.

The Emperor has received New-Year's congratulations from the Czar of Russia. At the reception held by his Majesty on Sunday he is said to have expressed his firm trust in a continuance of European peace, and to have distinguished Prince Bismarck by special marks of confidence. On Wednesday evening the Emperor and Court attended the performance of Wagner's opera, "Lohengrin." Madame Albani took the part of Elsa, and achieved a great success. Every seat in the house was occupied.

Professor Ludwig Herrmann, the painter of marine and architectural subjects, died on the 29th ult. in Berlin, the Imperial Academy of Art and the various literary societies of the city being represented at the funeral.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The members of the Liberal party in the Hungarian Diet on Sunday presented their congratulations on the New Year to M. Tisza, the Minister-President.

The sum collected for the victims of the Ring Theatre already in the hands of the burgomaster of Vienna exceeds one million of florins. A large amount has yet to come.

RUSSIA.

It is semi-officially announced that the Chinese Government has paid to Russia, through Messrs. Baring Brothers, in London, the first instalment of the amount of compensation stipulated by the Kuldja Treaty.

According to intelligence from Warsaw, 2600 persons have been arrested in connection with the late riots. The number of Jewish families who have suffered is estimated at 6000.

AMERICA.

President Arthur has returned to Washington. On Saturday last the new Chinese Minister was presented to him; and on Monday he gave a series of brilliant receptions, among those present being the members of the diplomatic body and the chief Government officials.

The floor of a room in Shanesville, Ohio, where a festival was proceeding, gave way last Saturday evening, and the ruins caught fire. About a hundred persons were injured, and over a dozen lives were lost.

It is estimated that the total immigration to the United States for the past year was 440,000 persons, of whom 125,000 were Germans. It is thought that the number of Germans will be 25 per cent more next year than this.

The Nova Scotian Legislature has been summoned to meet on Jan. 19 for the dispatch of business.

The youthful Gaekwar of Baroda was on Thursday week invested with full powers of administration by the Governor of Bombay, Sir James Fergusson. The Gaekwar expressed undeviating loyalty to the Queen as Empress of India.

During December the Cape emigration agent sent 399 emigrants to Cape Colony, as against 175 in the corresponding month of 1880. They consisted of 315 artisans and domestic servants, 59 agricultural settlers, and 25 recruits for the Cape Mounted Riflemen. The total number sent out during the past year was 4160, as against 2607 in 1880. The agricultural settlers numbered in all 722 souls, and they took with them in money alone a total sum of £15,211, a little over £21 per head, in this respect comparing very favourably with agricultural emigrants to other colonies.

A correspondent at Tai-Yuen-Fu, in Shansi, North China, writes to us with reference to Mr. Charles Barclay's account of his examination of the reputed "Jacob's Well," near Nablus, in Palestine, an illustration of which appeared in our Journal on June 18 of last year. Mr. R. Harold Scholefield, M.B., F.R.C.S., who writes upon this occasion, was there in April, 1879, with some friends, and then carefully examined the true mouth of the well, a circular hole, grooved by ropes in a large block of stone within the vault. They actually descended into the vault for this purpose instead of merely peering down through the large ragged opening in the roof, described by Mr. Barclay. The true mouth of the well, indeed, is so far from being a new discovery, that an account may be found in Miss Rogers's "Domestic Life in Palestine" of the sending of a boy down to the bottom of the well, letting him down by a rope, to get the Bible dropped into it by Dr. Wilson, in 1841. Captain Anderson, R.E., of the Palestine Exploration Fund Service, descended the well to the depth of 75 ft.

THE COURT.

The ordinary routine of her Majesty's home life has been but little varied the past week. Madame Marie Roze sang one evening before the Queen and the Royal family at Osborne. The five pieces performed were accompanied by Signor Randegger on the pianoforte. The ladies and gentlemen in waiting joined the Royal circle in the drawing-room, and the Hon. Lady Ponsonby and Misses Ponsonby and Lady Cowell were present by invitation.

Princess Louise of Lorne and the Governor-General of Canada have visited the Art-Treasures Exhibition at Ryde, with Princess Beatrice, since its opening by her Royal Highness.

Mr. F. O. Adams arrived at Osborne last Saturday, and kissed hands on his appointment as Minister at Berne. The Royal dinner party that evening included Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold, the Dowager Marchioness of Ely, Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Sir Henry and the Hon. Lady Ponsonby and Miss Ponsonby, Lieutenant-General Sir Samuel Browne, and Sir John Carstairs M'Neill.

On New-Year's Day the Queen, Princess Louise of Lorne and the Marquis, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service at Whippingham church; the Rev. Canon Prothero and the Rev. Canon Fleming, Vicar of St. Michael's, Chester-square, officiating. Canon Fleming dined with her Majesty.

Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne, after passing the Christmas and the New-Year opening with the Queen, left for Bagshot Park on Monday to visit the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. Her Majesty, assisted by Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, distributed New-Year's gifts to the servants of the Royal Household. The Royal party, with the ladies in waiting, entered the stewards' room, where the upper servants were assembled shortly after six o'clock, and after distributing the gifts to them proceeded to the servants' hall, where the gifts were in a like manner distributed to the under servants. There was a Christmas-tree in each room. The Hon. Amy Lambart left Osborne.

Her Majesty and Princess Beatrice have taken Newport and Cowes within their recent drives. The Rev. Canon Prothero and Mrs. Prothero and the Rev. George Connor have dined with the Queen.

Mr. William Patrick Andrew, chairman of the Scinde, Punjab, and Delhi Railway Company, has been knighted.

Major-General Du Plat and Captain Bigge have succeeded Lieutenant-General Gardiner and Colonel Sir John Carstairs M'Neill as Equerries in Waiting.

The Queen's annual gifts to the poor of Windsor, Holy Trinity, and Clewer were distributed on New-Year's Eve, in the riding-school at Windsor Castle, by the Lord High Almoner and the district clergy; the Mayor of the borough, with the usual Royal officials, being in attendance. A ton and a half of beef and some sixty tons of coals were given among 825 persons; her Majesty also contributing £100 to the Royal Clothing Club at Windsor, which donation is added to the subscriptions of the depositors to increase their yearly savings.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The old year was wound up at Sandringham by a lawn meet of the West Norfolk hounds in front of the house, the members of the hunt, with the master, Mr. Anthony Hamond, being entertained by the Prince and Princess of Wales, who, with their house party, afterwards joined in the chase. A large field assembled to do honour to their Royal hosts. On New-Year's Day Divine service was performed at Sandringham church by the Rector, and the Rev. T. Teignmouth Shore, Incumbent of Berkeley Chapel, Mayfair; their Royal Highnesses, with Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales, and the guests at Sandringham, being present. Their Royal Highnesses' party broke up on Monday, the Prince coming to town and presiding at the first meeting of the Dean Stanley Memorial Committee; and Mr. Boehm, A.R.A., is intrusted with the execution of the memorial. His Royal Highness went to Cumberland Lodge on Tuesday, on a visit to Prince and Princess Christian for a few days' shooting in the Windsor preserves. The Princess and her daughters remain at Sandringham.

The Princess has sent to King Kalakua several photographs of herself and her sons, as a contribution to a bazaar to be held in Honolulu in aid of the building of the cathedral there.

Considerable preparations have been made at Bradgate Park for the visit of the Prince next Monday. An address from the Corporation will be presented at the railway station.

It is stated that the Prince and Princess will shortly open a new wing and chapel added to the Margate Sea-Bathing Infirmary by Sir Erasmus Wilson.

The Duke of Edinburgh will visit the Shetlands on the 23rd inst., when his Royal Highness will inspect the Naval Reserve, and also lay the foundation-stone of the new municipal buildings at Lerwick. Great preparations will be made to accord a loyal reception in this northern corner. The Duke has consented to preside on Feb. 18 at a dinner of the Cabmens' Benevolent Association, to be held at Willis's Rooms.

The Empress of Austria's hunters have arrived at Combermere Abbey, where her Imperial Majesty is expected on the 20th inst. Major Bulkeley will be her pilot in the field.

The marriage of Mr. Louis Ponsonby, only son of the Hon. Gerald and Lady Maria Ponsonby, with Miss Leyborne Popham, of Littlecote, will take place on Feb. 9; that between Mr. Rolleston, of Watnall Hall, Notts, and Miss Maud Dalzell, youngest daughter of the late Colonel the Hon. Robert Dalzell, on Feb. 23; and that of Mr. Uthred Hay Dunbar, eldest son of Sir William Dunbar, Bart., of Mochrum, Wigtonshire, and Miss Grant, eldest daughter of Mr. Grant, of Kilgraston, Perthshire, and granddaughter of the late Mr. and Lady Lucy Grant, will take place after Easter.

The "Inseparables" Amateur Dramatic Club give a performance of "A Scrap of Paper" at the St. George's Hall on Thursday evening, Jan. 12, in aid of the fund of the sufferers by the burning of the King Theatre, Vienna.

The trustees of the late Mr. Harris, Prothonotary of Lancashire, who are about to erect out of the fortune at their disposal a new Free Library and Museum for Preston, and endow a technological school, have approved of a site purchased at a cost of four thousand five hundred pounds for a new Orphanage for all creeds, and are, subject to the approval of the Chancery Court, about to appropriate ninety thousand pounds for the erection and endowment of the Orphanage.

In the case of the Bend Or libel case, in which the proprietors of the Morning Post had obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection and excessive damages, it has become unnecessary to press for a new trial, the plaintiff having consented to take a considerably reduced amount. The case was disposed of through the instrumentality of Mr. Justice Field. The Duke of Westminster forwarded to the Morning Post five hundred pounds as his contribution towards the expenses incurred in defending the action.

ARCTIC EXPLORATION: THE JEANNETTE, MR. J. GORDON BENNETT'S VESSEL, IN THE PACK OF ICE.

SURGEON J. F. McCREA, V.C.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to confer the decoration of the Victoria Cross upon Surgeon John Frederick McCrea, 1st Regiment of the Cape Mounted Yeomanry, for conspicuous bravery in the Basuto campaign. This gallant young officer is son of the late Captain Herbert Taylor McCrea, 43rd Light Infantry, and of Elizabeth Dobrée, his wife, daughter of the late John Carey, Esq., of Castle Carey, Guernsey. He is grandson of the late Major Robert McCrea, 5th Royal Veterans, who served through the American War of Independence, and was severely wounded on several occasions. The portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry.

SURGEON J. P. McCREA, V.C.

MAJOR A. G. HAMMOND, V.C.

Major Arthur George Hammond, Bengal Staff Corps, who has merited the honour of the Victoria Cross, is fifth son of the late Major T. J. Hammond, who was in the service of the Hon. East India Company during twenty-five years, and who served in the first Burmese war. Major A. G. Hammond was educated at King Edward's School, Sherborne, and entered Addiscombe College on Feb. 7, 1861. On June 7 of the same year he passed the examination for his commission, gaining the second place in the whole College, and four prizes. Having landed in India, in December, 1861, he was attached to H.M.'s 82nd Regiment at Delhi, and afterwards to the 12th Native Infantry; and in September, 1863, joined the Corps of Guides (Q.O.), at Mardan. With that Regiment he served in some frontier affairs, and throughout the Jawaki campaign 1877-8, for which he received the medal and clasp, and special thanks in the despatches of Brigadier-General Keyes, for his gallant actions. He also went through the entire Afghan campaigns from 1878 to 1880, including the capture of Ali Musjid, and operations round Cabul in December, 1879. For these services he obtained a special mention by Sir F. Roberts, for his distinguished conduct; as well as the Victoria Cross, with the medal and two clasps. The portrait is from a photograph by Mr. T. Fall, of Baker-street.

LIEUTENANT DE LONG, COMMANDER OF THE JEANNETTE.

Mr. Menelaus, of Dowlais, has informed the Mayor of Cardiff that he is prepared to transfer to the Free Library Committee, for the fine-art gallery which they propose establishing, pictures from his collection to the value of more than £10,000.

RECENT ARCTIC EXPLORATIONS.

Much anxiety has been felt, both in England and in America, during the last two or three months of the past year, for the safety of the brave and patient men embarked in two different Arctic exploring expeditions, one directing its course from Europe, to the Polar sea north of Siberia round the Franz Josef Land archipelago, beyond Novaya Zemlya; the other, from America, proceeding in an opposite direction, to pass the large island called Wrangel Land, which is also situated north of Siberia, but lies off the north-eastern shore of the Asiatic

MAJOR A. G. HAMMOND, V.C.

Continent, and is approached through Behring's Strait. The first-mentioned expedition was that of the Eira, fitted out and conducted by an English gentleman, Mr. Benjamin Leigh Smith. The second was that of the Jeannette, formerly called the Pandora, belonging to Mr. J. Gordon Bennett, proprietor of the New York Herald.

Mr. Leigh Smith has done good service to geography at his own sole expense, during a course of years, having made important discoveries both in Spitzbergen and Franz Josef Land. He has expended at least £18,000 on this object, solely with a view to advancing geographical knowledge. The value of that service was recognised last May, when Mr. Leigh Smith received the high honour of being selected as one of the society's gold medallists for the year. The Eira, as is well known, was built by Mr. Leigh Smith, at Peterhead, in 1879-80, for the purpose of prosecuting summer voyages of discovery in the Arctic regions. She is 360 tons burden, builder's measurement, and fifty-horse power, 135 ft. long by 25 ft. beam. In the summer of 1880 Mr. Leigh Smith made a very successful voyage in her, during which he coasted the southern shore of Franz Josef Land and made some interesting discoveries. He sailed from Peterhead in the Eira, on her second voyage, on June 13 last. He had with him Captain Lofley, of Hull, as master, Dr. Neale, the surgeon, both of whom sailed in the Eira on her former voyage, and a crew of twenty-two men. He had provisions of all kinds for fourteen months, about two years' supply of bread and flour, and some additional preserved meats received from Gothenburg. His intention was to visit Franz Josef Land a second time, with a view to making further discoveries on its western side, and, if possible, to push northwards near the meridian of Wicke's Land. But he would be guided by the state of the ice, using his best endeavours to enter upon new work, in that direction which appeared most open and promising. The Eira was last seen by the Norwegian schooner Proven (Captain Isaksen) off the Matyushin Shar, on the west coast of Novaya Zemlya, on July 8 last. She was then going northwards. Mr. Leigh Smith had no intention of passing a winter in the ice, and had consequently made no arrangements as regards a rendezvous in the event of accident, or for any other contingency. Indeed, it is certain that his intention was to return this autumn. The continued absence of the Eira has given rise to very grave anxiety. She may either have succeeded in reaching the south coast of Franz Josef Land, and is now passing the winter in Eira Harbour or on some other part of that shore, or she has been caught in the ice to the north of Novaya Zemlya, and is in the drifting pack. As the Eira is not provisioned for a second winter, Mr. Leigh Smith cannot expose his men to the risk of being detained, and consequently he will be unable to wait on board his vessel until September, or even August, for the chance of being released by the breaking up of the ice. His supplies will only last him until August, 1882. It therefore seems likely that he will feel obliged to abandon the Eira in the early part of the ensuing navigable season, and endeavour to effect a retreat in boats by hauling them across floes and taking advantage of lanes of water, probably in the direction of Cape Nassau or Novaya Zemlya.

ARCTIC EXPLORATION: EIRA HARBOUR, FRANZ JOSEF LAND, THE SUPPOSED WINTER QUARTERS OF MR. LEIGH SMITH.
FROM A PHOTOGRAPH TAKEN BY MR. W. J. A. GRANT, IN 1880.—SEE PAGE 13.

We give an illustration of the Eira, and one of Eira Harbour, Franz Josef Land, where she may now be lying for the winter. They are from sketches drawn by Mr. W. J. A. Grant, during the voyage of 1880.

Mr. Gordon Bennett's vessel, the Jeannette, was formerly the Pandora, one of the steam gun-boats in the Royal Navy, which served a long commission on the West Coast of Africa. She was purchased by Sir Allan Young, who undertook a voyage in her to Barrow Strait and Peel Sound in 1875, and went a second time in her, in 1876, to be in readiness to assist the Arctic Expedition, in case succour should be needed. Sir Allan Young sold the Pandora to Mr. Gordon Bennett, who had resolved to dispatch an expedition, at his own expense, for discovery by way of Behring Strait. By an Act of Congress, it was arranged that the expedition should be officered and manned from the United States Navy, and should have the advantage of naval discipline.

Lieutenant De Long, to whom Mr. Gordon Bennett gave the command, is an accomplished young officer, who had already gained some experience in ice navigation when serving in a vessel which was sent in search of the Polaris up Baffin's Bay. He was ably supported by two other lieutenants, and a well selected scientific staff. When the Jeannette sailed from San Francisco in July, 1879, she had thirty-two souls on board, all told, and was provisioned for three years. Her orders were first to try and meet the Vega, the Swedish exploring vessel of Professor Nordenskiöld, then supposed to be working her way eastward along the Siberian coast, and to furnish any help that she might be in need of; then to push northwards to the westward of Wrangel Land, which was supposed to extend far to the northward. These were wise instructions, for in advancing northwards, in the polar regions, it is always desirable to make progress along a coast trending northwards, with a western aspect. The Jeannette was seen by the whalers up Behring Straits on Sept. 3, in the same year, steering westward; and subsequently a report came from a Jahut that a steamer had been seen in the offing, on Sept. 13, off the mouth of the Lena. From that time until September, 1881, nothing was heard of the Jeannette, a period of two complete years. The most intense anxiety naturally prevailed. We now learn, by Russian telegraph, that the Jeannette was crushed by the ice in 77 deg. 35 min. N. and 157 deg. E. This position is in about the latitude of Cape Chelyushin, the northern extreme of Siberia, but far to the eastward of it, and to the north-east of the Siberian Islands. After the loss of his vessel, it was necessary for Lieutenant De Long to retreat, with his brave comrades, to the Russian settlements in Siberia. He was 550 miles N.E. of the mouths of the Lena; and the direct line of retreat would take him through the narrow channels between the New Siberian Islands. The whole crew of the Jeannette, for there appear to have been no deaths, was divided into three parties, and embarked in two cutters and a whale-boat. They were separated by a gale of wind when only fifty miles from the Siberian coast. The third boat, in command of Mr. Melville, the engineer, reached the eastern mouth of the Lena, and put himself in communication with the Russian Commandant at a station called in the telegram Bolovenga (Buleng?), who immediately sent forward provisions and assistance. The first boat, which Lieutenant De Long himself, and Dr. Ambler the surgeon, arrived at the northern mouth of the Lena, and two of the crew arrived at Berlin for assistance in October. The second boat has not yet been heard of. It will not now be long before these intrepid explorers will be welcomed back to the civilised world; they have been for two years beyond the threshold of the unknown world, and they cannot fail to have collected information which will add to the stock of human knowledge. We heartily congratulate our cousins of the United States on the safety of their countrymen, whose fate was causing so much anxiety, and on the good work they must have accomplished.

Our portrait of Lieutenant De Long is from a photograph by Bradley and Kulofson, of San Francisco.

An official report of the circumstances attending the death of Captain Brownrigg and some of the crew of her Majesty's ship London in an encounter with a slave dhow on the East Coast of Africa has been issued by the Admiralty. The details furnished by the acting commander of the London show that the pinnace, in an attempt to verify the nationality of the dhow, was treacherously attacked by the Arabs on board, and that Captain Brownrigg made a most gallant and stubborn resistance to an overwhelming number of assailants.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.

The Gazette announces the appointment of the Earl of Elgin to be Lord Lieutenant of Fifeshire.

The Earl of Kilmorey has been elected a peer of the United Kingdom, in the room of Viscount Bangor, deceased.

The juvenile ball at the Mansion House next Friday, the 13th inst., is not fancy dress.

Sir Erskine Perry has placed his resignation as a member of the Indian Council in the hands of Lord Hartington, after a service of over twenty-two years.

Mr. Alex. Smith Kinnear, Dean of the Faculty of Advocates, has been appointed a Judge of the Court of Session in Scotland.

Lord Pembroke has given £500, spreading over two years, for researches at the Brown Institute on the cause and treatment of distemper.

The chair of Natural History at Edinburgh has been offered to Dr. Francis M. Balfour, F.R.S., author of the treatise on Comparative Embryology.

Mr. Gladstone has consented, subject to the state of public business, to preside on one of the four days of the Eisteddfod, at Denbigh, in August next.

At the first meeting of the Indian section of the Society of Arts, on the 13th inst., Sir Rutherford Alcock, K.C.B., will read a paper on the Opium Trade.

Mr. Gladstone on Thursday week completed the seventy-second year of his age; and the day was celebrated by banquets at Liverpool, Chester, and other places.

A new shaft for the Channel Tunnel has been commenced at the eastern end of the Shakspeare cliffs, on a small piece of land just outside the South Eastern Railway tunnel.

Mr. David Ross, LL.B., has been appointed Commissioner of National Education in Ireland by the Lord Lieutenant, in the room of the late Rev. P. S. Henry, D.D.

A new coffee-tavern was on Monday opened in Rochester, Westminister. Cardinal Manning and the Bishop of London took part in the proceedings.

At the Mansion House on Wednesday the Lord Mayor, as President of the City of London Society of Artists, presented to Sir F. W. Truscott, first president, the marble bust executed for the society by Mr. C. B. Birch, A.R.A.

It has been decided by the Leeds Town Council to establish a free museum for the borough in connection with the public library, and to buy the well-known collection of antiquities belonging to Mr. John Holmes, of Leeds.

A Royal proclamation was made last week at the Cross of Edinburgh calling a meeting of Scotch peers at Holyrood Palace on Jan. 11, in order to elect a peer to sit in the House of Lords in place of the Earl of Airlie.

Government have offered a reward of £100 and a free pardon to any accomplice for information as to the theft of the body of the late Lord Crawford. To this sum the present Lord Crawford has added £500.

Mr. Forster has forwarded to Mr. Vere Foster, of Belfast, £100 as a contribution to the emigration scheme which has been carried on for some time by that gentleman; and Mr. Charles Wilson, of Cheltenham, brother to Sir Samuel Wilson, of Hughenden Manor, has also subscribed £100.

During the year 1881 the three great Masonic charitable institutions—the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls, the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys, and the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution for Aged Freemasons and Freemasons' Widows, received from all sources a total sum of £43,294 1s.

The installation of Mayors in the principal towns of Ireland took place on Monday. At Dublin, Mr. Dawson, M.P., was peaceably inaugurated as Lord Mayor for the year; but at Cork and Limerick the proceedings were of a riotous character.

Captain Johnson, R.N., in the name of Lloyd's, presented last week to Mr. Wrate, chief officer of Coastguard stationed at Hartlepool, a silver medal for gallantry in saving the lives of the crew of the Swedish brig Esther, near Hartlepool Lighthouse, during an easterly gale on Oct. 24. The presentation was made at the request of the Admiralty.

At the New-Year holiday in Scotland, kept on Monday, the public offices and banks were closed and business was generally suspended. In Edinburgh the places of amusement had mid-day performances which were largely attended. The Museum of Science and Art was visited by 14,000 persons, the National Gallery by 11,600, and the Museum of the Society of Antiquaries by 9400. Several thousand persons left town by rail.

The Queen has conferred the Albert Medal of the Second Class upon Mr. Francis Pitts, chief officer of the Pleiades, of Liverpool. While the ship was running before a heavy gale, on May 30 last, a seaman was washed overboard, and Mr. Pitts endeavoured to save him by leaping into the sea with a line. After swimming about 300 yards he was obliged, however, to return to the ship, and was rescued with difficulty and quite exhausted.

A general assembly of Royal Academicians will be held on the 18th inst., to elect two Associates to the Royal Academy; and a special general assembly of the members will be held in the last week of this month for the election of a Royal Academician to fill the post of professor, lecturer, and treasurer to the School of Architecture, vacant by the death of Mr. Street, R.A.

A large crowd assembled at the west or principal front of St. Paul's Cathedral at midnight last Saturday, in order to hear the new peal of bells of the cathedral ring "The Old Year out and the New Year in." It is estimated that there were fully 10,000 persons assembled. When the chimes had concluded, the crowd amused itself with singing "Rule Britannia" and other patriotic airs.

A dramatic entertainment will be given at the Grosvenor Hall, Buckingham Palace-road, on Thursday evening, the 19th inst., in aid of certain charitable institutions in the Earl's court district. The programme will include "The late Sir Benjamin," a comedy in one act, by E. Romberg; "Drifted Apart," a social sketch by Sir Charles Young; and "A Bachelor's Box," by John Elliot, jun. The characters will be sustained by Lady Monckton, Miss A. Didier, Mr. G. Canninge, Mr. Dundas, and Sir Charles Young.

The first meeting of the year of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute took place on Monday, at 7, Adelphi-terrace. Captain F. Petrie, the honorary secretary, announced that the institute, founded to investigate philosophical and scientific questions, especially those said to militate against the truth of Revelation, enrolled 122 members during the past year, of which fifty-three were resident in America and the colonies. It was further stated that during the past year many of its American members had combined and founded the "American Institute of Christian Philosophy," adopting the same objects and the whole scheme of the Victoria Institute, but while taking this step they had decided to keep up their individual connection with the institute in England. After this a paper was read on "Theism."

At the nomination for Carmarthen Boroughs on Wednesday the only candidate proposed was Alderman John Jenkins, ex-Mayor of Swansea, who in 1880, as an Independent Liberal, unsuccessfully contested the seat against Mr. B. T. Williams, Q.C., the late member. Mr. Jenkins was therefore declared duly elected.

One of the largest bazaars and fancy fairs ever held in South London was opened at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Tuesday, in aid of the Stockwell Orphanage. There were stalls for the sale of meat, poultry, oysters, furniture, pictures, musical instruments, and the usual fancy goods, in all between twenty and thirty.

On Thursday week the remains of the late Mr. George Edmund Street, President of the Institute of British Architects, were interred in Westminster Abbey, the funeral service being conducted by the Dean. The pall-bearers were Mr. Beresford-Hope, M.P., Sir Frederick Leighton, Mr. Shaw Lefevre, M.P., Mr. W. H. Gladstone, M.P., Mr. E. Freshfield, Professor F. Hayter Lewis, F.S.A., the Bishop of Winchester, and Mr. Justice Kay. The funeral ceremony was attended by a large number of gentlemen connected with the various institutions of which the deceased was an honoured member, the Royal Academy being in particular represented by many Academicians and Associates.—In accordance with the wish expressed by the late Mr. Street, the First Commissioner of Works has assented to the association of Mr. Arthur Blomfield with Mr. Arthur Street for the purpose of carrying out the designs for the new Courts of Justice, which have been left in a complete state by the deceased architect.

Messrs. Bright and Chamberlain addressed their constituents in the Townhall, Birmingham, on Tuesday night. Mr. Bright contrasted the foreign and domestic policy of the Government with that of their predecessors. It was, he said, alleged that England was now without an ally or a friend, but he asserted that if England had no allies, for which he cared little, she never had more friends. The Irish disaffection was due to a long course of Tory misrule, and justified, on the ground of absolute necessity, the coercive measures of the Government. He also pointed out that much of Irish discontent now arose from a misconception or ignorance of English liberality, whilst Irish poverty resulted from a driving away of English capital. Mr. Chamberlain in his address also dealt at length with the policy of the Government in reference to Ireland, which he defended as necessary for the maintenance of law and order. They were a responsible Government, and if necessary they would put down unrepresented organisation by force, but they would seize with joy on the first opportunity of removing the present restrictions.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK ENDING JAN. 14, 1882.

SUNDAY, JAN. 8.
First Sunday after Epiphany.	Westminster Abbey, 10 a.m., Rev. W. B. Carpenter; 3 p.m., Rev. Canon Barry.
Morning Lessons: Isaiah ii.; Matt. v. 13-33. Evening Lessons: Isaiah iii. 13 and liii. or lii.; Acts iv. 32-v. 17.	St. James's, noon, Rev. William Parker.
St. Paul's Cathedral, 10.30 a.m., Rev. Prebendary Row; 3.15 p.m., Rev. Canon Stubbs; 7 p.m., Rev. Canon Spence, Vicar of St. Pancras.	Whitehall, 11 a.m. and 3 p.m., Rev. V. H. Stanton.
	Savoy, 11.30 a.m., Rev. Henry White, the Chaplain; 7 p.m., Rev. W. Barker, Vicar of St. Mary's, West Cowes.
MONDAY, JAN. 9.
Accession of Humbert I., King of Italy, 1878.	Deaf and Dumb Asylum, Old Kent-road, elections, Cannon-street Hotel.
London Institution, 5 p.m. (Professor W. Boyd Dawkins on Commerce and Trade Routes of Pre-Historic Europe).	Medical Society, 8.30.
British Architects' Institute, 8 p.m.	Royal Academy, 8 p.m. (Professor Armitage on the Flemish Masters), and on Thursday.
TUESDAY, JAN. 10.
British Orphan Asylum, Slough; elections, Cannon-street Hotel.	Medical and Chirurgical Society, 8.30 p.m.
Anthropological Institute, 8 p.m. (papers by Major-General Pitt Rivers and Mr. J. R. Mortimer).	Biblical Archaeology Society, anniversary, 8 p.m.
Civil Engineers' Institution, 8 p.m. (inaugural address by Sir W. Armstrong, President).	Humane Society, general court, 8.30 p.m.
Photographic Society, 8 p.m.	School for Indigent Blind, Southwark; general court, elections, &c., noon.
WEDNESDAY, JAN. 11.
Hilary Law Sittings begin.	Microscopical Society, 8 p.m.
Literary Fund, 3 p.m.	Graphic Society, 8 p.m.
Geological Society, 8 p.m. (papers by Professor E. Hull and Mr. T. Mel-lard Reade).	Obstetrical Society, 8 p.m.
Hunterian Society, 8 p.m.	Society of Arts, 8 p.m. (Mr. R. Bevan on the Industrial Resources of Ireland).
THURSDAY, JAN. 12.
Moon's last quarter, 3.47 p.m.	Antiquaries' Society, 8.30 p.m.
London Institution, 7 p.m. (Mr. H. Herkmer on Familiar Art).	Mathematical Society, 8 p.m.
Royal Society, 4.30 p.m.	Inventors' Institute, 8 p.m.
FRIDAY, JAN. 13.
Cambridge Hilary Term begins.	New Shakspeare Society, 8 p.m. (Rev. J. Kirkman on Suicides in Shakspeare).
Architectural Association, 8.30 p.m. (Mr. E. J. Taver on the History of Architecture).	Seamen's Hospital Society, general court, 3 p.m.
Astronomical Society, 8 p.m.	Society of Arts, 8 p.m. (Sir Rutherford Alcock on the Opium Trade).
Clinical Society, anniversary, 8.30.
Quekett Microscopical Club, 8 p.m.
SATURDAY, JAN. 14.
Oxford Hilary Term begins.	Botanic Society, 3.45 p.m.

THE WEATHER.

RESULTS OF METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS AT THE KEW OBSERVATORY OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY.

Lat. 51° 28' 6" N.; Long. 0° 18' 47" W.; Height above Sea, 34 feet.

DAY.	DAILY MEANS OF					THERMOM.		WIND.		Direction.	General.	Rain in 24 hours, at 10 a.m. next morning.	Rain in 24 hours, at 10 a.m. each morning.
	Barometer Corrected.	Temperature of the Air.	Dew Point.	Relative Humidity.	Amount of Cloud.	Maximum, read at 10 p.m.	Minimum, read at 10 a.m.	Force.	Direction.
Dec. 18	29.87	40.4	31.2	72	2	48.6	37.8	W. W.S.W.				570	0.000
19	29.615	40.5	35.0	82	3	44.2	35.4	W.S.W. W.				291	0.280
20	29.026	42.1	29.0	68	5	44.4	38.4	W. W.S.W.				600	0.045
21	29.718	38.2	30.9	77	1	44.0	32.4	W.				896	0.000
22	29.943	38.1	29.8	89	0	37.6	28.0	W. N.E.				109	0.000
23	30.458	30.1	28.0	93	0	36.5	23.7	N.E.				27	0.090
24	30.481	33.4	31.1	92	4	39.5	23.7	N.E. S.E.				109	0.010
25	30.497	36.3	32.6	88	10	42.4	27.8	S. S.W.				210	0.000
26	30.578	48.8	41.8	83	10	45.4	38.5	W. W.S.W.				194	0.005
27	30.585	42.5	40.3	93	10	45.4	41.2	W.S.W.				205	0.005
28	30.401	39.7	39.0	98	8	42.6	38.5	W.				144	0.006
29	30.164	43.0	40.4	91	9	45.7	32.4	W. S.W.				281	0.000
30	29.933	41.9	39.8	92	8	45.1	37.0	S.W.				201	0.000
31	29.811	42.8	39.3	89	10	44.4	38.4	S.W. S.E.				109	0.000

* Rain and sleet.

The following are the readings of the meteorological instruments for the above days, in order, at ten o'clock, a.m.:

FROM DEC. 18 TO DEC. 24.
Barometer (in inches) corrected	29.280	29.631	29.990	29.607	29.916	30.403	30.098
Temperature of Air	41.7°	38.6°	41.4°	37.7°	31.0°	28.7°	31.9°
Temperature of Evaporation	37.7°	36.4°	38.4°	37.2°	30.0°	28.9°	31.9°
Direction of Wind	W.	W.S.W.	W.S.W.	W.	N.E.	N.E.	N.E.
FROM DEC. 25 TO DEC. 31.
Barometer (in inches) corrected	30.514	30.240	30.619	30.477	30.272	29.994	29.955
Temperature of Air	35.9°	41.0°	42.1°	38.6°	43.1°	44.1°	42.7°
Temperature of Evaporation	32.9°	38.1°	40.8	38.0°	42.1°	41.9°	42.7°
Direction of Wind	S.	S.W.	W.S.W.	S.W.	W.	S.W.	S.

SIR BERNARD BURKE'S "PEERAGE AND BARONETAGE" FOR 1882.

The year we have just passed added to hereditary dignities one Royal dukedom, Albany, conferred with the warmest approval of the people on the popular and accomplished Prince Leopold. It also gave to the Peerage four new titles—Amphill, Derwent, Hothfield, and Tweedmouth; and as many baronetcies—Stewart, Roberts, Phillimore, and Sullivan. Three baronies of the United Kingdom opened the doors of the House of Lords to two Scotch peers and one Irish earl; and Lord Lyons, our Ambassador at Paris, was promoted to a viscountcy. Some twenty peers and some twenty-four baronets died; and four dignities—one, Beaconsfield, to be remembered in history—became extinct. These details we glean from the new edition of Sir Bernard Burke's "Peerage and Baronetage" now before us, enlarged and perfected in every possible way. Unrivalled are our hereditary orders, and unrivalled, too, is this record of them. The "Almanach de Gotha," and the "Annuaire de la Noblesse," the best of Continental books of the kind, bear no comparison with it. The author, in his preface, fairly states that "the history of the peers is the history of their country. Above all stands the Royal lineage carried down from Alfred the Great, through the Normans, Plantagenets, Tudors, Stuarts, and Guelfs, to the Royal lady her Majesty Queen Victoria, who represents, in her person, the most ancient and illustrious dynasty in Europe. Howard, Duke of Norfolk, in rank and distinction next to the Blood Royal; Seymour, Duke of Somerset; Percy, Duke of Northumberland; Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury; Nevill, Marquis of Abergavenny; Stanley, Earl of Derby; Marlborough, Wellington, and Nelson; Hamilton, Campbell, and Douglas; FitzGerald of Kildare, Butler of Ormonde, O'Brien of Inchiquin, and many others, inherit Peerage honours, the rewards of pre-eminent public services. Their very names indicate how much of history is involved in their lineages." Most completely has Sir Bernard Burke entered on this historic view, and, at the same time, he has with wondrous accuracy included all existing members of the various families. Burke's "Peerage and Baronetage" has become an institution of the country.

NEW BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS.

THE ART JOURNAL.

2s. 6d. Monthly. Yearly Subscription, 30s. The January Number commences a New Volume, and contains three plates illustrating: also Essays on interesting Art subjects, illustrated with numerous Wood Engravings; and the usual carefully-selected items of news on artistic matters.

CONTENTS OF THE JANUARY NUMBER.
ETCHING—THOMAS CARLYLE IN HIS GARDEN. From a Drawing from Life by Mrs. Allingham. Etched by C. O. Murray.

ENGRAVING.—CROMWELL AT MARSTON MOOR. From a Painting by Ernest Crofts, A.M.A. Engraved by William French.

FAC-SIMILE.—DANCING CHILDREN. From a Drawing by Luca Cangiugio.

ILLUSTRATED PAPERS.

THE VEILED LADY OF RAPHAEL. By Prof. Sidney Colvin.
JOHN TEN NIEL. By Arthur A. Beckett.
AN ETRUSCAN SEPULCHRE. By S. Bompiani.
BOUEN. By A. B. Blake.
ARTISTIC METAL-WORK. DRAWING BY OLD MASTERS.
THE GROWTH AND DECLINE OF FRENCH ART.

Also, Papers on Smoke in the Manufacturing Districts, by William Bourne; A Country Landscape, by Art Treasures; Carlyle in his Eightieth Year; Winter Exhibitions; Art Notes and Reviews.

The Proprietors of the "Art Journal" offer Prizes for Wood Engraving; the conditions of competition will be found in the January Number.

Publishing Office: 26, Ivy-lane, Paternoster-row, E.C.

DE LA RUE AND CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

DE LA RUE'S INDELIBLE DIARIES, PORTABLE DIARIES, CONDENSED DIARIES, and TABLE CALENDARS, for 1882, in great variety, may now be had of all Booksellers and Stationers. Also, the FINGER-SHAPED SERIES, in neat Cases. Wholesale only of the Publishers.

New Illustrated Children's Book. Demy 4to, price 1s., with Twelve full-page Illustrations in Colours (Reprinting).
"DREAMS, DANCES, AND DISAPPOINTMENTS," a Story, OF GERTRUDE A. KONSTAM and ELIA and NELIA CASSELLA.

Just out. Price 6d., uniform with the Pocket Series, IMPERIAL, THE POCKET GUIDE TO. By "CAVENDISH." A Favourite Card Game for Two Persons. Also, in Boxes with Cards complete, price 2s. 6d.

An Ingenious and Interesting Pastime for Young and Old. CASSETTE. THREE PUZZLES IN ONE. CHINESE, RUSSIAN, AND FRENCH. By "CAVENDISH." 12 boxes, with pieces, complete, price 2s. 6d.

Third and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo., price 10s. 6d., BILLIARDS. By J. BENNETT (ex-Champion). Edited by "CAVENDISH." With upwards of 200 Illustrations.

12th Edition. 8vo., cloth, gilt extra, price 5s., THE LAWS AND PRINCIPLES OF WHIST. The standard Work on Whist. By "CAVENDISH." Greatly enlarged and revised throughout.

New and Improved Edition. Cap 8vo., cloth, price 3s. 6d., LAWS OF SHORT WHIST, Edited by J. L. BALDWIN; and a Treatise on the Game, by JAMES CLAY.

NEW BOOKS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

LADY JACKSON'S FRENCH COURT AND SOCIETY.
DR. DORAN'S IN AND ABOUT DRURY-LANE.
SELOUS' HUNTERS' WANDERINGS IN AFRICA.
MRS. ELLIOT'S IDLE WOMAN IN SICILY.
FIFTEEN YEARS' CHEQUERED CAREER.
MERRILL'S KAT OF THE JORDAN.
BARTON BAKER'S OLD ACTORS.
LADY VIOLET GREVILLE'S ZOE. A GIRL OF GENIUS.
MRS. RIDDELL'S THE SENIOR PARTNER.
THE GARDEN OF EDEN. [Just ready.]

Richard Bentley and Son, 3, New Burlington-street.

PRACTICAL LESSONS IN PAINTING ON CHINA, PORCELAIN, EARTHENWARE, &c. By Madame la Baronne DELAMARCELLE. From the French by Gustave A. Bouvier. Fifth Edition. Price 1s.; post-free, 1s. 4d. London: LAMBERT, BARNES, and Co., 90, Regent-street, W.

NEW BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS.

THE THREE MAGAZINES for 1882.

A NEW VOLUME of each just commenced, affording a convenient opportunity for New Subscribers.

Monthly, 6d.

THE QUIVER, for SUNDAY READING,

Every Monthly Part suitable Reading for Every Sunday in the Month for Every Member of the Family.

"A safer and more interesting Magazine we do not know than the 'Quiver.' We cannot too much admire it, especially for the religious illustrations in Christianity without sectarianism, which it sets so pleasantly and temptingly before the reader."—Standard.

Monthly, 7d.

CASSELL'S FAMILY MAGAZINE, in which has just been opened THE FAMILY PARLIAMENT, for the friendly discussion of topics of importance and interest in the home circle. Two New Serial Stories and many attractive features will be found among the varied programme commenced with the New Volume.

"Casell's Family Magazine" has long established its well-deserved reputation as the favourite magazine."—Morning Post.

Monthly, 6d.

LITTLE FOLKS' MAGAZINE

FOR ALL GIRLS AND BOYS. THE JANUARY PART forms the FIRST PART of a NEW VOLUME, and contains a charming Coloured Plate, entitled, "CANDIDATE," details of THE "LITTLE FOLKS' HUMANE SOCIETY," full particulars of a SPECIAL PRIZE COMPETITION, in which £25 in Money and Books are offered; TWO NEW SERIAL STORIES, &c., &c.

"Little Folks is the best Magazine for children."—Graphic.

CASSELL, PETER, GALT and Co., Ludgate-hill, London.

SECOND EDITION of the ARGOSY for JANUARY, containing the Opening Chapters of MRS. RAVEN'S TEMPTATION.

Second Edition now ready of MRS. HENRY WOOD'S MAGAZINE.

THE ARGOSY for JANUARY.

1. Mrs. Raven's Temptation. A new Illustrated Serial Story. Chap. I.—At the White Hart. Chap. II.—Mother and Sons. Chap. III.—In the Moonlight. Chap. IV.—Family Jars. Illustrated by Robert Hargrave.
2. A Mystery. By Johnny Ludlow.
3. An Aesthetic. With an Illustration.
4. The Spirit of the Forest. By Charles W. Wood. With Six Illustrations.
5. In the Black Forest. By G. B. Stuart.
6. God Speed and Welcome. By Anna H. Drury.
7. Checkmate in Ten Moves. By Anna H. Drury.

"The Argosy" is the best and cheapest of our magazines."—Standard.

THE ARGOSY.—"The 'Argosy' is laden with golden grains of amusement. There is no monthly magazine gives greater pleasure."—Oxford University Herald.

THE ARGOSY.—"Interesting and sparkling as ever."—Yarmouth Gazette.

THE ARGOSY.—"Bright and charming."—Bath Chronicle.

THE ARGOSY.—"The 'Argosy' gives us charming tales."—Sydney Observer.

THE ARGOSY.—"The best illustrated of all our Magazines."—Dublin Evening Mail.

THE ARGOSY.—"Excellent, as usual; and no reader can wish for better."—British Mail.

THE ARGOSY.—"There is considerable merit in Johnny Ludlow. Freshness of description in the scenes of country life and country people."—Saturday Review.

AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE.

Sixpence, Monthly. Second Edition now ready for January.

RICHARD BENTLEY and SON,

New Burlington-street, London, W.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Now ready, price One Penny,

NO. X. of the

FAMILY HERALD

LIBRARY OF FICTION.

CONTAINING the FIRST PART of a

NEW NOVEL, entitled

CAN LOSS BE GAIN?

By the Author of "For Love of Him," &c.

NOTE.—No. 6 to No. 10, containing the complete Three-Volume Novel, entitled "Mr. Christopher's Wards," may be had by order of all News-vendors, or direct from the Office free, for seven penny stamps.

News-vendors unable to obtain the current or back numbers of the "Library of Fiction," will oblige the Publisher by forwarding the name of their London Agent.

WILLIAM STEVENS, 421, Strand, London, W.C.; and at all News-vendors and Railway Bookstalls.

For Advertisement Spaces apply to Gordon and Gotch, Advertising Agents, &c., 15, St. Bride-street, London, E.C.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

THE

BOYS' ILLUSTRATED NEWS,

the Journal for Lads issued by THE PROPRIETORS OF THE "ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS."

is published every Wednesday; and abounds with interesting fact and fiction, boundlessly illustrated.

CAPTAIN MAYNE REID, on Wednesday last, Jan. 4, began the entrancing story of "THE SCALP-HUNTERS," specially adapted by the veteran Romance Writer for THE BOYS' ILLUSTRATED NEWS.

THE

BOYS' ILLUSTRATED NEWS WAS

Altered to a Handier Size; the number of pages was increased from twelve to sixteen; and contained several Fresh Attractions in the New Year's Number, Jan. 4, 1882.

Post-free to any part of England, Europe, United States of America, Canada, and Egypt, for One Year, 10s. 6d.; to India, Ceylon, China, and Japan, for One Year, 10s. 10d. Elsewhere Abroad, One Year, 12s. 6d.

All Subscriptions must be paid in advance direct by Post-Office Order, payable at the East-Strand Post Office, to Thomas Fox, 10, Milford-lane, Strand, London.

Now ready, price One Shilling (24th Annual Issue),

FIFTEEN HUNDRED ROSES described

By Name, Date, Class, Colour, General Character, and Growth, comprising the principal varieties introduced within the past 50 years, in the GARDEN ORACLE for 1882. Now ready, price One Shilling, post-free. "The Gardener's Magazine" Office, 4, Ave Maria-lane, London, E.C.

JUST PUBLISHED, post-free, 2 stamps,

DYSPEPSIA and the SEVERER FORMS

OF INDIGESTION. A small pamphlet on these distressing complaints and their complete cure. Published by the Author, Richard Kink, Esq., Staff Surgeon R.N., 23, Warwick-st., Rugby.

By Dr. BARR MEADOWS, Physician to the National Institution for Diseases of the Skin. Ninth Edition, post-free, 2s. stamps.

ERUPTIONS; their Rational Treatment.

London: G. HILL, 104, Westminster Bridge-road.

NEW BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS.

Now ready, cloth gilt, 7s. 6d. each.

THE UNIVERSAL INSTRUCTOR; or, Self-Culture for All. Vol. I. With hundreds of Illustrations.

1.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN MECHANIC.

A Complete Guide to Amateurs. With about 750 Illustrations.

The "Illustrated London News" of Dec. 24, 1881, reviewing these two works, says:

"We are quite sure that any person who could really master the contents of this volume ('The Universal Instructor') would be one of the most accomplished men of his generation. 'Every Man His Own Mechanic,' by the same publisher, is a title of no less promise; and there is a satisfactory prospect of doing well for the earnest young man who puts this volume under his right arm, and the 'Universal Instructor' under his left arm, embarking for an emigrant voyage to Canada or New Zealand, with the steadfast resolve to learn and practice only what is to be read in these books. 'Household Carpentry and Joinery,' 'Ornamental and Constructive Carpentry and Joinery,' and 'Household Building Art and Practice,' in addition to the list of useful arts and sciences comprised in the former volume, will certainly make him a successful colonist, as well as a respected and influential member of society, in any of the new countries of the world."

London: WARD, LOCK, and Co., Salisbury-square, E.C.

Third Edition, price 1s., post-free.

THE New Electrolytic Treatment of Cancer

and of Simple Tumours. By G. EDGEMOND, M.D.

Nelson and Co., 23, Duke-street, Grosvenor-square, W.

BANK OF NEW ZEALAND

(Incorporated by Act of General Assembly, July 29, 1861.)

Bankers to the New Zealand Government.

Capital subscribed and paid up, £1,000,000.

Reserve Fund, £355,000.

Head Office—Auckland.

BRANCHES AND AGENCIES.

In Australia—Melbourne, Sydney, and Newcastle.

In Fiji—Levuka, Suva, and New Caledonia.

In New Zealand—Auckland, Blenheim, Christchurch, Dunedin, Invercargill, Napier, Nelson, New Plymouth, Pictou, Wellington, and at eighty-two other towns and places throughout the Colony.

The Bank grants Drafts on all their Branches and Agencies, and transacts every description of banking business connected with New Zealand, Australia, and Fiji on the most favourable terms.

The London Office RECEIVES FIXED DEPOSITS of £50 and upwards, rates and particulars ascertained on application.

No. 1, Queen Victoria-street, Mansion House, E.C.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.—The

CURATORSHIP OF THE ANTIQUE SCHOOL is NOW

VACANT. Hours of attendance Nine a.m. to Four p.m., and Five to Seven p.m. Salary, £20 a year. Painters or Sculptors only are eligible. Applications, stating age, &c., and testimonials to be addressed to the Secretary, Royal Academy of Arts, Burlington House, Piccadilly, on or before JAN. 21.

MALVERN COLLEGE.

The next Term commences on Friday, Jan. 27.

Entrance Examinations on Jan. 28.

For Particulars apply to HENRY ALDRICH, Esq., Secretary.

CREWKERNE GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

THE OLD BOYS of the school are specially invited to be present at the PUBLIC OPENING of the NEW BUILDINGS on JAN. 18. Programmes on application to JOHN SPARKS, Clerk to the Governors.

WHAT IS YOUR CREST and WHAT

IS YOUR MOTTO? Send name and county to CULLETON'S Heraldic Office, Plain Sketch, 3s. 6d.; Colours, 7s. The Arms of Man and wife blazoned. Great engraved on seals, rings, book and steel dies, &c. 6d. Gold seal, with crest, 2s. Solid Gold Ring, 1s. 6d. Half-marked with crest, 4s. Manual of Heraldry, 400 engravings, 3s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn-street (corner of St. Martin's-lane).

CULLETON'S GUINEA BOX OF

STATIONERY contains a Ream of the very best Paper and 50 Envelopes, all stamped in the most elegant way with Crest and Motto, Monogram, or Arms; and the engraving of Steel Die included. Sent to any part for P.O. order.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn-street (corner of St. Martin's-lane).

VISITING CARDS by CULLETON.

Fifty best quality, 2s. 6d., post-free, including the Engraving of Copper-plate, Wedding Cards, 50 each, 50 Envelopes, with Maiden Name, 1s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, Seal Engraver, 25, Cranbourn-street, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

FOR ARMS and CREST send Name and County to T. MORING, Inns of Court Heraldic Officers, 321, High Holborn, W.C. Plain Sketch, 3s. 6d.; Coloured, 7s. 6d. Seals, Dies, and Diplomas. Illustrated Price-List post-free.

VITREMANIE, superseding Diaphanie.

An easy and inexpensive method of decorating windows in churches, public buildings, and private houses, by which may be produced the rich colouring and beautiful designs etched in appearance to real stained glass. Handbook of Designs and full instructions, 1s. 1d. Boxes, comprising designs, &c., at 21s., 31s. 6d., 42s. Particulars post-free. Sole Importers, J. BARNARD and SON, 223 (late 220), Oxford-street, London, W.

CHROMOPHOTOGRAPHY.

(KRAUS' PROCESS.)

The New Art (enabling any person without previous knowledge of either Painting or Drawing) to Colour Photographs on convex glasses, in imitation of China and Enamel Painting. Boxes containing every requisite, 25s. and 30s. Particulars post-free. Specimens shown on application at the Sole Agents, J. BARNARD and SON, 223, Oxford-street, London, W.

CHAS. CODD'S ORANGE CHAMPAGNE

is made simply from oranges. It is a light and wholesome tonic, and being free from chemicals as well as spirit, it is the purest and best of the non-alcoholic drinks. Price, in London, in large champagne bottles, 7s. per dozen; in small, 4s. Bottles charged 2s., and same allowed when returned.—C. Codd and Co., 79, Copenhagen-street, London. Sold by all Grocers, Chemists, and Wine Merchants.

AMER PICON,

NOW TO BE HAD IN ENGLAND.

THE MOST CHEERING and HEALTH-GIVING of Spirits.

THE POPULAR DRINK

OF FRANCE and the Continent.

CROSS OF THE LEGION

OF HONOUR, and 15 GOLD MEDALS.

Full particulars in daily papers, or direct of

E. BOHN and CO., The Exchange, Southwark, London.

NUDA VERITAS.—GREY HAIR restored

by this valuable specific to its original shade, after which it grows the natural colour, not grey. Used as a dressing, it causes growth and arrests falling. The most harmless and effectual restorer extant. One trial will convince it has no equal. Price 10s. 6d., of all Chemists and Hairdressers. Testimonials free.—Agents, R. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

ROBARE'S AUREOLINE, or GOLDEN

HAIR WASH.—For producing the beautiful golden colour so much admired. Warranted perfectly harmless. Price 3s. 6d., and 10s. 6d., of all principal Perfumers and Chemists throughout the world.—Agents, R. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

PRATT'S LADIES' BELTS

AND ABDOMINAL SUPPORTS

ARE CONFIDENTLY RECOMMENDED AS THE MOST COMFORTABLE AND EFFICIENT EVER MADE.

Apply to the Ladies' Attendant,

J. F. PRATT,

45 (late 420), OXFORD-STREET, LONDON, W.

WELL WORTHY OF NOTICE.

AS A CERTAIN CURE

for Bilious and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, Wind, Spasms, Foul Breath, Nervous Depression, Irritability, Lassitude, Loss of Appetite, Dyspepsia, Heartburn, Giddiness, Dizziness (of the Eyes), &c.

DR. SCOTT'S BILIOUS AND LIVER PILLS

as a general family aperient medicine have no equal, being as mild and tonic in their action as they are certain in their curative effects. Prepared only by W. LAMBERT, 178, Seymour-place, London, W. In Boxes, 1s. 1d. and 2s. 6d. Sold by all Chemists. Ask for Dr. Scott's, wrapped in green paper.

PETER ROBINSON'S

COURT and GENERAL MOURNING

WAREHOUSE,

REGENT-STREET.

FREE OF CHARGE.—MOURNING.

Upon receipt of letter or telegram.

Goods will be forwarded, free of extra charge, for selection, to any part of England with Dressmaker, if desired; or I'll attend will be sent, with Book of Illustrations, by first post.

THE COURT and GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE,

226 to 232, REGENT-STREET, LONDON.

The Largest Mourning Warehouse in Europe.

JANUARY, 1882.

STOCK-TAKING SALE.

GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICE

of Goods in all Departments.

For ONE MONTH only.

BLACK MATERIAL COSTUMES,

reduced to 25s.

Grey Material Costumes, reduced to 21s.

Black Silk and Satin Costumes, reduced to 70s. 6d.

Rich Silk Velvet Costumes, reduced to 10 guineas.

Dinner Dresses, reduced to 65s.

Evening and Ball Dresses, reduced to 35s. 6d.

Polonaises, reduced to 25s. 6d.

Warm Petticoats, reduced to 2s. 11d.

NEWMARKET JACKETS, reduced to 21s.

Newmarket Jackets, reduced to 21s.

Fur-lined Cloaks, reduced to 25s. 6d.

Very Handsome Cloaks, all much reduced.

GLOVES, Hosiery, Collars, Millinery,

NEW MUSIC.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

Nearest and Dearest Waltz ..	D'Albert.
Patience Waltz and Quadrille ..	D'Albert.
Patience Lancers and Polka ..	D'Albert.
Olivette Waltz and Quadrille ..	D'Albert.
Olivette Lancers and Polka ..	D'Albert.
Drink, Puppy, Drink, Polka ..	D'Albert.
Yankee Waltz ..	Caroline Lowthian.
Je t'Aime Valse ..	Waldteufel.
Mother Hubbard Polka ..	Caroline Lowthian.

Price 2s. each net.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW SONGS.

Just as of old ..	Madame Sainton Dolby.
Gates of the West ..	Caroline Lowthian.
Shepherd's Song ..	Alice Borton.
When all the world is young ..	Alice Borton.
Lad ..	Alice Borton.
Soft, soft wind from out the sweet South ..	Alice Borton.
Margaret to Dolcino ..	Alice Borton.
Dolcino to Margaret ..	Alice Borton.
The Reason Why! ..	P. Cowen.
In youth's season ..	Gounod.
My Beloved ..	Finsuti.
In the twilight of our love ..	A. Sullivan.

(Drawing-room version of "Silverd" is the raven hair; from "Patience.")

Two's the best of company .. Miss A. M. Wakefield.

When the heart is far away .. Miss A. M. Wakefield.

Price 2s. each net.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW PIANOFORTE.

Janotha ..	Valse Brillante ..	2s. 6d. net.
Janotha ..	Gavotte ..	2s. 6d. net.
Lord Duppelin ..	Gavotte ..	2s. 6d. net.
Jaies de Sival ..	Handelian Dance ..	2s. 6d. net.
Cotsford Dick ..	Echoes of the Hunt (Fantasia on Whyte-Melville's Hunting Song) ..	2s. 6d. net.
Smallwood ..	Allegretto a la Rigodon ..	1s. 6d. net.

CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street; and 15, Poultry, E.C.

WHYTE-MELVILLE'S HUNTING SONGS.

A RUM ONE TO FOLLOW, A BAD ONE TO BEAT. E. R. TERRY. 2s. net.

THE GOOD GREY MARE. THEO. MARZIALS. 2s. net.

THE GALLOPING SQUIRE. E. R. TERRY. 2s. net.

THE CLIPPER THAT STANDS IN THE STALL AT THE TOP. J. L. HATTON. 2s. net.

DRINK, PUPPY, DRINK. 2s. net.

CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street; and 15, Poultry.

ECHOES OF THE HUNT. A Transcription

for the Pianoforte of Whyte-Melville's Hunting Songs, "Drink, Puppy, Drink," "The Clipper that Stands in the Stall at the Top," and "The Galloping Squire." By COTSFORD DICK. Price 2s. net.

CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street; and 15, Poultry.

PATIENCE. An Aesthetic Opera. By

W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN. Now being performed at the Savoy Theatre with enormous success.

Libretto 1s.

Vocal Score 2s.

Pianoforte Solo 3s.

All the following sent post-free for half price.

PIANOFORTE ARRANGEMENTS.

Boyton-Smith's Fantasia ..	4 0
Kuhn's Fantasia ..	4 0
Smallwood's Early Fantasia, 1, 2, 3 ..	each 3 0
Fred. Godfrey's Grand Selection. (As played by all the Military Bands) ..	4 0
Ditto, as a Duet ..	5 0

CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street; and 15, Poultry, E.C.

MRS. L. MONCRIEFF'S NEW SONGS.

"T'WAS ONLY A YEAR AGO, LOVE. A CREOLE LOVE SONG. THOUGHTS AT SUNRISE."

CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street, W.; and 15, Poultry, E.C.

CHAPPELL and CO. have ON VIEW

Every description of PIANOFORTES by the best makers, returned from hire, to be sold at greatly reduced prices for cash, or may be purchased on the Three Years' System.

CHAPPELL PIANOFORTES, from

15 guineas.

COLLARD PIANOFORTES, from

30 guineas.

ERARD PIANOFORTES, from 40 guineas.

BROADWOOD PIANOFORTES, from

35 guineas.

FOREIGN PIANOFORTES, from

30 guineas. Lists on application.

50, New Bond-street; City Branch, 15, Poultry.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM OF HIRE OF PIANOFORTES, HARMONIUMS, AND AMERICAN ORGANS.

By which the instrument becomes the property of the hirer at the end of the third year, provided each quarter's hire shall have been regularly paid in advance. Pianofortes, from 2s. 6d. Harmoniums, from 1s. 6d.; and American Organs, from 1s. 6d. a Quarter.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S PIANINOS, from

20 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S Iron Framed

Oblique PIANOS for extreme climates, from 35 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S Early English

PIANOFORTES, artistically designed, Ebonised Cases, from 45 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S Iron Double

Overstrung PIANOFORTES. Check Actions, &c., from 60 guineas.

CHICKERING PIANOFORTES, from

120 guineas, with American discount.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ALEXANDRE

HARMONIUMS, for Church, School, or Drawing-Rooms, from 6 to 150 guineas; or, on the Three-Years' System, from 1s. 6d. per quarter.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S IMPROVED

AMERICAN ORGANS, combining Pipes with Reeds. Manufactured by Clough and Warren, Detroit, U.S.A. A large variety on view, from 15 to 200 guineas. Price-Lists on application to CHAPPELL and CO.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S PET ORGAN,

Seven Stops, including Sub-bass and Octave Coupler. Elegant Carved Walnut Case. 18 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S Favourite

ORGAN. Five octaves, ten stops, four sets of reeds, two knee swell, elegant carved Canadian walnut case, price 25 guineas. With twelve stops, sub-bass octave coupler, and two knee pedals, 35 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S CENTENNIAL

GRAND ORGAN, 15 Stops, 9 Sets of Reeds, and Combination Tubes, 85 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S GRAND

ORGAN MODEL. Two clavier, two and a half octave of pedals, twenty-three stops, seventeen sets of reeds, elegant diapered pipes, solid walnut case. 235 guineas.

INSTRUMENTS by ALL MAKERS may be

HIRED or PURCHASED on the Three-Years' System.

CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

City Branch, 15, Poultry, E.C.

A LARGE DISCOUNT TO PURCHASERS

FOR CASH.

CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

City Branch, 15, Poultry, E.C.

NEW MUSIC.

THE SONGS OF SCANDINAVIA (100 Songs).

THE SONGS OF EASTERN EUROPE (83 Songs), all with English words. "We must say that no musical library is complete without these books. The songs of Eastern Europe" contains a very valuable collection of folkslieder from the hitherto untouched wealth of the Austrian provinces."—Daily Telegraph.

HAMILTON TIGHE. Cantata. By

GEORGE FOX. For Baritone, Soprano, and Chorus.

HAMILTON TIGHE, Words from the "Ingoldsby Legends," occupies twenty minutes in performance.

Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

THE MASCOTTE, complete with English

Words, 7s. 6d.; complete for Pianoforte, 2s. 6d.

THE MASCOTTE LANCERS, Polka, and

Galop. By COOTE. 2s. each.

THE MASCOTTE VALSE.

By WALDTEUFEL. 2s.

THE MASCOTTE QUADRILLE.

By METRA. 2s.

Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S NEW SONGS.

THE MILLER AND THE MAID. By

MARZIALS. Sung by Miss Mary Davies. 2s.

THE MILLER AND THE MAID.

"Cannot fail to become popular. It tells a simple story with quaintness and piquancy, and the music in all respects commends the words."—Daily Telegraph.

THE LONG AVENUE. By MOLLOY.

Sung by Madame Antoinette Sterling. 2s.

THE LITTLE HERO. By STEPHEN

ADAMS. Sung by Mr. Maybrick. 2s.

THE LITTLE HERO. "The Little Hero"

was received with extraordinary enthusiasm, and may be depended upon as a winning card all through the season."—Daily Telegraph. "The Little Hero" was again the hero of the evening."—World.

THE VIKINGS' SONG. By STEPHEN

ADAMS. Sung by Signor Foli. 2s.

THE NIGHT WATCH. By PINSUTI.

Sung by Mr. Barrington Foote. 2s.

SANTLEY'S NEW SONGS.

TO ALTHEA FROM PRISON. By MAUDE

VALERIE WHITE. Words by Richard Lovelace, 1618.

GIPSY JOHN. By FREDERIC CLAY.

THE BARKSHIRE TRAGEDY. By

BEHREND.

THE BOATSWAIN'S STORY. By

MOLLOY.

THE ANGELS' CALL. By MAX SILNY.

Sung by Miss Mary Davies at the Norwich Festival, and the Balled Concerts. Published, with and without violin accompaniment, 2s.

THE LIGHTS OF LONDON. By G. R.

Sims. Author of the Drama; Music by LOUIS DIEHL.

THE LIGHTS OF LONDON WALTZ.

by LOUIS DIEHL, on the above popular song. 2s. each.

Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

B. WILLIAMS'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

BETROTHAL OF THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES PRINCE

LEOPOLD AND PRINCESS HELENA.

PRINCESS HELENE OF WALDECK

PYRMONT. Suite de Valses. Par GEORGES LAMOTHE.

PRINCESS HELENE. Suite de Valses.

WEIT VON DIR (Far from Thee). Waltzer.

By OSCAR SEYDEL.

AUF IMMER (For Ever). By OSCAR

SEYDEL. The favour with which this waltz has been already received bids fair to outstrip the celebrated "Weit von Dir" in popularity.

THE ZEPHYR. Polka. By L.

WILLIAMS. Increasingly popular.

NEW SONGS by ODOARDO BARRI.

THE DREAM OF THE OLD SACHISTAN (for Bass and Baritone). Sung by Robert Hilton.

THE OLDEN TIME (in C and E flat). Sung by Arthur Oswald.

LOVE KNOTS (F to G). Sung by Harper Kearton.

A ROYAL EXCHANGE (E to F). Sung by Miss Jessie Royd.

THE CHALLENGE (No. 1 in C, No. 2

in E flat). By HUMPHREY J. STARK.

THE BUGLER, in D, F, and G. CIRO

PINSUTI. Sung by Mr. Thurlay Beale.

Each of the above 1s. net.

A NEW SERIA BUFFA CANTATA, entitled

GABRIEL GRUB. Adapted from Charles Dickens's story in "Pickwick" by Frederic Wood; Music by GEORGE FOX. 2s. 6d. net.

London: B. WILLIAMS, 60, Paternoster-row.

GABRIEL DAVIS'S POPULAR SONGS.

WHO'S FOR THE QUEEN? (New Patriotic Song). Sung by Mr. Thurlay Beale. Words by F. E. Weatherly. 4s.

KING CARNIVAL. Words by F. E. Weatherly. 4s.

BY THE RIVER. Words by Herbert Gardner. 4s.

ELSIE (The Flower Girl's Song). 4s.

Sung by Miss Ada Tolkien.

THE ZINGARA. 4s.

Sung by Miss José Sherrington.

THE COMING YEAR. Words by Dean Alford. 4s.

London: NOVELLO, EWER, and Co., 1, Berners-street, W.

HARROW SCHOOL MUSIC.

By JOHN FARMER.

Christ and His Soldiers. Overture. 2s.; cloth, 4s.

Part-Songs for Public Schools. 2 vols. 1s. 6d. each.

Harrow Glees. 2 vols. 4s. each. Harrow Songs. 2 vols. 4s. each.

Singing Quadrilles. Four Sets. Waltzes. Two Sets. 1s. each.

London: NOVELLO and Co., Harrow; J. C. WILKIE.

PINSUTI'S NEW SONG.

THE OLD CATHEDRAL. CIRO PINSUTI.

Sheffield Post says:—"This is one of the most lovely, solemn, and impressive of all this gifted composer's songs, and the pathetic story to which the music is wedded is worthy the masterly setting it has received. The harmonies are finely conceived, and the succession of slow and ever changing chords fall upon the ear like the distant tones of the cathedral organ; they are intended to resemble. This song of Ciro Pinsuti is sure to be a great success." In C (B to E) and D (C to F). 2s. stamps.

BY THE ABBEY DOOR. B. TOURS.

Ready this day. F. G. (compas B to F), and A.

In B flat; C (compas C to E) and E flat.

THE LAND OF REST. By PINSUTI.

"The excessive beauty of this new composition will ensure it great distinction." Post-free, 2s. stamps.

W. MORLEY and CO., 70, Upper-street,

London, N.

BUTLER'S MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Viollins, Concertinas, Harmoniums, Pianos, Flutes, Clarionets, Flageolets, Guitars, Banjos, Accordians, Flutinas, Cornets, Drums, and Band Instruments. Largest Assortment in the Kingdom at G. BUTLER'S, 29, Haymarket, London. Illustrated Catalogue, 60 pages, post-free.

MUSICAL BOX DÉPÔTS, 22, Ludgate-hill, and 25, Cheapside.—Most extensive variety in London. Large sizes, ordinary music, four airs, 22 2s.; six, 42 12s.; and eight airs, 43 6s. Ditto, by Nicole Frères, 21 per air; superb instruments, from 4s. to £200. Choicest Music and newest accompaniments.—Catalogues of Tunes and Prices gratis on application to WALES and McCULLOCH, above.

NEW MUSIC.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS' LIST OF NEW

AND POPULAR MUSIC.

FAITHFUL FOR EVERMORE. A

BALLAD. Price 2s. net. M.S.

Do you remember the wild, weird music sung by the waves on the shore?

Do you remember the old brave promise, "Faithful for evermore?"

Verse by Mary Mark Lemon; Music by SUCHET CHAMPION.

THE CHILD'S LETTER TO HEAVEN.

Song. C. and S.

Words by Frank W. Green; Music by W. G. LEVEY.

A most effective song for both drawing-room and concert-hall.

Price 2s. net.

NEW DRAWING-ROOM DITTY.

MORE THAN ONE (High Baritone or Tenor). Price 2s. net. Words by Henry S. Leigh; Music by HAMILTON CLARK.

GOOD SONGS FOR CHRISTMAS-TIME.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS; or, Memories of the Cradle. "A comic ditty, commenting on the numerous virtues of Emma Jane." Written and composed by HENRY S. LEIGH. Net 1s. 6d.

WINTER EVERGREENS

(Meezo-Soprano or Baritone). Price 2s. net.

Words by Carpenter. Music by GLOVER.

IN DAYS OF OLD (Baritone).

Price 1s. 6d. net.

Words by Bellamy; Music by J. L. HATTON.

GOOD DANCE MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS-TIME.

POLKAS.

THE FLIRT .. DARWIN .. 2s.

FIRST KISS .. HAMMER .. 2s.

ROSE OF THE VALLEY .. FARMER .. 2s.

VALSES.

SUZANNE .. GRENVILLE .. 4s.

BILLYE TAYLOR .. GODFREY .. 4s.

FIRST LOVE .. FARMER .. 4s.

QUADRILLES.

BILLYE TAYLOR .. COOTE .. 4s.

CHRISTMAS .. FARMER .. 4s.

LITTLE FAIRIES .. FARMER .. 4s.

Free by post, half price.

NEW POLKA. NEW POLKA.

A TON BRAS. By T. RIEFFLER.

This capital Polka, now the rage in Paris, has been purchased by J. Williams. English Edition now ready, post-free, 18 stamps.

SUNG BY ARTHUR ROBERTS.

THE GOOD YOUNG MAN WHO DIED.

An Aesthetic Lay. Words by H. P. Stephens; Music by E. SOLOMON. Post-free, 2s. stamps.

May be sung in public without fee by all singers.

SUNG BY ARTHUR ROBERTS.

YOU OUGHT TO KNOW BETTER

THAN THAT. Words, Sidney Grundy; Music, E. SOLOMON. Post-free, 2s. stamps.

"He'd a dark grey moustache, he was dress'd very flash, and he wore a tall chimney Pot Hat."

A middle-aged man. Oh! for shame, Mary Ann, you ought to know better than that."

May be sung in public; by all singers, without fee.

CIRO PINSUTI'S SONGS.

DREAMS, ONLY DREAMS .. M.S. net 2 0

FAIRER THAN MORNING .. M.S. 1 6

I LOVE MY LOVE .. M.S. 2 0

LOVE WILL SHINE ALL THROUGH .. C. 2 0

MAIDEN'S FLOWER SONG .. M.S. 1 6

THE OWL (Sung by Mr. Santley) .. Bar. 2 0

THE RAFT (Sung by Sig. Foli) .. B. 2 0

WHAT WE HAVE LOVED WE LOVE FOR EVER .. M.S. 1 6

WILT THOU BE MINE .. Bar. 1 6

J. L. MOLLOY'S SONGS.

LITTLE MAID OF CHINA .. M.S. net 2 0

PEOPLE I HAVE MET.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT ARTFUL VICAR."

THE PROMISING SON.

He was sitting on one of the public seats on the Place de la Madeleine in Paris. Some nurses and babies of the commoner sort were around him; the children playing or asleep in the cool shadow, with a fountain in the midst of them. Here and there a flower-girl, with a bunch of roses or carnations, offered her gay merchandise to the passers-by. The omnibuses from all quarters of the great city came and stopped, and went upon their way again. It was a bright and busy scene, full of life and colour, in the capital of fair France, at high noon on a midsummer day. But the man who had attracted my attention never looked up. He kept his eyes fixed upon the ground, not as one who mourns or thinks deeply, but as though all things in the world were simply indifferent to him. He was dressed in a coarse, old, brown great-coat, which did not fit him; his trousers were too short, and they appeared as though they had never been properly brushed since they were made. His shoes were of a neutral tint; they had been dirty over and over again perhaps, but the mud had worn itself off; then new dust and soil had collected till they also had been partly rubbed away. There was no sign of any shirt about his attire, probably he had none. He wore a cap which might have been picked up anywhere, even in a gutter. He sat quite motionless, neither reading nor musing, as far as could be judged. He did not seem bored, however; his aspect was that of somebody who was waiting, but did not care particularly what happened. His attitude was absolutely passive and careless. Presently a spare sad-faced man, with an expression of a sorrow past hope or comfort, walked hurriedly up to him as though he had been summoned in haste and from a distance. No greeting passed between them, but the man who had been waiting rose silently, and they went away together. His walk, his bearing, the manner of the grave melancholy traveller who had joined him, showed at once that they were gentlemen, and a sharp pang came to my heart at this moment, for I remembered who and what they were. I had seen for the first time since ten years General Beaudesert and his son Auriol, whose fag I was at Eastminster.

I had heard of him only occasionally since, for, though we "knew each other at home," as the school jargon describes the intimacy between the families of students, General Beaudesert had for some time past retired from our set. It was reported in the vague way in which such things are talked about that he had been ruined by some foul play in high quarters; and that he was obliged to live in exile at Paris. People said, however, that his hopes were all garnered up on his son, who was preparing for the Bar, and that there would probably be a great State trial, in which Auriol Beaudesert would figure as junior counsel, immediately after he had eaten his terms. There seemed nothing improbable in such a calculation on the part of his family, for Auriol had been facile princeps at Eastminster, and had left that famous public school a captain of his year with all the honours he could carry off with him to Christchurch; and for the rest, his father was one of those men who say little, but who think deeply, and he was not at all likely to sit down quietly under a wrong.

"His mother would kiss his forehead, giving thanks to God, as he bent over his books."

"But the man who attracted my attention never looked up. He kept his eyes fixed upon the ground, not as one who mourns or thinks deeply, but as though all things in the world were simply indifferent to him."

His wife, too, who had been very kind to me when I was a boy, was a lady of high courage, joined to a patience most sweet and wise. For these Beaudeserts came of a grand old stock, who had over and over again given illustrious patriots, successful statesmen, and valiant captains to their country. A prudent, far-sighted race, of steadfast hearts and rare fortitude, who claimed alliance with the blood Royal of Plantagenet and Tudor, and who had the kingly gift of waiting, watchful, alert, and in prayer, till the Lord of Hosts was with them. Their friendship was a precious thing for all who sought it, and it was frankly given. Their enmity was hard to rouse, and it was both generous and placable towards the weak. But if braved or mocked, the day came when their foes were made to lie down in sorrow. It was, perhaps, natural that such a family should have had the failing of pride. The General had so true a respect for his name that it was well known he had sacrificed his birthright and his fortune for it; and his wife had looked on approvingly while he did so.

If ever a young man appeared to justify the high hopes centred in him it was Auriol Beaudesert. He seemed to have no part or share in the weaknesses of humanity, and yet his conscience was almost morbidly tender. He would accuse himself bitterly of peccadilloes which the rest of us hardly knew we had committed, or thought but lightly of in any case. His love of books amounted to a passion. He honoured learning for its own sake, and his ideal of excellence was high and pure even for a collegian who had taken to his studies in classics and theology quite earnestly. A reverence for all that is sacred, an inborn love and sympathy towards all that is pure and good, seemed a part of his nature. In all our boyish transactions he kept his word faithfully, and no one had ever heard him prevaricate or tell a falsehood. He took little part in our games, indeed, for books were his favourite companions; but his decision on any moot point was final, and we were always contented to appeal to an authority animated by an unvarying spirit of truth and justice.

If he was popular at school, he was almost idolised at home—his heart was so tender, his aspirations so high and honest, his conduct so dutiful and affectionate. Moreover, as he grew towards manhood, his whole mind was bent on the subject of Constitutional law; and his mother would kiss his forehead, giving thanks to God, as he bent over his books (she stealing in upon him tiptoe and gliding noiselessly away); while his father collected cases and precedents, nothing doubting, for the great State trial which was to come. Before the board was dark upon his lip, the letters of Auriol Beaudesert read like those of a future Lord Chancellor. He seemed predestined to lofty fortunes—fit to become a Lanfranc or a Bacon, as time and chance should serve. He had none of those drawbacks and impediments which often mar a career. He had a mild love of good eating indeed; but that never ruins an ambitious man; and it was noticed early that he had an abrupt contemptuous way of tossing off wine, as though he were glad to have done with it. When he went up to Oxford, with an immense box of prize books and a scholar's wardrobe somewhat slender, he was as noble a type of student and gentleman as any that the University contained. His mind seemed the abode of candour, uprightness, and piety.

What happened afterwards could only be told in fitting language by an enemy of mankind. All at once the mind of Auriol Beaudesert stopped growing. It shrunk up and shrivelled, becoming stunted and narrow. It seemed as though some blight had fallen on him, or that an evil spirit had taken possession of him, body and soul. The first strange thing which occurred was when his father visited him on his mother's birthday—which was kept as a family festival. It was one of the rare holidays which the General ever allowed himself after his ruin; so he wished to spend it among the Christchurch meadows, in hopeful talk with his son, and take his wife the freshest news of him. He thought they would lunch together afterwards at the Mitre, where his father had put up in his own student days; and he had scraped together twenty pounds to give the boy before he left, as he meant to do (unless hard pressed to stay) by the first afternoon train, so as not to trespass on his studies. In Auriol's rooms, however, there was a table laid for thirty guests; and the young man explained with some embarrassment that he was obliged to give a sort of semi-official breakfast to the old Westminsters of his year, as their former Captain. He said that he regretted he could not ask his father to such a party, and the General agreed cordially, taking hasty and loving leave of him. But when he had gone away, and sat down to a solitary biscuit at a new hotel—for he did not care where he went now his son was not with him—he felt dejected, and had an uneasy foreboding that all was not quite right. When term was over, too, Auriol came home for the first time without any prize or other record of his studies. He said briefly that he had tried and had failed, which was quite true; and both his father and mother were secretly overjoyed at his frankness and modesty. His mother thought also that he worked too hard about this time, for he was seldom with his family, and passed his holidays in the library of Lincoln's Inn, pursuing his legal and University studies simultaneously, as is the custom. When he came home he retired to his bedroom, and locked the door, to read in quiet; but it was noticed that when called to tea he was long in answering, and came down with flushed cheeks and dazed eyes, as though he had been sleeping heavily. Both his parents anxiously warned him against over-work on these occasions; but he assured them, rather impatiently, that "he took good care of himself," and evaded all further conversation on the subject. After awhile, too, he grew angry when interrogated, and withdrew himself more and more from his kindred. The second and third vacation he did not come home at all, passing the summer on a Scotch island; and his winter holiday at a farm-house in Berkshire, where he declared that he could read better, being less liable to disturbance of any kind. Still he took no prizes. He passed his "little go" in the ordinary way; but nothing else was heard of him at Oxford, and the Dean of Christchurch made no communication to the General when they met. Moreover, when Auriol was asked to refer to some passage in one of his prize-books for the exact text which his father required to fix some historical date of importance to him, the young man made no reply. By-and-by he left the University, too, carrying off nothing better than a second-class degree. Still he remained at Christchurch much later than the usual time, though he gave up his rooms in the college. At twenty-five years of age he was a Bachelor of Arts and a barrister-at-law; but he had not won a fellowship, and seemed to have the haziest ideas of the future. When his father spoke to him of their great cause, his words seemed to fall upon ears that had all at once grown dull. Chambers in Lincoln's Inn were rented and furnished for him because he wished, he said, to share them with another barrister, a Mr. Morley, who had been an old schoolfellow; and then nothing was heard of him for weeks together. He might have had a fine practice at the Bar, ready to his hand, through the solicitor of his family and other of his father's friends; but he did nothing, and mocked at his profession in terms which showed that he had neither love nor respect for it.

At last the horrible secret fell like a thunderbolt. The General called at his son's chambers one afternoon, and found Mr. Morley much confused. He answered very unwillingly the questions put to him about Auriol, and evidently tried to get rid of his visitor, who was about to depart, when a growl as that of a brute beast came from the inner room. The General knew what that meant. He had heard it before in camp and barracks among dull, ignorant men, whom it exposed to the lash. He turned very pale, and, pushing Mr. Morley aside, entered the adjoining apartment, where his son lay drunk upon the floor. The room was quite bare. Not a book of his school prizes, not a chair of the furniture bought a month before remained in it. Only a battered hat hung up upon a wooden peg.

There was a rally after that; and solemn oaths and promises of amendment, tempests of tears. Auriol's struggles were pitiful, and even tragic. He lived for a whole year like an anchorite. He joined a religious community bound by vows of total abstinence. He went voluntarily into an asylum for the cure of alcoholism by restraint. He did all that could be done to exorcise the demon of drink, which had been born of college wines, and Dons' indifference to their duties. Then he broke out again, seeming to be possessed by one of the Lower Devils. First, he recommenced drinking, silently keeping his own counsel and drinking in secret, as he had done for years. He put amazing cunning and demure craft into the plot for his own destruction. He traded on his former high character for truthfulness and piety, and got drunk on pretext of going to church, or to hear the choral services at a cathedral. When detected again after this he became impudent, having lost his self-esteem. So he sunk lower and lower; sunk into a stealthy thief and an abject begging letter-writer. Whatsoever he did or said was to grieve the eyes and to pain the heart of his people. He became a professional mendicant, making piteous and unmanly appeals to all whom he had ever known, to the friends and connections of his family—also to their enemies. Nothing was sacred from him, though he put a wily sagacity into his base pursuit, only robbing where he knew that he was safe from punishment. There was an exquisite infamy in all he did, and he seemed to have a perverse thirst for disgrace and ignominy. When picked out of the mud and clothed, and restored to his right mind, he would commit some shameless theft, and run away, living upon false pretences and on tales told to old servants or dependents of his family who could be duped into keeping him or furnishing him with funds. When he had drunk all the money he could beg, borrow, or steal he came home again, lying down in the mire, drunk and helpless, at his father's door. "O my son, my son!" said his father to him, in great anguish, on one of these occasions, "why do you so war against your better self? What is the cause of this hideous ruin?" "Sloth, selfishness, and cowardice," replied the younger man, without emotion, and he judged himself rightly. He was wicked and mischievous beyond belief, striking vehemently at the roof-tree of his own home. He went before magistrates declaring himself destitute; he wrote libels on the mother who bore him to extort money for drink. He slandered all who were nearest to him, and seemed made up and kneaded with virulence and iniquities. He passed months in sullen torpor; then followed fresh outbreaks, and before middle age he had probably drunk himself into a state of semi-insanity. It was in one of his brief intervals of sobriety that I had seen him, without a shirt or a shilling, waiting till his father came in answer to his summons, and found him dogged and rebellious to all good influence, on the Place de la Madeleine, at noon in midsummer.

I have met with other promising sons. There was Willoughby, who was killed by the kick of a restive horse the day after he was mentioned in despatches by Havelock. There was Crommelin, who threw away preferment in the Church, and went headlong to perdition for a woman's looks. And Greville, county member and Under-Secretary of State at twenty-three, who lost his honour in half an hour upon Epsom Downs. Marston, too, the Senior Wrangler, who died by his own hand in brain fever; and "Orator Musgrave," the hope of a political party, who caught a chill in walking home on the night of his maiden speech, and breathed out his great soul at Nice a few months afterwards. There was Carton, the artist, who married a vulgar woman and was pulled down by her to sordid things, throwing away the brush that he had dipped in glory. There was Lync the poet, who committed forgery a week before his work, which is immortal, saw the light; and Hunter, whose treatise on therapeutics took rank as a text-book when he was lost as a deck passenger seeking his bread, on an Australian steamer which went down at sea.

These were heirs of unfulfilled renown. They had not failed in running the race that was set before them; they had slipped down on a piece of orange-peel by the way. But of all the hopes I ever knew hived up in a promising son, I never had tidings of any so sweet or so cruelly embittered and destroyed as those which were dissolved in gin and cast away in sottishness by Auriol Beaudesert.

THE STATE OF IRELAND.

Our Special Artist, Mr. A. O'Kelly, fills two pages of this sheet with Sketches of the extraordinary proceedings on Thursday, Dec. 15, when a great Land League demonstration took place at Rathdrum, county Wicklow, for the purpose of ploughing and manuring Mr. Parnell's land. One hundred and eighty-three ploughs and five hundred carts were engaged in the operations on his estate, which is called Avondale, and is situated a few miles above the celebrated Vale of Avoca. The manure was drawn from Avonmore House (Mr. Parnell's residence) to Garrymore, nearly three miles distant. Horses, ploughs, and men were decorated with laurels and green ribbons. Mr. Corbet, M.P., and Mr. Redmond, M.P., were present, and Mr. H. George, an American political economist. About three thousand people were congregated on the grounds. An effigy, labelled "The Last Landlord," was paraded over the grounds in a dung-cart. After the completion of the work the assemblage was addressed by Mr. Corbet and Mr. Redmond from a waggonette. All went off quietly, and only two or three police were to be seen. The Sketches represent the following scenes:—1, The Parnell brass band, arrayed in scarves, rosettes, and portentous high-peaked hats with feathers, marching from Avondale to Garrymore; 2, the double procession of carts, those full of manure, along one side of the road, going to the field where the manure was to be ploughed in, and the empty carts returning at the other side of the road; 3, the loading of carts with the manure, of which there is a large bank, shown at the right-hand side, and men with pitchforks casting it up; 4, Mr. W. J. Corbet, M.P. for the county, making his speech in favour of the Land League, and the reporters writing it down in shorthand; 5, the centre sketch, ploughing the fifteen-acre field at Garrymore, in which a hundred and eighty-three ploughs were at work simultaneously; in the next field, there was a dance of men and women, and there were several refreshment stalls and drinking-booths. The subject of No. 6 is the effigy of "The Last Landlord," which is also introduced in Sketch 4; three men were kneeling in the manure-cart, one in the middle holding up this figure stuck on a pitchfork, and the two other men supporting the banner. After being taken through the shouting and jeering crowd, it was buried in a heap of manure. The band meeting again to play in front of Mr. Parnell's house is shown in No. 7; the other Sketches are those of carts and horses going home, and of the costermonger's cart dealing in refreshments. It should be observed that, in county Wicklow, the dress and general appearance of the rustic people would be much the same as in England, and the ploughs would likewise be such as may be seen in this country. The wearing of green and orange sashes, and of rosettes and medals, was very general upon this occasion.

The two Engravings on another page were made by our Special Artist when the Fenian prisoners, three men and a boy, captured in the houses at Dublin where a quantity of fire-arms and cartridges had been discovered, with other weapons of warfare, were brought before the police magistrate. In the police-court scene, Inspector Fogarty, with a contraband rifle musket in each hand, stands in the witness-box to give evidence of the seizure. To the left hand, between the two gas-burners, stand the three men, who were remanded till Wednesday, the 28th ult. The boy had already been discharged, but all four are shown together in the police-cell, before the examination of the case against them.

The Dublin Gazette publishes fresh proclamations under the Peace Preservation Act ordering all persons in the proclaimed districts to deliver up any arms they may have in their possession, and setting forth the penalties incurred by persons violating the provisions of the Act against the importation or sale, the carrying, or having, of arms in proclaimed districts. It also announces the appointment of the five resident magistrates selected for special duty in the following counties:—Mr. Clifford Lloyd, county Clare; Captain Butler, counties of Westmeath, Roscommon, and Leitrim; the Hon. Thomas O. Plunkett, county Kerry; Mr. H. A. Blake, county Galway, and King's County; Captain Slacke, Waterford and Cork. The counties named are those which are most disturbed and lawless. It is intended by Government to employ to the best advantage the forces of constabulary and military which are set free by the adoption of the new rule dispensing with the personal service of writs, and the consequent necessity of protecting process-servers. Patrol duty, which could not hitherto be done with regularity and efficiency, owing to the inadequacy of the available force, will now be carried out upon an organised system.

A land steward named Stock, while returning home on Saturday night from Listowel, was attacked by four men disguised, who took away his money, stripped him naked, and left him on the road. A farmer, named Long, was afterwards attacked by the same party, and treated in a similar way. A soldier of the Scots Greys, returning home from Cork to the barracks, was waylaid by a number of men, stripped and tied to a tree, where he was left until assistance reached him in the morning. He has since been in the hospital. On the following day some men of the same regiment were assaulted by roughs at Ballinacolly. A bad feeling is said to be entertained against the Scots Greys.

The murder of women, in a spirit of fiendish cruelty seldom equalled by the vilest savages on earth, begins to be a characteristic of the present agitation in Ireland. Near Mullingar, in county Westmeath, this was done on Saturday last. Three women named Croughan—a widow, eighty years old, and her two daughters—lived alone in a farmhouse about a mile from Mullingar, the workhouse of which town they supplied with milk. Early on Saturday morning, while the servant-boy was absent delivering the milk, a stranger entered the house and fired at the mother, who, with one of her daughters, was preparing breakfast. The shot missed, and the two women ran to the bedroom, where the second daughter also was, and fastened the door. The stranger burst through the door, and fired several more shots, killing one of the daughters and dangerously wounding the other. She now lies in a critical condition in the hospital. Several reasons are assigned for the murder. One is that a man named Walsh had had a quarrel with Mrs. Croughan about the possession of land, and had threatened her and her daughters. Another report says that the Croughans were suspected of giving information to the police.

Several persons have been arrested on the charge of being concerned in perpetrating outrages. Five men have been committed for trial on the charge of forming part of a band who attacked the house of Mrs. Fitzgerald, near Mill-street, Cork, and assaulted her sons and daughters. The information which led to the arrests is believed to have been given by the militiaman named Connel, who was apprehended last Tuesday. A farmer, named O'Callaghan, has been arrested on suspicion of being concerned in an attack made on a man named Bradley, near Mill-street, while he was driving home. O'Callaghan was with him at the time, and said his injuries were caused by falling off the car.

A great number of notices calling upon tenants to pay "no rent," and threatening dire punishment if they disobeyed, have been posted in various districts in Ireland during the last few days. The president, secretary, and two other members of the Ladies' Land League at Druncollagher were arrested on Sunday, and, upon their refusing to find bail, have been consigned to Limerick Jail.

The Dublin City Corporation, of which Mr. Dawson is the new Lord Mayor, finally resolved on Tuesday to confer the freedom of the City upon Mr. C. S. Parnell, M.P., and Mr. John Dillon, M.P. This motion, which had been rejected by the casting vote of the late Lord Mayor upon a former occasion, was now carried by 29 votes against 23. A memorial to the Lord Lieutenant was also adopted, requesting that Messrs. Parnell and Dillon be let out of Kilmainham Jail for the purpose of attending the Town Council and receiving the civic honour which is to be conferred upon them. Mr. Dillon has received a similar compliment from the Town Council of Cork.

A great meeting of Irish landlords, numbering above three thousand, and comprising a majority of noblemen and gentlemen of wealth and station in that country, was held on Tuesday at Dublin, in the Exhibition Palace. The Duke of Abercorn, late Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, presided, and the Marquis of Waterford, Lord Ardilaun, the Earl of Dartrey, Lord James Butler, the Earl of Westmeath, the Earl of Belmore, Colonel King-Harman, M.P., Mr. Arthur Kavanagh, M.P., and Mr. E. Gibson, M.P., were the leading speakers. The resolutions agreed to were that they would acquiesce in the recent Land Act; but that they were alarmed by the manner in which it is administered, and they protested against the action of the Assistant-Commissioners all over the country. They also claimed some compensation for positive losses inflicted on Irish landowners.

The Council of the Royal Academy has pronounced upon the drawings sent by students of Art-schools, with the view of obtaining admission as "probationers" of the Royal Academy. Out of nearly two hundred competitors, only seventeen came up to the requirements of the Academy. Of these one was from the Art-school, Lambeth; one from the British Museum; and fifteen were from the St. John's-wood School, presided over by Mr. Calderon, a third of these being ladies. The next competition for admission to the Academy takes place at Midsummer.

OBITUARY.

VISCOUNT HELMSLEY.

William Reginald, Viscount Helmsley, eldest son and heir-apparent of the Earl of Feversham, by Mabel Violet, his wife, second daughter of the late distinguished statesman, Sir James Graham, Bart., died on the 24th ult., at Madeira. He was born Aug. 1, 1852, educated at Eton, entered the 1st Life Guards, retired from the Army in four years after, and was elected on the Conservative interest M.P. for the North Riding of Yorkshire in 1874. He married, Dec. 23, 1876, Lady Muriel Frances Talbot, youngest daughter of the nineteenth Earl of Shrewsbury, and leaves one son, Charles William Reginald, now heir-apparent of the earldom of Feversham, born May 8, 1879; and one daughter, Mabel Theresa, born Oct. 16, 1877.

LORD JUSTICE LUSH.

The Right Hon. Sir Robert Lush, Lord Justice of Appeal, died on the 27th ult., at his residence, 60, Avenue-road, aged seventy-four. He was son of Mr. Robert Lush, of Shaftesbury, by Lucy, his wife, daughter of Mr. Joseph Foote, of Tolland, Wilts; was called to the Bar in 1840 by the Hon. Society of Gray's Inn, made Q.C. and Bencher of his Inn in 1857, and raised to the Bench, as a Judge of the Court of Queen's Bench, in 1865, when he received the honour of knighthood. In 1879 he was sworn of the Privy Council, and in 1880 became a Lord Justice of Appeal. This able and learned Judge was the author of a very popular and esteemed work, "Practice of the Superior Courts of Common Law." He had previously, while yet a student at Gray's Inn, issued "The Act for the Abolition of Arrest on Mesne Process," with copious notes. During his judicial career he sat on several important occasions, and was one of the three Judges at the memorable trial of Arthur Orton. Sir Robert married, in 1839, Elizabeth Ann, eldest daughter of the Rev. Christopher Woolcott, and leaves a family. His daughter Elizabeth is wife of Mr. Justice Watkin Williams.

MR. JUSTICE O'BRIEN.

The Hon. James O'Brien, one of the Judges of the Queen's Bench in Ireland, died on the 29th ult., at his residence in Stephen's Green. He was born Feb. 27, 1806, the youngest son of Mr. James O'Brien, of Limerick, by Margaret, his wife, daughter of Mr. Peter Long; received his education at the Belfast Institution, and at Trinity College, Dublin, where he gained great distinction; was called to the Irish Bar in 1830, became a Serjeant in 1848, represented Limerick in Parliament from 1854 to 1858, and in the latter year was raised to the Bench. His elder brother, Mr. John O'Brien, of Ballynalacken, had previously sat for Limerick. Mr. Justice O'Brien married, July 9, 1836, Margaret, daughter of Mr. Thomas Segrave (of the Cabra family), and leaves five daughters and one son. Of the former, the third is the wife of Mr. Henry Monahan, son of the late Lord Chief Justice Monahan. Judge O'Brien, a sound and accomplished lawyer, was held in the highest estimation by the Bar and the public.

COLONEL JAMES DE VIC TUPPER.

Lieutenant-Colonel and Brevet-Colonel James de Vic Tupper, 2nd Battalion Royal Welsh Fusiliers, died at Pembroke Dock, where he was quartered, on the 23rd ult., aged forty-three years. He entered the Welsh Fusiliers in December, 1854; and served in the Crimea during the last weeks of the siege of Sebastopol, being severely wounded in the assault on the Redan, Sept. 8, 1855; served also in the Indian Mutiny campaign of 1857-8, including the second relief of Lucknow, defeat of the Gwalior contingent at Cawnpore, siege and capture of Lucknow, and other actions, in one of which he was mentioned in despatches; embarked for the Gold Coast in 1874, and served with his regiment in the second phase of the Ashantee War, for which he received a Brevet Lieutenant-Colonelcy. He was in possession of the Crimean medal with one clasp, the Turkish medal, the Indian Mutiny medal with two clasps, and the Ashantee medal with one clasp. Colonel Tupper was the eldest surviving son of the late Carré William Tupper, of Hauteville House, Guernsey, and is one of the many able and distinguished officers produced by that small island in the Channel.

CAPTAIN PACK-BERESFORD.

Captain Denis William Pack-Beresford, of Fenagh, in the county of Carlow, M.P. for that county on the Conservative interest, from 1862 to 1868, J.P. and D.L., High Sheriff in 1856, died on the 29th ult., at his seat near Bagnalstown. He was born, July 7, 1813, the second son of General Sir Denis Pack, K.C.B., a very distinguished officer, by Lady Elizabeth Louisa, his wife, youngest daughter of George, first Marquis of Waterford; was educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich; and formerly held the commission of Captain, Royal Artillery. He assumed by Royal license, March 6, 1854, the additional surname and arms of Beresford in compliance with the testamentary injunction of Field Marshal Viscount Beresford, G.C.B. Captain Pack-Beresford married, Feb. 12, 1863, Annette Caroline, only daughter of Mr. Robert Clayton Browne, of Browne's Hill, in the county of Carlow, and leaves a large family.

We have also to record the deaths of—

Mr. Harrison Ainsworth, the novelist, at Reigate, on the 3rd inst. We intend to give his portrait next week.

The Hon. James Hunter Forbes, M.A., of Brux, county Aberdeen, brother and heir presumptive of Horace-Courtenay, present Lord Forbes, at Carlton House, Isle of Cumbrae.

Susanna, Lady Malins, the wife of Sir Richard Malins, P.C., lately one of the Vice-Chancellors of England, on the 30th ult., in her seventy-eighth year.

Augusta Anne, Lady Barron, widow of Sir Henry Winston Barron, Bart., and daughter of the late General Lord Charles Somerset, on the 27th ult., at 2, Halkin-street, Belgrave-square.

Mr. John Charles Mason, for thirty years Marine Secretary in the Hon. East India Company's Home Service, recently, in his eighty-fourth year.

The Rev. Henry Brownrigg, A.M., late Rector of Wicklow and Prebendary of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, on the 23rd ult., in his eighty-fourth year.

Admiral George Henry Parlbey White, at Rockwood, Newton Abbott, Devon, aged seventy-nine. He entered the Navy in 1816, and in 1863 was placed on the retired list.

Lieutenant-Colonel George Bernard Morgan, who for the past quarter of a century held the post of town major of Gibraltar. He served with the 77th Regiment throughout the Crimean War.

Louisa, Lady Blake, widow of Sir Henry Charles Blake, fourth Baronet, of Langham, and third daughter and coheir of Sir T. Pilkington, Bart., of Chevet, on the 28th ult. She was twice married; her first husband was the Rev. G. A. Dawson.

Mr. William Phibbs, of Seafeld, county Sligo, on the 20th ult., in his seventy-eighth year. He was eldest son of the late Mr. Owen Phibbs, of Seafeld, D.L., by Anne, his wife, daughter of Mr. Anthony Ormsby, of Ballinamore; and married, in 1840, Catherine, daughter of Mr. George M. Maunsell, of Ballywilliam, and leaves issue.

Mr. Horace Watson, Solicitor to the Post Office, previously to the Woods and Forests, on the 24th ult., at his residence, 7, Grosvenor-hill, Wimbledon, aged fifty-four. He was called to the Bar in 1864.

The Hon. Mrs. Bedingfeld (Frances), youngest daughter of John Minet, third Lord Henniker, by Mary, his wife, daughter of the Rev. Canon Chafy, and widow of the Rev. James Bedingfeld, Rector of Bedingfeld, on the 2nd ult., at Bedingfeld, in her seventy-fifth year.

Captain Robert William Suckling, R.N., grandnephew of the gallant Captain Maurice Suckling, R.N., and of Catherine Nelson, mother of the great Admiral Lord Nelson, on the 24th ult., at his residence, Albert Villa, Great Malvern, in his seventy-second year.

Lieutenant-Colonel Charles William Thompson, late of the 58th Regiment, on the 30th ult., at Bayswater, aged sixty-four. He served throughout the operations carried on in New Zealand in 1845-6 under Lieutenant-Colonel Hulme, and subsequently under Colonel Despard, against the insurgent chiefs in the north of New Zealand.

Mr. Anthony Salvin, F.S.A., the eminent architect, on the 17th ult., at his residence, Hawksfold, Sussex, in his eighty-third year. He was the son of General Salvin, and the representative of the Salvins of Sunderland Bridge, a younger branch of the old family of Salvin of Croxdale, county Durham. Mr. Salvin held a high place in his profession. The many castles and mansions erected or restored by him bear evidence to his taste and skill.

The Rev. Henry John Earle, the oldest Rector and Magistrate in the county of Essex, at High Ongar (his rectory), on the 9th ult. He was born in 1799, the eldest son of the Rev. Edward Hare Earle, of High Ongar, by Susanna, his wife, daughter of Mr. John Taylor, of Totnes; received his education at Harrow and St. John's College, Cambridge; and in 1823 succeeded his father in the valuable family living, and lordship of the Manor of High Ongar. For ninety-two years the estimable and respected gentleman whose death we record and his father held the Rectory of Ongar.

THE MAGAZINES FOR JANUARY.

The Cornhill Magazine is this month chiefly remarkable for the conclusion of "A Grape from a Thorn," which is quite in accordance with the generally cheerful and buoyant character of one of the most readable of modern novels. The idea of "The Man with the Red Hair" would have well become an extravaganza, but is unsuitable for a story meant to end tragically. There is no unity of impression, and the unforeseen catastrophe is disagreeable as well as surprising. "The Colours of Flowers" and "How the Stars got their Names" are two entertaining papers on popular science, both, however, dealing with points not exempt from doubt and controversy. "A Bit of Loot" is a striking anecdote of the Indian mutiny; and "A Gondolier's Wedding" is a very lively picture of Venetian popular life.

Macmillan has only five contributions, but all are above the usual mark. "Fortune's Fool" promises to be a real acquisition to serial fiction. The plot, indeed, is exceedingly improbable. But Mr. Julian Hawthorne seems to have at last forgotten that he had an inspired father, to have resigned the ineffectual pursuit of the weird and mystical, and to be relying upon more homely and sublimar, but very genuine endowments. His talent is essentially that of a storyteller; and, having this time got a story to tell of undoubted interest, whatever we may think of its probability, he keeps at it steadily, makes every sentence tell, and holds the reader's attention continually on the stretch. The painting of character, moreover, although not subtle, is very accurate. In a paper on English Church Courts and Primitive Ritual, Mr. Foulkes advocates the restoration of the Communion Service of the First Prayer-Book of Edward VI. as an alternative service. Mr. Morison's eulogistic review of Morley's biography of Cobden is perfectly fair, as far as it goes, except for the unfounded assumption that the Crimean War has been condemned by English public opinion. But one aspect of the subject has been left out of sight, and a feeling of something almost like antagonism is provoked by a discussion so thoroughly one-sided. Mr. Raven's "Divisions of a Pedagogue," if, on the one hand, extremely amusing from their numerous examples of the queerest schoolboy blunders, are, on the other, calculated to excite scruples respecting the nature and amount of the knowledge expected from average boys under the grammar-school system. Professor Masson concludes his interesting series of papers on "Carlyle's Edinburgh Life" with an acceptable promise of what can only be personal reminiscences.

Blackwood has made two very fortunate hits, in securing the first account of the sacred city of Kairwan since its occupation by the French has laid it open to European exploration; and a transcript, accompanied with lively and judicious observations, of a selection of marginal notes made by Coleridge on a number of philosophical and other works which subsequently came into the possession of his executor, Mr. Joseph Green, and are now in the British Museum. The authors annotated upon include Malthus, whom Coleridge regards with unjust dislike and contempt, Southey's Doctor, his attitude towards which is critical and distant; Fichte and Steffens, whom he honestly confesses his inability to understand; and Edward Irving, to whom he is surprisingly deferential. These notes are as characteristic of the author as any of those hitherto published, and although evidently written currente calamo, will well repay careful study. The account of Kairwan is also most interesting, with its description of the hitherto inaccessible city's architectural splendours, chiefly due to the wholesale pillage of Roman edifices; and of the extraordinary religious frenzy of the Aïssoua dervishes. The most remarkable of the other contributions are a ghost-story—"The Open Door"—powerful, but somewhat marred by a rationalistic suggestion at the conclusion; and the continuation of the quaint and humorous "Fixed Period."

The Nineteenth Century opens with a funeral ode, by Mr. Matthew Arnold, to the memory of Dean Stanley—eloquent, eloquent, musical; yet clearly a product of reflection rather than of poetical inspiration, and marred by an occasional feeble line or pedantic expression, such as "cecily" or "pullulate." Mr. Frederick Harrison writes of the reform of Parliamentary procedure in a more moderate tone than formerly, and his suggestions are not unpractical. Mr. R. H. Hutton makes it clear enough that he is opposed to vivisection, but does not show whether he is dissatisfied with the present restrictions, or would maintain the law as it stands. Mr. A. J. Balfour's review of Morley's life of Cobden is a useful corrective to Mr. Morison's indiscriminate panegyric, and equally in need of a corrective itself. In the civilised terms, with abundant and probably not insincere professions of admiration, it strives to divest Cobden of every shred of reputation for statesmanship. Mr. Knox's recollections of Sicily reflect the writer's enjoyment of that beautiful and lotus-eating land; and Miss Agnes Lambert brings out the power and pathos of "the oldest epic of Christendom," the anonymous "Song of Roland," now accessible to English readers in Mr. O'Hagan's spirited version.

The Contemporary is not very brilliant, but its papers for the most part treat of important subjects. The most remarkable is Mr. Mahaffy's indictment of the Irish landlords on the score of general apathy and want of public spirit. The writer is certainly not an unfriendly witness, and it behoves the class concerned to lay his strictures to heart. Colonel Osborn objects to the system of European control in Egypt, a system which would never have been resorted to if it had been possible to get financial honesty or equitable government out of native Egyptians. With all its drawbacks, it must be continued unless the country is to sink into a worse condition than that of Turkey. Colonel Osborn's idea of placing a European prince upon the throne would have much to recommend it if one could be found unobjectionable to all the European Powers. Mr. F. E. Colenso advocates the restoration of Cetewayo as the only effectual settlement of the Zulu question. Mr. Rae's account of the Christian Socialist movement in Germany is interesting, although this is too evidently prompted by political and ecclesiastical motives to obtain much influence with the working classes. Lady Verney's lively autumn journal in France does not give a very satisfactory account of the French peasant proprietor. Even where he is really well off, the standard of comfort and civilisation would seem to be low.

The Century fully maintains the decided start it has taken in its new series. Among the most interesting papers are Mr. Washburne's Reminiscences of Thiers, Mr. W. J. Linton's notes on the old Chartist leaders, Mrs. Mitchell's excellent paper on Oriental and early Greek sculpture, and copiously illustrated descriptions of the city of Morelia, in Mexico, and of the stalactite caverns of Luray, in Virginia. Mexico is also the subject of a copiously illustrated paper in Harper's Magazine, as are the coal-carrying navigation of the western rivers; and the Venetian glass of Murano. The most remarkable contributions to a good number of the Atlantic Monthly are an anonymous set of sketches from the South, and Mr. J. T. Trowbridge's very clever poem, "Three Worlds."

In the Fortnightly Review Mr. Blunt brings to a conclusion his interesting series of papers on the "Future of Islam." According to his forecast, Mahometanism is to lose its hold upon the Mediterranean basin, Egypt perhaps excepted, and to be compensated by a great extension of proselytism in Southern India and Africa. The seat of the Caliphate, after a temporary sojourn at Cairo, is to gravitate to Mecca, and the interests of her Indian Empire will compel England to take it under her protection. These predictions may seem fanciful, but are entitled to attention as those of an able man who has travelled extensively in the East. Mr. Swinburne is very angry with Mary Stuart's apologists, who, in his view, make her so mean-spirited a creature that the portrait presented by her accusers is the preferable one. The faults of Mr. Swinburne's pure style have rarely been less unpalatable than in this brief essay. Mr. Alfred Austin undertakes to give an account of the recently deceased Italian dramatist Pietro Cossa, but only analyses one of the pieces on which his reputation is founded. Judging from this, we should say that Cossa was an effective playwright, but little more. Miss Cobbe, like most feminine controversialists, spoils a pretty good case by imputing unfair dealing and sinister motives to the advocates of vivisection. Cruelty to animals is far more effectively rebuked in one of the quotations from the American Quaker Woolman with which Mr. Morley has enriched a charming review of a charming book, the Diary of Caroline Fox, of Penjerrick.

Mr. Julian Hawthorne's novel, "Dust," in the Gentleman's Magazine, is by no means so elaborately finished as his contribution to Macmillan, and may without much injustice be referred to the genus "potboiler;" the "English shire," which serves as the text for Mr. Grant Allen's homily on the influence of geological conditions in Sussex; Dr. Japp's disquisition on "recurrent ideas in Heine" embodies some subtle criticism, and the other papers, especially Mr. Mew's on Macchiavelli's "Golden Art," are all very readable. The best paper in Temple Bar is an analysis of that delightful old book, Robert Drury's narrative of his captivity in Madagascar. "Mrs. Shelley in Pisa" is also interesting, but contains little that has not been already printed. There is nothing very noticeable in Belgravia except Ouida's comedy novel, "Resurgo." It is interesting as an experiment, but would have been more effective as a mere story. Times in general amusing, and has one contribution, "Five Years in a Convent," by the late Mr. Grenville Murray, so clever that we hope it has not been left unfinished. London Society and the Argosy are well up to their usual mark.

Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin begin the year with spirit, most of their publications having new features of interest. Among the numerous periodicals issued by this firm are—The Magazine of Art, Popular Edition of Picturesque Europe, the Family Magazine, Universal History, Gleanings from Popular Authors, Picturesque America, British Ballads, Old and New London, Old and New Edinburgh, Science for All, Familiar Wild Flowers, Cookery, Book of the Dog, Royal Shakspeare, and Little Folks. Bishop Ashton Oxenden is contributing a series of papers to the Quiver under the general title of Helps to Private Devotion.

The Fashion Books include Le Follet, La Saison, Le Monde Elegant, World of Fashion, Ladies' Gazette of Fashion, Myra's Journal, Myra's Mid-Monthly, Weldon's Ladies' Journal and Household Journal, and Dictionary of Needlework.

The recent appearance of several antiquarian and bibliographical magazines is a favourable sign of the times. All are very creditably conducted. The most remarkable contribution to the Antiquary is a reprint of a curious English account of the Dutch, probably written about 1625, and full of the quaintest conceits. Some corrections of Haines's "Manual of Monumental Brasses" will be appreciated by antiquaries; and accounts of the Holkham bust of Thucydides and the funeral of the old Pretender are full of interest. The Bibliographer (of which we have received the second number only) and the Antiquarian Magazine are full of book lore, although the articles are rather short. In the former we notice particularly a full account of the Sunderland and Comerford sales; in the latter, papers on the Historical Manuscripts Commission and the Bibliography of Short-hand.

Other magazines and serial publications received are—Art and Letters, St. Nicholas, Aunt Judy's Magazine, Amateur Work, Universal Instructor, Illustrated History of the World, Our Little Ones, Men of Mark, Pathways of Palestine, Month, Review, Home, Science Gossip, Portfolio, Good Words, Leisure Hour, Dictionary of Needlework, St. James's, Burlington, and Churchman's Shilling Magazine; and monthly parts of All the Year Round, Household Words, Sunday at Home, Sunday Magazine, Golden Hours, Day of Rest, Gardeners' Magazine, Gardening Illustrated, Boy's Own Paper, and Girl's Own Paper. A new penny-weekly serial, a magazine of pure and select literature, entitled the Family World, has appeared.

1. Mr. Parnell's Brass Band.

2. Procession of manure-carts, going and returning.

3. Loading the manure-carts.

4. Mr. Corbet, M.P., making a speech.

THE STATE OF IRELAND: DEMONSTRATION ON MR. PARNE
FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPE

1. Ploughing the fifteen-acre field.

2. The effigy of the Last Landlord.

3. Land playing before Mr. Parnell's house.

4. Going home.

5. Selling refreshments.

ESTATE, AVONDALE, WICKLOW—FRIENDS PLOUGHING HIS LAND.

71ST, MR. A. O'KELLY.—SEE PAGE 18.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs. Robert Cocks and Co. have just published some pleasing songs, amongst which we may specify "Gyp," by Ciro Pinsuti, which is bright and cheerful; "At the Window," by J. L. Roeckel; and "Falling Leaves," by H. C. Banks; the two last-named being of a more pensive character.

"Bon Soir et Bon Jour, deux Esquisses pour Piano," by Cotsford Dick, are pretty and graceful, with the advantage of being easy.

From Novello, Ewer, and Co., the part-song "Farewell to the Old Year," by F. G. Webb, and an easy Anthem for Christmas, "There were Shepherds," by E. A. Sydenham, deserve favourable mention.

Messrs. Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co. have issued some agreeable vocal music. "Ave Maria," for voice and piano, by M. V. White, sustains the composer's reputation. "Welcome to our Festival," a part song, for ladies' or children's voices, by E. J. Hopkins, of a flowing and joyous character, will be welcome at this season; as will also a part-song entitled "The Avon to the Severn runs," by Miss Macrone, and "Eventide," a two-part song, for ladies' voices, by Theo. Marzials.

Under the title of "The Fan Series," Messrs. Lamborn Cocks are publishing favourite pianoforte pieces, by classical and modern authors. From the same firm we have a study for the pianoforte by W. H. Holmes, which will be found useful practice; a charming morceau for piano, "Chant du Pêcheur," by F. Berger; also several vocal compositions, among the most attractive of which are "Cupid's Curse," duet for tenor and soprano, with obligato accompaniment for clarinet or violin, by A. M. Smith (Mrs. Meadows White); "The Bird on the Window-Sill," and "Unawares," songs by Mrs. A. Goodve; "Mither," a song by F. E. L. Barnes; and "The Zephyr's Wooing," one of six songs by Florence May.

A new song by Berthold Tours is always welcome, and the one before us, entitled "The Abbey Door," will not disappoint the expectation. It is published by Messrs. Morley and Co., as is also an extremely pretty song, "Playmates," by Ciro Pinsuti.

The same firm send forth several other interesting songs, "Stranded" and "Growing Old," by H. J. Stark; and "A Gallant Heart" and "Forgive me, and Forget," by O. Barri; while the lovers of the humorous will enjoy "Winifred Pryce," a melodramatic cantata, by George Fox; and "Under a Mask," an operetta in one act, by E. Jones.

"Who Knows?" song, by F. H. Cowen, published by Metzler and Co., is replete with grace and refinement.

"Sabbath Recreations" is the title of a Collection of Sacred Airs for the Pianoforte, arranged by J. Pridham and published by Brewer and Co.

Among some vocal compositions of a flowing and melodious character published in the "Edizione Ricordi" we may mention the following:—"Non So," by P. M. Costa; "Altro Tempo," "Fuori la Porta," and others, by Giulio Benedict.

We can cordially recommend some very graceful pianoforte pieces, published by Messrs. Ashdown and Parry, "Loin de Toi," "Jeunesse d'Amour," "Viens à Moi," "Tyrolienne," and "Menuet Mélodique," by Victor Delacour, are effective, without being difficult. The same may be said of "Souvenir de Séville," "Con Amore," and "Sous le Balcon," by Paul Beaumont; the last-named being especially piquant and taking.

"My Lady," song, by Ciro Pinsuti, is in the composer's happiest vein; as is also his setting of Adelaide Procter's beautiful words, "Heaven and Earth." Both these songs are published by Messrs. Keppel and Co.; from whose firm we have a spirited song, called "The Two Recruits," by Ignace Gibsons; a light and joyous duet, for soprano and contralto, "In Sunny Spain," by Harriet Young; and several other songs. "The Vision," by W. Carter, being earnest and full of expression; "The Dawn of Love," and "Soon I shall be near Thee," by W. Bendall, agreeable and vocal; and "Somebody knows," by Madame Sainton-Dolby, lively and coquettish.

A group of new songs by Miss Philp will be found to possess those merits which have heretofore rendered her vocal compositions attractive to singers and hearers. They are respectively entitled, "Borne away" (words by Lady Charlotte Elliott), "Music" (words by M. Barr), "The Lover's Ride" (written by F. E. Weatherly), and "Somebody by" (words by E. L. Blanchard). In each of these the melody is pleasing and essentially vocal in character, the pianoforte accompaniment being appropriate and musician-like. The first three songs are in the sentimental style, the last named being of a piquant character. Messrs. Enoch and Sons publish the first of the set; Messrs. Boosey and Co., the second and third; and the International Musical, Dramatic, and Literary Association, the fourth.

"Andantino"—"Scherzetto." These are two charming pianoforte pieces, by Henri Ravina, classed, respectively, as his op. 84 and 85. The first is a melodious movement, full of charm and grace; the other being generally characterised by vivacious impulse, with a well-contrasted episode, a phrase of special beauty. Messrs. Schott are the publishers, as, also, of a series of pianoforte pieces by G. Sganibati, entitled "Fogli Volanti," consisting of eight numbers, each with a distinctive title, and all possessing marked individuality of character. From the same composer and publishers we have also two "Etudes de Concert" for the pianoforte, in bravura style—not only valuable as studies of mechanical difficulties, but also interesting in themselves—and a skilful transcription of an air by Gluck, arranged in three staves, by which means the melody is kept distinct from the bass and the intermediate florid passages.

SUBSCRIPTION TO THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

AT HOME.

Twelve months (including Christmas Number), £1 9s. 3d.
Six months, 14s. Christmas Half-Year, 15s. 3d.
Three months, 7s. Christmas Quarter, 8s. 3d.

Copies will be supplied direct from the Office to any part of the United Kingdom and the Channel Islands, for any period, at the rate of 6d. for each Number, paid in advance.

ABROAD.

The yearly subscription abroad is 36s. 4d. (on thin paper, 32s.), with the following exceptions:—

To Aden, Borneo, Ceylon, India, Java, Labuan, Mozambique Penang, Philippine Islands, Sarawak, Singapore, and Zanzibar, 41s. (thin paper, 34s.). To the Hawaiian Islands and Madagascar (except St. Mary), 45s. (on thin paper, 38s. 4d.).

Subscribers are specially advised to order the thick paper edition, the appearance of the engravings in the thin paper copies being greatly injured by the print at the back showing through.

Newspapers for foreign parts must be posted within eight days of the date of publication, irrespective of the departure of the mails.

Subscriptions must be paid in advance, direct to the Publishing Office, 196, Strand, in English money; by cheque crossed the Union Bank of London; or by Post-Office Order, payable at the East Strand Post Office, to George C. Leighton, of 196, Strand, London.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

C R O Q (Durham).—The position of a chess problem should be such as could possibly occur in a game played in the ordinary manner.

W P (Staines).—You have not stated the conditions of your problem clearly.

A S (Vincennes).—Your notation is perfectly intelligible. We shall be glad to hear from you regularly.

A G (Gozoano).—We are pleased to note that you did not abandon No. 1972. It puzzled many of our solvers besides yourself.

J T (Holmshurst).—Thanks for your note. Your problem shall not be forgotten.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1966 received from T M Manickum (Secunderabad); of Nos. 1969, 1970, and 1971 from John R Handley (Halifax, N.S.); of No. 1970 from Va (U.S.); of No. 1972 from A Galliard, D W (Guernsey), and W J Eggleston.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1973 received from D W (Guernsey), W Smith, Emile Frau, A Galliard, C R O Q, C Warburton, and W J Eggleston.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1974 received from D W (Guernsey), C S Wood, C T Salusbury, J H Robinson, J Tucker, W A Clarke, E Goodwyn, Emile Frau, C R O Q, Suddury (Suffolk), R Bygott, Alfred Schaub (Vienna), J E A (Dise), M and N, V H (Brussels), J Thureby, and W J Eggleston.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1975 received from H B, D W (Guernsey), Norman Rundelov, Harry Springthorpe, Shadrach, Ben Novis, E Casella (Paris), D W Kell, Joseph Alnoworth, S Lowndes, W Hillier, A Harper, R L Southwell, S Bullen, T H Holdron, H Blacklock, L Falcon (Antwerp), L Sharswood, Ernest Sharswood, A W Scrutton, Thomas Wymann, F Ferris, R Jessop, R Ingersoll, M O'Halloran, Jupiter Junior, M Tipping, G Seymour, W Dwyer, R Gray, H K Awdry, R T Kemp, C W Milson, C Darragh, J G Anstee, Dr F St J Thureby, W Hiddle, B H Wood, S Ferrant, H Reeve, Bosworth, Plevna, James Dobson, Smutch, R Tweedell, Otto Fuider (Ghent), N H Mullen, Suddury (Suffolk), A L S, and G S Oldfield.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1974.

WHITE. BLACK.
1. R to R 3rd P to K 6th
2. R to R sq P takes R (a Q, ch)
3. Q takes Q. Mate.

PROBLEM No. 1977.

By F. J. KELLNER (Vienna).

BLACK.

WHITE.
White to play, and mate in two moves.

INTERNATIONAL TOURNAMENT.

A circular has been issued announcing that an international tournament will be held at Vienna, commencing on May 10 next. We have pleasure in directing attention to this tourney and in setting forth in extenso the rules and regulations which are to govern it, for several reasons. In the first place, the special occasion it is designed to celebrate, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Vienna Club, one of the most distinguished in Europe, cannot fail to interest the chess world at large; and in the next, because the rules are, for the first time, expressly directed against the pernicious practice of "private arrangements" between the competitors. The clause declaring that the games shall be the property of the Vienna Club calls for a few words of comment. It is not likely that the Vienna Club designs to hoard these games among its archives, and it is possible, therefore, that at least some of them will be distributed to the press at home and abroad during the progress of the tourney. In the latter case, we may hope, without appearing to dispute the right of the Vienna Club to dispose of its own property, that the distribution will be impartial. Last year the official of an international tourney refused an application for some of the games, accompanied by an offer to pay the necessary expense of copying them, from one paper, while the cream of them was being published, week after week, in another published in the same city. The ground of refusal was, that the games were the property of the "Committee." There is good assurance that a repetition of this scandal is impossible in the names of the gentlemen who have been intrusted with the organisation and management of the proposed tourney at Vienna. These are Baron Ignaz Kolisch, August Kaula, Esq., and Dr. Franz Liharszik. The prizes are six in number—viz.,

1st prize, 5000f. in gold.	4th prize, 500f. in gold.
2nd " 2000f. "	5th " 300f. "
3rd " 1000f. "	6th " 200f. "

The general rules are as follow:—
1st. The entrance-fee is fixed at 100f. in gold.
2nd. Each competitor plays two games with each of the others, the first move alternating, and the winners of the largest number of games receive the prizes.

3rd. Drawn games score half a point to each of the two players.
4th. If two or more players score an equal number of games, they shall play amongst themselves for the respective prizes, two games, each with each. Should two or more players score again the same number, the prizes will be divided between them.

5th. The pairing of the competitors and the first move in the first game shall be fixed by lot before the commencement of the tourney.

6th. From the commencement of the tourney until the termination of the same each competitor must play daily (Sundays and holidays excepted), one game with the adversary allotted to him.

7th. Play to commence at ten in the morning and to be continued until two in the afternoon, at which hour a competitor may demand an adjournment not exceeding two hours' duration. The game must be resumed at four p.m. at the latest, and be continued, if not finished, until midnight. At that hour either of the players will be entitled to demand an adjournment, and the committee will then determine the time of its recommencement.

8th. The time limit is an hour to each player for fifteen moves; the time gained in one hour going to the credit of the player in succeeding hours.

9th. The player exceeding the time limit loses the game, which shall then be scored by the adversary.

10th. The clock of the player who does not attend at the fixed hour shall be set in motion, and after a delay of an hour, should he still be absent, the game shall be scored against him. Should neither player appear within the hour the game will be counted as lost for both.

11th. The games shall be the property of the Vienna Chess Club. The winner of each game, or the first player in a drawn game, shall deliver a copy of same within twenty-four hours of its termination to the person appointed by the committee to receive it. Noncompliance with this rule involves the loss of half a game.

12th. In case of an adjournment, the player whose turn it is to move shall deliver his next move in a sealed envelope to the person appointed by the committee to receive it. Consultations as well as analyses over the board during adjournments are strictly prohibited under the penalty of exclusion from the tournament.

13th. Each competitor is bound to play all the games with his whole strength. All private arrangements which may influence the final result of the tournament are strictly prohibited, under the penalty of exclusion from the tournament.

14th. The chess rules contained in the last edition of Bilguer's Handbuch are to govern the play in this tournament, with the addition that on the repetition of the same series of moves, three times, the adversary is at liberty to claim the game as drawn.

15th. All matters of dispute which may arise, and all cases not predetermined by the foregoing rules, will be decided, without appeal, by the committee appointed above.

The Boys' Illustrated News has a chess column in the first number of the New-Year. The programme outline in the introduction includes sketches of the history and progress of chess, lessons in the art of problem construction and problem solving, and kindred subjects. It is intended, and promises to be, a boys' chess column in a boys' newspaper.

Mr. W. R. Bland, of Duffield, near Derby, proposes to publish, early this year, a chessplayers' annual and chess club directory. It will contain articles, essays, and humorous sketches by popular chess writers, and also the prize problems of the British Association tourney of last year.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated June 9, 1869), with two codicils (dated Dec. 19, 1879, and Feb. 3, 1881), of Henry Sykes Thornton, of Battersea-rise and Birch-lane, the senior partner in the bank of Messrs. Williams, Deacon, and Co., who died on Nov. 29 last, was proved on the 31st ult. by his brother-in-law, William Dealtry, late of the Colonial Office, the personal estate being returned at £330,085 0s. 1d. The testator leaves his horses, carriages, household plate, books, pictures, and effects to his wife, Emily Thornton, with an immediate legacy of £25,000; and the residue of his property is left in trust to pay the income to his wife for life. At his wife's decease the whole of the property, with the two real estates at Battersea-rise, is to be divided in trust among his daughters and the children of his deceased son, the married daughters bringing into account the funds arising from or comprised in marriage settlements, and the son's children the real estates in Yorkshire and Derbyshire settled upon his marriage.

The will (dated Aug. 11, 1871), with two codicils (dated Nov. 27, 1877, and Oct. 21, 1881), of Mr. Mark Day, formerly of Dewsbury, and of Scarborough, Yorkshire, but late of Southport, Lancashire, who died on Nov. 12 last, was proved on the 17th ult. by George Day, the son, Robert Illingworth Critchley, and Albert Edwin Hick, the acting executors, the value of the personal estate amounting to nearly £70,000. The testator leaves to his wife, Mrs. Ann Day, £350 per annum for life, and the use of his household furniture, plate, and effects during life or widowhood; an annuity of £100 to his sister, Mrs. Sarah Thurmand, for life, and at her death to her husband, if he survive her, for his life; and the residue of his real and personal estate to his said son, his daughter Maria, and his grandson, Charles Arthur Rhodes (the son of his deceased daughter, Mary Jane), in equal shares.

The will (dated May 30, 1881) of Mr. William Henry Andrew Clark, late of No. 6, Leinster-gardens, Hyde Park, who died on Sept. 29 last at Dijon, in France, was proved on the 14th ult. by John William Watson and John Douglas Finney, the executors, the personal estate exceeding in value £66,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife, Mrs. Frances Amelia Clark, his furniture, pictures, plate, wines, household effects, horses and carriages; to his Excellency Francisco Ignacio Baron de Penedo, the Brazilian Minister to this country, £500 in remembrance of his confidence in the testator and of the testator's respect and regard for him; to his medical attendant, Francis Hirst, £500, in payment of his professional charges, and as an expression of his thanks and gratitude; to Mary Jane Barnton, many years in the service of his wife, to whom he owes thanks and obligation, £250; an annuity of £100 to his sister, Miss Dorothy Grey Clark; and £100 each to his three godchildren and to his two executors. The residue of his real and personal property is to be held upon trust for his wife for life; at her death a legacy of £3000 is to be paid to Mrs. Adeline Ellen Mary Lane; £2000 each to his godson Henry Stuart Salter, and his executor Mr. Watson; and the ultimate residue is to go as his wife shall appoint.

The will (dated March 14, 1874) of Mr. George Durham Thorpe, late of Riverhead, Sevenoaks, Kent, maltster, who died on Oct. 10 last, has been proved by Alfred Smith and Edwy Frank Thorpe, the nephews, the surviving executors, the personal estate amounting to over £59,000. The testator leaves his residence, with the malthouse, eight houses in Chipstead-road, Sevenoaks, and £3000, upon trust for his three daughters; three houses in Hartsland, Sevenoaks, to his son George Daniel; and legacies to his nephew, godson, executors, servants, and others. The residue of his property is to be divided between his four children.

The will (dated May 3, 1878) of Mr. James Campbell, late of No. 34, Lee Park, Blackheath, civil engineer, who died on Oct. 14 last, has been proved by George William Reed Wainwright and Max Henric Krook, the acting executors, the personal estate being over £48,000. The testator gives £350 to his executor, Mr. Wainwright; an annuity of £200 to Mrs. Mary Ellen Campbell, the widow of his late son, James Charles Campbell, so long as she shall remain unmarried; and the residue of his property on trust for his four children, Albert Johnstone Campbell, Mrs. Mary Rosalie Krook, Miss Caroline Campbell, and Miss Amelia Maud Campbell.

The will (dated Nov. 5, 1852) of Mr. John Guy, formerly of Hampton Wick, Middlesex, but late of Catton House, Norwich, solicitor, who died on Oct. 16 last, at Westow Hill, Norwich, has been proved by Mrs. Sarah Guy, the widow and sole executrix, to whom he gives, devises, and bequeaths all his real and personal property absolutely. The personal estate exceeds £43,000.

The will (dated June 25, 1878) of Mr. John Fitzpatrick, formerly of No. 9, Princes-square, Bayswater, but late of Cathay, Uxbridge-road, Ealing, who died on Nov. 11 last, was proved on the 8th ult. by Mrs. Annie Fitzpatrick, the widow and sole executrix, the personal estate exceeding £40,000. The testator leaves £250 upon trust for his niece, Margaret Lewis; £2500 upon trust for his nephew, James Hughes Lewis; and the residue of his real and personal estate in England or elsewhere to his wife.

The will (dated July 15, 1873), with a codicil (dated Oct. 30, 1874), of Mr. Edward Johnstone, of the Inner Temple, barrister-at-law, and of Dunsley Manor and Fulford Hall, who died at Worcester on Sept. 20 last, was proved on the 13th ult. by the Rev. Richard Johnstone, the nephew, and Miss Elizabeth Johnstone and Miss Catherine Laura Johnstone, the nieces, the acting executors, the value of the personal estate being above £8000. With the exception of a legacy to his landress, all testator's personal estate is distributed among his nephews and nieces. The testator settles all his freehold estates upon his nephew Lieutenant-Colonel James Johnstone, C.S.I., and he provides that if any person who under the entail becomes tenant for life of the said estates should enter into any banking, mining, trading, or commercial pursuits, or become a director of any joint-stock company, other than the Bank of England, the Bank of Ireland, or railway or canal companies, or acquire, other than by gift or bequest, any interest or share in any joint-stock company, except as aforesaid, he is to forfeit his interest in the said estates; and a similar penalty attaches if he does not get rid within twelve months of any such shares so given or bequeathed to him; or if in possession of any such shares, a director of any such company, or engaged in any such pursuits at the time when he becomes entitled to the said estates, does not within twelve months get rid of said shares, give up such pursuits, or resign such directorship. The deceased was one of the claimants to the dormant Marquisate of Annandale.

The will (dated May 24, 1880) of Miss Basset, late of Watermouth, Devon, who died on Nov. 21, 1881, was proved on Dec. 17, 1881, by her only sister, Mrs. Basset, sole executrix, to whom she gives all her property whatsoever, for her own sole absolute use and benefit.

Mr. Frank Wise, distiller, Cork, who died last week, is said to have left money and property behind him valued at £3,000,000 sterling. He was unmarried.

THE STATE OF IRELAND.—FROM SKETCHES BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST, MR. A. O'KELLY.

SEIZURE OF ARMS AND AMMUNITION IN DUBLIN: THE PRISONERS BEFORE THE MAGISTRATE.

THE PRISONERS IN THE POLICE CELL.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.

No. 2228.—VOL. LXXX.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1882.

WITH TWO SUPPLEMENTS } SIXPENCE.
By Post, 6^d.

TESTING THE GREAT BELL FOR ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL, AT MESSRS. TAYLOR AND SON'S FACTORY, LOUGHBOROUGH.—SEE PAGE 30.

BIRTHS.

On the 1st inst., at Holkham, the Countess of Leitrim, of a daughter.
On the 8th inst., at Lansdowne House, Berkeley-square, the Countess of Rosebery, of a son and heir.

MARRIAGES.

On Nov. 12, at St. Luke's, Bayswater, by the Rev. J. Knowles, Major Leslie Trevor Bishop, 2nd Punjab Cavalry, second son of General G. W. Bishop, Bengal Army, to Marie Durré Meadows, youngest daughter of the late Rev. J. Cullender Meadows.

On the 4th inst., at the parish church, St. Leonards-on-Sea, by the Rev. George Gregory Gardiner, M.A., Rector, Lieutenant-Colonel Henry Albert Harrison, late 21st Regiment, to Elizabeth, widow of the late James Carter Sharp, Esq.

DEATHS.

On the 8th inst., at No. 1, St. Mark's-square, London, Anne Hill, widow of Edwin Hill, late of Bruce Castle, Tottenham, in the 87th year of her age.

On Monday, the 2nd inst., in his 23rd year, of effusion on the brain, Koppel Rencau, late of Richmond branch of the London and County Banking Company, the much-loved (second) son of Robert Pearce Wootton Rencau, of Arundel-street, London, W.C.

On the 9th inst., at 29, Clement's-lane, Lombard-street, Captain Alexander Mitchell Sim, in his 94th year.

* * * The charge for the insertion of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, is Five Shillings for each announcement.

THE WEATHER.

RESULTS OF METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS AT THE
NEW OBSERVATORY OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY.
Lat. 51° 28' 6" N.; Long. 0° 18' 47" W. Height above Sea, 34 feet.

DAY.	DAILY MEANS OF					THERMOM.		WIND.		General Direction.	Movement in 24 hours, at 10 a.m. next morning.
	Barometer Corrected.	Temperature of the Air.	Dew Point.	Relative Humidity.	Amount of Cloud.	Maximum, read at 10 a.m.	Minimum, read at 10 p.m.	Direction.	Force.
Jan. 1	29.787	42.8	39.8	90	9	47.9	37.1	S. S.W. W. N.W.	262		0.210
2	29.680	48.8	43.2	89	10	50.6	36.0	SW.	539		0.240
3	29.344	42.2	35.5	79	4	51.0	37.1	SSW. W.S.W.	381		0.010
4	29.936	36.4	33.0	83	3	43.0	33.7	WSW. W.	150		0.100
5	29.616	47.7	44.8	90	9	52.8	37.6	SSW. W.S.W.	411		0.005
6	29.980	47.7	41.4	86	7	53.1	43.2	SW. W.S.W.	505		0.065
7	29.957	39.5	30.3	72	1	50.7	36.3	WSW. W.	371		0.415

The following are the readings of the meteorological instruments for the above days, in order, at ten o'clock a.m.:

Barometer (in inches) corrected	29.787	29.772	29.680	29.344	29.936	29.616	29.980	29.957
Temperature of Air	42.8	48.8	42.2	36.4	47.7	47.7	47.7	39.5
Temperature of Evaporation	42.8	48.8	42.2	36.4	47.7	47.7	47.7	39.5
Direction of Wind	S. S.W.	SW.	SSW.	WSW.	SSW.	SW.	SW.	WSW.

BRIGHTON.—EVERY SUNDAY.—A Cheap First-Class
Train from Victoria at 10.45 a.m., calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon.
A Pullman Drawing-room Car is run in the 10.45 a.m. Train from Victoria to Brighton, returning from Brighton on the 8.30 p.m. Train. Special Cheap Fare from Victoria, including Pullman Car, 1s. available by these Trains only.
Special Cheap Return Tickets by Pullman Limited Express every Sunday, from Victoria, 12.30 p.m., returning from Brighton by any Train the same day, including the Pullman Limited Express, at 9.30 p.m. Fare there and back, 1s.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM at BRIGHTON.—EVERY
SATURDAY, Cheap First-Class Train from Victoria at 10.55 and 11.50 a.m. and London Bridge at 9.30 a.m. and 12.0 noon, calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon.
Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea (including Admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavilion Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds), available to return by any Train the same day, except the Pullman Car Trains.

TICKETS and every information at the Brighton Company's West-End General Offices, 28, Regent-circus, Piccadilly, and 8, Grand Hotel-buildings, Trafalgar-square; also at the Victoria and London Bridge Stations.
(By order) J. P. KNIGHT, General Manager.

INMAN ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS.

LIVERPOOL TO NEW YORK.
City of Berlin... Thursday, Jan. 12. (City of Brussels)... Thursday, Jan. 26.
City of Paris... Tuesday, Jan. 17. (City of New York)... Thursday, Feb. 2.
Saloons and State Rooms amply fitted, with every modern comfort and convenience. Apply to THE INMAN STEAMSHIP COMPANY, Limited, 24, Water-street, Liverpool; A. H. JOHNSON, 9, rue de la Harpe, Paris; or to ELVES and ALLEN, 59, Cannon-street, London, E.C.

COVENT GARDEN THEATRE ROYAL.—Manager,
Mr. William Young.—EVERY EVENING, at Seven, A MIRACULOUS CURE; at 7.45, G. and Christmas Pantomime, LITTLE BO-PEEP, LITTLE BOY BLUE, AND THE LITTLE OLD WOMAN THAT LIVED IN A SHOE. Written and produced by William Young. Morning Performances, To-day (Saturday, Jan. 14), and every Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday.

LYCEUM.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. Henry
Irving. Every Evening, at Half-past Eight, James Albery's Comedy, TWO ROSES—Mr. Dwyer Grant, Mr. Irving; Our Mr. Jenkins, Mr. David James; Mr. Howe, Mr. Terrie; Mr. George Alexander; Miss Winifred Emery, Miss Helen Mathews, Mrs. Farnwell, At Half-past Seven, THE CAPTAIN OF THE WATCH—Messrs. Terrie, Andrews, Carter, Miss Louise Payne, and Miss Helen Mathews. Box-office (Mr. Hurst) open Ten to Five. Seats also booked by letter or telegram.

SANGERS' GRAND NATIONAL AMPHITHEATRE
(late Alhambra, Westminster-bridge-road).—THE GREAT CIRCUS COMPANY. The MENAGERIE and GORGEOUS PANTOMIME, LITTLE BEARD. The Spectacular display in the marriage scene does by far eclipse any production ever previously submitted to the public, the Company and Auxiliaries, numbering 500 People, 30 Magnificent Horses, 50 of the Smallest and Handsomest Ponies to be found in any Establishment, 100 of Lilliputian Army, 100 Circassian Ladies in the Extravagant Oriental Costumes, 50 Savages, 30 Staff-Beaters in attendance on Blue Beard, Selim, and his 250 followers in Gold and Silver Armour, 100 Ladies-in-Waiting upon Fatima, in Costumes composed solely of jewels, producing an effect perfectly bewildering; 12 Camels and Dromedaries, and the pure White Horses of the East. The Marriage Procession, 7 Bluebeard, in which will appear 20 Elephants, Zebras, Blue Beard, Fatima, with their numerous Attendants, seated in magnificent array upon the back of the monster elephant Ajax. There is nothing like it under the sun. Two Performances daily, at Two and Seven o'clock.
Proprietors and Managers, J. and G. SANGERS.

SANGERS' GRAND NATIONAL AMPHITHEATRE.
IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.—As a preventive to fire, which of late has been so lamentably prevalent in theatres, &c., the Proprietors have entirely dispensed with the use of gas in their large theatre, which is entirely illuminated, internally and externally, with the ELECTRIC LIGHT (Brush system), the use of which considerably improves the brilliancy of the magnificent Pantomime and Circus performance. No danger of fire or explosion.

MR. and MRS. GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.—
Managers, Messrs. Alfred Reed and Corney Grain.—ST. GEORGE'S HALL, Lambeth-place, AGES AGO, by W. S. Gilbert and Frederic Clay; MANTER TOMMY'S LITRATRICALS, A new Musical Sketch by Mr. Corney Grain, concluding with OUR DOLL'S HOUSE, by W. Vandier, Music by Gustaf Dick, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday at Eight. During Christmas Holidays, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday at Three. Admission, 1s., 2s.; Stalls, 3s. and 5s.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, PICCADILLY.

GREAT AND GLORIOUS TRIUMPH OF THE
MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS'
HOLIDAY ENTERTAINMENT.

Pronounced by the whole of the leading metropolitan journals
THE BEST EVER PRODUCED by this company.
The same magnificent programme will be repeated
MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and SATURDAY AFTERNOONS, at THREE and EVERY NIGHT at EIGHT.

Places can be secured at Austin's Ticket Office, St. James's Hall, one month in advance. No fees for booking. No charge for programmes. No fees of any description. Entrance, 5s.; Stalls, 3s.; Balcony, 2s.; Gallery, 1s.
Doors open for the Day Performances at 2.30.
Evening at 7.30.
Children under Twelve half price to Area and Stalls.

ST. JAMES'S GRAND HALL.

MR. FREDERICK BURGESS has the honour to announce his
SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL DAY AND NIGHT
MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC FETE

will take place on
TUESDAY, JAN. 31, 1882;
in the Afternoon at 2.30, and in the Evening at 7.30.
Upon which occasion he will have the valuable co-operation of nearly all
THE MOST DISTINGUISHED ARTISTS attached to the leading West-End Theatres.

THE MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS

will also give an
EXCEPTIONALLY FINE PROGRAMME
Tickets and Places may be secured of the Attendants in the Hall, and at Austin's, Uncovered Ticket Office, St. James's Hall, Daily from 9.30 a.m. until 7 p.m.
Entrance, 5s.; Stalls, 3s.; Balcony, 2s.; Gallery and Back Area, 1s.

MUSICAL UNION.—Thirty-Eighth Season.—M. Jules
LA SERRE, Director and Proprietor, begs to inform his friends and subscribers that the SEVENTH FETE will commence at ST. JAMES'S HALL, on TUESDAY, APRIL 18, to be continued on following dates:—Tuesday, May 9, 16, June 6, 13, 20, 27. Subscription for the Series, 22 s., received by Mr. Austin, St. James's Hall; Messrs. Chaplin, 30, New Bond-street; or Monsieur Lasserre, 124, New Bond-street, W.

INSTITUTE OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.
THE SIXTEENTH WINTER EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, from Ten till Six. Admission, 1s.; Catalogue, 6d.
Gallery, 53, Pall-mall, S.W. H. F. PHILLIPS, Secretary.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.—THE EXHIBITION OF
WORKS BY THE OLD MASTERS and by DECEASED MASTERS OF THE BRITISH SCHOOL is NOW OPEN. Admission (from Nine a.m. till Six p.m.), 1s. Catalogue, 6d.; or bound in cloth, with pencil, 1s. Season Tickets, 5s. At dusk the galleries are lighted by the electric light.

GROSVENOR GALLERY WINTER EXHIBITION.
The Winter Exhibition at the Grosvenor Gallery NOW OPEN, from Ten till Six, with a Collection of WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS and a COMPLETE COLLECTION OF THE WORKS OF G. F. WATTS, R.A., forming the first of a series of Annual Water Exhibitions illustrating the works of the most eminent living painters. Admission, 1s.; Season Tickets, 5s.

DORÉ'S GREAT WORKS.—"ECCE HOMO" ("Full of divine dignity,"—The Times) and "THE ASCENSION," "CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM," "CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM," with all his other Great Pictures.—DORÉ GALLERY, 36, New Bond-street. Daily, 10 to 6. 1s.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.—OPENING NIGHT,
SATURDAY, JAN. 14.—Richard Wagner's Grand Opera, LOHENGGRIN.
MONDAY, JAN. 16.—Wagner's FLYING DUTCHMAN. Tuesday, Jan. 17, Vincent Wallace's MAZPATAZ. Wednesday, Jan. 18, LOHENGGRIN. Thursday, Jan. 19, THE FLYING DUTCHMAN. Friday, Jan. 20, Ambrose Thomas's MIGNON. Saturday, Jan. 21, Balfe's BOHEMIAN GIRL.
Doors open at 7.30; Opera at Eight.
Subscription for the Season invited by, and seats for any performance may be obtained from, the principal Librarians and the Box Office of the Theatre from Ten till Five daily.

TITLEPAGE AND INDEX.

THE TITLEPAGE and INDEX to ENGRAVINGS OF VOLUME SEVENTY-NINE of THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS—from July to December, 1881—will form the Extra Supplement of next week's issue.

Office, 498, Strand, London.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1882.

The misgivings we expressed last week as to the political prospects of Europe have been only too speedily confirmed. Confident, apparently, in his personal popularity, the aged German potentate, in his capacity as King of Prussia, has issued a Royal Rescript announcing that, in accordance with what is called "the monarchical tradition of this country, whose development is based on the living and actual relations of its King to the people," the policy and acts of his Ministers are to be regarded as "royal and independent decisions." The sting of this ominous manifesto is to be found in the warning that all Government officials are expected to support the Sovereign's "Constitutional rights," hostility to which may entail dismissal. Although the Rescript refers only to the Prussian Landtag, it is meant specially to embrace the German Reichstag, where Prince Bismarck and the majority are now at direct issue. It is a renewal of the conflict of twenty years ago, when Prince Bismarck and his colleagues, on the plea of national peril, carried their scheme of army reorganisation in the teeth of the Prussian Parliament. At the present moment the question involved is one of domestic changes in the direction of State Socialism, which the Chancellor regards as necessary to the welfare of the German nation. Last November the country distinctly pronounced against what the Liberal party regard as dangerous nostrums, notwithstanding the great official pressure brought to bear upon the electors; and it is Prince Bismarck's special grievance not only that the working men rejected the Emperor's proposals for promoting their welfare, but that they were opposed by many officials—and in Germany their name is legion—who ought to have supported "the policy of the Government during election time."

To Englishmen, who remember that the same battle was fought and won by Parliament when George III. was King, the raising of such an issue in Germany, at the close of the nineteenth century, is a profound surprise. But the circumstances of the case are too peculiar to warrant any sanguine prediction of the ultimate result. The Germans live under an elaborate bureaucratic system of paternal government, and an oppressive military régime, which consumes the resources of the nation and has caused much distress and wholesale emigration. Prince Bismarck's remedy for these evils is more State regulation and a modification of Socialism. Both working men and their representatives in Parliament repudiate his proffered boons, as likely to benefit employers rather than artisans. A sagacious statesman would, under such circumstances, modify his plans in order to meet popular objections. But it is the rôle of the Prince to obtain the assistance of the Crown, by a violation of the spirit of the Constitution, with a view to force his measures upon an unwilling people, and to threaten the Legislature with a penal dissolution, and with the descent of the Emperor into the arena of party politics. The issue of this grave contest, in which the Crown Prince as well as the reigning Sovereign is involved, will be awaited with keen interest. It must end either in the vindication of constitutional government or in its virtual suppression. The first may be reconciled with the rights of the Crown; the last forebodes a not distant revolution or convulsion.

To all appearance, M. Gambetta is now master of both Chambers of the French Parliament. The Senatorial elections of last Sunday have resulted in a gain of twenty-four seats; or, if the loss sustained by the adherents of the Prime Minister's antagonist, M. Jules Simon, be added, of twenty-seven. With a majority of more than seventy in that assembly, the Government may possibly carry that scheme of constitutional revision which aims at curtailing the prerogatives of the Senate. This proposal, however, does not meet with general assent, and will probably be abandoned if M. Gambetta is really bent on replacing his present undistinguished colleagues by more responsible statesmen. The two Chambers reassembled on Tuesday. Though no business was entered upon, it is believed that the Premier will insist on the necessity of embodying the scrutin de liste in his revision scheme. M. Gambetta apparently desires to be virtual dictator, or to retire—aut César aut nullus; but as public opinion does not endorse his demand, and his resignation is discussed without apprehension, must we sorrowfully conclude that he has failed as a great statesman before he has been fairly tried?

The warning conveyed to the Khedive of Egypt and the Sultan, his Suzerain, in Lord Granville's November despatch, has been emphasised by the issue of a joint Note, in which the French and English Governments insist on the paramount importance of the maintenance of Prince Tewfik on the throne "under the conditions sanctioned by successive firmans of the Porte, which they have officially accepted, as being at present and in the future the only possible guarantee for the maintenance of order and the development of the general prosperity of the country, in which England and France are equally interested." This formal intimation from the two Powers conjointly may be regarded in the light of a second warning rendered necessary by the meeting of the Chamber of Delegates, which is adverse to foreign control, and by the machinations of the military party. There does not appear to be any present thought of a combined military and naval expedition, although the Note hints that France and England would not in an emergency shrink from such active intervention. It is greatly to be hoped that so perilous a policy will not be carried out. There are, however, signs that the crisis is passing away. Arabi Bey, the most dangerous of Egyptian malcontents, has lost caste among the troops by accepting a civil appointment; and it is pleasing to find Colonel Gordon, who has an intimate acquaintance with Egyptian affairs, vouching for the integrity, independence, and capacity of Cherif Pasha, the Khedive's chief Minister.

The protracted Cabinet meetings which have just been held are a topic of lively interest and ingenious speculation outside the Ministerial council-chamber. Party spirit is ready enough to suggest great differences between political colleagues who need so much consultation; but last week Mr. Bright informed his constituents that, as a matter of fact, there had been up to that date the greatest unanimity and confidence among the members of the Government. It is evident that a reform of the procedure of the House of Commons has been under consideration in Downing-street, and doubtless the adoption of the clôture as a means of terminating needless and obstructive discussions has come before the Cabinet, indorsed by the Speaker and other high officials of the House of Commons. The shortening of the process of the three readings of a bill, the abolition of the right of moving adjournments, and the limitation of questions on supply, are subordinate, but not unimportant, branches of the same subject. It is worthy of note that Lord Derby, who has now openly assumed the position of an Independent Liberal, in his recent weighty and judicial speech to the members of the Liverpool Reform Club, pronounced in favour of the clôture, "with such a provision as regards the majority as will prevent the rule being enforced except when it is really required." For the moment, the Conservative papers protest against the adoption of that drastic remedy, and it is thought that the leaders of the party share their opinions. Soon after the Session has opened these views may, however, become modified. If, as is too probable, the Parnellite members, in defiance of both sides of the House, and in a spirit of exasperation at the imprisonment of their leaders, should begin a course of obstruction more shameless and protracted than has yet been seen, Sir Stafford Northcote may, perhaps, be as ready as Mr. Gladstone to assent to any feasible scheme that will enable the majority to assert its rights against a handful of fanatics, whose avowed object is to arrest public business and bring Parliament into contempt.

A new light is thrown upon the importance of agriculture as bearing on national prosperity by the interesting letter of Mr. Robert Giffen to the President of the Board of Trade. That able statistician does not consider the losses owing to recent bad harvests to have been so serious as has been generally supposed. Reckoning the total agricultural disadvantage at £45,000,000 during these years as compared with the prosperous period of 1873-4, he estimates the decline of home production at only £18,000,000; the rest being due to higher rents and wages, restricted cultivation, and the fall of prices arising from foreign competition. Coincident with a large expansion of foreign trade and activity in our home industries, such losses are only moderately felt. On the whole, if Mr. Giffen's estimates are correct, the nation in general is now fairly prosperous, although the farming interest is greatly depressed, and landlords have had to submit to lower rents and restricted incomes.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

It is a very sad thing to be utterly desperate—to find that the little Pandora's box of Tunbridge Wells ware, privately presented to one many years since, and from which so many evils and distempers have issued, has disintegrated with the dry rot, and that even Hope has fallen through. Yes; I am, at this time of writing, altogether hopeless of being able to persuade those disastrous personages, the writers of political leading articles in the newspapers, to use an obvious English equivalent for the French word "Clôture."

"Clôture," the compass or circumference of a monastery. "Garder la Clôture, to keep one's monkly vow" (Guy Mige's Great French Dictionary, London, 1688). "Closure, see in Inclosure, Clôture" (same Dictionary). Clôture—inclosure, fence, seclusion of nuns, closing, close. Clôturer (jur. parliament), to close; Closure, clôture, fermeture (Roubaud's French and English Dictionary: London, Cassell, Petter, and Galpin, 1881); Closure, the act of shutting up (obstructive Members, attention!). That by which anything is closed. Conclusion, end. Authorities, Boyle and Pope. Bailey's (Universal Etymological Dictionary, edited by Nicol Scott, London, 1772. Closure, act of shutting or closing, end, conclusion (The Library Dictionary, W. Collins and Sons, London and Glasgow, 1871); and, finally, in Shakspeare; two references, "guilty closure of thy walls," "Richard III., Act iii. sc. 3; "Make a mutual closure of our house," "Titus Andronicus," Act v. sc. 3. I very seldom read "Titus Andronicus," and am indebted for this last reference to "Closure" to Mrs. Cowden Clarke's "Complete Concordance to Shakspeare" (London: Bickers, 1879).

The odious word clôture—I call it odious, since we have the sonorous English equivalent ready to our hand—is quoted in the St. James's Gazette of Jan. 9, some half a dozen times. There is a leading article entitled "The Clôture" in the World of this week. I have seen it quoted in the Standard and many other papers; and between this and the opening of Parliament the political leader writers, all over the country, will be "talking the leg off an iron pit," so to speak, about "la clôture;" and McJingo, that anti-ministerialist, will be vehemently declaring, at the annual dinner of the West Clodshire Constitutional Club, that "we don't want no Clottoor in this country."

"It is always considered," wrote Sydney Smith, "as a piece of impertinence in England, if a man with less than two or three thousand a year has any opinions at all on important subjects." There it is. If I had three thousand a year; if I were Professor Mouldymugg, F.R.S., or the Rev. Grymes Wapshott, D.D., or Mr. Nimblenepence, M.P., or even My Lord Tomnoddy, I might persuade people to listen to me on the matter of "closure" against "clôture." As it is, I am Nobody, and Hopeless. Indeed, I may esteem myself fortunate if I escape being branded as "sensational" in protesting against the attempted foisting on our language by the political leader-monger of the clumsily new-fangled word "clôture." The Italians have adopted the system; but they disdain to borrow the word from the French. In the latest Italian-French dictionary (Ferrari's) "clôture" is translated "l'ultima tornata d'un assemblea." In the latest English-Italian dictionary (Millhouse's) the equivalent for "closure" is given as "conclusioni," "termine," "fine."

Mem.: In the number of the St. James's Gazette, cited above, the sapient editor speaks of the demand for the "clôture" as a thing of yesterday. But, O wisest of men, are you aware that there was in "Parliamentary circles," nearly thirty years ago, a pretty brisk demand for some means of bringing wearisome Parliamentary debates to a close; and that the late M. Guizot was, during his exile in England, examined before a Parliamentary Committee as to the nature and practice of the "clôture" in the French Chambers.

Words; idle words. We have to thank the Charity Organisation Society for the invention of a brand new compound English word. What do you say to a "non-provident-able-bodied case"? I read of such a "case" in the report of a recent meeting of the beneficent institution in question. After this, what becomes of the briar-wood-pipe-smoking, bull-terrier-keeping, knifeboard-of-omnibus-patronising, music-hall-ditty-humming, Gaiety-restaurant young man; or the American "shinning-round-the-free-lunches, killikillick-chewing, cocktail-imbibing, draw-poker-playing, non-law-abiding scallawag-hoodlum cuss"? The non-provident-able-bodied "case" is, I gather from the Charity Organisation report, a labouring man able to work, but who has got no work to do. He has been "non-provident"—that is to say, he has neglected to become a Forester, an Odd Fellow, a Druid, or an Ancient Briton; to invest in Consols, or make deposits in the Post-Office Savings Bank. Away with the "non-provident-able-bodied case" to the workhouse! There let him crack stones and pick oakum.

Mem.: What strange liberties people with money take with their fellow-creatures who have no money! The observation has been made before.

A charming Christmas gift comes to me from Leipzig, in the form of a handsomely bound little tome, being the two-thousandth volume of the world-famed Tauchnitz Collection of British Authors. What a cheerful, kindly benefactor to English tourists abroad has been the Baron Bernard Christian von Tauchnitz. Since '41, I think, has the Tauchnitz series been in course of publication. "At that time there was no international copyright; but Herr Tauchnitz resolved to obtain the sanction of the authors, and to pay them for permission to include their productions in his series." Nobly has the House of Tauchnitz abided by its upright resolve. Most of the people of the pen have tasted the Tauchnitz blood, in the shape of handsome cheques; and my brethren and sisters will, perhaps, agree with me when I say that when, in the fullness of time, the Herr Baron is gathered to his fathers there could scarcely be a better epitaph for inscription on his mausoleum than the one (slightly altered) placed by Mr. Ruskin on the tomb of his father, who was a wine merchant. The Tauchnitz epitaph should read:—

Although a Publisher,
A Generous Man.

The two-thousandth Tauchnitz is Professor Morley's "English Literature in the Reign of Victoria: with a Glance at the Past;" but the charm of the book is the copious collection of facsimiles of the autographs of British and American authors who have had dealings with the House of Tauchnitz. Here shall you mark the bold feminine "fist" of the beautiful Countess of Blessington (1843), the flowing but magisterial "firma" of Miss M. E. Braddon (1866); the delicate Italian hand of "E. L. Bulwer" (1843); "Edward Bulwer Lytton" (1844), and the slightly tremulous "Lytton" (1868). Miss Rhoda Broughton "looms large" under the date of 1881; "B. Disraeli" writes a big, legal, engrossing-looking hand in 1844, and is big and bold, but deviates from the horizontal line in 1881; Mrs. Frances Cashel Hoey seems to have been studying German calligraphy in 1872, so narrowly parallel are her up and down strokes; "Ouida" is simply and gracefully legible in 1860; Caroline Norton flourishes too much in 1871; Charles Reade in 1856 bears down you like some great Spanish galleon; and the sign manual Katherine Saunders (1873) might be one of the signatures, so sternly resolute is it, to the death warrant of Charles the First. Thomas Carlyle is almost illegible in 1865; E. C. Grenville Murray is diplomatically clear in 1872; and W. M. Thackeray (1857)—in his cursive and oblique, not his horizontal Anglo-Greek character—would do honour to a copper-plate engraver of visiting cards. "Anne Thackeray" in 1875, developed into Anne Ritchie in 1879, quite overpowers, calligraphically, her illustrious sire.

Mem.: Volume One Thousand of the Tauchnitz Collection is the Authorised Version of the New Testament, with the introduction and various readings of Dr. Constantine Tischendorf, the discoverer (at the Convent of St. Catherine, on Mount Sinai, in 1844—59) of the famous Greek manuscript Testament, known as the "Codex Sinaiticus," now at St Petersburg. One other autograph, in volume Two Thousand, I should have mentioned. It is that of William Harrison Ainsworth. The remains of this most prolific of novelists were buried on Monday last at Kensal Green. In the list of mourners I find the names of Messrs. Routledge, the publishers, and of Mr. Edmund Yates.

The Hare-and-Kendal-Pinero-Comyns Carr-Thomas Hardy-squabble has had a side-issue in a letter accusing Mr. Pinero of having adapted his pretty little piece of "Daisy's Escape" from a French play called "La Petite Pluie," written by M. Pailleron. Then, in a letter to the Daily News from "An Occasional Cabbage Planter," I read the following:—

A tale of which the whole motive was derived from Scribe's little work, but of which the form and some of the details belonged to the writer, appeared upwards of twenty years ago in a largely-circulated periodical called the Welcome Guest. The idea, then, of a romantic girl eloping with a selfish and low-minded but attractive man, discovering her mistake, and profiting by a fortunate accident to escape from its consequences, has been in the literary "public domain" in England for the last twenty and in France for the last thirty or forty years.

This wrings my withers a little. The "tale" in question evidently refers to a story called (but I am not quite certain as to the exactness of the title) "An Extraordinary Passage in the Life of Mr. John Tidyshoes" which appeared in the Welcome Guest in 1860. It is entirely inaccurate to say, as the "Occasional Cabbage Planter" has said, that the "whole motive" of the "Tidyshoes" story was derived from "Scribe's little work," which I never saw and never heard of. In "Tidyshoes" a good but sillily romantic girl is lawfully married to a worthy but common-place young man. The newly wedded pair go down to an hotel at a place called Dumbledownderry to spend the honeymoon. The romantic bride quarrels with the bridegroom because he is "not like the Troubadours"; an ill-conditioned landlady, hearing the bride screaming and sobbing, suspects the case to be one of elopement and abduction, when the parents of the young people, who have followed them from London, appear on the scene and make things straight. As to "some of the details" belonging to me, the assertion is a sheer piece of spiteful impertinence, amusingly characteristic of the anonymous letter-writer. Who are the wonderful people who publish anonymous letters?

Mem.: I have a distinct remembrance of "Tidyshoes," as the story and the writer thereof were virulently abused at the time in an article called "Suburban Comedy" in the Saturday Review. The "Occasional Cabbage Planter" has, however, albeit unintentionally, done me a slight service. I bought the other day the complete works of Eugène Scribe in eight volumes. I shall endeavour to go right through them in the hope of discovering a tale, the "whole motive" of which is a misunderstanding between a married couple on their wedding day, because the romantic bride complains that the matter-of-fact bridegroom is "not like the Troubadours." I cannot help fancying that ere I have got half through Scribe I shall be in a position to go before the grand jury and indict half the dramatists of the past generation for larceny. The dramatists of the present generation are, of course, all as honest as Shippin and as honourable as Brutus.

Six hundred and seventy-five bills, so the Times' correspondent at Philadelphia telegraphs, were introduced into the House of Representatives at Washington on Monday last; making four thousand bills, thus far, introduced during the present Session of Congress. By the time these four thousand bills are passed, and receive the signature of President Arthur, the presiding Judge in the Guiteau case may possibly have finished his summing-up. About the time of the completion of the Isthmus of Panama Ship Canal, the jury may have brought their deliberations to a close; and at the Greek Kalends, perhaps, Guiteau will be hanged: unless, indeed, he be acquitted on the ground of insanity, and consigned to a lunatic asylum, established, ad hoc, by my ever-verdant friend, Mr. Phineas T. Barnum."

Only a very few weeks before the death, in March, 1875, of the lamented Sir Arthur Helps, that wise and good man wrote to me a powerful and touching letter asking me to do all I could in print to denounce and bring about the abrogation of two barbarous and detestable instruments of equine torture: the Bearing-Rein and the Gag-Bit. I told Sir Arthur, in reply, that I had already done what I could, and would continue to do more in this matter; but that if he wished real influence to be brought to bear on it "he must begin with the Duchesses"—that is to say, he must endeavour to persuade the great leaders of fashion whom he daily met to forbid their coachmen to use bearing-reins and gag-bits. He replied to me, laughingly, that he would follow my advice and "begin with the Duchesses" at once; but in a very short time the poor gentleman was no more.

Now, cast your eyes over the following letter, condensed from the Times of Wednesday:—

Sir,—I was witness yesterday of a convincing proof of the cruelty of tight bearing-reins on horses. Walking through Hyde Park, near Victoria-gate, I heard a horse coming behind me making a noise known as roaring. Looking back, I saw the animal drawing a brougham on the point of stopping, apparently unable to proceed, and about to fall. I ran up to assist, and found the bearing-rein so tight that it could not be got off the hook on the pad, and had to be unbuckled. The horse was then taken out of the brougham, and began to bleed from both nostrils. It gradually recovered, and was able to proceed on its journey to Paddington railway station. The poor animal was evidently a whistler—which means a contracted throat—and could not place its head in the position necessary for breathing most freely, and was nearly suffocated. If owners of horses would only consider how the animals suffer from having their heads kept for hours in one position, and that a continuously strained one, they would insist upon bearing-reins being dispensed with. They have only to watch the horses and they would see how they try to relieve the cramping tension by little upward jerks of their heads, the only movement the bearing-rein will permit, while the expression of their eyes would show conclusively that they are in pain.

I read in the Preface to "the works of Sydney Smith" (London, Longmans, 1839), "Lord Grey had not then taken off the bearing-rein from the English people as Sir Francis Head has now done from horses." I read in "Stonehenge's" "The Horse, in the Stable and the Field" (London, Routledge, 1873), p. 302, "bearing-reins are now seldom used in single-harness"; I read in Mr. Samuel Sidney's "Book of the Horse" (London, Cassell), pp. 498-9, "the result (of the gag-bit bearing-rein) is shown by degrees, in foaming, bleeding mouths, lolling tongues, roaring, spavins, and restiveness: to which less attention is paid because the greater number of carriage horses are jobbed; and jobmasters are at the mercy of the bad coachman." Finally, I am well acquainted with the heroic efforts to discourage the use of the bearing-rein which have been made by Mr. Edward Flower. It has all been, and will continue to be, in vain. Political leader-writers will continue to "talk the leg off an iron pot" about the "Clôture;" and the nobility and gentry will persist in riding behind horses mercilessly tortured for vanity and ostentation's sweet sake.

The following, which I cut from the New York Herald, is delicious, and will probably interest many of my lady readers:—

A reception-dress lately made in Paris for an American lady has a ruby satin ground strewn with velvet leaves in shaded tones of grey. The long plain skirt is edged with a bias drawn puff of ruby satin, and is bunched high at the back. The trimming at the wrists and hips is of broad bands of passementerie in ruby silk and grey chenille. Corsage high; sleeves long. But there is a slight error in the bill, technically speaking. "Bunched high at the back" is "quite too utterly" inelegant. The proper term is "camelled up." That I learned two years ago from a gentleman who drove a livery-stable barouche in Great Salt Lake City. He was originally from Camberwell, but had caught the Mormon craze, and emigrated to Utah. I fancy that he had grown somewhat weary of Mormonism, the decline and fall of which he predicted. "This 'll how it 'll be, Sir," he remarked. "The gals will do it. They're leavin' the old Mormon ways. Violet powder will do it. Crynoline will do it. The gals have taken to flouring their faces, and they camels up." He explained, in answer to my pressing inquiries, that a "camel" was what in England used to be called, I think, a "dress improver."

I learn that Chéret, the well-known French scene-painter, has just died in Paris, after a long and painful illness. It is stated that M. Chéret painted the Chenouéaux Gardens scene in Meyerbeer's opera of "Les Huguenots;" the Tartar scene in "Michael Strogoff," the Banks of the Nile in "Aida," and the views of "La Vendée" in "Quatre Vingt Treize." Chéret, the worthy compeer of Cambron and Ciceri, was a Knight of the Legion of Honour. In this country he would not be a Knight of anything, save perhaps of the Pastboard Quadrangle of St. Attenborough, or the Halved Cloak of St. Martin. The contemptuous neglect with which we treat and the wretched remuneration which we award to our theatrical scene-painters are a national disgrace to England.

My old friend, Mr. William J. Calcott, the well-known scenic artist, tells me that when M. Chéret was in London he visited his (Mr. Calcott's) studio, and told him how he made the Paris theatrical managers pay a handsome percentage on their receipts for "ideas" in the way of "startling effects," "dazzling transformations," and the like. This was precisely as it should have been. Chéret reproduced at the Cirque Impérial, Paris, Calcott's famous "Looking-Glass Scene" from the Alhambra; and during the run of the piece the English artist was paid a royalty of ten francs a night for his "idea."

Before this Journal comes into the hands of its accustomed readers "We" (remember the man who blows the organ bellows) shall have had grand doings at Covent Garden. Of the Poor School Children's enjoyment of the Pantomime of "Little Bo-Peep" on Thursday, the twelfth, I shall have something to say next week. I may just say here that the applications for admission have exceeded by some thousands the number of seats at "our" disposal.

G. A. S.

THE STATE OF IRELAND: THE WORKING OF THE LAND ACT.—SEE PAGE 30.

THE STATE OF IRELAND: THE LANDLORDS' MEETING AT THE EXHIBITION BUILDING, DUBLIN.

THE GREAT BELL FOR ST. PAUL'S

Our illustration shows the scene at the bell-foundry of Messrs. Taylor, at Loughborough, during the operation of testing the great bell which has been manufactured by that firm for St. Paul's Cathedral. Dr. Stainer, the organist of St. Paul's, speaks of it as follows in a letter recently published:—"Big Ben" sinks into comparative insignificance by the side of 'Great Paul,' now lying comfortably, mouth upwards, in the foundry of Mr. Taylor, of Loughborough. She (for I fear 'Great Paul,' as a bell, must, like all other bells, be considered feminine) will take her rank among the six or eight heaviest bells in Europe. At present her position cannot accurately be assigned, as she has not yet passed the scales; but it will probably lie between the great bell of Olmütz, weighing 17 tons 18 cwt., and that of Vienna (cast in 1711), weighing 17 tons 14 cwt. Three furnaces, one of which was specially built for the purpose, poured out more than 20 tons of molten metal into the gigantic mould of 'Great Paul,' and after writing off 43 cwt. as 'overplus' and 8 cwt. as 'waste,' this will leave 350 cwt. actually in the mould, or a weight of 17½ tons. This mass of metal, consisting of pure tin and copper in due proportions, was about 8½ hours in course of melting; it was placed in the furnaces in the afternoon of Wednesday, the 23rd of November, and was pronounced fit for use at half-past ten at night. Four minutes after the rush of molten metal the mould was full, and 'Great Paul' came into existence in one of those deep 'pits' so mysterious to lookers-on. It was not until the evening of Tuesday, the 29th, that the heat had sufficiently abated to allow the men to hoist out of the pit the mould and bell in their 'case.' This cast-iron 'case' had an all-important duty to perform; it had to resist the enormous strain of such a weight of metal when forcing itself impetuously into the mould; and so, in order to prevent a bursting asunder of the mould, it was made strong enough to bear a pressure of 200 tons. The upper portion of the case weighed 14 tons; the lower plate on which it rested, 7 tons. Including clamps and bolts, it is probable that the whole weight of this huge box was not far short of 25 tons. It may be easily imagined how great was the anxiety of all when the case was being taken to pieces, the clay mould broken up, and the mighty bell bit by bit exposed to view. The casting proved to be as smooth and delicate in surface and outline as if it had been a little 'treble' of 5 cwt. I have today, in conjunction with Mr. F. C. Penrose, been examining the bell and testing its tone. The 'skin' of the casting showed no flaw of any kind whatever; and when the tone was produced by swinging a heavy ball of iron against the sound-bow, a musical note boomed out which was impressive beyond description. The dimensions of the bell are as follow:—Height perpendicular (from lip to top of canons), 8 ft. 10 in.; diameter (from edge to edge of lip), 9 ft. 6½ in.; thickness (of middle of sound-bow) 8½ in., or about 1-13th of the diameter. The note is E flat, the upper partials B flat, E flat and G being just audible with the sonorous ground-tone. The general appearance of the bell is handsome, and all campanologists should, if able to get to Loughborough, take a walk round here, and also have an eye to the many valuable appliances which Mr. Taylor has brought together for the perfecting of his art. The cost of the bell and hoisting it into its place in the upper part of the north-west tower will be about £3000, a portion of which has already been contributed. It has been decided to use the bell for the first time on Easter Sunday next, when I shall be surprised if Londoners do not realise the fact that 'Great Paul' is worthy alike of their ancient city and splendid cathedral."

WORKING OF THE IRISH LAND ACT.

The Sketches presented on a page of this week's Illustrated London News, following those which have appeared before, set before the reader a series of lively and characteristic scenes, attending the work of the Sub-Commissioners under the Land Act, who are appointed to hear and determine applications for the judicial reduction of rents. Between five and six hundred cases of this description, throughout all Ireland, have already been adjudicated upon; but many thousands, and even tens of thousands, have been entered for trial; and it is hard to see by what exercise of diligence, or by what addition to the staff of Sub-Commissioners, this enormous mass of business can be satisfactorily dealt with. Appeals, moreover, against their decisions already pronounced, have been referred to the Chief Commissioners on circuit, in so great a multitude of instances that the amount of prospective litigation is rather alarming; but there is some probability that the general principles, with regard to the valuation of farms and the fixing of rents, which may be deliberately affirmed by the Land Court on appeal, will be held to rule great numbers of similar cases, and will induce the applicants or the respondents to withdraw from further contention. In the meantime, wherever the Sub-Commissioners go to pursue their judicial inquiries, they are assailed, as one might well expect, with all the coaxing and wheedling, the blarneying and deceiving arts and tricks of vulgar Irish ingenuity, some of which are visibly conspicuous in our illustrations. On the other hand, an imposing demonstration of a great class interest, with plausible claims and with considerable social power, has taken place at the Exhibition Palace in Dublin, which was briefly reported last week. The meeting of three thousand Irish landlords, on the Tuesday, presided over by the Duke of Abercorn, was addressed by the Marquis of Waterford, Lord Ardilaun, the Earl of Dartrey, Mr. Arthur Kavanagh, and other speakers, with all the more effect, since they forbore to attack the recent act of legislation, confining themselves to complaints of the manner in which it had been administered by the Sub-Commissioners. These noblemen and gentlemen, who believe that landed proprietors in Ireland have been unjustly treated, will certainly bring their case before both Houses of Parliament, and it will be entitled to a candid and patient examination. They made a very good show on the platform, on Tuesday week, and our Artist has rendered the aspect of their meeting with no abatement of its sober dignity. The questions that remain to be investigated are, first, whether the commutation of high nominal rents, which were seldom fully and punctually paid, for lower rents, judicially settled, which will in all probability be paid from year to year without abatement or delay, the tenant otherwise losing his entire interest, can be expected to be a permanent injury to the landlord; and secondly, whether the Irish landlords ought to receive pecuniary compensation at the expense of the British tax-payer. If both these questions should be answered in the negative, it may still be taken into consideration whether the temporary embarrassment of many landlords cannot be relieved by the purchase of their estates on equitable terms, where they are minded to sell, with a view to subdividing these lands among small proprietors, bound to repay the State by instalments within some thirty or thirty-five years. There is no question whatever of spoliation or confiscation; and Parliament will surely be disposed to make all the provision that can safely be undertaken for satisfying every just and reasonable claim.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

Paris, Tuesday, Jan. 10.

The social rejoicings of the week have not been confined to the favourites of fortune. In high society and in low, in the Faubourg Saint Germain and in the Faubourg Saint Antoine, Twelfth Night, the Feast of the Kings, has been celebrated with plenty of good cheer and gaiety, though not with a strict observance of the old traditions. In the old time the gâteau des rois was a round and flat short-cake, with a bean in it. The head of the family cut up the cake into as many portions as there were persons, not forgetting the absent and the poor. Then the youngest child disappeared under the table. "Faba, Domine, for whom?" said the head of the family. "Pour le bon Dieu," replied the child's voice from under the table. "Faba, Domine, for whom?" "For the absent one," replied the voice; and so on, until all were served. The person in whose portion of cake the bean was found was proclaimed King, and each time that he raised his glass all the company exclaimed, "The King drinks," and drank with him. Nowadays some of these details are considered too mediæval. The part of the "bon Dieu" has been pretty generally suppressed; the bean has been replaced by a little porcelain doll, the traditional galette by masterpieces of the confectioner's art, and the calmness of the well-behaved dinner-table is not disturbed by such cries as "The King drinks!" In some houses, instead of the cake being cut up in the old fashion, each guest received a little cake containing, in the place of the bean, some piece of jewellery, miniature silver statuettes of the personages of the Italian comedy, &c. At the table where I was invited "pour tirer les rois," the cake was cut up in the old fashion, and the child of the house called out the names of the guests. But some friend of the house conceived a really charming idea: at intervals of five or ten minutes during dinner a commissionaire rang at the bell, and presented a bouquet of rare flowers with a card. There arrived twelve bouquets and twelve cards from twelve kings, beginning with King Pharamond, and so on, through Clovis, Charlemagne, Saint Louis, Louis XIV., and Louis Philippe. The address of all the kings was Champs-Élysées.

With Twelfth Night the festivities of the New Year came to an end, and the series of official dinners and receptions and the period of Parliamentary activity begins over again. On Sunday the Senatorial elections resulted in a victory for the Republicans, as might have been anticipated. Sixty-six Republicans and thirteen Monarchists were elected, and the Republicans thus gained twenty-four seats in the Senate. The Right, which counted 120 members in the old Senate, is thus reduced to ninety-six. In the new Senate the permanent Republican majority will be about 160. The Irreconcilables are in great joy over the election of Major Labordère as senator for Paris. This officer sprang into notoriety for refusing to obey orders, the execution of which he believed would forward a coup d'état, supposed to be in preparation for May 16, 1876, when M. de Broglie and MacMahon were plotting the restoration of the Monarchy.

On Sunday the ultra-revolutionary party celebrated the anniversary of the death of Blanqui by placing wreaths upon his grave in Père La Chaise cemetery. The manifestation, however, led to regrettable incidents. A few days ago, in virtue of an old law of 1791, the Prefect of Police, M. Caméscasse, issued a decree prohibiting all kinds of processions in the streets of Paris. In spite of this decree, the Blanquistes, to the number of three or four hundred persons, met at a house in the Boulevard d'Italie, where Blanqui died, and formed a procession to march to the cemetery. The police reminded the leaders of the decree, and told them that, while they were at liberty to meet at the cemetery and do what they pleased over the grave, they were not at liberty to march to the cemetery in a body. The procession, nevertheless, started, and at four different points between the Boulevard d'Italie and the Bastille the police attempted to disperse the crowd. Finally, in the Rue de la Roquette the police drew their swords, and gained a kind of victory. In all, thirty-five persons were arrested, and five policemen seriously wounded. The prisoners were brought before the magistrates yesterday and this afternoon, and condemned to different terms of imprisonment for assaulting the police. Louise Michel, the grand citoyenne, as she is called, was condemned to fifteen days' imprisonment for insulting the police. Some blame the Prefect of Police for interfering with this harmless manifestation, and enabling a number of light-headed persons to "pose" as martyrs of liberty. M. Caméscasse, however, has the law on his side; and, until the Legislature ordains otherwise, it is his duty to carry it out. Undoubtedly the Blanquistes were only too glad to play at barricade practice and street fighting.

M. Charles Floquet, a prominent Republican deputy, has been appointed Prefect of the Seine, to succeed M. Hérod, deceased.

General Bataille died on Sunday last. He was born in 1831, served fifteen years in Africa, was colonel in the Crimea, and general in the Italian campaign. In 1870 he was wounded at the terrible battle of Rezonville and taken prisoner to Germany.

The Chamber of Deputies met this afternoon, the first time after the Christmas holidays. The sitting was taken up in the transaction of formal business and the election of officers.

"Serge Panine," a powerful comedy-drama in five acts, by M. Georges Ohnet, has been played with great success at the Gymnase. It is a dramatisation of a novel of the same name, which obtained a prize at the French Academy last year. To-night Madame Judic will make her entrée at the Variétés in a new comedy-vaudeville called "Lili."

Since New-Year's Day the weather here has been mild and spring-like. The sky is so clear, and the sun so bright, that one might almost imagine oneself at Nice, the more so as the carnival has begun, and masqueraders are to be met in the streets on ball nights. The first bal masqué of the season will take place at the Opera on Saturday, and from now until the end of March the Parisians will be rattling the traditional grelots de la folie.

Mr. J. E. Hodgson, R.A., has been elected librarian of the Royal Academy.

"Order is Heaven's first law, and this confessed"—the diaries issued by Messrs. Smith, of Queen-street, Cheapside, and by Messrs. Hudson and Kearns, of Southwark-street, must rank high with business men for the way they lend themselves to—nay, seem to enforce—methodical accuracy. Messrs. Smith's various diaries are sensible productions, in many sizes, to suit the library table, the counting-house, and the pocket; they are arranged in concise and convenient forms, contain much useful information, and the paper of which they are manufactured is good. Those issued by Messrs. Hudson and Kearns are not a whit behind in the varied requirements for official, commercial, and general use; while some are specially adapted for the use of architects, surveyors, and civil engineers. The printing and binding of all are good; and there is in them a great variety of information on subjects required to be known by business men. In all their diaries the index is a valuable feature.

PLAYHOUSES.

The Frenzy of Pantomime having calmed down a little, and the Christmas novelties at the "houses twain of Covent Garden and of Drury Lane" being fairly launched on what I hope will be an extended, and, financially, felicitous career, I have been able to devote some attention to what may be called the Rational Drama. So I went last Tuesday to the Lyceum to see Mr. James Albery's three-act comedy of "Two Roses," which is being played to crowded houses under exceptionally interesting circumstances: inasmuch as Mr. Henry Irving fills his original part of Mr. Digby Grant; and Mr. David James, specially engaged for the nonce, plays "Our" Mr. Jenkins. I have always wondered why Mr. Albery gave Jenkins this amusingly erroneous sobriquet. A commercial firm writing to a correspondent will naturally speak of its accredited employes as "our" Mr. Jenkins, "our" Mr. Smith, "our" Mr. Jones, and so forth; but, if I meet a commercial traveller, I do not address him as "our" Mr. Anything. The grocer or the linendraper from whom Mr. Jenkins solicits orders does not apostrophise him as "our;" and assuredly it would be sheer nonsense to do so. However, the catchword becomes diverting, and makes the audience laugh, which is all that is required. So it is with the "dear me!" of the worthy old solicitor, Mr. Furnival, who is always so desirous that his clients should nerve themselves by means of alcoholic stimulants to hear the best or the worst in the startling information which he is about to impart to them.

"Two Roses" is a curious play—very clever, very unequal; but its interest never flags; and it is one of the few plays which make you wish, when the curtain drops, that there had been more of it. I would have willingly sate out two more acts on Tuesday. But the playwright has acted judiciously, perhaps, in suddenly bringing his drama to a close with the discovery that not Digby Grant but blind Caleb Decie is the rightful heir to the Vassalwick Grange property and ten thousand a year. The audience are entitled to assume that blind Caleb will marry Ida; that sturdy Jack Wyatt will wed Lottie; and that the ineffable humbug Digby Grant, disestablished, disendowed, and thoroughly "bowed out," will henceforward subsist on the contemptuous charity of his wealthy son-in-law; but if any attempt had been made to satisfy the requirements of poetic justice, Digby Grant ought to have been kicked by somebody, if indeed he escaped being taken off the stage handcuffed by the traditional detective. Yet to have subjected this mean, cruel, conceited, selfish hypocrite to the punishment which he deserved—to overwhelm him with ignominy and disgrace before the eyes of his daughters, whom, after a fashion, the man really seems to love, would have been decidedly Bad Art, and would have been revolting to the better feelings of the audience. One does not mind, in "Martin Chuzzlewit," the public exposure and cudgelling of Pecksniff—with whom, by-the-way, Mr. Albery's Digby Grant has more than one point of contact—because Mercy Pecksniff was at the beginning of the story and Charity Pecksniff is throughout it as objectionable as the arch-humbug their father; but Lottie and Ida Grant are two of the sweetest, purest, most lovable girls ever evolved from a dramatist's imagination, and it would be a pity and a shame to harrow their feelings by the spectacle of a degraded and derided sire.

The character of Mr. Digby Grant, as placed by the playwright in the hands of the comedian, presents a number of borrowed components somewhat loosely welded together. We have something of Mr. Pecksniff, as aforesaid; a great deal more of Mr. Dorrit, in "Little Dorrit"; a considerable admixture of Mr. Turveydrop, in "Bleak House"; and even a portion of Mr. Affable Hawk and Jeremy Diddler: especially in the scene with Mrs. Cups, the too-confiding landlady, who begins by fiercely demanding to be paid the money which Digby Grant owes her, but is ultimately wheedled by that artful flatterer, which few women can withstand, into a good temper, and actually proposes to lend her debtor twenty pounds. What is this but the scene between Sir John Falstaff and Dame Quickly over again. She begins by arresting the fat knight for debt, and ends by hastening home to send him twenty nobles and cook a succulent supper for him. That which entitles Mr. Henry Irving to the highest praise is that this consummate artist has constructed out of the shreds and patches tacked together by Mr. Albery a compact, coherent, concrete character:—one which fixes itself at once on the mind, and fulfils a definite conception and idea. Pecksniff, Old Dorrit, Turveydrop, Affable Hawk, and Jeremy Diddler at once crumble into nothing. They are dismissed in powdery fragments like the mould of sand or plaster in which a bronze statue is cast; and are not thought of any more: while the sculptor with patient chisel and dextrously guided file proceeds to "tool" the details of his bronze—to smooth away asperities, to sharpen salient parts, to deepen low reliefs, to produce, at last, an entity complete and perfect in taste and artistic beauty. In this sense Mr. Irving can be said, without the slightest exaggeration, to have "created" the part of Digby Grant. As he interprets it, it bears in its minutest details the sculptor's mark—the touch of the original and virtually inimitable artist. The little nervous twitches and jerks in which Digby Grant indulges, his impatience of contradiction, his abjectness in poverty, his insolence in prosperity, his cowardice, his vanity, and above all his colossal selfishness, are all portrayed in a manner as distinctly original and as exclusively the creation of Henry Irving as were the idiosyncracies of Robson in "Medea" and the "Yellow Dwarf." More than one burlesque actor on our existing stage could play "Medea" to admiration, just as there are a few actors who could play Digby Grant tolerably; but the heroine so terrifically played by Frederick Robson will not cease to be remembered as "the" Medea, just as the Selfish Father of Henry Irving will not cease to be "the" Digby Grant.

Mr. David James's "Our" Mr. Jenkins is an entirely admirable performance. From his non-conforming point of view, the regenerate Mr. Jenkins necessarily reminds us both of Mawworm in the "Hypocrite" and of the Rev. Mr. Stiggins; and caricatures of sanctimoniousness, although they may elicit shouts of laughter from the unthinking, are usually offensive on the stage. Mr. David James, nevertheless, while consistently and irresistibly droll, never once transgressed the unwritten canons of good taste, and was, from first to last, an exquisitely funny, but faultlessly artistic, comedian. Mr. W. Terris fulfilled every requirement of comeliness and manly straightforwardness as the prince of "true lovers," Jack Wyatt; Mr. G. Alexander played blind Caleb Decie with great refinement and good feeling; the sisters Ida and Lottie Grant were charmingly rendered by Miss Helen Mathews and Miss Winifred Emery, respectively; Miss C. Ewell was a thoroughly experienced Mrs. Cups; and Miss Pouncefort an appreciatively humorous Mrs. Jenkins. Mr. Howe was unctuously good as the old solicitor, Mr. Furnival.

"Two Roses" was sumptuously mounted, and the entire performance may be pronounced faultless, and a rare intellectual treat to its auditors. It is curious to read at the end of the programme that the accomplished comedian, who sets every one of our risible muscles in motion in Digby Grant, will in good time be ready to harrow our feelings in "Romeo and Juliet," in which Miss Ellen Terry will make her reappearance in London.

Unwittingly I have done some slight injustice to a "Consortium." Now you should never be unjust to a "Consortium" any more than you should speak disrespectfully of the Equator, or disparage the Square of the Hypothenuse. In noticing the pantomime of "Robinson Crusoe" at Drury Lane I mentioned among the artists employed in executing the scenery a certain Brioschi. I found "Brioschi," tout court, in the play-bill and nothing more. I have since received a letter very politely worded, in excellent English, from the Herren Brioschi, Burghart, and Kautsky, "K. K. Hof. Theater Malerin Wien," pointing out that this Christmas was the first time of their having delivered work to English theatres; but that "Mr. Brioschi never works alone, but always in company with his two companions, Messrs. Burghart and Kautsky; so that Mr. Brioschi being mentioned alone is most likely to put the interior affairs of the 'Consortium' in a false light." Joyfully do I make the rectification asked for by the Imperial scenic artists of the "K. K. Hof. Theater, Vienna." Hail, Burghart! Hail, Kautsky. At the same time, while admitting the scenic talent of the "Consortium," and assuming that Mr. Augustus Harris had very excellent reasons for importing from Austria a part of the scenery for an English pantomime, it is not without a feeling of sadness that I recall more than one capable English scene-painter out of employment, and one extremely aged and formerly distinguished scenic artist who was until lately in circumstances bordering on actual indigence. G. A. S.

MUSIC.

Last week's "New-Year's" Festival at the Royal Albert Hall was a concert given for the benefit of Mr. W. Carter, whose well-trained choir contributed some very effective performances, among which was the excellent singing of the choristers in Mendelssohn's hymn, "Hear my prayer," his eight-part psalm, "Judge me, O God," the "Inflammatus" from Rossini's "Stabat Mater," and the "Miserere" from "Il Trovatore." The solo in the hymn was finely rendered by Miss A. Williams, as was that of the "Inflammatus" by Madame Marie Roze, who, with Mr. E. Lloyd, gave the solo portions in the extract from Verdi's opera with great effect. The artists named—Messdames Patey and M. Cummings, Signor Foli and Villa, and Mr. Hollins contributed to the vocal programme, which also included instrumental performances by Mr. Carter (pianoforte) and the band of the Scots Guards. The Burns anniversary is to be celebrated, under Mr. Carter's direction, on Jan. 25.

A concert was given last Saturday at the Albert Hall in aid of the sufferers by the fire at the Ring Theatre, Vienna, the date having been postponed from the previous Thursday. The performances were conducted by Herr Hans Richter, who came purposely from Vienna; and the concert included fine renderings of the English and Austrian National Anthems (the latter, Haydn's well-known "God Preserve the Emperor," skilfully adapted by Mr. F. H. Cowen); the Funeral March from Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, the whole of his C minor symphony; the prayer, quintet, and chorus from "Lohengrin," and the overture to "Tannhauser." The instrumentalists and choristers numbered about 1000 performers, and the effect of their combination, reinforced by the organ, as in the National Anthem, was especially grand. The soloists in Wagner's quintet were Messdames Marie Roze and Liebhart, Mr. B. McGuckin, Herr Friedmann, and Mr. E. Roberts. The lady first named also sang, with much success, the scena from "Der Freischütz;" a special impression was made by Madame Patey in Beethoven's fine song Englished as "Creation's Hymn;" Madame Valleria gave Mr. Cowen's graceful song, "Who knows," with good taste, and Madame Rose Hersee and Madame Liebhart were applauded respectively in Elizabeth's prayer from "Tannhauser" and Wallace's song (from "Lurline") "Sweet Spirit." Mr. B. McGuckin gave the recitative "Deeper and deeper still," and air, "Wait her, Angels," with genuine feeling, and Mr. Burgen proved that he is making progress by his delivery of "The Lord worketh wonders" (from Handel's "Judas Maccabeus"). Sir J. Benedict, Mr. F. H. Cowen, Mr. Kuhe, and Herr T. Frantzen (the able director of the chorus) shared the office of pianoforte accompanist. Dr. Stainer presided at the organ.

The Sacred Harmonic Society gave a fine performance of "Elijah" yesterday (Friday) week, when the chorus-singing again displayed the good results of its reorganisation since the removal of the society from Exeter Hall to St. James's Hall. The principal solos were well sung by Miss A. Williams, Madame Patey, Mr. McGuckin (in lieu of Mr. Maas, who was indisposed), and Mr. Santley; Misses Beebe and Hancock having rendered valuable co-operation, and Messrs. Carter, C. Henry, and De Lacy having assisted in the concerted pieces. Sir M. Costa conducted, and Mr. Willing was the organist, as usual. At the next concert, on Feb. 3, Handel's Coronation anthem, "Zadok the Priest," Gounod's "Messe Solennelle," and Beethoven's "Mount of Olives" will be performed.

The earliest specialty of the new year—the resumption of the Monday Popular concerts last week—has already been noticed by us. The afternoon performances associated therewith were resumed last Saturday, when Schumann's fine string quartet in A minor was excellently rendered by Herr Straus, Mr. L. Ries, M. Hollander, and Signor Piatti. The last-named artist played with great effect a sonata by Locatelli, and Miss Agnes Zimmermann was much applauded for her playing of an organ prelude and fugue by Bach in E minor (transcribed for the pianoforte), and two of the three sketches by Sterndale Bennett, "The Lake" and "The Fountain," these last having been the most satisfactory of the lady's performances. Mr. Santley has scarcely ever sung more finely than in his delivery of Handel's air "Nasci al bosco." Other items of the concert call for no comment.

The directors of the Coffee Music-Halls Company have, in consequence of the success of the experiment tried this winter at the Victoria Music-Hall, Waterloo-road, of giving ballad concerts and other entertainments at low prices, resolved to extend their operations in that direction, and with this object have appointed a committee of their own body to arrange concerts in various parts of London. It is proposed to hire, for certain fixed evenings in the week, the large halls which are well known to and frequented by the working-classes, and to provide first-class ballad singing, interspersed with carefully selected instrumental music and high-class recitations. The first concert of the new series was given at the Foresters' Hall, Clerkenwell, on Monday evening, to be followed each successive Monday by similar concerts.

The first of Mr. John Boosey's London Ballad Concerts of the new year took place on Wednesday afternoon, when the chief portion of the programme was devoted to songs by Mr. Arthur Sullivan, rendered by eminent vocalists. An Irish Ballad Concert is announced for next Wednesday evening.

A concert was given on Thursday evening at the Angell Town Institution in aid of St. Michael's Restoration Fund, by the Minnesingers, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Cottam, assisted by Mrs. Bridge, Miss Ellaby, Mr. Crosthwaite, and Mr. Edgar Preston. The Minnesingers, numbering twelve, are drawn from church choirs, and their services are offered for charitable objects at the bare cost of their travelling expenses. Information may be obtained of their hon. secretary, at Melbourne Lodge, Caldecote-hill, Aldenham, Herts.

Mr. G. R. Sims's "Frisolous Comedy," "Mother-in-Law," with which the Opéra Comique has just reopened, is preceded by a one-act operetta, entitled "Lovers' Knots," the text of which has been neatly adapted by Mr. Cunningham Bridgman, who has taken his subject from Haynes Bayly's farce "Tom Noddy's Secret." The music of the piece referred to is by Mr. W. Bendall, and is so lively and agreeable as to lead to the anticipation of more important productions from the same hand. The little piece referred to is well impersonated by Miss Emily Cross, Miss E. Maitland, and Messrs. R. Brough, R. Temple, and G. Temple.

The sixth London season of the Carl Rosa Opera Company opens at Her Majesty's Theatre this (Saturday) evening with "Lohengrin." Having already given a summary of the prospectus of the present series of performances, we can as yet only record the announcements for the opening night and for the following week. "The Flying Dutchman" is to be given on Monday and Thursday, "Maritima" on Tuesday, "Lohengrin" again on Wednesday evening and on Saturday morning (Jan. 21), "Mignon" on Friday, and "The Bohemian Girl" on Saturday evening.

Mr. Sims Reeves has announced the first of his series of operatic, national, and miscellaneous concerts—to be given at St. James's Hall—for Tuesday evening, Jan. 24.

Messrs. Schulz Curtius have organised a series of symphony concerts to be given at St. James's Hall during next winter, beginning on Oct. 21. High-class performances, under "a conductor of first eminence," are promised, at popular prices.

The Musical Union (instituted and successfully directed by Professor John Ella) will enter into its thirty-eighth season, at St. James's Hall, on Tuesday afternoon, April 18, under the direction of M. Lasserre, the eminent violoncellist, who succeeded Mr. Ella on his recent retirement.

Enthusiastic reports reach us from Berlin of the great success of Madame Albani there in her performance as Elsa in "Lohengrin." Those who remember her exquisite rendering of the character at our Royal Italian Opera House, will not be surprised at its reception in the German capital.

WORKS OF THE OLD MASTERS.

SECOND NOTICE.

Among the pictures previously little known which this exhibition has brought to light, Mr. A. R. Boughton Knight is the fortunate possessor of three or four of the most remarkable. We have already reviewed (though without stating the ownership) his "Holy Family" (?) (101), one of the most daringly original of even Rembrandt's works, in which a colossal shadow thrown upwards on the wall by one of the figures that intercepts the light of a candle is rendered with marvellous effect, and which was known to few, except through an engraving of it. On entering Gallery IV. (to which our preceding article brought us), the first picture, and the most important in the room, though hitherto "inedited," we believe, and almost unknown, is also the property of this gentleman. It is an "Adoration of the Shepherds," unquestionably by Mantegna, and is more characteristic of the imaginative originality and dignity of his invention, and is also richer in colour than the picture by "Mantegna," exhibited in the same room last year, though it is probably of earlier date. It must be an early, probably a very early work, for it reveals no influence of the antique, to which his later works testify; though his master, Squarcione, had, likely enough, at the date of the picture, say circa 1450, already introduced classical models to his scholars in his studio at Padua. It is hard and severe of course, partaking in this respect, as also in the impossible elements of the landscape, of the character of trans-Alpine art, as did other contemporary works of North Italy—due probably to contact with Northern painters in their wanderings. But the wealth of inventive detail, the deep reverential feeling, and the charming episode of the little grey cherubs and scarlet seraphs that flutter and nestle about the Virgin, as she kneels in adoration over the Infant Christ, are Mantegna's, and Mantegna's alone. Next is a very beautiful and carefully elaborated "Virgin and St. Joseph in Adoration," by Lorenzo Costa, probably of his later time, for the influence of his friend Francia, at Bologna, seems apparent. The naked Infant, lying at full-length, is lovely—exquisitely drawn and modelled in a soft transparent tone. Above is a circular panel or "tondo" of "The Virgin and Child, and Angels," ascribed to Domenico Ghirlandaio; the types and sentiment resemble those of Botticelli. This may be compared with another circular picture of the "Virgin, Child, and St. John" (196), attributed to Botticelli, but not characteristic of him or his best qualities. This last is painted in simple distemper or water-colours, not the usual tempera, for the egg medium of the tempera painters would prevent the deadness of surface observable here, without the addition of a coat of varnish. Nos. 190 and 191, lent by Sir Frederick Leighton, are historically interesting as illustrating two of the very early masters of the Siennese school (the school to which the Florentine Vasari did but scant justice)—namely, Berna, and Sano di Pietra, Da Siena. An "Adoration of the Magi" (193), by Quentin Matsys, is highly expressive and dramatic, despite the almost hideous realism of the three kings and their suites. "Atalanta's Race" (195) is one of the paintings which "Botticelli," his followers, and contemporaries painted for the decoration of marriage chests or cassoni. "Christ Mocked," attributed, with a conjectural query, to Holbein, is an unfinished work with dramatic strongly-marked heads, interesting as showing the method of the painter, but not sufficiently advanced to decide its authorship. The Salaino (200) we have already noticed incidentally.

But of far more interest, at least to artists, than the conjectural Holbein above named is the "Sacrifice of Isaac," unquestionably by Andrea del Sarto—from the fact that it is so little finished that the whole technical procedure of one of the most consummate masters of oil-painting is clearly revealed. Let the modern artist take comfort; there is no secret here. And be sure the supposititious "Venetian Secret" was no secret at all, unless it were the habit of master and pupil working together in one direction till they won the qualities and characteristics that distinguish a school from a mere mob of artists each following his own devices. Andrea del Sarto's unfinished picture is on panel, which was prepared with a thick coating of gesso, probably rendered but little, if at all, absorbent, upon which therefore the brush could "travel" lissoily; and on that ground no couch of white paint, such as many English artists apply to their canvas to begin with, was necessary. Upon the gesso the design was sketched with black chalk in this instance. Then the artist went to work getting his general effect, in brown, simply; using oil only, or a much diluted oleo-resinous medium; for the handling is extremely free, and parts of the gesso are scarcely covered. As he proceeded, he enforced the shadows to the requisite strength, adding colour sparingly, and reserved the impasto of the lights for the finishing. The method is, we repeat, simplicity itself. Nevertheless, there are other methods of oil painting equally legitimate, which yield other qualities than Andrea sought for. The mischief nowadays is that no one approved system is carried continuously and collectively to perfection by a handed succession of artists. Panini's picture of the "Piazza Navona, Rome," on the occasion of a fête designed and arranged by the artist himself, is a marvel of skilful elaboration, alike as regards the architectural painting by which he is best known, and the innumerable figures, many of them portraits (including those of the first Pretender and his two young sons), which are realised with equal delicacy and precision. A small bust-portrait of an ill-favoured "Old Lady," attributed, obviously in error, to Lucas Cranach, has been given to Albert Durer, or Holbein; but, though the full, warm tone has something in common with both, the network of wrinkles over the old face has a mechanical regularity which we do not see in nature, and which would hardly have been so rendered by either of those accurate observers. "The Raising of the Cross" (220) is most valuable as the original sketch for the Altarpiece of Antwerp by Rubens, who is almost greater in his sketches and studies than in his finished pictures. Perhaps there is no more magistral work of its kind in the world than this. The whole ordering of the complex triptych composition seems to have come by inspiration; the whole realisation of the design as by instinct—without effort, without hesitation, without correction. Such a tour de force is positively astounding. Holbein's portrait of Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex, the ill-fated secretary to Cardinal Wolsey, should have been on "the line." Although it has suffered by restoration, it is a genuine work of the master, to say nothing of the peculiar interest of the subject. "The Miseries of War" (229) is one of the finest Philip Wouwermaans that we have seen—full of incident, and of most finished and accomplished execution. "Landscape with Cattle," by Adrian van de Velde; and "The Scalded Finger," by the rarer painter, Peter van Shingelandt, are, respectively, capital small examples. "Rembrandt's Cook" we noticed in the last article in speaking generally of the master's works. Of the courtly grace, the rich colouring, and the sprightly yet dainty touch of Watteau, we can form some idea from the "Architecture and Figures" by him.

The next gallery, No. V., the last occupied for the exhibition, is, with the exception of Canaletto's "Building of Westminster Bridge" (261), a curious memorial of old London, appropriated exclusively to works by British artists. Resuming the convenient order of the catalogue, we pause before "The Trial of Queen Katharine," from Shakspeare's "King Henry VIII.," the masterpiece of Harlow, painted not long before he was cut off in his prime, and well known by the engraving. Though betraying the influence of Lawrence, not to its advantage, it is well composed and painted. It is known also as "The Kemble Family," from the principal personages represented being portraits of that family: Mrs. Siddons is the Queen, Thomas Kemble Cardinal Wolsey, and Stephen, the King. William Collins's "Cloveley" shows the sweet English feeling of the painter, and here he had pretty well corrected the faulty draughtsmanship of his figures, which is so great an eyesore in "The Fisherman's Farewell" (No. 21 in Gallery I.). Richard Wilson's landscape composition (249) has a broad, serene, limpid glow of evening light that will well sustain comparison with Claude or Turner. Hilton's "Scene from 'Comus,'" though conventional, displays no mean power of composition. A humorous school interior by Wilkie, is a very masterly sketch of his middle time. The statement in the catalogue that it was painted in 1841, is incorrect, as the internal evidence shows; and, besides, Wilkie was travelling, and died abroad that year. The picture was painted before 1825, the year of his first journey abroad. The full-length Kilmorey family portraits by Gainsborough, at the end of the room, have already been reviewed by us. The portrait of Queen Charlotte (268) is a fair sample of the careful common-place routine mannerism of Zoffany, the favourite portraitist of George III. Morland's "Wreckers" is a large sample of his facile but shallow art. We have passed two fine portraits in this room by Hogarth, admirable for their palpable honesty and veracity—those of the second Earl of Macclesfield (244) and the father of Sir William Jones (248). But the last item in this year's gathering, the family group of the Graham children, from Lord Normanton's collection, displays the power of this father of English Art on a more extended scale. The group consists of a boy playing a musical box, a girl holding her dress as in the act of dancing to the measure, another girl holding a baby; and, not forgetting, a wonderfully painted cat climbing the back of a chair to reach a goldfinch that hangs suspended in a cage. The spirit of the handling is in accord with the sprightliness of the motif; the freedom, breadth, and decision of the touch are extraordinary. Nor does the colouring, warm and transparent as it is, leave anything to desire. To think that the author of such an excellent piece of portraiture as this was—however fortunate for the honour of our school and the delight of all posterity—obliged to resort for a livelihood to painting genre pictures and engraving!

THE BOOK TRADE IN 1881.

The Publishers' Circular, issued by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co., gives the customary table of books issued during the past twelve months. There was a slight decrease in the number of books published during the year, these having been about 300 fewer than in 1880. The diminution is probably to be explained by the great development in the periodical press. The table is divided into fourteen classes, in which the numbers of new books and editions are as follows:—Theology, sermons, biblical, &c., 945; educational, classical, and philological, 662; juvenile works and tales, 500; novels, tales, and other fiction, 674; law, jurisprudence, &c., 133; political and social economy, trade and commerce, 162; arts, sciences, and illustrated works, 452; voyages, travels, geographical research, 291; history, biography, &c., 437; poetry and the drama, 148; year books and serials in volumes, 339; medicine, surgery, &c., 164; belles lettres, essays, monographs, &c., 247; miscellaneous, including pamphlets, not sermons, 232. This gives a total of 5406 (4110 new books and 1296 new editions), against 5708 in 1880.

Dod's Peerage, Baronage, and Knightage for 1882, now in its forty-second year of publication, has just been published. While condensation is vigorously carried out, nothing of real importance appears to be omitted, and the work contains all the information usually looked for in connection with the subjects dealt with. In the present issue, in addition to numerous creations and alterations of the past year, the old matter has been carefully revised, and some slight errors caused by lapse of time or otherwise have been put right.

Country Woman.

Shoemaker.

Imperial Courier.

Peasants' Deputation at the Imperial Palace.
Recruits.

LIFE IN RUSSIA.—SEE PAGE 34.

THE BLIND MINSTREL AND HIS DAUGHTER.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

SKETCHES OF LIFE IN RUSSIA.

The population of that vast Empire, covering the greater part of Eastern Europe and Northern Asia, whose political destinies now seem to be approaching a critical change, consists of diverse classes and races, if not of different castes. In the European provinces, not to speak of the Asiatic, there are between the Dnieper and the Volga, masses of Great Russians, Little Russians of the Ukraine, Red Russians of Podolia and Volhynia, White Russians, mixed with Poles and Lithuanians, the Letts of Courland and Livonia, the Finns, and many Tartars, besides the Germans and Jews who carry on much of the trade in Russian towns. A large majority of these races, however, speak the Russian language; but their occupations and conditions of life are commonly fixed by hereditary associations, having almost the binding force of caste institutions. Manufactures, except such as belong to ordinary female industry in a rustic household, are confined to a few large towns, but have rapidly increased of late years, more especially those of cotton and woollen goods, in St. Petersburg, Moscow, Kiev, and other cities, and that of iron, at Kharkov and Perm. Yet the bulk of the Russian population is composed of peasants and mere unskilled labourers, or those engaged in the humblest sort of handicraft for village use; such as the shoemaker whose rude bench and simple tools, guarded by a dignified cock, are shown in one of the Sketches engraved. These country folk, indeed, possessing communal and individual rights and substantial agrarian privileges, since they were released from the bondage of feudal serfdom by the act of Alexander II. twenty years ago, do not appear to be in a state of abject poverty. That good woman, about to go up the step-ladder to the hayloft of her stable, is the owner of horses and cattle, and of a valuable piece of land; her dress, profusely braided, and the fashion of her cap, betoken that she is somebody in village estimation. The peasants make an awkward figure, no doubt, when they come up to St. Petersburg in a municipal deputation, and stand in a gilded saloon of the Imperial Palace; their spokesman, arrayed in the tarnished finery of an old Court suit, accosting the Emperor with profound homage, but with dubious faculty of expression. But they are pretty well aware of their legal immunities, and are rather more inclined to trust the goodwill of the Milostiviy Gospodar, their most gracious Lord, than the justice of neighbouring seigneurs. It is an awful responsibility for the Emperor of Russia; and not even a million of soldiers, the raw material of which is seen in the "recruits" at the bottom of our page, can suffice to ensure the perpetuity of an autocratic Government. Far beyond cities and railways, a thousand miles, or several thousand miles away, traversing the breadth of two immense Continents, the Imperial post-cart, with its three swift ponies, is still galloping from stage to stage. Where will it finally stop?

THE BLIND MINSTREL AND HIS DAUGHTER.

A romantic interest, since the time of Homer, if not before, has always belonged to the figure of a blind minstrel, or singer, who may be a poet; and, if he be accompanied by a young girl, with any sort of musical instrument—harp, guitar, or accordion—we have sixpence ready for the tuneful couple, wherever we chance to meet them. Fancy has great power, in certain moods, to exalt the seeming character of strangers thus unexpectedly encountered; and supposing, as we charitably may, that the maiden is really this old man's dutiful child, our sympathies are touched by their situation, in the wandering life that they lead. We imagine their dependence on one another, and their fidelity to each other; till we wonder how the minstrel would fare by himself, if she were seized and carried away by the minions of a wicked Baron to yonder Castle on the hill. Would she continue to play the accordion, at the window of her cell high up in the western tower? And then, would the blind old father hear it, groping at night in the most around the Castle walls, in peril of being shot with an arquebuss; and so would he respond with the vocal part, singing a plaintive ditty of their distant native land? Would they speak to one another, or pass letters up and down with a string, and devise means for her escape with a rope-ladder? Would they consent to be aided by the gallant and chivalrous Knight ("which his name perhaps is X") who accosted them but yesterday, and who generously gave them sixpence? Ah, and then, wouldn't the gallant Knight have a regular set-to with the wicked Baron, and stick him through with a lance or a rapier, and give his carcass to the rats and mice and black-beetles? And wouldn't we take possession of the Castle, and get it repaired, decorated, and furnished in the most fashionable style, that we might dwell there in the height of chivalry, taking to wife the modest lovely musician, who would prove to be of noble birth? Her father, no longer a poor out-cast and peripatetic vocalist, would be reprieved from exile, and would be restored to his ancestral title and estates. He is the patriotic Count Bawler, of Middle-pumpkin, whose unjust and tyrannical Prince, since deceased, drove him out of the country, having first put out his eyes with red-hot crochet-needles. The romance is brought to a happy and glorious consummation in about five minutes, while the dirty old impostor finishes his twaddling performance. But "here, my girl," we say, "I'll give you twopence more; and I hope your shoes are all right, or it will be cold for your feet, sitting there so long in the snow."

Mr. O'Donovan, the Daily News correspondent in Central Asia, has arrived in London, and is now negotiating for the publication of his book.

Mr. F. M. Hodson, of the Telegraphs Department, General Post Office, who has been appointed Postmaster-General of British Guiana, has been presented by the Post-Office officials with a handsome silver coffee service as a token of their regard.

Mr. Gladstone and his eldest son were present last Sunday evening at the Tabernacle, and occupied Mrs. Spurgeon's pew. Mr. Gladstone shook hands heartily with the deacons and elders present, and expressed himself delighted with the service. The visit was strictly private, and Mr. Gladstone, with his son, walked home to Downing-street.

The annual show of the choicest varieties of pigeons by the National Peristeric Society was held at the Crystal Palace on Tuesday and Wednesday. The excellence of this exhibition is guaranteed by the fact that it is a show by fanciers for fanciers—a comparative rather than a competitive show—at which those interested and practically engaged in the development of fancy pigeons annually meet to criticise and compare each other's work.

Many serious accidents are reported from Scotland as having resulted from the heavy gale at the close of last week. Several vessels were driven ashore and wrecked, and the tide rose to an unusual height, flooding the streets at some of the seaport towns. Great damage was done to property, and there was some loss of life. On Monday night another gale from the west swept over the central and northern districts of Scotland, with only a little less severity.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

ITALY.

Monday being the anniversary of the death of King Victor Emmanuel, the Roman municipality and the working-men's associations, accompanied by 2950 army veterans who had arrived expressly for the occasion from all parts of the peninsula, marched in procession, with bands and banners, through the principal streets of the city, to the Pantheon, where funeral wreaths were deposited on the late King's tomb, in honour of the man who made Rome the capital.

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.

The King and Queen of Spain left Madrid last Monday afternoon on a visit of ten days to the King and Queen of Portugal. Their Majesties are accompanied by several Ministers, in order that a conference may take place at Lisbon upon the commercial relations of the two countries. A cordial welcome was extended at Lisbon to their Majesties, who arrived at the Portuguese capital on Tuesday. A state dinner was given at the Royal Palace in the evening.

The Arts Exhibition at Lisbon is very successful, and the objects sent from the South Kensington Museum are much admired.

HOLLAND.

The University of Amsterdam, formerly called the Athenæum, on Monday celebrated the 250th anniversary of its foundation with great rejoicings. Congratulations were received from many foreign Academies. The Home Minister and numerous distinguished guests were present, and were welcomed in a warm speech by the Rector Magnificus, Professor Tilanus. In an historical retrospect Professor Jorissen referred to the great scholars who had formerly been connected with the institution. The celebration, which took place in the hall of the Zoological Gardens, was a great success.

GERMANY.

The Berlin Official Gazette published a Rescript by the Emperor William last Saturday, countersigned by Prince Bismarck, in which his Majesty expresses his views as to his rights and powers under the Prussian Constitution. He declares that no doubt shall be allowed to attach to the right of himself or his successors to personally direct the policy of his Government, and that a contradiction shall invariably be given to the assumption that his official acts are in any way deprived of the nature of independent Royal decisions. He does not wish to restrict the freedom of elections, but he expects all officials to hold aloof from all agitation against his Government. At Berlin this decree is the chief topic.

The German Parliament reassembled on Monday. A question by an Ultramontane deputy in respect to the Factory Laws afforded Prince Bismarck the opportunity to refer to the legislation which the Emperor desired in the interests of the working classes, but which those classes had seemed to repel by the result of the elections. The working man, he said, might be relieved from taxation if the tobacco monopoly were adopted. Herr Richter reproached the Chancellor with being the drag on the legislative coach, and the advocate of the employer and not of the poor man, who had nothing to hope from him. Prince Bismarck left the House while Herr Richter was speaking.

The Prussian Diet opens to-day (Saturday); and it is stated that, to avoid simultaneous meetings, those Houses will be at once prorogued for a week or two.

In the Lower House of the Bavarian Diet on the 4th inst. a motion was made for the abolition of the Legation in Berlin, in consequence of the affront said to have been placed by Prince Bismarck upon the former Bavarian Envoy. Explanations of the incident were tendered by the Minister for Foreign Affairs, and the motion was rejected.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

At the great Court Ball which took place at the Hofburg on Monday night the guests included the entire Corps Diplomatique of Vienna, more than eight hundred officers of the army and navy, and the members of both Houses of the Reichsrath.

The President of the Lower House of the Reichsrath has convoked the House for the 20th inst.

Count Bylandt, the War Minister, has recovered from his indisposition, and has resumed his duties at the War Office.

From Vienna there comes news of a slight engagement between the insurgents in Herzegovina and the Austrian troops. The former ultimately retreated, leaving four dead.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

The silver wedding of the King and Queen is to be solemnly celebrated at Stockholm on June 6 next. A subscription has been started in Norway for the purpose of making a presentation to the Royal couple upon the occasion.

RUSSIA.

Sir E. Thornton's first official reception at the British Embassy, St. Petersburg, was brilliantly attended.

AMERICA.

Congress reassembled on the 5th inst. The House of Representatives passed a resolution expressing thanks to the Khedive for the obelisk presented by Egypt to the American people. On Monday the Senate adopted a resolution for the appointment of a special committee on female suffrage. A bill was introduced into the House on Monday strictly defining legal insanity. Six hundred and seventy-five bills were introduced to the House, making over 4000 thus far introduced to Congress.

CANADA.

The Customs and Excise returns for the Dominion of Canada during the last six months of 1881 show an increase of 1,763,754 dols. over the corresponding period of the previous year. During the last year 14,597 immigrants arrived in Toronto, of whom nearly 4000 were English, over 3000 German, 3000 Scandinavian, 2600 Irish, and 1400 Scotch. Nearly 8000 remained in Ontario, over 6000 went to the Western States, and 6000 went to Manitoba. The arrivals during the previous year were 15,898.

INDIA.

The Assam Emigration Bill formed the subject of an animated debate in the Legislative Council on the 15th inst. The debate was wound up by the Viceroy, who made a long speech in favour of the bill. Alluding to the assertions of certain native papers that the Government was actuated by a desire to promote the interests of one class in preference to another, he said he did not care to answer such accusations. He was quite prepared to leave the judgment of his own conduct to those who knew anything of his character. If he did not believe that this measure would greatly improve the condition of the tea industry in Assam, and conduce greatly to the welfare of the coolies, he would certainly not have consented to it. The bill was then read the third time and passed.

A Fine-Arts Exhibition was opened by the Viceroy in Calcutta on the 4th inst. Mr. Prinsep, president of the committee, explained the object and aims of the exhibition; it was, he said, the most extensive and varied ever held in India. The proposal had emanated from the Lieutenant-Governor, who thought that similar exhibitions should be held in turn in the Presidency towns, so as to diffuse a wider knowledge of arts and manufactures and to stimulate artisans. The Viceroy expressed the pleasure he felt in being present on so interesting an occasion. He believed exhibitions of this kind were calculated to afford a great and useful stimulus to the manufactures of the country, and he considered it most important for India that other branches of industry than agriculture should be developed as much as possible.

The Viceroy will hold a Chapter of the Star of India on the 25th inst. for the purpose of investing Sir James Gordon, Sir Lepel Griffin, and the Nawab of Bhawalpore. All the members of the Order in India have been invited to attend.

AUSTRALIA.

A telegram from Sydney of the 4th inst. brings evidence of remarkable prosperity in the colony of New South Wales. The revenue for 1881 amounted to £6,710,000, showing an increase of £1,800,000 on the previous year, being also largely in excess of the Treasury estimates. This increase of revenue is distributed over almost every branch. The Hon. Sir John Robertson, who lately retired from the Ministry of Public Instruction in consequence of the action of his colleagues in connection with the Milburn Creek affair, rejoined the Cabinet before the Hon. Sir H. Parkes's departure, being appointed Secretary for Lands in place of the Hon. James Hoskins, who has resigned that post on the ground of ill-health. During the absence of the Premier Sir John Robertson will discharge the duties of Colonial Secretary, in addition to the work of his own department.

The Agent-General for Queensland has received the following telegram from the Government at Brisbane:—"Changes of Ministry. Sir Arthur Palmer resigned, become President of the Legislative Council; Hon. Thomas McLivraith, Colonial Secretary; Hon. Archibald Archer, Colonial Treasurer."

A four-days' match between the English cricketers and a combined Eleven of Australia at Melbourne ended in a draw.

Colonel A. C. Johnson, C.B., R.A., has been appointed to the command of the Royal Artillery in the Mhow Division, India.

The Chief Justiceship of Hong-Kong has been offered to, and accepted by, Mr. George Phillippo, formerly Attorney-General of that place and now Chief Justice of Gibraltar.

The Government of Mexico has granted a concession for the construction of a railway through Sonora across to the Pacific harbour of San Diego, which will afford accommodation to Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe.

The British and French Consuls-General at Cairo received by telegram on Saturday night from their Governments a Collective Note explaining in unmistakable terms that England and France, who had placed the Khedive on his throne, were determined to maintain his authority against any attempts to create disorder.

Tuesday's Gazette announces the appointments of Mr. Richard Temple Rennie, now Judge of her Majesty's Court of for Japan, to be Chief Justice of her Majesty's Supreme Court for China and Japan; and of Mr. Nicholas John Hannen, now Crown Advocate of Shanghai, to be Judge of her Majesty's Court of Japan.

News received at Accra is said to confirm the report that two hundred young girls had been murdered by the King of Ashantee for the purpose of mixing their blood with the mortar employed in building a new palace. It is stated that the girls were obtained from some neighbouring tribes, against which raids were made by the King's followers for the purpose of raising the required number of victims.

Under the title of "The New Ceylon," Mr. Joseph Hatton has published (Messrs. Chapman and Hall) a brief history of North British Borneo or Sabah, in respect of which a charter has been granted by her Majesty. Mr. Hatton adduces evidence to show that North Borneo is entitled to be called the "new Ceylon," and he predicts a great future for a land offering so promising a field for Anglo-Saxon enterprise.

The Palestine Exploration Society reports that Lieutenant Conder has returned to Jerusalem, taking with him the results of his first campaign in Eastern Palestine. These are the survey of about 500 square miles of country, the plans, photographs, and special surveys of a great many places of interest, including Heshbon, Amman, and Arak el Emir, the great castle of Hyrcanus. Over 600 names have been collected, 200 miles examined, and several Bible identifications proposed. The great feature of the country just explored is the prodigious number of cromlechs, which are not scattered about, but grouped and referable to certain centres which represent the old sacred places of the primitive inhabitants. In addition to the cromlechs, some very interesting menhirs and ancient stone circles were found. Lieutenant Conder suggests that the "bedstead" of King Og (Deut. iii. 11), which should be "throne," may have been one of these cromlechs.

ROYAL NATIONAL LIFE-BOAT INSTITUTION.

A meeting of this institution was held at its house, John-street, Adelphi—Mr. Edward Birkbeck, M.P., in the chair. A silver medal was voted to Mr. John Steel, of Ayr, for assisting to man the life-boat at that port on the occasion of the wreck of the brigantine J. W. Harris during the severe gale of Nov. 22 last; silver medals were also awarded to Mr. Samuel Carr, chief officer of H.M. Coastguard at Ringsend, county Dublin, and to Mr. Daniel Evans, coxswain of the Poolbeg life-boat, in acknowledgment of their long and valuable service in saving life from shipwreck; also to Captain J. Brew, of the steamer Mona, with 25 to his crew. The thanks of the institution, inscribed on vellum, were voted to Major Scott, chairman of the Dover branch, in acknowledgment of intrepid services. Rewards amounting to £440 were granted to the crews of life-boats for services rendered during the gales of the past month. The sum of £1000 had been received from the Civil Service Life-Boat Fund, per Mr. Charles Dibdin, F.R.G.S., for the endowment of their No. 2 Life-Boat, stationed at Tynemouth, and £100 on behalf of their other two boats stationed respectively at Fort Patrick, N.B., and Wexford, Ireland.

At the annual meeting of the committee of the Civil Service Life-Boat Fund, held at the General Post Office, on the 10th inst., Mr. Charles Dibdin, the hon. secretary, reported that the fund had experienced more than usual prosperity during the past year; that since the publication of the last report the committee had handed to the National Institution, in addition to a subscription of £100, the sum of £1000 for the endowment of the second Civil Service life-boat, Charles Dibdin, which saved eighteen lives off Tynemouth in October last. It was further stated that the committee desired to raise the necessary funds for the endowment of their third life-boat at Port Patrick, in order that the institution may thereby be relieved of any expense in future in connection with the boats presented by the Fund, Civil Service No. 1, at Wexford, having been endowed in 1879. The boats of the fund have up to the present time attended twenty-seven wrecks, saved five vessels, and 149 lives.

THE COURT.

Her Majesty, always mindful to encourage refining tastes, has commissioned M. Gounod to compose a nuptial march for the occasion of Prince Leopold's marriage, which event will possibly take place at Windsor next March. The Queen received Mr. Bradley at Osborne last Saturday, when he kissed hands on his appointment as Dean of Westminster. The Dean, who remained on a visit to her Majesty, performed Divine service on Sunday at Osborne, the Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold being present. The Right Hon. W. E. Forster arrived the same day, and had an audience of her Majesty. The right hon. gentleman, with the Dean of Westminster and Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Sir Henry Ponsonby, joined the Royal dinner circle. Mr. Forster and the Dean left on Monday. The Empress Eugénie arrived on Tuesday on a visit to the Queen. Princess Beatrice crossed in the Alberta and met the Empress at Portsmouth, returning with her to Osborne. Lord Carlisle and Lord Rowton have dined with her Majesty; and the Dowager Lady Lisburne has been received by the Queen. Lady Waterpark has arrived as Lady in Waiting to her Majesty.

Messrs. Metzler and Co., of Great Marlborough-street, are, by command of her Majesty, preparing for publication a complete collection of the musical compositions, sacred and secular, of the Prince Consort, the whole being produced under the able supervision of Mr. W. G. Cousins.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales's time since his departure from Sandringham has been busily occupied. After some days' successful shooting through the Windsor coverts, and a good day with Mr. T. Garth's foxhounds at Billingbear Park, his Royal Highness left Cumberland Lodge last Saturday for town. The Prince visited the Duke of Cambridge the same morning, and lunched with Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne at Kensington Palace. His Royal Highness was present also at an afternoon choral and orchestral concert given at the Royal Albert Hall in aid of the funds for the relief of the sufferers by the burning of the Ring Theatre, Vienna. On Monday the Prince left town on his promised visit to the Earl of Stamford and Warrington at Bradgate Park. His Royal Highness travelled from St. Pancras to Leicester, where he arrived at five o'clock, being received at the railway station by Lord Stamford; a guard of honour of Leicestershire Volunteers, under the command of Colonel Sir Henry Halford, Bart., being in attendance, their band playing the National Anthem. An address was presented by the Mayor, with a request that the Prince would open the new park at Leicester a few months hence. His Royal Highness returned a reply, expressing his gratification at his welcome, and stating that if the claims upon the time of himself and the Princess allowed they would have much satisfaction in being present at the opening and dedication of the Abbey Park. The Prince, with his host, drove off amid the loudest enthusiasm of some thousands of the local people, the route throughout being illuminated. Groby village was especially brilliant in coloured fires; Groby Pool, forty acres in extent, being marked by surrounding lights; the ancient manor-house, too, where Lady Jane Grey lived in 1553, was illuminated. At Bradgate Hall the tenantry were assembled in front of the entrance to give welcome to the Royal guest. On Tuesday morning the Prince and the other guests drove to the ruins of the ancient house which was destroyed by fire by the Countess of Stamford in the early part of the last century. His Royal Highness was also shown Queen Adelaide's oak, under which her Majesty had luncheon when celebrating her fiftieth birthday at Bradgate; and the terrace was pointed out where Lady Jane Grey and Lord Guildford Dudley spent their time previous to their marriage. After some good sport in Blakes Haywood and the adjoining spinnies, the party, of about a dozen guns, lunched in a marquee. Game has been abundant in all the covers.

The Princess of Wales, with her daughters, attended Divine service, as usual, on Sunday at Sandringham.

Saturday, the 11th of next month, is the day on which the Savage Club hope to entertain his Royal Highness at dinner.

The Prince and Princess have accepted an invitation to be present at a ball to be given by the regiment of the Honourable Artillery Company (of which his Royal Highness is Captain-General and Colonel), on or about Feb. 15, at the headquarters, Finsbury.

Her Majesty's ship Bacchante, Captain Lord C. Scott, having on board Princes Albert Victor and George of Wales, with the Comptess, Captain Durrant, arrived at Singapore on Monday, and would sail on the 15th inst. for Colombo.

Princess Louise of Lorne and the Governor-General of Canada, having for a second time inspected the Smoke Abatement Exhibition, in which they evinced a lively interest, the Marquis of Lorne directed that full reports of the exhibition should be forwarded to the State Department in the Dominion of Canada. Her Royal Highness and the Marquis went to Eastwell last Saturday on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, returning to town on Monday. His Excellency sailed in the Allan Line Royal Mail steamer Parisian on Wednesday for Halifax to resume his official duties. His sister, Lady Frances, with her husband, Mr. Balfour, accompanies him. Lady Frances will discharge the duties at the Court at Ottawa until the arrival of the Marchioness of Lorne later in the season. Princess Louise travelled with her husband to Liverpool. From Lime-street railway station they drove in the Mayor's state carriage to the Townhall, where they were entertained at luncheon. Her Royal Highness returned to town after the sailing of the Parisian.

On Monday Prince Leopold took leave of the Queen on his departure for the Continent to visit his bride elect, Princess Hélène of Waldeck, at her German home. His Royal Highness crossed in the Alberta to Portsmouth, where he was met by Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, who accompanied him to Government House; the Countess of Dornberg receiving her Royal guest. A congratulatory address on the Prince's approaching marriage was presented during the afternoon by a deputation from the Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar Masonic Lodge; after which his Royal Highness left by special train for town. On Tuesday the Prince, accompanied by Mr. Howard Vincent, the Director of the Criminal Investigation Department, made a general inspection of Newgate. His Royal Highness left Buckingham Palace in the evening for Dover, en route for Waldeck. The Prince has added his name as patron of the Chelsea Hospital for Women; and Princess Frederica of Hanover, the Duchess of Cambridge, and the Duchess of Teck have become patronesses, and, with her Majesty, the Princess of Wales, and Princess Christian, have accepted a portrait album designed to commemorate "Ye Olde English Fayre," which was organised for the benefit of the charity.

The Duke of Cambridge's visit to Lord and Lady Fitzhardinge at Berkeley Castle was suddenly closed by the death of his friend and private secretary, Lieutenant-General the Hon. James Macdonald, whose funeral the Duke attended at Thorpe, near Bridlington, on Tuesday. The groom of the bedchamber to the Prince of Wales represented his Royal Highness, and Colonel Greville the Duchess of Cambridge. The Duke returned to town in the evening.

The Empress Eugénie, attended by Madame D'Arcos, the Duc de Bassano, and Captain Bigge, R.A., left Victoria Station on Tuesday for Osborne Cottage.

Levés and Drawingrooms at Dublin Castle will be held on the 31st inst., and Feb. 1, 14, and 15 respectively. The investiture of Lord O'Hagan, late Lord Chancellor of Ireland, as Knight of St. Patrick will take place in Dublin on St. Patrick's Day.

Marriages are arranged between the Earl of Winchelsea and Nottingham and Lady Elizabeth Bryan, sister of the present Marquis of Conyngham; between Mr. F. E. G. Astley, Scots Guards, eldest son of Sir John Astley, Bart., and Lady Gertrude Pelham, only daughter of the Countess of Yarborough, and sister of the present Earl; and also between Major the Hon. George Napier, son of General Lord Napier of Magdala, and Alice, only daughter of Mr. James Beech, of Brandon Lodge, Coventry, and The Shawe, Staffordshire.

A hearty welcome greeted Sir John and Lady Lister Kaye on their home-coming on Monday after their marriage in New York on the 5th ult. On arriving at the Kaye's Arms, Denby Grange, Yorkshire, a torchlight procession was formed by the tenantry, workmen, and inhabitants, and the horses being unharnessed, the carriage was drawn half a mile to the hall, headed by a brass band. A large family party received the bride and bridegroom.

BENEVOLENT OBJECTS.

The annual "New Year's Breakfast to the Destitute," provided at Gray's-yard Ragged Church and Schools, was eaten by about 800 persons on Sunday morning. More than a fourth of these were women. Every Sunday morning wretched wanderers who have not been already sheltered and fed in the casual ward of the workhouse are provided with a free breakfast; but the New-Year's breakfast is a more substantial feast.

The bazaar at the Tabernacle, for completing Mr. Spurgeon's Homes for 500 Fatherless Children, realised, last week, nearly £2000. Goods were sent not only from all parts of this country, but also from the Continent, Africa, Asia, and several of our colonies. The bazaar reopened on Tuesday last for three days.

The annual treat to the little patients in the East London Hospital for Children was given on Monday, and comprised a Punch and Judy show and distribution of toys, as well as presents of clothes to ex-patients, and to some of the children who are now leaving or have recently left the hospital cured. The festivities, which were witnessed by a large number of supporters of the hospital, were enjoyed with the utmost relish by the juvenile audience. Since the establishment of the hospital, fourteen years ago, nearly 100,000 women and children have been treated either as out or in patients. Funds are now urgently needed to increase the accommodation in the outpatient department.

A Christmas treat was given on Monday by the South London Association for Assisting the Blind, at the Clayton Memorial School, York-street, Walworth, to about two hundred persons deprived of sight. The guests were served with a substantial tea. Afterwards a meeting was held, under the chairmanship of Mr. Charles White, one of the Lambeth members of the London School Board. In opening the proceedings the chairman gave all a hearty welcome, and addressed words of encouragement to his hearers. He alluded, also, to the efforts the London School Board was making to educate blind children, and that the board had now in their blind schools 103 children. Mr. Edmonds, the hon. secretary, said the association, which was established to assist indigent blind people in various ways, was progressing favourably, and in nine years they had taught 270 blind persons to read by means of embossed types. The chairman next distributed money prizes (given by himself) to the successful competitors in a recent embossed type reading competition. A musical entertainment, in which many of the blind took part, including singing by a blind choir, followed.

The half-yearly election of twenty-five candidates to the benefits of the British Orphan Asylum, and also the annual general court of the governors and subscribers, took place on Tuesday at the Cannon-street Hotel. Canon Rowsell presided. The report stated that the number of pupils in the asylum up to Dec. 31 last was 185, of whom 104 were boys and eighty-one girls, and thirty-nine had been admitted during the past year by the votes of the governors and subscribers. Three boys were entered last Christmas for the Cambridge senior, and nineteen for the junior examination. There was only one failure, and four boys passed in honours. The legacies amounted to about £232. Twelve boys and thirteen girls were selected from a list of forty-two approved candidates from all parts of the United Kingdom.

His Excellency the Marquis of Lorne, K.T., G.C.M.G., was, on the 9th inst., elected on the Committee of the Empire Club.

Last week 2799 births and 1858 deaths were registered in London, the former having been 28 below, and the latter 23 above, the average numbers.

Miss Margaret Bailey, who lives at Ballygilbert, in the parish of Cairncastle, on the coast of Antrim, between Larne and Glenarm, attained her 111th year on Sunday.

At the meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works yesterday week it was stated that the gross estimated expenditure for 1882 was £1,311,604. Last year it was £1,234,393, and in 1880 was £1,136,438. The estimated income was £1,283,880.

King Humbert has conferred upon Sir William MacCormac, M.A., F.R.C.S. England, the cross and collar of Knight Commander of the Crown of Italy, in recognition of his distinguished scientific attainments.

A fine of £112 has been imposed by Mr. Barstow, the magistrate presiding at the Clerkenwell Police Court, upon the owner of eleven houses in St. Pancras, for having neglected to provide sufficient water supply and accommodation for the use of the occupants.

The Reading Town Council have unanimously agreed to grant a site in one of the most central and prominent parts of the town for the proposed monument to the Colonel, officers, and men of the 66th (Berkshire) Regiment, who fell at Maiwand. Over £800 has been subscribed towards the monument.

At the annual general court of the Royal Humane Society on Tuesday returns were presented of the awards made for bravery in saving life from drowning. The gold medal was granted to Major Senior, who rescued six coolies out of a boat's crew immersed in a swiftly-flowing river in India.

A deputation of Hartlepool Liberals waited upon Mr. Isaac Lowthian Bell, at Rownton Hall, Northallerton, last Saturday, for the purpose of presenting him with a service of silver plate and portraits in oil of himself and Mrs. Bell, at a cost of over £1000, as tokens of the respect in which he is held by his old constituents at Hartlepool. Mr. W. Gray, the president of the Hartlepool Liberal Association, made the presentations.

WORKS OF JOSEF ISRAELS.

An exhibition of some of the most important works of Israel—a large proportion being lent, we believe, from the collection of Mr. J. S. Forbes—is open for a short time at Mr. McLean's Gallery, Haymarket. Included in the gathering is "The Shipwrecked Fisherman"—that sorrowful procession bearing the body of the drowned man, preceded by the widowed mother with her children—which, when in the '62 International Exhibition, first made the master generally known in this country. There are, too, "Grace before Meat," where mother and son, sitting before their bowl of steaming potatoes with eyes closed in reverent prayer, seem to read a lesson of humble contentment that must go straight to all hearts; and "Watching," in which the grey dawn discovers a bereaved mother, her face buried in her hand, and her little girl at her side, mutely comforting her, but turning a wistful look towards the coffin inclosing the body of the bread-winner, that is dimly revealed by a solitary taper. Here, also, are "La Fête de Jean," where the simple incident of a young mother making pancakes, to the wonder and delight of her little son, touches a chord of sweetest, homeliest pathos with the truest art; and "The Sailing Match," children with their toy-boats in the shallows, which is as bright and opalescent as many of the others are sombre and solemn, funeral, and tragic. We have the pathetic again in "The Share of the Poor"—fishermen giving the remains of their take to a crowd of helpless women and children; "Old and Worn Out"—an aged wife mending a much-broken net as her husband lies ill in bed; "The Flirting," and several others. Nor must we forget to mention, for its exquisitely truthful, unaffected sentiment of maternity, the picture of a young mother feeding her baby with a wooden spoon; the protrusion of the mother's upper lip aiding, as it were in sympathy, her little one to master the contents of the clumsy spoon, is a most subtle piece of observation. There are other pictures nearly as remarkable, and a score or so of water-colour drawings, nearly every one with some distinctive charm.

Among the oil-paintings two or three, which evidently belong to an early period of Israel's career, will correct the assumption, if such exists, that the painter was not at first a careful and close imitator of nature, complete as to modelling and comparatively smooth as to execution. The indeterminateness of his later manner—informed and guided, however, by the knowledge he had already acquired—was deliberately adopted in accordance with philosophical principles of art. He resolved that the impression, the emotion, the sentiment should be all in all; no precise representation, no obtrusive accessories, no unbroken shadows, no colour that was not palpitating, and blended in the broken chiaroscuro should interfere with the spectator's relish of his thought. His life-long themes—the lowly, hard, perilous life of the poor Scheveningen fisherfolk—were exactly congenial to such treatment. And how faithfully has he not treated them! What wonder that he should have found more followers than perhaps any other living painter! If his sympathies incline unduly to the dismal and painful, and if his colouring is too black, yet to whom can we compare him as a painter of humble pathos? This exhibition is a timely one, for not a few of Israel's latest works are scarcely worthy of him.

Mr. R. Hunter, solicitor, of the firm of Horne, Hunter, and Birkett, 6, Lincoln's-inn-fields, has been appointed Solicitor to the Post Office, in place of the late Mr. Horace Watson.

The personal estate of the late Mr. Andrew Jardine, of Lawick Castle, Perthshire, and Corrie, Dumfriesshire, has been sworn by one of his executors under the sum of £1,371,000. Mr. Jardine was a partner in the firm of Messrs. Jardine, Matheson, and Co., China merchants, London.

Last week's arrivals of live stock and fresh meat at Liverpool from the United States and Canada show a slight increase in comparison with those of the preceding week; the total being 269 cattle, 647 sheep, 5084 quarters of beef, 425 carcasses of mutton, and 224 hogs.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK ENDING JAN. 21.

SUNDAY, JAN. 15.
Second Sunday after Epiphany.	St. James's, noon.
Morning Lessons: Isaiah lv.; Matt. ix. 1-18. Evening Lessons: Isaiah lvii. or lxi.; Acts ix. 1-23.	Whitehall, 11 a.m., Ven. Archdeacon Bloomfield; 3 p.m., Rev. R. Harvey (for Society for the Propagation of the Gospel).
St. Paul's Cathedral, 10.30 a.m., Rev. J. H. Coward; 3.15 p.m., Rev. Canon Stubbs; 7 p.m., Rev. E. Capel Cure.	Savoy, 11.30 a.m., Rev. Henry White, the Chaplain; 7 p.m., Rev. John Lindsay, Rector of St. Clement Dances.
Westminster Abbey, 10 a.m., Canon Ince; 3 p.m., Canon Barry.
MONDAY, JAN. 16.
Royal Naval Benevolent Society, quarterly court, noon.	Royal Academy, 8 p.m. (Professor Armitage on the Artists of the Eighteenth Century).
London Institution, 3 p.m. (Professor E. Ray Lankester on Scorpions, Terrestrial and Marine).	Victoria Institute, 8 p.m. Social Science Association, 8 p.m. (Mr. Commissioner Miller on a Reform of the Lunacy Laws).
Geographical Society, 8.30 p.m.
Medical Society, 8.30 p.m.
TUESDAY, JAN. 17.
Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Professor McKendrick on the Mechanism of the Senses).	Zoological Society, 8.30 p.m. Gresham Lectures, 6 p.m., Dr. Symes Thompson on Physics (four days).
Civil Engineers' Institution, 8 p.m. (discussion on the Conservancy of Rivers).	Humane Society, 8.30 p.m. Reedham Asylum for Fatherless Children; elections, Cannon-street Hotel, noon.
Pathological Society, 8.30 p.m.
WEDNESDAY, JAN. 18.
Royal Alfred Aged Merchant Seamen's Institution, elections, Cannon-street Hotel, noon.	Entomological Society, 7 p.m. Albert Hall Choral Society, 8 p.m. (Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch," &c.).
William I., King of Prussia, proclaimed Emperor of Germany, 1871.	Society of Arts, 8 p.m. (Mr. E. Hume on the Relation of Botanical Science to Ornamental Art).
Bankers' Institute, 6 p.m. (Mr. J. A. Wemyss on Banking in Scotland).	Public Analysts' Society, anniversary, 5 p.m. (papers by Messrs. Winter Blythe and J. Carter Bell).
Meteorological Society (at Civil Engineers' Institution), 7 p.m.	East India Association, 8 p.m. (Mr. E. J. Wetherston on Indian and Foreign Silver Productions, &c.).
British Archaeological Association, 8 p.m. (papers by Messrs. H. S. Cuming and Thomas Morgan).
THURSDAY, JAN. 19.
New Moon, 4.35 p.m.	Civil and Mechanical Engineers' Society, 7 p.m. (Mr. W. C. Street on Foundations).
Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Mr. H. N. Mosely on Corals).	Telegraph Engineers' Society, 8 p.m. Dialectical Society, 8 p.m. (Rev. S. D. Headlam on Disestablishment).
Royal Society, 4.30 p.m.	Royal Academy, 8 p.m. (Professor Armitage on the French School of David, and its influence).
London Institution, 7 p.m.	Statistical Society, 7.45 p.m. Numismatic Society, 7 p.m.
Antiquaries Society, 8.30 p.m.
Chemical Society, 8 p.m. (papers by Messrs. C. F. Cross, S. J. Ewan, A. Higgins, and W. N. Harley).
Linnean Society, 8 p.m. (Mr. G. Maw on the Crocus; papers by Mr. Percy Liden and Rev. G. Henslow).
FRIDAY, JAN. 20.
Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, 2 p.m.	Philological Society, 8 p.m. (Dr. J. H. Murray, a dictionary evening).
Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Dr. W. Hugginson on Comets, 9 p.m.).	Wolverhampton Poultry Show (three days).
Architectural Association, 7.30 p.m. (Mr. P. E. Masey on Architectural Inconsistencies).	United Service Institution, 3 p.m. (Col. H. Bindell on British Military Power).
SATURDAY, JAN. 21.
Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Professor E. Pauer on Beethoven).	Oscar II., King of Sweden, born, 1829.

THE SAILOR PRINCES AT FIJI: WAR-DANCE BY ELECTRIC LIGHT.—SEE PAGE 36.
FROM A SKETCH BY LIEUTENANT PERCY SCOTT, R.N.

THE LORD MAYOR PRESENTING A BUST TO ALDERMAN SIR F. TRUSCOTT, FOR THE CITY OF LONDON ART SOCIETY.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

A SOLDIERS' THEATRE AT WOOLWICH: PANTOMIME AT THE ARTILLERY BARRACKS.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

THE SAILOR PRINCES IN FIJI.

We are indebted to Lieutenant Percy M. Scott, R.N., of H.M.S. Inconstant, for two sketches of the native ceremonies and festivities in the Fiji Islands, in honour of the arrival of the sons of the Prince of Wales, on Sept. 3, their Royal Highnesses being midshipmen on board H.M.S. Bacchante, one of the squadron commanded by Admiral the Earl of Clanwilliam, in a cruise round the world. One of Lieutenant Percy Scott's sketches, which was engraved and published in our Journal last week, represented a Chief of the Fiji nation, Prince Ratuh, son of the ex-King Thakombau, performing the final incantation to consecrate the bowl of yangona, or fermented juice of the chewed kava root, which he is about to offer to the English guests. This took place in the open air, on the ground between Government House, at Levuka, and the seashore, beyond which the squadron lay at anchor. Many of the natives were assembled, their faces painted scarlet, brown, and blue; the European residents were also collected to see the grand spectacle. They formed a semicircle, facing the sea; to the right were the Governor, Mr. Des Vœux, the Admiral, Prince Albert Victor (or Edward) of Wales, and Prince George of Wales, and the officers of the squadron; to the left were the native Chiefs and people. We have already described the process of concocting the favourite Fiji beverage, and the manner of its consecration and presentation to the European visitors. "Next came," says our correspondent, "the offering of presents, including everything good and costly that the islands produce. The most interesting part of the entertainment was in the evening, when the Meke-Meke or native dance was performed. The scene was rendered perfect by a broad beam of electric light from the Inconstant being cast across the plain. The effect of the appearance of the dancers, who kept a perfect semicircle, wheeling in and out of the bright rays, was weird and strange to an extraordinary degree. The graceful waving of the arms, with the swaying over of every body at the same moment, till the hands nearly touched the ground, was truly beautiful. As an exhibition of elasticity and suppleness of limb, grace, and exactness of time, the dancing of these Fiji men beat anything I ever saw at an opera ballet. Such a corps de ballet would make a fortune in Europe. Of course, the dancers had a great advantage in being encumbered with little clothing. What they wore hung like a fringe round their loins, and swayed from side to side with every movement of the wearer. For more than an hour the pace never slackened. Imperceptibly those who became tired fell out of the ranks and were relieved by fresh dancers. In return for his politeness to us, we entertained King Thakombau at luncheon on board the Inconstant. Looking at this tall, really handsome, dignified old man, it was difficult to realise that not many years ago he was a cruel and ruthless cannibal. Frightful stories are told of his atrocities; among others, that he with his own hand killed his mother and several other wives of his father, at the old chief's funeral. The stone on which his victims used to be dashed, the inclosures in which they were imprisoned, and the ovens in which they were baked alive, are still intact. Thakombau himself avers that, for seven or eight years, he has not once had a taste of the forbidden dainty, human flesh. It is to be hoped this is true; for the old man is, at any rate outwardly, a Christian. He is a clever old fellow, and policy, no doubt, had a great deal to do with his conversion. It is curious that most of these Fiji chiefs are fine, tall, noble-looking men, very superior to the bulk of the nation. I have heard no theory to account for this difference, except that some ascribe it to good feeding. The Fiji Islands have made wonderful progress, since 1876, in civilisation and prosperity under British rule."

Our readers will perhaps recollect that the same correspondent, Lieutenant Percy Scott, furnished to the Illustrated London News of March 12 last year a capital drawing of the grotesque nautical festival and ceremonial at "Crossing the Line," as performed by the non-commissioned officers and seamen of H.M.S. Inconstant. It was engraved and published as an Extra Supplement to this Journal.

The election of a Scotch representative Peer to fill the vacancy in the House of Lords caused by the death of the Earl of Airlied took place at Holyrood, Edinburgh, on Wednesday, when Lord Polwarth was elected by a large majority, twenty-six votes being recorded on his behalf, as against five for Lord Lindsay, and two for Lord Northesk.

Sir John Holker, Q.C., M.P., Attorney-General in the late Administration, has been appointed to succeed the late Lord Justice Lush as a member of the Court of Appeal. In departing from time-honoured traditions and conferring one of the highest prizes open to the Bar on a staunch political opponent, Mr. Gladstone has shown a praiseworthy desire to consult the interests of the public.

Extra Supplement.

THE LATE MR. G. E. STREET, R.A.

The funeral of this distinguished architect, in Westminster Abbey, was attended, with every sign of personal esteem, and of regret for his death, by many of his professional brethren, and by personages of social or official rank. Mr. George Edmund Street, whose Portrait is now presented in the Engraving for our Extra Supplement, was born at Woodford, Essex, in 1824, and educated at the Collegiate School, Cambridge. His architectural studies were begun under Mr. Owen Carter at Winchester, and completed under the late Sir George Gilbert Scott, with whom he remained five years. Like his master, Mr. Street adopted the Gothic style in the buildings he designed, and the numerous essays and lectures which he has written upon architecture have all been directed to illustrate the history and principles and promote the progress of that style. His principal literary efforts are "The Brick and Marble Architecture of North Italy in the Middle Ages," 1855; and "Some Account of Gothic Architecture in Spain," 1865. Mr. Street has for many years been largely engaged in the work of erecting and restoring churches and other ecclesiastical buildings all over the country. To mention only the most prominent among his architectural works, he was the architect of the Cuddesden Theological College, of the new chapel and school-rooms of Uppingham College, and of new churches at Bournemouth, Garden-street, Westminster; St. Philip and St. James's, Oxford; St. John's, Torquay; All Saints', Clifton; St. Saviour's, Eastbourne, St. Margaret's, Liverpool; and St. Mary Magdalen, Paddington. Among his restorations may be noticed the churches of Eccleshall, Wantage, Uffington, in Berks, and Stone, in Kent, and Jesus College Chapel, Oxford. He was also the architect of the Earl of Crawford and Balcarres's house at Dunelm. Perhaps his most considerable work in church building was the erection of the nave of Bristol Cathedral in the Early English style. He was engaged upon the restoration of the nave and building of a new choir in Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin, and on building a new synod-house in connection with the Cathedral for the Irish Church. But in London Mr. Street's reputation will mainly rest upon the Royal Courts of Justice in the Strand, now approaching completion. He was appointed architect for this gigantic undertaking in 1868, after a competition in which the most famous architects of the day, including Sir Gilbert Scott and Mr. E. M. Barry, took part. Although a great deal still requires to be done before the interior of the building is finished, the outer shell is fairly complete, and the public are able to judge of the imposing effect which the New Law Courts will present as they are approached from the Strand. Mr. Street was appointed in 1850 diocesan architect to the diocese of Oxford, and he subsequently filled similar posts in the dioceses of York, Ripon, and Winchester. He was a Fellow of the Institute of Architects, of which he has been Vice-President, and a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries, and of other societies. In 1866 he was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy, and was advanced to be a Royal Academician on June 29, 1871. He was also a member of the Imperial and Royal Academy of the Fine Arts at Vienna and a Knight of the Legion of Honour.

Our Engraving of the Portrait of Mr. Street is from a photograph by Messrs. Lock and Whitfield.

ALDERMAN SIR F. TRUSCOTT.

The City of London Society of Artists, of which the Lord Mayor of London is President, has commemorated the assistance that it received two years ago from Alderman Sir Francis Truscott, then Lord Mayor, by presenting him with a marble bust of himself. The sculptor, Mr. C. B. Birch, A.R.A., has liberally given this bust to the Council of the Society; and it is regarded as a work of art not unworthy of the donors, as well as a good likeness of the person represented, who is attired in his official robes as Lord Mayor. In front of the pedestal is a medallion bearing the City arms. Our Illustration shows the scene, on Wednesday week, in the saloon of the Mansion House, when the present Lord Mayor, on behalf of the Society, performed the ceremony of presenting this bust to Sir F. Truscott. The Lady Mayoress and Lady Truscott were present, and many of the Aldermen and Common Councilmen, with the officers of the Corporation, and the leading members of the City of London Society of Artists. Mr. N. E. Green, Chairman of that Society, and Mr. E. W. Parkes, honorary secretary, took part in these proceedings. A soirée of the Society is to be held at the Mansion House, at an early date.

PANTOMIME AT A SOLDIER'S THEATRE.

The Royal Artillery Barracks at Woolwich are not devoid of accommodation for the performance of amateur theatrical entertainments, in which some of the officers and privates are remarkably clever. Their Christmas Pantomime this year, like that which is exhibited at Covent Garden, was founded upon a combination of the two nursery legends of "Bo-Peep" and "Little Boy Blue." Its drollery was undeniably and irresistibly; and the hearty enjoyment that it yielded both to the performers and to the audience was freely acknowledged. The ludicrous figures shown in our Illustration, with their preposterous costume, set off by the habitual ease and freedom of bearing in military men, had a very piquant effect. "Little Boy Blue" here appears making an irreverent gesture of farewell defiance, before running away, to the indignation of an elderly couple whose trust he has shamefully betrayed, leaving their "sheep in the meadow, their cows in the corn."

A YEAR'S BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS IN LONDON.

In the course of the fifty-two weeks that ended on Dec. 31 last there were 132,674 births recorded as having happened in London, the population concerned being estimated at 3,329,751 in the middle of 1881.

The birth-rate for the past year is 34.8, that for 1880 having been 36.2 for every thousand inhabitants. The births show an excess of 51,602 over the registered deaths. This number, therefore, represents the natural increase of the population of London in the past year, the area concerned extending from Hampstead in the north to Sydenham in the south, and from Woolwich in the east to Hammersmith in the west, in all about 122 square miles.

The deaths of 81,072 persons were recorded in London in the past year, and this total is far below those of the three previous years. In the past year, 16,847 deaths took place in workhouses, hospitals, and other public institutions; 5538 were inquired into before coroners, and 3026 deaths were due to violence, the latter being considerably over the total of the previous year. There were 19,575 deaths recorded of infants under one, and 16,905 took place at 60 and upwards. In 1880 smallpox was fatal in 475 instances; this number has risen to 2371 for the past year, recent weekly returns of the Registrar General now showing considerable improvement. Measles were far more fatal in the past year than in the previous one, the total rising from 1501 to 2533. Fatal cases of scarlet fever declined from 3073 to 2108; on the other hand, fevers of other types have risen from 886 to 1195. Diphtheria shows a rise from 541 to 651. In 1880 there were 3438 deaths by whooping cough; in 1881 the number was 1961.

The Registrar-General states in his last annual report—namely, that which deals with the year 1879—that 33,477 marriages were recorded in London. This total includes 28,294 which took place in church, while 5183 were of Nonconformists.

THE AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.

Messrs. Trübner and Co. publish a statistical return issued by the Government printer of New South Wales, showing the relative positions and aggregate importance of the Australasian colonies at the close of 1880. The most densely populated of these colonies, as well as the most important from this point of view of the population, is Victoria, which, with an area of 87,884 square miles, has 850,343 inhabitants; New South Wales, with 810,937 square miles, has 720,046 inhabitants; and Tasmania, with only 26,215 square miles, has the comparatively large population of 113,615 people. The remaining colonies are South Australia, with 903,690 square miles, and 264,424 inhabitants; Queensland, with 369,520 square miles, and 221,964 inhabitants; Western Australia, with 1,024,000 square miles, and only 29,019 inhabitants; and New Zealand, with 105,342 square miles, and 474,296 inhabitants. The total population of all the colonies with their enormous extent is only 2,673,707 people, or less than that of London alone. It will be seen that the largest in extent are Western Australia and South Australia, which indeed are nearly twice as large as all the rest, including New Zealand, put together. The largest revenue is raised in New South Wales, where it is £4,904,230, as compared with £4,621,242 in Victoria. These two latter colonies, which are by far the most important commercially speaking, run each other very close in the aggregate of their trade. During 1880 the imports and exports of Victoria were valued at £14,556,894 and £15,954,559, and those of New South Wales at £13,950,075 and £15,525,138.

Mr. A. S. Kinnear, Q.C., who was recently appointed to the judgeship in the Court of Session, Edinburgh, vacant by the death of Lord Curriehill, was formally installed into office on Tuesday, and will sit under the title of Lord Kinnear.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.—The CURATORSHIP of the ANTIQUE SCHOOL is NOW VACANT. Hours of attendance Nine a.m. to Four p.m., and Five to seven p.m. Salary, £220 a year. Painters or Sculptors only are eligible. Applications, stating age, &c., and testimonials to be addressed to "The Secretary," Royal Academy of Arts, Burlington House, Piccadilly, on or before JAN. 21.

RECEIVED £10 for GIRL'S HOME, LIFORD (DE. BARNARD'S), from M. H. W. W.

SUN FIRE AND LIFE OFFICES, Throgmorton-street, E.C.1; Charing-cross, S.W.1; Oxford-street, corner of Vere-street, W.1. FIRE.—Established 1810. Home and Foreign Insurances at moderate rates. LIFE.—Established 1810. Specially low rates for young lives. Mutual benefit element of claims.

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.—Assurance Against Railway Accidents Alone. Assurance Against Fatal Accidents at Sea. Assurance of Employers' Liability. Railway Passengers' Assurance Company. The Right Hon. Lord KINSAIRD, Chairman, £1,000,000 has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64, Cornhill, or 8, Grand Hotel-buildings, Charing-cross, London.—W. J. VIAN, Secretary.

WHAT IS YOUR CREST AND WHAT IS YOUR MOTTO? Send name and county to CULLETON'S Heraldic Office. Plain sketch, 3s. 6d.; coloured, 7s. The arms of men and wife blended. Crest engraved on seals, rings, books, and steel dies, 8s. 6d. Gold seal, with crest, 2s. Solid Gold Ring, 18-carat, Hall-marked with crest, 42s. Manual of Heraldry, 40 engravings, 3s. 9d.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn-street (corner of St. Martin's-lane).

CULLETON'S GUINEA BOX of STATIONERY contains a Bazaar of the very best Paper and 60 Envelopes, all stamped in the most elegant way with Crest and Motto, Monogram, or Address, and the engraving of Steel Die included. Sent to any part for P.O. order.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn-street (corner of St. Martin's-lane).

VISITING CARDS by CULLETON. Fifty best quality, 2s. 6d. post-free, including the Engraving of Crest, or the Wedding Cards, 50 each, 5s. Embossed Envelopes, with Maiden Name, 15s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, Seal Engraver, 25, Cranbourn-street, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

FOR ARMS AND CREST send Name and County to T. MORING, Inns of Court Heraldic Offices, 25, High Holborn, W.C. Plain sketch, 3s. 6d.; coloured, 7s. 6d. Seal, Dies, and Diplomas. Illustrated Price-List post-free.

LATEST from "LE FOLLET." "Of all annoyances, as connected with 'la toilette,' none is greater than the purchase of some material apparently 'very thing' required, the subsequent finding that 'apparences are deceitful,' and money, time, and trouble have all been wasted in the acquisition of an article whose beauty was transient, and durability nil."

Since our first recommendation of the

'LOUIS' VELVETEEN,

every purchaser has reiterated the praise we bestowed.

Many makers would have contented themselves with having thus gained public favour, but the great competition in Velveteens, and the praiseworthy determination not to be surpassed, have led the manufacturer of the

'LOUIS' VELVETEEN

to be constantly seeking improvements, which have resulted in the production of the

GENUINE WOVEN FAST PILE, WITH 'GENOVA FACI.'

The strictest examiner may try every test of touch and sight without discovering these as other than the finest velvet; they so closely resemble, while the peculiar arrangements resulting in the 'fast woven pile' enable them to stand interminable and rough wear, that would ruin real velvets at four times the price.

N.B.—Every yard of the genuine bears the name

"LOUIS."

NICHOLSON'S

ANNUAL WINTER

CLEARANCE SALE

OF LADIES' WEARING APPAREL AND DRAPERY of every description is now proceeding, and will be continued until Feb. 1, 1882.

GOODS IN ALL DEPARTMENTS ARE GREATLY REDUCED IN PRICE.

A considerable saving may be effected by selections from the Stock as now reduced.

DETAILED CATALOGUES GRATIS, ON APPLICATION, OR SENT POST-FREE.

50 to 52 ST. PAUL'S CHURCH-YARD.

JAY'S, REGENT-STREET.

WEEKLY REDUCTIONS prior to STOCKTAKING in FEBRUARY.

MESSRS. JAY beg to announce that in lieu of a Sale, which generally results in the first comers securing the best bargains, they will up to the time of their Stocktaking in February, adopt a plan of making WEEKLY REDUCTIONS of their surplus stock of all goods, which they are disposed to sell at a loss to themselves and to the advantage of their customers.

The first of these Weekly Arrangements will commence on Monday, the 16th instant. Habitual customers will at once notice the reductions, and others will find some great and reasonable bargains.

GUIDE ILLUSTRATIONS.

MODEL MANTLES.

No. 3949. 23 Guineas; reduced to 10 Guineas.

No. 3948. 28 " " 12 "

No. 3947. 35 " " 15 "

MODEL COSTUMES.

No. 3946. 24 Guineas; reduced to 21 Guineas.

No. 3945. 28 " " 17 "

No. 3944. 32 " " 19 "

MOURNING ORDERS will be forwarded, as usual, at any time and to any distance, on receipt of letter or telegram; but no other goods can be sent on approximation until after Stocktaking.

JAY'S, REGENT-STREET.

SHETLAND SHAWLS.—The Marvel, two yards square, White, 1s. 10d. post-free; Black, Grey, or Cardinal, 2s. The Zephyr, richly fringed, White, 3s. 3d.; Black and Cardinal, 3s. 6d. post-free.—ROBINSON AND CLEVER, Belfast.

NUDA VERITAS.—GREY HAIR restored by this valuable specific to its original shade, after which it grows the natural colour, not grey. Used as a dressing, it causes growth and arrests falling. The most harmless and effectual restorer extant. One trial will convince it has no equal. Price 10s. 6d., of all Chemists and Hairdressers. Testimonials free.—Agents, R. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

ROBARE'S AUREOLINE, or GOLDEN HAIR WASH.—For producing the beautiful golden colour so much admired. Warranted perfectly harmless. Price 2s. 6d., and 10s. 6d., of all principal Perfumers and Chemists throughout the world.—Agents, R. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

AUGENER and CO'S CIRCULATING MUSIC LIBRARY, to which is added Lonsdale's Library, is the largest in Europe. Annual subscription two guineas. One guinea returned at end of subscription. See Prospectus. 81, Regent-street.

TO SCHOOLS.—Suitable selection parcels of MUSIC are sent out on approval, with liberal discount, on receipt of good London reference. Catalogues gratis.—AUGENER and Co., School Department, 88, Newgate-street, London.

Just published, price 1s.,

THE MOORE AND BURGESS

CHRISTMAS AND NEW-YEAR'S ALBUM FOR 1882.

THE BEST EVER PUBLISHED.

containing Seventeen entirely New and Original Copyright Songs, by the most eminent Authors and Composers of the day, with the full Choruses and Pianoforte Accompaniments.

Post-free, 14 stamps. Address Manager, Publishing Department, St. James's Hall, London.

No less than eight of the above songs are introduced into the Holiday Programme.

COLDS CURED BY

DR. DUNBAR'S ALKARAM, or

Anti-Catarrh Snelling-Bottle.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

ALKARAM.

THE LATE MR. GEORGE EDMUND STREET, R.A., ARCHITECT.

NEW BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS.

THE PORTFOLIO. Edited by P. G. HAMERTON. Containing Three Plates and numerous minor illustrations. Price 2s. 6d.

THE PORTFOLIO for JANUARY contains Reynolds' Portrait of Mrs. Chambers, reproduced by Dujardin, from the Mezzotint by J. McNeill.

THE RUINED ABBEYS OF YORKSHIRE. A Series of Papers by Mr. W. Chambers, appearing in the "Portfolio," 1892. The January Number contains an Etching of St. Mary's Abbey, York, by A. Brunet Debaines, and minor illustrations.

HOLBEIN.—The PORTFOLIO for JANUARY contains an Article on Holbein by Mr. F. G. Stephens, with illustrations.

WILLIAM MÜLLER.—The PORTFOLIO for JANUARY contains an Article on Müller by Mr. W. Chambers, with an Etching by Mr. C. O. Murray, and minor illustrations.

STEEL ENGRAVINGS.—The PORTFOLIO, 1892, will contain "A Souvenir of Velasquez," by J. E. Millais, R.A., Engraved by Lamb; "A Midsummer Night's Dream," by the late P. P. Poole, R.A., Engraved by Francis Holl; and other Plates.

PEN DRAWINGS.—The PORTFOLIO, 1892, will contain, occasionally, Reproductions, by Arnold Durrant, of Pen Drawings by well-known Artists.

THE ITALIAN SCULPTORS of the RENAISSANCE. by Professor Colvin, with Illustrations, will be Published in the PORTFOLIO, 1892.

ORNAMENT. By H. H. Statham. A Series of Papers now Publishing in the PORTFOLIO, with Illustrations.

ETCHINGS.—The PORTFOLIO, 1892, will contain Two Etchings of the Interior of Westminster Abbey, by H. T. Statham; an Etching by Mr. J. L. Steele, from a Drawing by Mrs. A. H. Statham; and Plates by Mr. Ernest George, Mr. L. H. Litheridge, and others.

THE PORTFOLIO for 1892 will contain Articles by Professor Church, Miss Julia Cartwright, the Editor, and others.

THE PORTFOLIO. An Artistic Periodical, Edited by P. G. HAMERTON, containing each month three large Plates and numerous minor illustrations.

THE PORTFOLIO. Printed on fine hand-made paper, with two impressions of each Plate, one being a proof on Japanese Paper. Subscription for the year, £10.

SEELEY and Co., 54, Fleet-street, London.

SMITH, ELDER, and CO.'S NEW BOOKS. Now ready. Second Edition, with a Portrait, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

EXTRACTS FROM THE WRITINGS OF W. M. THACKERAY. Chiefly Philosophical and Recreative.

TANTLER'S SISTER AND OTHER UNTRUEFUL STORIES. Being a Collection of Pieces written for Public Reading. By EDWARD F. TUBNER, Author of "T. Leaves."

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

A GRAPE FROM A THORN. By JAMES PAYN, Author of "By Proxy," &c. 3 vols., post 8vo.

IN THE SPRINGTIME. By I. HENDERSON-BROWN. 3 vols., post 8vo.

FAITH AND UNFAITH. By the Author of "Phyllis," "Molly Bawn," "Mrs. Geoffrey," &c. 3 vols., post 8vo.

POOR ARCHIE'S GIRLS. By KATHLEEN KNOX. 3 vols., post 8vo. [This day.] London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 15, Waterloo-place.

THE NEW TECHNICAL MONTHLY MAGAZINE. HELP AND GUIDANCE FOR SELF-HELPERS. The Second Edition of Part II. Now ready, price 6d.

AMATEUR WORK, ILLUSTRATED. A New Practical Magazine of Constructive and Decorative Art and Manual Labour. Edited by the Author of "Every Man his Own Mechanic."

Among the contents of Part II. will be found—
1. A SIDEBOARD for the DINING-ROOM. Illustrated.
2. HOW TO BUILD A SMALL ORGAN. Eight illustrations.
3. A NEW STYLE OF STAINED GLASS WINDOWS. With Three Illustrations.

4. PHOTOGRAPHY: its Principles and Practice. By Thomas Dunman. With Two Illustrations.
5. MODELLING IN CLAY. With Six Illustrations.
6. LATHES-MAKING for AMATEURS. By Paul N. Hasluck. With Two Illustrations.

7. A CHEST OF DRAWERS in MINIATURE. With Eight Illustrations.
8. THE REPRODUCTION OF COINS and MEDALS.
9. VIOLIN-MAKING. By E. H. Allen. Fifteen illustrations.
10. ELECTRO-PLATING at HOME. By G. Edmondson. With Ten Illustrations.

11. BOOTS and SHOES: How to Make and Mend Them. By A. Earnshaw. With Two Illustrations.
12. HOUSHOLD CLOCKS: How to Adjust, Clean, and Repair Them. By Paul N. Hasluck. With Two Illustrations.
13. DECORATIVE WORK for BRUSH and CHISEL.
14. NOTES on NOVELTIES. By the Editor. Illustrated.

With Part II. is PRESENTED GRATIS a valuable SUPPLEMENT, containing THIRTEEN ILLUSTRATIONS, exhibiting DESIGNS for DECORATIVE WORK of various kinds—Painting on China, Carving in Wood, and Enrichment of Surfaces.

Spectator Copy, with Supplement, post-free, 6d. (The Third Edition of Part II. is also Now Ready.) Parts I and II., post free, 1s. London: WARD, LOCK, and Co., Salisbury-square, E.C.

PRACTICAL LESSONS IN PAINTING ON CHINA, PORCELAIN, &c. By Madame de BAHONNE DELAMARDELLE. From the French by Gustave A. Bouvier. Fifth Edition. Price 1s.; post-free, 1s. 1d. London: LECHESTER, PARS, and Co., 80, Regent-street, W.

BEST ROSES, best Flowers of all kinds, best Fruits, best Vegetables, described, classified, and sorted, as to price and particular uses in the GARDEN ORACLE, which contains a complete Key to the Management of the Garden &c. whole year round. "Gardener's Magazine" Edition, 4, Ave Maria-lane, London, E.C.

NEW BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS.

CHATTO and WINDUS, PUBLISHERS.
NEW NOVELS AT EVERY LIBRARY.

GOD AND THE MAN. By ROBERT BUCHANAN. 3 vols. "A beautiful piece of literary composition, to be read with admiration and laid aside with regret. This execution is so powerful, so dramatic, so picturesque, so impressive, that only a master could have attained to it."—Illustrated London News.

THE COMET OF A SEASON. By JUSTIN MCCARTHY. 3 vols. "From the first page to the last, bright, clever, and thoroughly interesting."—Academy.

A HEART'S PROBLEM. By CHARLES GIBBON. 2 vols. "A story which cannot fail to delight; a novel to be read and read again."—Spectator.

THE BRIDE'S PASS. By SARAH TYTLER. 2 vols. "We gladly note the exquisite quality of the character-studies, the perfection of artistic description, and the high and noble tone of refined morality."—Literary World.

JOSEPH'S COAT. By DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY. 8 vols. "A good and vigorous novel, showing great power, exceedingly clever, full of dramatic situations carefully and thoughtfully conceived, and with the interest well sustained up to the very last page."—Vanity Fair.

CAVALRY LIFE; or, Sketches and Stories In Barracks and Out. By J. S. WINTER. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

VIGNETTES FROM NATURE. By GRANT ALLEN. Author of "The Evolutionist at Large." Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

HALF-HOURS WITH FOREIGN NOVELISTS. With Notices of their Lives and Writings. By HELEN and ALICE ZIMMER. A New Edition, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s.

TUNIS; the Land and the People. By the Chevalier VON HESSE-ARTEGG. With numerous fine illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 3s.

NEW NOVEL BY AUTHORS OF "READY-MONEY MONTHLY."

BESANT and RICE'S NEW STORY, ALL SORTS AND CONDITIONS OF MEN. Is begun in the JANUARY NUMBER of BELGRAVIA (price One Shilling, illustrated), which Number contains also stories by OLIVER, WILKIE COLLINS, Mrs. ALEXANDER, and Mrs. MACQUOID.

JULIAN HAWTHORNE'S New Story, DUST. Is begun in the JANUARY Number of the GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE. Price One Shilling.

JAMES PAYN'S NEW WORK. SOME PRIVATE VIEWS. By JAMES PAYN, Author of "By Proxy," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. Chatto and Windus, Piccadilly, W.

THE PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTHOOD OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE FOR 1892. By JOSEPH FOSTER.

In a few days. In one or two volumes, royal 8vo, cloth gilt, price 42s. The Peerage or Baronetage separate, each 21s. The THIRD EDITION, revised, contains the new creations, has been considerably enlarged, and carefully corrected through-out. It is illustrated by upwards of 1400 engravings of Arms, &c., and contains fuller pedigrees than other work. Westminster: NICHOLS and SONS, 25, Parliament-street. CHAPMAN and HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta-street, W.C.

CANON FARRAR'S In Monthly Parts, price 7d.

LIFE AND WORK OF ST. PAUL. ILLUSTRATED THROUGHOUT. Part I. ready Jan. 23, 1892.

(To be Completed in about 10 Parts.) With Part I. will be issued a MAP in COLOURS, showing St. Paul's First Missionary Journey, and with Part II. will be issued a complete SET of ENGRAVING FRONTSPIECES, forming the Title-page to the Work.

N.B.—In order to prevent disappointment, intending subscribers are requested to register their orders at the booksellers' at once.

Prospectuses are now ready at all Booksellers, and will be forwarded post-free on application to the Publishers. CASSELL, PETER, GALPIN, and Co., Ludgate-hill, London.

NEW AND POPULAR NOVELS. Now ready, at all the Libraries, in 3 vols.

THE QUESTION OF CAIN. By Mrs. CASHIF. HOEY.

STRANGE CHAPMAN. W. MARSHALL, B.A., Author of "Monsell Digby," &c.

THE SILVER LINK. By Mrs. HOUSTOUN, Author of "Recommended to Mercy."

TIME AND CHANCE. By Mrs. TOM KELLY. Second Edition. HURST and BLACKETT, Publishers, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

FOR SCHOOL AND HOME TUITION. Price 1s.

FIRST BOOK OF KNOWLEDGE. By Professor F. GUTHRIE, F.R.S., of South Kensington.

This book gives in the simplest language and accurate account of every day objects. Those things that are around the child in the house, the clothes he wears, the food he eats, are fully treated of, described, and explained.

Parents and Teachers who desire to teach children the valuable habit of observation will find this book the best that there is for that purpose. London: MARCUS WARD and Co., 67, Chandos-street, W.C.

PRICE ONE PENNY.

THE BOYS' ILLUSTRATED NEWS, the Journal for Boys issued by THE PROPRIETORS OF THE "ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS."

Is published every Wednesday; and abounds with interesting fact and fiction, bountifully illustrated.

CAPTAIN MAYNE REID, on Wednesday, Jan. 6, began the entrancing story of "THE SCALP-HUNTERS," specially adapted by the veteran Romance Writer for THE BOYS' ILLUSTRATED NEWS.

This fascinating Romance is being illustrated by Maitron Paris, the Special War Artist of the "Illustrated London News."

THE BOYS' ILLUSTRATED NEWS was Altered to a Handier Size; the number of pages was increased from twelve to sixteen; and contained several Fresh Attractions in the New Year's Number, Jan. 6, 1892.

Post-free to any part of England, Europe, United States of America, Canada, and Egypt, for One Year, 6s. 6d.; to India, Ceylon, China, and Japan, for One Year, 10s. 10d. Elsewhere Abroad, One Year, 12s. 6d.

All subscriptions must be paid in advance direct by Post-Office Order, payable at the East Strand Post Office, to Thomas Fox, 10, Millford-lane, Strand, London.

SKIN DISEASES TREATED HOMOEOPATHICALLY. By WASHINGTON EPPS. L.R.C.P. 100 cases, including 40 distinct varieties of skin diseases.—London: JAMES EPPS and Co., 48, Threadneedle-street.

JUST PUBLISHED, post-free, 2 stamps.

DYSPEPSIA and the SEVERER FORMS OF INDIGESTION. A small pamphlet on these distressing complaints and their complete cure. Published by the Author, RICHARD KING, Esq., Staff Surgeon R.N., 21, Warwick-st., Rugby.

NEW BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS.

SECOND EDITION of the ARGOSY for JANUARY, containing the Opening Chapters of MRS. RAVEN'S TEMPTATION.

Second Edition now ready of MRS. HENRY WOOD'S MAGAZINE.

THE ARGOSY for JANUARY. CONTENTS.

1. Mrs. Raven's Temptation. A new Illustrated Serial Story. Chap. I.—At the White Hart. Chap. II.—Mother and Son. Chap. III.—In the Moonlight. Chap. IV.—Family Jars. Illustrated by Robert Barnes.
2. A Mystery. By Johnny Ludlow.
3. An Esthetic. With an Illustration.
4. The Spirit of the Year. By G. B. Stuart.
5. In the Black Forest. By Charles W. Wood. With Six Illustrations.
6. God speed and Welcome. By G. B. Stuart.
7. Checkmate in Ten Moves. By Anna H. Drury.

"The Argosy" is the best and cheapest of our magazines.—Standard.

THE ARGOSY.—"The Argosy" is laden with golden grains of amusement. There is no monthly magazine gives greater pleasure."—Oxford University Herald.

THE ARGOSY.—"Interesting and sparkling as ever."—Yarmouth Gazette.

THE ARGOSY.—"Bright and charming."—Bath Chronicle.

THE ARGOSY.—"The Argosy" gives us charming tales."—Sydney Observer.

THE ARGOSY.—"The best illustrated of all our Magazines."—Dublin Evening Mail.

THE ARGOSY.—"Excellent, as usual; and no reader can wish for better."—British Mail.

THE ARGOSY.—"There is considerable merit in Johnny Ludlow. Freshness of description in the scenes of country life and country people."—Saturday Review.

AN ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE. Sixpence Monthly. Second Edition now ready for January.

RICHARD BENTLEY and SON, New Burlington-street, London, W.

MYRA'S MID-MONTHLY JOURNAL. Price 6d.; by post, 8d. (Published on the 15th of each Month.) The Novelties for JANUARY are:—

1. Coloured Fashion Plate. Patterns of 14 French dresses for a Boy or Girl; (2) The Nina Paleto for a Girl of seven; (3) The Alwina Casquer; (4) Infant's Shirt. 2. Cut-out Paper Patterns of the Violette Jacket for a Girl of five. 3. The Silkwork's Gift. Diagram Sheet containing Patterns for a Doll's Ball Toilette. 4. La Mode in Paris: Our Children. Notes on 5. Myra's Answers, London Modes, Dress, Health and Personal Attention. 6. Myra's Mid-Monthly Journal. 7. Illustrations of the Newest Modes in costumes, Toilettes, Paletoes, and Chapeaux for Children. 8. Illustrations of the Newest Modes in costumes, Toilettes, Paletoes, and Chapeaux for Children. 9. Illustrations of the Newest Modes in costumes, Toilettes, Paletoes, and Chapeaux for Children. 10. Illustrations of the Newest Modes in costumes, Toilettes, Paletoes, and Chapeaux for Children.

MYRA'S MID-MONTHLY JOURNAL contains information upon all the newest Modes for Ladies and for Children, from infants to fourteen years of age. Price 6d.; by post, 8d.

GOUBAUD and SON, 39 and 40, Bedford-street, London, W.C.

NEW PHOTOGRAPHIC ALBUMS. THE RENAISSANCE ALBUM: "A Charming Present."—Fall Mail Gazette.

THE ELEGANT ALBUM: "An Elegant Album."—Morning Post. THE ALEXANDRIA ALBUM: "Of very high finish."—Illustrated News.

MARION'S STUDENT'S PHOTOGRAPHIC APPARATUS, complete, a Marvel of Cheapness. MARION'S ACADEMY CAMERA, complete with Twelve Prepared Plates, 42s.

AMATEURS' NEGATIVES printed, enlarged, and reproduced. Collections of Photographs Completed, Mounted, and Bound. Manx and Co., 22 and 23, Soho-square, London.

ELKINGTON and CO. ELECTRO PLATE. SILVER PLATE. CLOCKS and BRONZES.

ELKINGTON and CO. TESTIMONIAL PLATE. "STILVER," &c. Illustrated Catalogues post-free.

ELKINGTON and CO., 22, Regent-st.; or 42, Moorgate-st., City.

THE SEWELL'S KEYLESS WATCHES. Prize Medals, London, Paris, and Philadelphia. Damp and Dust-proof, 16-carat cases, adjusted and compensated for all climates, £10 10s., £14 10s., and £18 10s.; £7 7s., £10 10s., and £14 10s.; in silver cases, for Ladies or Gentlemen, £3 6s., £4 6s., and £5 6s. Forwarded on receipt of remittance. J. SEWELL, 30, Cornhill, London; and 61, South Castle-street, Liverpool. Illustrated Catalogue free.

WALKER'S CRYSTAL CASE WATCHES are surpassing all others. Prize Medals—London, 1862; Paris, 1867. Silver Watches from £4 4s.; Gold, from £6 6s. Lists sent free.—77, Cornhill; 230, Regent-st.; and 78, Strand.

JEWEL ROBBERIES PREVENTED. J. TANN'S "ANCHOR RELIANCE" SAFES have never failed to resist the most determined Burglars. FIRE-RESISTING SAFES, £5 5s. Lists free. 11, Newgate-street, London.

VITREMANIE, superseding Diaphanie. An easy and inexpensive method of decorating windows in churches, public buildings, and private houses, by which may be produced the rich colouring and beautiful designs equal in appearance to real stained glass. Handbook of Designs and full instructions, 1s. 3d. Boxes, comprising designs, &c., at 21s., 31s. 6d., 42s. Particulars post-free. Sole Inventors, J. BARNARD and SON, 233 (late 339), Oxford-street, London, W.

CHROMOPHOTOGRAPHY. The New Art (KRAUS' PROCESS.) without previous knowledge of either Painting or Drawing to Colour Photographs on convex glasses, in imitation of China and Enamel Painting. Boxes containing every requisite, 26s. and 30s. Particulars post-free. Specimens shown on application at the Sole Agents, J. BARNARD and SON, 233, Oxford-street, London, W.

CLARKE'S CONJURING TRICKS are the Best and Cheapest. Great Egg Trick, post-free for 14 stamps. Funny Little Vanishing Man, 20 stamps. Magic Cup and Flying Hat, 20 stamps.

H. G. CLARKE and CO., 2, Garrick-street, Covent-garden.

PRATT'S WATER PAD TRUSSES are the MOST EFFECTUAL CURE FOR RUPTURES. PRATT'S ELASTIC STOCKINGS, for VARICOSE VEINS, &c.

Surgical Mechanism to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, 43 (late 420), OXFORD-STREET, LONDON.

NO MEDICINE for the CURE OF ASTHMA, Consumption, Coughs, and Bronchitis was ever attended with such speedy and unflinching success as Dr. LOCKE'S PULMONIC WAFERS.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA. The best remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Indigestion, Gout, and Rheumatism, and a safe and efficient for delicate constitutions, Ladies and Children. Of all Chemists.

THE PERFECTION OF PREPARED COCOA.

TAYLOR BROTHERS'

"MARAVILLA" COCOA.

Sold in tin-lined Packets only, by all Grocers.

TAYLOR BROTHERS call the attention of consumers to the high sustaining and nutritive powers possessed by MARAVILLA COCOA and MARAVILLA COCOA ESSENCE. These articles being prepared with great judgment and skill from the choicest growths of the Trinidad and South American estates, compare advantageously with the productions offered by other houses, and a trial is strongly recommended before a preference is finally given to any other description.

TAYLOR BROTHERS, MARAVILLA, HOMOEPATHIC, ROCK, FLAKE, AND PEARL COCOA MANUFACTURERS, Brick-lane and Wentworth-street Steam Mills, Spitalfields, London.

"A PURE COCOA OF THE CONSISTENCY OF TEA."

TAYLOR BROTHERS'

"MARAVILLA" COCOA ESSENCE.

Sold in Tins and tin-lined Packets only, by all Grocers.

CHOCOLAT MENIER. Awarded the GRAND DIPLOMA OF HONOUR.

CHOCOLAT MENIER, in 1 lb. and 1/2 lb. packets. For BREAKFAST and AFTER.

CHOCOLAT MENIER.—Awarded Twenty PRIZE MEDALS. Consumption annually exceeds 15,000,000 lbs.

CHOCOLAT MENIER. Paris, London, New York. Sold Everywhere.

SCHWEITZER'S COCOATINA. Anti-Dyspeptic Cocoa or Chocolate Powder. Guaranteed Pure Soluble Cocoa, with excess of Fat extracted. Four times the strength of Cocoa Thickened yet Weakened with Arrowroot, starch, &c.

The faculty pronounce it the most nutritious, perfectly digestive Beverage for "BREAKFAST, LUNCHEON, or SUPPER." Keeps in all Climates. Requires no Cooking. A teaspoonful to Breakfast Cup, cooling less than a halfpenny. Samples gratis. In Air-Tight Tins, at 1s. 6d., 3s., &c., by Chemists and Grocers. H. SCHWEITZER and CO., 10, Adam-street, London, W.C.

FRY'S FRY'S CARACAS COCOA. "A most delicious and valuable article."—Standard.

COCOA. PURE COCOA ONLY. "Strictly pure."—W. W. STODART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol. FIFTEEN PRIZE MEDALS.

EPPS'S CHOCOLATE ESSENCE. If cocoa seeds as imported are roasted, then broken up into "milk"—small pieces—and subjected to very high pressure in an hydraulic press, they give out a large percentage of their oil or butter, which is removed, and the remaining constituents of the milk fall into powder—Chocolate Essence. This absolute cocoa is left unwatered. It possesses an alkali-environment principle allied to that contained in tea or coffee. It should be boiled like coffee, and affords a beverage of the same consistency. Unaffected by climate. Each packet (6d. or 1s.) or tin (6d., 1s., 2s., 3s., 4s., or 7s. 6d.) is labelled "James Epps and Co., Homoeopathic Chemists, London."

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR IS A WORLD-WIDE NECESSARY.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR FOR THE NURSERY.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR FOR THE FAMILY TABLE.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR FOR THE SICK ROOM.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR HAS A WORLD-WIDE REPUTATION.

BORWICK'S BAKING POWDER, for Bread, Cakes, Pies, and Puddings. BORWICK'S BAKING POWDER. Four Gold Medals. 600,000 Packages Sold Weekly.

GENUINE DUBLIN WHISKY. THE MOST WHOLESOME OF ALL SPIRITS.

DUBLIN WHISKY, Distilled by Messrs. JOHN JAMESON and SON, GEORGE ROE and CO., WILLIAM JAMESON and CO., and JOHN POWER and SON, can be obtained in Wood by wholesale merchants and dealers, direct from their respective distilleries.

CHAS. CODD'S ORANGE CHAMPAGNE is made simply from oranges. It is a light and wholesome tonic, and being free from chemicals as well as spirit, it is the purest and best of the non-alcoholic drinks. Price, in London, in large Champagne bottles, 7s. per dozen; in small, 4s. Bottles charged 2s., and same allowed when returned.—C. Codd and Co., 78, Copehagen-street, London. Sold by all Grocers, Chemists, and Wine Merchants.

USED IN HIGHEST CIRCLES. The most Beloved Luxury of the Toilet. WHITE, SOUND, BEAUTIFUL TEETH ENSURED.

THE ORIENTAL TOOTH PASTE, JEWELLERY and BROWN'S. PRESERVES TEETH and GUMS to OLD AGE. Gives Fragrance to the breath. AN GENUINE ORIENTAL TOOTH PASTE. Signed JEWELLERY and BROWN'S. All Chemists. 10s., 1s. 6d. and 2s. 9d. Keeps perfect in every climate.

BLAIR'S GOUT PILLS, THE GREAT REMEDY FOR GOUT AND RHEUMATISM. Sold by all Chemists, at 1s. 10d. and 2s. 9d. per Box.

NEW MUSIC.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW DANCE

Nearest and Dearest Waltz	D'Albert.
Patience Waltz and Quadrille	D'Albert.
Patience Lancers and Polka	D'Albert.
Olivette Waltz and Quadrille	D'Albert.
Olivette Lancers and Polka	D'Albert.
Drink, Popsy, Drink, Polka	D'Albert.
Venice Waltz	Caroline Lowthian.
Je T'Aime Valse	Waldteufel.
Mother Hubbard Polka	Caroline Lowthian.

Price 2s. each net.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW SONGS.

Just as of old	Madame Sainton Dolby.
Gates of the West	Caroline Lowthian.
Shepherdess' Song	Alice Borton.
When all the world is young	Alice Borton.
Lad	Alice Borton.
Soft, soft wind from out the	Alice Borton.
sweet South	Alice Borton.
Margaret to Doinco	Alice Borton.
Doinco to Margaret	Alice Borton.
The Reason Why	F. Cowen.
In youth's season	F. Cowen.
My Beloved	Pianist.
In the twilight of our love	A. Sullivan.
(Drawing-room version of "Silver'd is the raven hair" from "Patience")
Two's the best of company	Miss A. M. Wakefield.
When the heart is far away	Miss A. M. Wakefield.

Price 2s. each net.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW PIANOFORTE

Janotha	Valse Brillante	2s. 6d. net.
Janotha	Gavotte	2s. 6d. net.
Lord Duppiln	Gavotte	2s. 6d. net.
Jules de Sival	Handelian Dance	2s. 6d. net.
Cotesford Dick	Chorus of the Hunt (Fantasia on Whyte-Melville's Hunting Song)	2s. 6d. net.
Smallwood	Allegretto a la Rigodon	1s. 6d. net.

WHYTE-MELVILLE'S HUNTING

A HUM ONE TO FOLLOW, A BAD ONE TO BEAT.
 E. B. TERRY. 2s. net.
 THE GOOD GREY-MARE. THEO. MARZIALS. 2s. net.
 THE GALLOPING SQUIRE. E. B. TERRY. 2s. net.
 THE CLIPPER THAT STANDS IN THE STALL AT THE TOP. J. L. HATTON. 2s. net.
 DRINK, PUPPY, DRINK. 2s. net.
 CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street; and 15, Poultry.

ECHOES OF THE HUNT. A Transcription

for the Pianoforte of Whyte-Melville's Hunting Song, "Drink, Puppy, Drink." "The Clipper that Stands in the Stall at the Top," and "The Galloping Squire." By COTESFORD DICK. Price 2s. net.
 CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street; and 15, Poultry.

PATIENCE. An Aesthetic Opera. By

W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN. Now being performed at the Savoy Theatre with enormous success.
 Libretto 1s.
 Vocal Score 2s.
 Pianoforte Solo 3s.
 All the following sent post-free for half price.

PIANOFORTE ARRANGEMENTS.

Boyton Smith's Fantasia	4s.
Kube's Fantasia	4s.
Smallwood's Easy Fantasia, 1, 2, 3	each 3s.
Fred. Godfrey's Grand Selection. (As played by all the Military Bands)	4s.
Disco, as a Duo	5s.

MRS. L. MONCRIEFF'S NEW SONGS.

"T'WAS ONLY A YEAR AGO, LOVE."
 A CRUEL LOVE SONG.
 THOUGHTS AT SUNRISE.
 Price 2s. each net.
 CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street, W.; and 15, Poultry, E.C.

CHAPPELL and CO. have ON VIEW

Every description of PIANOFORTES by the best makers, returned from hire, to be sold at greatly reduced prices for cash; or may be purchased on the Three Years' System.

CHAPPELL PIANOFORTES, from

15 guineas.

COLLARD PIANOFORTES, from

50 guineas.

ERARD PIANOFORTES, from 40 guineas.

BROADWOOD PIANOFORTES, from

55 guineas.

FOREIGN PIANOFORTES, from

30 guineas. Lists on application.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM of HIRE of PIANOFORTES, HARMONIUMS, and AMERICAN ORGANS, by which the instrument becomes the property of the HIRER at the end of the third year, provided each quarter's hire shall have been regularly paid in advance. Pianofortes from 2s. 6d. HARMONIUMS from 1s. 6d.; and American Organs, from 1s. 6d. a Quarter.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S PIANINOS, from

30 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S Iron Framed

Oblique PIANOS for extreme climates, from 35 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S Early English

PIANOFORTES, artistically designed Ebonyed Cases, from 45 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S Iron Double

Overstrung PIANOFORTES. Check Actions, &c., from 60 guineas.

CHICKERING PIANOFORTES, from

130 guineas, with American discount.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ALEXANDRE

HARMONIUMS, for Church, Schools, or Drawing-Rooms, from 5 to 150 guineas; or, on the Three-Years' System, from 1s. 6d. per quarter.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S IMPROVED

AMERICAN ORGANS, combining Pipes with Reeds, Manufactured by Clough and Warren, Detroit, U.S.A. A large variety on view, from 18 to 250 guineas. Price-Lists on application to CHAPPELL and CO.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S PET ORGAN,

Seven Stops, including Sub-bass and Octave Coupler. Elegant Carved Walnut Case. 18 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S Favourite

ORGAN. Five octaves, ten stops, four sets of reeds, two knee swell, elegant carved Canadian walnut case, price 25 guineas. With twelve stops, sub-bass octave coupler, and two knee pedals, 30 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S CENTENNIAL

GRAND ORGAN, 15 Stops, 9 Sets of Reeds, and Combination Tubes, 55 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S GRAND

ORGAN MODEL. Two claviars, two and a half octave of pedals, twenty-three stops, seventeen sets of reeds, elegant diapered pipes, solid walnut case. 225 guineas. The most perfect American organ manufactured. Illustrated List, post-free.

INSTRUMENTS by ALL MAKERS may be

HIRE or PURCHASED on the Three-Years' System. CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street. City Branch, 15, Poultry, E.C.

A LARGE DISCOUNT TO PURCHASERS

FOR CASH. CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street. City Branch, 15, Poultry, E.C.

NEW MUSIC.

THE SONGS OF SCANDINAVIA (100

Songs).
 THE SONGS OF EASTERN EUROPE (83 Songs), all with English words. "We must say that no musical library is complete without these books. 'The Songs of Eastern Europe' contains a very valuable collection of folk-songs from the hitherto untouched wealth of the Austrian provinces."—Daily Telegraph.
 HAMILTON TIGHE. Cantata. By GEORGE FOX. For Baritone, Soprano, and Chorus. Price 1s.
 HAMILTON TIGHE, Words from the "Ingoldby Legends," occupies twenty minutes in performance. Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

THE MASCOTTE, complete with English

Words, 7s. 6d.; complete for Pianoforte, 2s. 6d.

THE MASCOTTE LANCERS, Polka, and

Galop. By COOTE. 2s. each.

THE MASCOTTE VALSE.

By WALDEUFEL. 2s.

THE MASCOTTE QUADRILLE.

By METRA. 2s.
 Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S NEW SONGS.

THE MILLER AND THE MAID. By

MARZIALS. Sung by Miss Mary Davies. 2s.

THE MILLER AND THE MAID.

"Cannot fail to become popular. It tells a simple story with quaintness and piquancy, and the music in all respects comports with the words."—Daily Telegraph.

THE LITTLE HERO. BY STEPHEN

ADAMS. Sung by Mr. Maybrick. 2s.

THE LITTLE HERO. "The Little Hero"

was received with extraordinary enthusiasm, and may be depended upon as a winning card all through the season."—Daily Telegraph. "The Little Hero" was again the hero of the evening."—World.

THE VIKINGS' SONG. BY STEPHEN

ADAMS. Sung by Signor Poli. 2s.

SANTLEY'S NEW SONGS.

TO ALTHEA FROM PRISON. By MAUDE

VALERIE WHITE. Words by Richard Lovelace, 1818.

GIPSY JOHN. By FREDERIC CLAY.

THE BARKSHIRE TRAGEDY. By BEHREND.

THE BOATSWAIN'S STORY. By

MOLLOY.

THE ANGELS' CALL. By MAX SILNY.

Sung by Miss Mary Davies at the Norwich Festival, and the Ballad Courts. Published, with and without violin accompaniment, 2s.
 Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

B. WILLIAMS'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

BETROTHAL OF THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES PRINCE

LEOPOLD AND PRINCESS HELENA.

PRINCESS HELENE OF WALDECK

PYRMONT. Suite de Valses. Par GEORGES LAMOTHE.

PRINCESS HELENE. Suite de Valses.

WEIT VON DIR (Far from Thee). Waltzer.

By OSCAR SEYDEL.

AUF IMMER (For Ever). By OSCAR

SEYDEL. The favour with which this waltz has been already received bids fair to outstrip the celebrated "Weit von Dir" in popularity.

THE ZEPHYR. Polka. By L.

WILLIAMS. Increasingly popular.

NEW SONGS by ODOARDO BARRI.

THE DREAM OF THE OLD SACRISTAN (for Bass and Baritone). Sung by Robert Hilton.

THE OLDEN TIME (in G and E flat). Sung by Arthur Oswald.

LOVE KNOTS (F to G). Sung by Harper Kearton.

A ROYAL EXCHANGE (E to F). Sung by Miss Jessie Royd.

THE CHALLENGE (No. 1 in C, No. 2

in E flat). By HUMPHREY J. STARK.

THE BUGLER, in D, F, and G. CIRO

PINSUTI. Sung by Mr. Thureley Beale. Each of the above 2s. net.

A NEW SERIA BUFFA CANTATA, entitled

GABRIEL GRUB. Adapted from Charles Dickens's story in "Pickwick" by Frederic Wood; Music by GEORGE FOX. 2s. 6d. net.
 London: B. WILLIAMS, 90, Paternoster-row.

AUNTIE. Weatherly and BEHREND.

Sung by Madame Patey. Immensely popular. 2s. net.
 PATEY and WILLIS, 39, Great Marlborough-street, London, W.

THE LOVE CHASE. MICHAEL

WATSON.
 "One of the best hunting songs ever written."—Review.
 Complete, 1s. 2d. 2s. net.
 PATEY and WILLIS, 39, Great Marlborough-street, London, W.

A WINTER STORY. MICHAEL

WATSON.
 Sung with the greatest effect by Madame Patey.
 In E flat, F, and G. 2s. net.
 PATEY and WILLIS, 39, Great Marlborough-street, London, W.

T'WAS ONLY A YEAR AGO, LOVE.

By Whyte-Melville and LEONARD BARNES.
 "A remarkably pretty song set to charming music."—Sporting and Dramatic News. In A flat, B flat, and C. 2s. net.
 PATEY and WILLIS, 39, Great Marlborough-street, London, W.

FIDELITÉ. Valse. GEORGES LAMOTHE.

On Gatty's popular song. "True till death." 2s. net.
 PATEY and WILLIS, 39, Great Marlborough-street, London, W.

GABRIEL DAVIS'S POPULAR SONGS.

Who's for the Queen? (New Patriotic Song). Words by F. E. Weatherly. Sung by Mr. Thureley Beale 2s.
 King Carnival. Words by F. E. Weatherly 2s.
 By the River. Words by Herbert Gardner 2s.
 Elsie (The Flower-Girl's Song). Sung by Miss Ada Tolkein 2s.
 The Zingara. Sung by Miss Goss Sherrington 2s.
 The Cringing Year. Words by Isaac Alfond 2s.
 The Old Meadow Gate. Words by R. Richardson 2s.
 London: NOVELLO, EWER, and Co., 1, Berners-street, W.; and 80 and 81, Queen-street, E.C.

HARROW SCHOOL MUSIC.

By JOHN FARMER.
 Christ and His Soldiers. Oratorio. 2s.; cloth, 4s.
 Part-Songs for Public Schools. 2 vols. 1s. 6d. each.
 Harrow Glens. 2 vols. 4s. each. Harrow Songs. 2 vols. 4s. each.
 Singing Quadrilles. Four Sets. Waltzes. Two Sets. 1s. each.
 London: NOVELLO and Co., Harrow; J. C. WILKES.

ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST.

G. A. MACFARREN'S ORATORIO. This celebrated Work is published in the Tonic Sol-Fa notation, as well as in the usual form. All applications for its performance to be made to the Publishers. Orchestral Parts can be had on Hire. Chorus Parts—Soprano and Alto, 7d. each; Tenor and Bass, 1s. Full Score, One Guinea: Vocal Scores, 4s.; bound, 6s.
 STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, and Co., 84, New Bond-street, W.

TO LADIES.—SALE OF NEW MUSIC, at a large reduction. Popular Songs, Pieces, &c., sent post-free at 6d., 1s., 2s., &c. Best editions, new copies, all publishers. Catalogues sent post-free. J. W. MORFATT, 3, Barnsbury-street, London, N. Established 1877.

BUTLER'S MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Violins, Concertinas, Harmoniums, Pianos, Flutes, Clarinets, Flageolets, Horns, Bells, Accordians, Flutinas, Cornets, Drums, and Band Instruments. Largest Assortment in the Kingdom at G. BUTLER'S, 29, Haymarket, London. Illustrated Catalogue, 50 pages, post-free.

NEW MUSIC.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS'S LIST OF NEW

AND POPULAR MUSIC.

FAITHFUL FOR EVERMORE. A

BALLAD. Price 2s. net. M.S.
 Do you remember the wild, weird music
 Sung by the waves on the shore?
 Do you remember the old brave promise,
 "Faithful for evermore?"
 Verse by Mary Mark Lemon; Music by SUCHET CHAMPION.

THE CHILD'S LETTER TO HEAVEN.

Song. C. and S.
 Words by Frank W. Green; Music by W. C. LEVEY.
 A most effective song for both drawing-room and concert-hall.
 Price 2s. net.

NEW DRAWING-ROOM DITTY.

MORE THAN ONE (High Baritone or Tenor). Price 2s. net. Words by Henry S. Leigh; Music by HAMILTON CLARK.

GOOD SONGS FOR CHRISTMAS-TIME.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS; or, Memories of the Cradle. "A comic ditty, commenting on the numerous virtues of Emma Jane." Written and composed by HENRY S. LEIGH. Net 1s. 6d.

WINTER EVERGREENS

(Mezzo-Soprano or Baritone). Price 2s. net.
 Words by Carpenter. Music by GLOVER.

IN DAYS OF OLD (Baritone).

Price 1s. 6d. net.
 Words by Bellamy; Music by J. L. HATTON.

GOOD DANCE MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS-TIME.

POLKAS.
 THE FLIRT DARWIN 3s.
 FIRST KISS FARMER 3s.
 ROSE OF THE VALLEY FARMER 3s.

VALSES.

SUZANNE GRENVILLE 4s.
 BILLIE TAYLOR GODFREY 4s.
 FIRST LOVE FARMER 4s.

QUADRILLES.

BILLIE TAYLOR COOTE 4s.
 CHRISTMAS FARMER 4s.
 LITTLE FAIRIES FARMER 4s.

Free by post, half price.

NEW POLKA. NEW POLKA.

A TON BRAS. By T. RIEFFLER.
 This capital Polka, now the rage in Paris, has been purchased by J. Williams. English Edition now ready, post-free, 1s. stamps.

SUNG BY ARTHUR ROBERTS.

THE GOOD YOUNG MAN WHO DIED.
 An Aesthetic Lay. Words by H. P. Stephens; Music by E. SOLOMON. Post-free, 2s. stamps.
 May be sung in public without fee by all singers.

SUNG BY ARTHUR ROBERTS.

YOU OUGHT TO KNOW BETTER
 THAN THAT. Words, Sidney Grundy; Music, E. SOLOMON. Post-free, 2s. stamps.
 "He'd a dark grey moustache, he was dres'd very flash,
 And he wore a tall chimney Pot Hat.
 A middle-aged man, Oh! for shame, Mary Ann,
 You ought to know better than that."
 May be sung in public, by all singers, without fee.

CIRO PINSUTI'S SONGS.

DREAMS, ONLY DREAMS M.S. net 2s. 6d.
 FAIRER THAN MORNING S. .. 1s. 6d.
 I LOVE MY LOVE S. & M.S. .. 2s. 0d.
 LOVE WILL SHINE ALL THROUGH C. .. 2s. 0d.
 MAIDEN'S FLOWER SONG M.S. .. 1s. 6d.
 THE OWL (Sung by Mr. Bentley) Bar. .. 2s. 0d.
 THE BAIT (Sung by Sig. Poli) B. .. 2s. 0d.
 WHAT WE HAVE LOVED WE LOVE FOR EVER M.S. .. 1s. 6d.
 WILT THOU BE MINE Bar. .. 1s. 6d.

J. L. MOLLOY'S SONGS.

LITTLE MAID OF CHINA M.S. net 2s. 6d.
 THE BIRD AND THE CROSS M.S. .. 2s. 0d.
 TOLD IN THE TWILIGHT C. .. 2s. 0d.
 BECAUSE I DO M.S. .. 2s. 0d.

TO CHORAL SOCIETIES, &c.

New Cantatas by GEORGE FOX.
 JOHN GILPIN 2s. 6d. net.
 THE MESSENGER DOVE 2s. 6d. net.
 Note.—A liberal discount allowed on a number of copies.

WESTMINSTER BELLS (A Reverie).

Pianoforte Solo. By CH. TOURVILLE. Post-free, 1s. stamps.
 "A charming morceau, in which the celebrated tones of 'Big Ben' are cleverly and artistically reproduced."

HENRY FARMER.

THE VIOLIN STUDENT (Violin and Pianoforte).
 No. 1. Largo Handel.
 2. Gavotte Schumann.
 3. Stomper Song Schumann.
 4. Stray Thought Farmer.
 5. Andantino Schubert.
 6. Minuet Boccherini.

1s. 6d. net each number.

NEW AND POPULAR SONGS.

FALLING LEAVES. COLLINGWOOD BANKS 4s.
 Sung by Mr. John Cross.
 "Exceedingly good."—Orchestra.
 THE FAIRIE KING. A. H. BEHREND 4s.
 "A very pretty song, very taking."
 WHEN ALL THE WORLD IS YOUNG. A. J. CALDICOTT 2s.
 "Has never been so well or so vocally set as by this present writer."—Orchestra.
 BRIDGET'S REPLY. ETHEL HARRADEN 4s.
 Sung by Madame Osborne Williams.
 Quaint, original, and attractive.
 GYP. CIRO PINSUTI 4s.
 "Bright and cheerful."—Illustrated London News.
 "A brilliant and taking concert song."—Orchestra.
 AT THE WINDOW. J. ROECKEL 4s.
 "A very sweet and effective song."—Orchestra.
 SWEET MARGUERITE. W. SMALLWOOD 2s.
 Very pretty and graceful, with the advantage of being easy.
 THE CHRISTMAS FAIRY. C. VINCENT 4s.
 "Of a very pleasing character, imbued with a touch of pathos."—Illustrated London News.
 Each post-free at half price in stamps.
 London: ROBERT COCKS and Co., New Burlington-street.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S PRACTICAL

PIANOFORTE SCHOOL.
 Section 1.—No. 1. PIANOFORTE TUTOR.
 Catalogue and all Particulars may be had from FORTYTH BROTHERS, London, 272, Regent-circus, Oxford-street; and 122 and 124, Deansgate, Manchester; and all Music-sellers.

DOMINION ORGAN COMPANY,

Downsville, Ontario, Canada.
 FORTYTH BROTHERS.
 Sole Agents for the United Kingdom.
 Organs from 25 to 140 guineas.
 The Tone of these Organs is superior to any yet manufactured.
 Inspection respectfully invited.
 Illustrated Catalogues post-free.
 FORTYTH BROTHERS, 272A, Regent-circus, Oxford-street, London; and 122 and 124, Deansgate, Manchester.

D'ALMAINE'S PIANOS HALF PRICE.

In consequence of a change of partnership, the whole of this splendid stock, perfected with all the improvements of the day, by this long-standing firm of 100 years' reputation, and in order to effect a speedy sale, the easiest terms arranged, with seven years' warranty. Trichord Cottages from hire, or taken in exchange, £10 to £12.
 Class 0, £14 | Class 2, £20 | Class 4, £26 | Class 6, £32
 Class 1, £17 | Class 3, £23 | Class 5, £29 | Class 7, £35
 American Organs from £5.
 91, Finsbury-pavement, Moorgate.

MUSICAL BOX DÉPÔTS, 22, Ludgate-

hill, and 38, Cheapside.—Most extensive variety in London. Large sizes, ordinary make, four airs, £2 2s.; six, £2 12s.; and eight airs, £3 3s. Ditto, by Nicole Fr

SKETCHES IN CENTRAL ASIA: A HORSE-HERD SEEKING SHELTER FROM A SNOWSTORM.—SEE PAGE 41.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.

No. 2229.—VOL. LXXX.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1882.

WITH SUPPLEMENT AND } SIXPENCE.
TITLEPAGE AND INDEX } By Post, 6d.

THE CLOISTER AVENUE, PYRMONT.

THE BRUNNEN-TEMPLE, PYRMONT.

PRINCESS HELENA OF WALDECK-PYRMONT.
BETROTHED TO PRINCE LEOPOLD, DUKE OF ALBANY.

GENERAL VIEW OF PYRMONT.—SEE PAGE 54.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

One of the Corsican Brothers is no more. M. Charles Blanc, the distinguished French Academician, art critic, and historian, and the elder brother of Louis Blanc, the renowned tribune of the people, died in Paris on Tuesday afternoon. He had long been desperately ill. English readers may gather some notion as to what manner of man was M. Charles Blanc when I say that he was the compeer of Mr. Alma Tadema and Mr. Poynter in classical art-erudition; that he had the learning of Mr. Robert Browning in all matters pertaining to the history of art; and that his art-criticisms were couched in the noble key struck by Mr. Swinburne in his essay on the genius of William Blake.

It is not unthinkingly that these parallels are drawn. Charles Blanc was very well acquainted with the condition of art-education in England, and with the labours of those British writers who have striven to elevate and to purify the national taste. He was sensible enough to recognise and to applaud the fidelity and the appreciativeness of Art teaching in the country where his brother passed so many years of dignified and respected exile. I find in the introduction to Charles Blanc's "Grammaire des Arts du Dessin," which originally appeared in the Gazette des Beaux Arts, of which he was long the editor, the following:—

Strange to say, France, which at this moment nourishes in her bosom some of the most skilful artists in the world, is, as regards the knowledge of art principles, one of the most backward nations of Europe, justly renowned as she has always been for the keenness of her judgment and the sovereignty of her taste. In England, on the other hand, books which treat of the artistic and the beautiful, are in the hands of all cultured persons. James et demoiselles have read, either in the original or in the innumerable reviews dealing with art subjects, the writings of Burke, of Hume, of Price, of Alison—the ingenious Analysis of Hogarth, and the grave Discourses of Reynolds.

Ladies and Misses—Mesdames et Mesdemoiselles—are you well "up" in your "Sublime and Beautiful," your "Principles of Taste," and your "Analysis of Beauty"? Have you read your Cumberland on ancient glyptic art, your Sir Charles Bell on the physiology of Expression, and especially your Walker on "Beauty"? It is strange that, in conceding this generous tribute to English writers on art, M. Charles Blanc should have said nothing about Mr. Ruskin.

The "Corsican Brothers" episode in Charles Blanc's life is briefly touched upon in the obituary notice in the Times. I have heard M. Louis Blanc himself tell the strange little story. The brothers were by the mother's side Corsican, and related to that Pozzo di Borgo who never forgot nor forgave Napoleon's ruthless appropriation of the gravy of a leg of mutton:—

In 1839 Charles Blanc went to visit a friend, a physician, M. Bouloumié, 150 leagues from Paris, who is now living at Vittef. There he was chatting and laughing with the party in the garden one evening, when suddenly he started up in agony and cried out that he had been struck, and at the same moment said he was sure something had happened to his brother Louis. The next day a letter came telling him that his brother had been struck down in the street at nightfall by a blow across the forehead. The story was afterwards related by Louis Blanc to Alexandre Dumas, and was, as we know, adopted by him.

The fact that Alexander Dumas père was able to write the novel of "Les Frères Corscs" (whence was taken the French melodrama of the same name), rather enhances than detracts from the fame of the author of "Monte Christo" as an inventive writer. Victor Hugo, you will remember, professes to have founded the stupendous romance of "Notre Dame de Paris" on the single Greek word ananké—fate, necessity—graven among the bas-reliefs of the cathedral of which Claude Frolo was the arch-priest, and Quasimodo the bell-ringer.

In that same Times obituary, of which I spoke just now, I find the following odd statement:—

The Marquis Alfred David Augustus d'Espinassy de Fontenelle, formerly a Major in the Imperial Guard, whose recent death is announced from Paris, was related to several families of the English aristocracy. He was the youngest son of the Marquis Marius d'Espinassy de Fontenelle, by his marriage, in 1821, with the Lady Maria Capel, sister of the present Earl of Essex, with which lady his father became first acquainted by dancing with her at the historic ball which took place at Brussels on the night before the battle of Waterloo.

As a matter of fact, there was no "historic ball" in Brussels the night before the battle of Waterloo. On the evening of the Fifteenth of June, 1815, a courier from Marshal Blücher arrived in Brussels bearing the news that hostilities had commenced. The Duke of Wellington was enjoying his dessert after dinner when these tidings were brought to him. The Duke immediately gave orders for the British troops to make ready to march in support of Blücher. Then he went to the Duchess of Richmond's ball, where he remained until past midnight. By three in the morning the British army was well on its road to Charleroi; many of the officers being still in their ball dresses, which the hurry of the march, and their anxiety to obey the summons of duty, had not given them time to change. This was the morning of the Sixteenth. The battle of Waterloo was, as all the world knows, fought on the eighteenth of June, 1815.

M. d'Espinassy de Fontenelle's grandfather, this remarkable necrological notice goes on to say, was "a Senator of France in the days of the first French Revolution, and was one of the committee appointed to decide the fate of Louis XVI." Most of us have heard of the States Generals, of the National Assembly, of the National Convention, of the Council of Ancients, of the Council of Five Hundred, and of the Tribunal; but I was not aware that there were any Senators of France prior to the establishment of the "Sénat Conservateur" under the Consulate on the Fourth Nivose of the year VIII.

I note with pleasure the appearance of the first number of a monthly journal of social progress and reform entitled Thrift. "Thrift is Blessing," writes the Poet of all Time; and the conductors of Thrift are to teach us how to be temperate by avoiding selfish, sinful, wasteful indulgences of all kinds—indulgences not only harmful to the body, but degrading to the mental and moral sense; how to be Happy, for Thrift "keeps us free from a vast amount of anxiety, worry, and distress;" how to be Industrious by avoiding the waste of time, labour, and energy; and, finally, how to enjoy all the advantages which accrue from Thrift, Forethought, and Reliance on Self. Among the contributors to the first number are Dr. B. W. Richardson, F.R.S., Professor Leone Levi, Miss Florence Nightingale, Mr. Blanchard Jerrold, Mr. Ernest Hart, Miss Yates, and Mr. T. Bowden Green. Good luck, I say, to Thrift, with all my heart.

In an article called "Thrift is Health," Dr. B. W. Richardson tells us that "if a man be thrifty in respect to food he will be what the world in its greedy folly calls abstinent at all his meals. He will live on the simplest diet, and he will never take any food after his simple wants are simply gratified. He will partake of no highly-seasoned, richly-made dishes." Farewell, then, to curry, to mulligatawny soup, to harico mutton and pigeon pie. I hope to sit next to worthy Dr. Richardson at the next dinner of the Royal Literary Fund, and I intend to challenge him to a competitive trial of abstinence when the "highly-seasoned richly-made dishes" are handed round. Meanwhile, I must burn, I suppose, all my cookery books, and do penance in a white tablecloth for having written something in this page, recently, respecting that very richly-made and highly-seasoned dish, bouillabaisse.

The paper will do some good from deterring parents from stuffing their children at Christmas time with what are called "goodies." Plum-puddings and mince pies are undoubtedly among the most objectionable forms of "highly-seasoned and richly-made dishes."

I wonder whether Dr. Richardson, whom I know to be a very amiable and kind-hearted man, and who ought to be a shrewd and practical one, believes in this nonsense of a highly civilised community habitually "living on the simplest diet"? I find in the list of donors and subscribers to the National Thrift Society the names of four Dukes and six Earls. I have not the honour to be personally acquainted with any members of the aristocracy. I can say, with poor Charles Kenney, "I knew a Lord once; but he died." But suppose that, through some astounding freak of fortune, a Duke asked me to dinner. Would his Grace, I wonder, regale me with plain boiled fish or flesh, boiled potatoes and greens, a plain rice-pudding, and a Portugal onion, washed down with copious draughts of cold water; or, should I find at the ducal board some hors d'œuvres, a potage, two or three entrées, a remove, a roast, sweets, ices, and dessert, with the pleasing accompaniments of sherry, hock, claret, and champagne, with coffee and liqueurs to follow? When Dr. Richardson dines with a Duke, does he dine upon a single slice of roast mutton without any currant-jelly? Is he prepared to enact the part of Sancho Pança's physician, and with ebon wand wave away the made-dishes from the tables of the rich and great? Bread and cheese and onions are about the "simplest diet" that I know. Who will join a Bread and Cheese and Onions Society, and practise what they preach?

I was speaking just now of the pleasing recognition extended by an art critic so eminent as Charles Blanc to English writers on art. It is quite as pleasing to read in the January number of the Gazette des Beaux Arts a genial and thoughtful article by M. Alfred de Lostolat on English picture-books for children. The paper has special reference to the work of Mr. Randolph Caldecott, whose incomparably jaunty and impudent "Man all Tattered and Torn" from "The House that Jack Built" is, with other of his graceful drawings—not forgetting the celebrated tragi-comic Cat stretched at full length on the floor of the malt-house—cleverly reproduced by my Paris contemporary; but due justice is also rendered to Mr. Walter Crane and Miss Kate Greenaway.

Another triumph for English art. The gentle influence of the gifted lady whom I have just alluded to is distinctly visible in the pretty and graceful pictures of the Paris "Almanach du Figaro," which is illustrated by artists not less famous than MM. Geoffroy Pille, Chéret, and Carrier-Belleuse. The Figaro almanack likewise contains some charming pieces of music by MM. Salvayre Audran and Bérardi; and altogether the experiment made by the facetious barber of the Rue Drouot must be hailed as a most exemplary one in the decorous-domestic line. Who is not tired of the clever but monotonous graphic improprieties of M. Grévin and his crowd of imitators in the "Caricature," the "Journal Amusant," the "Vie Parisienne," and the "Petit Journal pour Rire"? Who knows? Miss Kate Greenaway may in the end succeed in converting M. Grévin to good manners, pictorially speaking.

Mem.: I cull two of the brightest gems of French wit with which I have lately met while delving, scissors in hand, in the Paris papers. In the Figaro I read: "A poor woman, who is in the receipt of a small annual pension from a charitable lady, wrote to her patroness on New-Year's Day, and ended her letter thus: 'I entreat you to believe in the sincerity of my prayers for the preservation of your life, which is so truly precious to me.'"

In the Intransigeant, a leading article by M. Henri Rochefort begins in an exceptionally lively manner. "M. Gambetta has passed one half of his life in making promises, and the other half in breaking them." This has the true epigrammatic ring; but something almost as good was said by Charles Kenney about a friend who was not in the habit of speaking the strict and literal truth. "It takes me all my mornings," quoth Charles, "to go about contradicting the lies which X has told over night."

I have heard and read much during the past few days about the late Mr. Bernal Osborne. Now he has been lauded to the skies, and placed as a wit and humourist on a par with Rochester, with Selwyn, with Porson, with Sydney Smith, and with Douglas Jerrold. Now I have seen him unjustly, spitefully, and almost brutally disparaged. I have but very few words to say about the deceased gentleman. I first met him nearly twenty years ago at a dinner of the Acclimatisation Society, where we ate frogs and Chinese birds'-nests, and other extraordinary things; and where Mr. Bernal Osborne made one of the drollest speeches that I ever listened to. It was in much later years that I came to know him better—to be charmed with his conversation, to be fascinated by his irresistibly winning address, to be touched by the simplicity, frankness, and gentleness of his nature. I only speak of him as I found him. He was always as courteously and genially kind to me, as I know that he had been, long years before, kind to my dear friend Tom Hood. If you happened to find yourself in the saloon of some Great House, nervous and ill at ease in the midst of the glare and glitter and the grand strange company, and feeling very much as a flying fish might feel that had soared too high and had come down souse on the ship's deck and was expecting every moment to be knocked on the head by the sailors, Bernal Osborne (who went everywhere) would rarely fail to spy you out, take you by the arm, present you to all manner of magnificoes, make you feel at home, and "pull you through," as the Americans have it, generally. You know (if you be a nervous and ungainly recluse) what it is to hear a cheery cry of Sursum Corda! from a brilliant, veteran man of the world. And that is all I have to say about Mr. Bernal Osborne. If he was bitter, he kept his acerbity for other folk; and I saw only the sweet side of his character.

A correspondent, writing from St. Charles Borromeo-street, Montreal, Lower Canada, suggests that a good way to prevent such horrible deeds of body-snatching as the Duncuch out-rage would be to encase coffins in Portland cement concrete. A capital idea. My correspondent is a builder. Vous êtes orfèvre, Monsieur Josse. Who was it that remarked in antique times that there was "nothing like leather"?

Another correspondent proposes that, for the prevention of body-snatching, corpses should be wrapped uncoffined in sheet lead of such volume as to render the extrication of the body from the lead a matter of much time and trouble, while the heaviness of the mass would make it equally difficult of transportation. Uncoffined sepulture in this manner was prevalent in England until late in the seventeenth century. I have heard that the body of Dr. William Harvey, the illustrious discoverer of the circulation of the blood, was never buried, but was "wrapped in lead."

But what do you say to a simple burglar-proof, fire-proof safe of adequate size as a sarcophagus? Why should not our Chubb's, our Milners, our Chatwoods manufacture such an article, the locks of which would defy the "jemmies" and crowbars of Jack Sheppard himself? A "burglar-proof safe coffin" might, indeed, cost a hundred guineas; whereas I believe that in Milan they will undertake to cremate your mortal coil for fifty francs.

With reference to the overcrowding of vast masses of the poorer classes of the population within restricted spaces in large cities, a topic dwelt upon in the "Echoes" of Dec. 3, a correspondent reminds me that precisely the same causes which, in the seventeenth century, led to overcrowding in Paris, have been in St. Petersburg instrumental in cooping up the labouring poor in confined places. There are houses in the unfashionable districts of Petropolis harbouring each from three to six hundred tenants. As Dr. Lister would put it, could he come to life again, palaces, convents, barracks, and government offices have "eat up" the sites which should be occupied by the dwellings of the people. To a modified extent, the same overcrowding has been an evil in New York, notably "down town," in the old part of the city, in the vicinity of the notorious "Five Points." No palaces or convents had there, it is true, "eat up" the people's dwellings: the difficulty arose from the circumstance of Manhattan being an island. Well-to-do-folk could cross the bay and inhabit Brooklyn or Jersey City, Hoboken or Staten Island, or to the north pass the Harlem river, and spread their villas all around. But the poor folk had to remain where they were "down town," pent up in the noisome "tenement" houses; and a very dolorous time they had of it.

Mr. Sutherland Edwards kindly writes to tell me that the story referred to in the letter of "An Occasional Cabbage Planter" in the Daily News was not the "Extraordinary Passage in the Life of Mr. John Tidyshoes," but a tale by Mr. Edwards himself, which, under the initials "H. S. E.," appeared in the Welcome Guest, and which was founded on the recollection of a dramatic dialogue by Scribe, which Mr. Edwards had read many years before. This dialogue was entitled "Trente Heures de Poste." My accomplished friend adds that he has utterly forgotten the name of his English reminiscence of Scribe; but a courteous correspondent writes from Taunton Grammar School to say that the "H. S. E." story was called "My Elopement," and that it will be found at page 93 of the number of the Welcome Guest for June 5, 1858. So, thanks to my Taunton Correspondent, here be news for Mr. Sutherland Edwards, for your humble servant, and for "Mr. Moneyspinner" himself, as that incorrigible (and unsurpassed) Joker, Mr. F. C. Burnand, persists in calling the clever author of "Daisy's Escape." I look upon Mr. Pinero as one of the most remarkable geniuses of the age. He has not, it would appear, read anything, and gets all the plots of his plays entirely "out of his own head" and the hedges in "the Kentish lanes." Why, Shakspeare and Molière couldn't do that!

G. A. S.

SOLDIERS OF THE ROYAL FUSILIERS DECORATED FOR VALOUR.

PRIVATE TAYLOR.

PRIVATE ASHFORD, V.C.

PRIVATE HENRY.

THE ROYAL FUSILIERS.

We have received from Brevet-Major E. W. Adderley, of the 7th Regiment (Royal Fusiliers), 2nd Battalion, now at Fort St. George, Madras, photographs of four soldiers, three privates and a lance-corporal, who have won special distinction by their conduct in the late Afghan war. One of them, Private James Ashford, has been presented with the Victoria Cross, "for valour," and the other three with "distinguished conduct medals."

The notification in the London Gazette of Oct. 4 thus described the act of courage for which Private Ashford was recommended, with Lieutenant W. St. Lucien Chase, Bombay Staff Corps, to the Queen's notice:—"Conspicuous gallantry on the occasion of the sortie from Candahar, on Aug. 16, 1880, against the village of Deh-Khoja; in having rescued, and carried for a distance of over two hundred yards, under the fire of the enemy, a wounded soldier, Private Massey, of the Royal Fusiliers, who had taken shelter in a blockhouse; several times they were compelled to rest, but they persevered in bringing him to a place of safety; Private Ashford rendered Lieutenant Chase every assistance, and remained with him throughout." The decoration of the Victoria Cross was presented to Private Ashford, on Dec. 13, at a full-dress parade of the troops at Madras, by Lieutenant-General Sir Frederick Roberts, G.O.B., Commander-in-Chief, in presence of the Governor of Madras; and Sir F. Roberts then highly commended the Royal Fusiliers for their admirable behaviour at Candahar.

LANCE-CORPORAL PITCHFORD.

The other soldiers of the same battalion, Lance-Corporal Pitchford, and Privates Henry and Taylor, whose portraits we have likewise engraved, had their medals for "distinguished conduct in the field" presented to them by Brigadier-General R. Stewart, C.B., Commanding the Centre District in the Madras Presidency.

The Portraits are from photographs by Nicholas and Co., of Madras.

WANDSWORTH TOWNHALL.

This building, now completed, has been in course of erection during the past eighteen months. It is situated in the High-street, nearly opposite the well-known hostelry, the "Spread Eagle." The ground floor of this building is devoted to the various parish offices, such as Vestry Clerk's Office, Burial Board Office, Vestry-Room, Committee-Rooms, and Tax and Rate Collectors' Offices; all which are approached by the principal entrance, beneath an arcaded carriage drive, which will be closed at night by handsome iron gates and grilles. The public hall is situated upon the first floor. It is capable of seating comfortably 600 persons. Right and left on the landing of the principal staircase, and close to one of the entrances to the hall, are the cloak-rooms and lavatories for ladies and gentlemen. All the doors

NEW TOWNHALL, WANDSWORTH.

NEW MUNICIPAL BUILDINGS, GREAT YARMOUTH.

Departure for military service.
Samoiede.

Troika sledge.

Tartar Schoolmaster, with pupils.

A Farm-house.

Beggar

SKETCHES OF POPULAR LIFE IN RUSSIA.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

for public use are made to swing so as to open freely outwards; and there are two separate and independent stone staircases, of ample width. Every provision has been made to facilitate the easy escape of the audience, under any alarm of fire. The great hall is separated from the rest of the building by fire-proof construction; and hydrants, fully charged, are placed in commanding positions. A stage is projected from the rear of the building, carried on iron columns, with dressing and retiring rooms, for the use of the professional ladies and gentlemen, approached by a separate entrance at the side. The kitchen and hall-keeper's rooms are at the top of the side portion of the building, with a lift from the basement delivering at each landing of the house staircase, and directly serviceable for supplying diners to the great hall. The front of the building is of red brick and Dumfries stone, with green slates for the roof. The style of architecture is based upon the French Renaissance of the sixteenth century. The large hall has been handsomely decorated, from the original designs of the architect, Mr. George Patrick, of Drummond Chambers, Adelphi, by Mr. Hossouski, of Stanhope-street. The whole building has been constructed by Mr. Parsons, of Wandsworth, the total cost being about £10,000.

PRINCESS HELENA OF WALDECK.

The marriage of our Queen's youngest son, His Royal Highness Prince Leopold, Duke of Albany, to Princess Helena of Waldeck-Pyrmont, is to be solemnised at St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle, some time after Easter. The Princess, Helena Frederica Augusta, is the fourth daughter of the Prince of Waldeck and of his wife, Princess Helena of Nassau, daughter of the late and sister of the ex-Duke of Nassau and of the present Queen of Sweden. She was born on Feb. 17, 1861. She has one brother and four sisters, the eldest unmarried. The second was married, in 1877, to Prince William of Wurtemberg, and the third, Emma, three years older than Helena, in 1879, to the King of the Netherlands. Her fourth sister is only eight years old, and her only brother is six. The Prince of Waldeck-Pyrmont is a sovereign Prince of the German Empire. The population of the Principality is 54,000. The capital, Arolsen, contains 2500 inhabitants. In 1867 the government of the Principality was committed to Prussia. The Waldeck family have long been connected with that of Nassau, the junior branch of which reigns over Holland. A Prince of Waldeck commanded our Dutch allies at Fontenoy in 1745. The family are described as leading a patriarchal and simple life at the Castle of Arolsen. This place, to which we referred above, is situated on the little River Aar, a tributary of the Weser, twenty miles north of Cassel, where the Emperor Napoleon III. resided, in the Castle of Wilhelmshöhe, when captive after the surrender of Sedan. Waldeck, the larger or main portion of the Principality, lies adjacent to Nassau and Westphalia; it is a country of extensive forests, producing much timber for export, as well as cattle, marble, slate, and mineral ores. Pyrmont is a detached small district, or township, thirty miles north of the Waldeck territory, and thirty-five miles south-west of Hanover. It is included between the dominions of Brunswick and Lippe-Detmold, and has an area of not more than twenty-six square miles, with a population of 7000 or 8000. The town and park are on the banks of the Emmer. The view of Pyrmont, given in one of the Illustrations on our front page, is from a drawing by Dr. Robert Geissler; and those of the Kloster-Allee, or Cloister Avenue, and the Brunnen-Tempel or Spa, are from photographs by F. Heinecke, of Pyrmont. The chalybeate and carbonate waters of this place have long been in repute for medicinal efficacy; they form a considerable article of export trade, and there are ten or twelve places, in the valley here, for drinking these waters. The Principality of Waldeck-Pyrmont, though under Prussian rule, has a feudal Diet of fifteen members, deputies from the nobility, the town burghers, and the present freeholders, who elect one delegate to each House of the Reichsrath, or Federal Assembly of the German Empire, at Berlin. There is a public revenue of £78,000 a year.

PEOPLE OF RUSSIA.

Some further examples of the costume and manner of life prevailing among different classes and races of the population, in the great Russian Empire, are presented in another page of our Artist's Sketches, taken during his sojourn and travels in the country. It was at a period when the approaching war in Turkey caused large demands to be made on the docile and submissive peasantry for the Imperial military service. The first subject here represented is the scene in a rustic family abode, where one of the new recruits, under a whole-sale conscription, having already taken his staff and wallet for the long journey on foot to join the battalion with which he is to be drilled and trained, is about to depart from home, in company with the corporal who has got him in charge. His mournful parents, the mother in an attitude of silent grief, the father with a resigned sadness on his face that is equally touching, await the moment when they will lose sight of their only son, too likely to see him nevermore on earth; for these great Imperial wars are seldom finished with less than half a million of lives of the nation's youthful manhood consumed by slaughter and disease in a twelvemonth's deadly campaigning. A monk or friar, not the parish priest, but the familiar messenger of their religion to this simple household, has called there at once to console the bereaved parents and to bid farewell to one of his believing flock; and he now holds up to the young man's adoration his small picture of the Virgin Mary, with the gilt circle of Divine glory around her head, while extending his hand to receive, in Her name, as a pledge of devout allegiance, the kiss that will be repaid with a solemn benediction. Such is, even at this day, the spirit of the Russian peasantry, without which they would scarcely continue to be the willing instruments, when called upon, of a policy that has demanded enormous sacrifices from popular enthusiasm in the cause of their Church, as well as of Imperial and national aggrandisement. The exterior aspect of a Russian farm-house amid the wintry snows, and in the midst of the monotonous pine-forest, is shown in the next of our Artist's Sketches. We are then presented with one of sledge-travelling at this season, which must be a trying experience when the blasts of bitterly cold wind from Siberia come sweeping over the shelterless side of a hill; but this couple of passengers, with the "troika" driver, have clad themselves for the journey in thick woollens and bearskins, or in overcoats of sheepskin, to keep off the fierce attacks of the weather. One pities the "Beggars," under such an inclement sky, till he gains the needful shelter by his knocking at the closed house-door. The "Samoiède" is a type, evidently selected from the wealthier class, owning their flocks and herds, of that North Asiatic race of the Czar's subjects, who sometimes come for trading purposes to the European side of the Empire. Another Asiatic type is that of the Russian Tartar in the South: we are glad to see the schoolmaster among them.

YARMOUTH MUNICIPAL BUILDINGS.

These buildings, which now approach their completion, are to be opened in June by the Prince and Princess of Wales. We give an Illustration of their design; the architect is Mr. John B. Pearce, of Surrey-street, Norwich. The whole may be considered as divided into two distinct departments, the municipal and the magisterial. The former consists, on the ground floor, of a central hall, around which are the various rooms appropriated to the borough officials, with cloak-rooms, a hall-keeper's room, and the requisite lavatories and other offices. From the central hall a spacious staircase leads to the assembly room, with a card-room, supper-room, and refreshment buffet, in one suite; and with a smoking-room and gallery for the orchestra easily accessible. The magistrates' department is quite distinct from the municipal, though in communication with it. The entrance to this department is from the east; right and left of this entrance are rooms for the barristers, solicitors, and witnesses. A wide, easy staircase leads from this hall to the courts, which are on the first floor. The courts have separate doors for the public and officials, and every care has been taken to prevent confusion and disorder in the conduct of business. The prisoners for trial in the Petty Sessions Court will be brought up by a direct staircase from the cells to the dock. In the Quarter Sessions Court, where this arrangement is not practicable, a turnkey's lobby, with a private staircase, is provided, accessible from the cells by crossing the hall of this department. There is a Judges' retiring-room connected with the Quarter Sessions Court. Between the courts on the first floor are two spare rooms, one of which, opening into the Petty Sessions Court, will make a convenient dining-room for the magistrates. On the second floor are the Grand Jury and Petty Jury rooms, with a gallery to the Quarter Sessions Court, and entirely cut off from the rest of the building. The hall-keeper's living rooms and kitchen are on this floor, and bed-rooms above. There is a separate entrance to these from Hall-square, on the south side. Beneath this part of the building, in the basement, are the coal-cellar, and the heating apparatus for warming the staircases and corridors by hot water; but the various rooms are warmed by open fire-places. The walls are of brick, faced externally with St. Bees stone; the roof is of green slate; the halls and corridors are floored with mosaic pavement; the staircases are of white Portland stone, with ornamental teak balusters; and the other woodwork is of teak. The contractors for the building are Messrs. J. W. Lacey, of Norwich; the heating apparatus is supplied by Messrs. Barnard, Bishop, and Barnard, of Norwich. The most noticeable feature of decoration is the artistic carving, both internally and externally, with the elaborate modelling of the various ceilings, executed, respectively, by Messrs. Seal, of London; Messrs. John Howard and Sons, of Norwich; and Mr. Cross, of Liverpool.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

I was present on the afternoon of Thursday, January the twelfth instant, at one of the most charmingly original and characteristic entertainments that I can remember ever to have witnessed at Covent Garden. This was the Christmas Treat to poor School-Children given by the proprietors of this Journal. It must be going on for four-and-twenty years since, one bright evening in May, I made one of the vast audience which, within a few minutes of the opening of the doors, filled every seat in the new Royal Italian Opera House, Covent Garden: the stately structure erected at a cost of more than seventy thousand pounds, from the designs of the lamented architect, Edward M. Barry, R.A. Yes; the spectacle in the house reared on the ruins of that other Royal Italian Opera which was burned down at the conclusion of a masquerade given by Professor Anderson, the "Great Wizard of the North," was an extremely grand and brilliant one; still, to my mind, it was very largely surpassed in interest and attractiveness by the sight which I saw on Thursday, the twelfth. The vast auditorium was filled with little school-children, among whom I rejoiced to see my dear little silver-voiced next-door-neighbours-but-one, the children of the Foundling Hospital. The boys had the shiniest morning faces ever seen since Shakspeare wrote the "Seven Ages;" but you may be sure that the schoolboys from the Foundling did not "creep unwillingly" up the staircases of Covent Garden Theatre. On the contrary, I have reason to believe that the shiny-faced Foundling urchins tumbled up and into their places with the greatest alacrity and in the highest glee; while the Foundling girls, in their spruce white pluners, looked delightfully demure and sedate in the front rows of the Grand Tier. I was glad, also, to learn that room had been found for sixteen petites demoiselles and their governess, belonging to an admirable and modest charity in Bloomsbury-street, the French Protestant School, the girls in which are all descendants from the Huguenots who fled from France after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. But there were schools upon schools galore at "the Garden" that Thursday afternoon. The crippled children had not been forgotten; and "Tiny Tim" was present in great force, as were also the deaf and dumb school-children. The last seemed to enjoy the Girards and the harlequinade immensely; and, indeed, the whole performance of the grand Christmas pantomime of "Little Bo-Peep" appeared to afford unmingled enjoyment to the juveniles; and, notwithstanding the monstrous birch rod wielded by the Old Woman who Lived in a Shoe, there were some thousands of little people in the boxes, stalls, and galleries who probably thought the Old Woman's educational establishment to be "Boothia Felix," and the most delightful school in the world. Another surprise and another delight were afforded to them in the interval between the transformation scene and the "comic business" by the seemingly supernatural appearance up a trap-door of a towering trophy of dainties in the shape of whole sacksfull of buns, cakes, and oranges, the gift of kindly confectioners and fruiterers who had heard of the "coming off" of the Children's Treat at Covent Garden; and the distribution of these "goodies" (please to forgive us, Dr. B. W. Richardson) was prefaced by a very pretty, poetical address charmingly spoken by Mrs. Brough, who earnestly advised the children to preserve a lively faith in the existence of Fairyland and the Fairies, and hinted that if they were very good children something in the way of another Christmas treat might be in store for them next year. The address was written by Mr. Horace Lennard, who also, in conjunction with Mr. Gibbons, warmly exerted himself in organising the arrangements of the festival. So ended a glorious afternoon. The papers have all spoken kindly of the School-Children's Treat; and in particular, Mr. Clement Scott, in the columns of a contemporary, has written a most touching and graceful account of the entertainment.

I have seen, at the Globe Theatre, the performance of a very strange, clever, witty play by Mr. Herman Merivale, which was produced for the first time in the metropolis on Saturday, the fourteenth instant. It is called "The Cynic," but when it was performed at Manchester it bore the title, I believe, of "The Modern Faust." "The Cynic" is, I take it, a wholly inapplicable title. Mr. Merivale knows his Bayle much better than I do, and has read all that the "eternal scribbler" of the "Critical Dictionary" has to say about the Cynics. A better name of this able play would be "The Mephistopheles of Private Life." I have known intimately more than one drawing-room Mephisto; but the very best name of all would be "The Devil is an Ass." Unfortunately, Ben Jonson wrote a very fine comedy with the taking title in question more than two hundred and fifty years ago. Ben's demon is a decided simpleton—an inferior fiend, by name "Pug," who, having a month's holiday, is permitted by his Commanding Officer to inhabit the body of a pickpocket who has just been hanged at Tyburn. "Pug" makes so many blunders that at length his Gloomy Chief loses all patience with the "lubber fiend"; suddenly comes down on him "like a hundred of bricks" (smelling very strongly of brimstone); administers to him a scathing "wiggling," and hands "Pug" over to "Iniquity the Vice," to be relegated to "adamantine chains and penal fire." Mr. Herman Merivale's "Pug" or Mephisto—call him what you will—is a certain Count Lestrangle, an accomplished and unscrupulous adventurer, who comes nobody knows whence, and lives on the fat of the land, nobody knows how. A rich widow named Lady Luscombe is madly in love with him. She cannot marry the Count; or, rather, he will not marry her, because her deceased husband has made a will, under the clauses of which she will lose the whole of her fortune in the event of her marrying again. She makes, nevertheless, an extravagantly improbable bet of ten thousand pounds with Lestrangle, who is to receive that sum if he succeeds in bringing about the elopement, within a certain time, of Daisy Brent, a married lady, with her old sweetheart, Guy Fautit, an Oxford "coach," whom she has jilted in order to marry Mr. Brent for the sake of his money. But Mr. Brent loses his fortune and goes away to India to try and make another, leaving his wife dependent on Lady Luscombe. In order to carry out his scheme Lestrangle disinters the moody and half broken Guy Fautit from the seclusion in which he has buried himself, in the society only of a meerschaum pipe and a brandy bottle. He persuades Guy to shave off his beard, dress like a gentleman, and mingle once more in polite society; and he is aided in his intrigue by a lucky chance; since by the death of a miserly uncle Guy suddenly inherits a fortune of fifty thousand a year. Daisy Brent (who is a very foolish flighty young woman) is as fond of her old flame as ever; and, although she does her best to withstand temptation, is more than once on the extreme verge of elopement. From this, however, she is eventually saved by the death of her husband in India; and of course she marries Guy Fautit. Lestrangle consequently loses his wager. He is threatened with criminal proceedings for intercepting the telegram which conveyed the tidings of the death of Mr. Brent; and is forced to make terms with the enemy by surrendering a packet of letters of a compromising nature written to him by Lady Luscombe, and which he has long held in terrorem over that imprudent lady. Ultimately, Count Lestrangle takes a sardonic departure, after the manner of Rabagas, in M. Sardou's play, declaring that he shall seek his fortune in some non-law-abiding country—say in Asia Minor, or in Ireland.

We have here the always entrancing legend of Faust ingeniously paraphrased and represented by Lestrangle in lieu of Mephisto, Guy Fautit as Faust, Daisy Brent as Marguerite, Lady Luscombe as Martha, and a bullying brother of Daisy as Valentine. The play is throughout written with vigour, elegance, scholarship, and wit. It could be scarcely otherwise with a production of one of the authors of "Forget-me-Not." Some of the soliloquies of Lestrangle are slightly too didactic; but the dialogue is almost invariably crisp, nervous, and brilliant. The acting and "make up" of Mr. Hermann Vezin as Count Lestrangle are simply perfect. He is every inch a fiend, and repeatedly reminds us, in manner and appearance, that "the Prince of Darkness is a Gentleman." Miss Marie Litton is an admirable Daisy Brent. In the scene in which she passionately vindicates her conduct to Guy she is really wonderfully fine; but, unhappily, the author has cast the characters in a repulsive and not in an agreeable mould. It is next door to the impossible to sympathise with a Marguerite who talks slang and flirts with all and sundry. Miss Louise Willes is powerful, but a little hard, as Lady Luscombe; and Mr. Arthur Dacre is earnest and manly as Guy Fautit. The action of the play (which is at least an act too long) is hampered by a shallow and ridiculous under-plot, in which are introduced some remarkably idiotic specimens of the "gilded youth" of both sexes of the present day, who talk nonsense and indulge in buffooneries which fail to amuse the audience. From these may be excepted the droll impersonation of a stuttering nobleman, Lord Rosherville, by Mr. David Fisher, sen.; and a humorous, but wholly superfluous, sexton, by Mr. A. Wood. "The Cynic" was luxuriously placed on the stage.

G. A. S.

In commemoration of the 250th performance of "Patience" in London, the 100th in New York, the 167th on tour in England, and the 50th on tour in America, a souvenir programme has been issued by Mr. D'Oyly Carte, proprietor of the Savoy Theatre. It consists of ten clever illustrations of groups of the Savoy Company in the more popular scenes, drawn by J. E. Kelly, inclosed within a handsome coloured cover, designed by W. H. Day.

Among the most rational, and at the same time most astonishing as well as gratifying, entertainments of the present season for two hours of an afternoon, from three to five p.m., must be included the series of readings from Shakspeare, begun on the 17th inst. at Willis's Rooms by Mr. Brandram. He recites entirely from memory; and from that point of view alone his performance is marvellous. But he also becomes ever so many single gentlemen, to say nothing of ladies and other personages, rolled into one, and by means of his voice alone accomplishes Protean feats. In dealing with the more heroic characters he may seem to some of his hearers to lack majesty, fire, and dignity of elocution; but some of his interpretations, especially in the comic parts, are admirable.

The large class which finds amusement in music and the drama will be pleased with two annuals that have just been published—"The Musical Directory and Almanack," issued by Rudall, Carte, and Co.; and "The Era Almanack," conducted by Mr. Edward Ledger. The sketches in the latter are too obviously the work of 'prentice hands to be of value; but the calendar of dramatic events, and the light sketches of theatrical life, particularly those by Mr. G. R. Sims and Mr. G. Edwards (the learned dramatic critic of the Era), and the memorabilia of the stage, make "The Era Almanack" very acceptable to playgoers. "The Musical Directory" is principally addressed to the musical trade and profession, to which its review of the past twelvemonth and its multifarious information should be of special service. It may be mentioned that it was in the firm of Rudall, Carte, and Co., publishers of this handbook, that Mr. D'Oyly Carte acquired the business tact which led him to foster the popular native comic operas of Mr. Arthur Sullivan and Mr. W. S. Gilbert.

MUSIC.

THE CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

The excellent performances of operas in English instituted by Mr. Rosa entered on a sixth London season on Saturday last, at Her Majesty's Theatre, where two series had before been given, the localities previously occupied by this company having been the Princess's, the Adelphi, and the Lyceum.

We have already given details of the arrangements for the season just begun, and have now to notice the opening performance, which consisted of "Lohengrin," on Saturday evening. It was in February, 1880, that Mr. Rosa produced the English version (by Mr. J. P. Jackson) of Wagner's opera at Her Majesty's Theatre, the cast on that occasion having been almost identical with that of last Saturday.

Having then, and in reference to its performances in Italian at the same establishment, and at the Royal Italian Opera House, spoken in detail of the work, it is only necessary now to remind readers that it is the fourth in the series of Wagner's important stage productions ("Rienzi," "Der Fliegende Holländer," and "Tannhäuser" being its predecessors), and is that in which a greater advance is perceptible than before towards the realisation of those principles of the regeneration of dramatic music which have been still further carried out in his later works. "Lohengrin" was originally produced at Weimar in 1850, and was first heard in England in 1875, at the Royal Italian Opera House, where it was brought out in Italian, having been given in a similar form at Her Majesty's Opera in the same season.

The performance with which Mr. Rosa opened his new season on Saturday evening presented the general efficiency and completeness which have heretofore been characteristic of his management. Miss Julia Gaylord's Elsa, as before, was of high merit, both in its vocal and dramatic aspect. The recital of the dream, the ecstatic welcoming of the mysterious champion knight, the soliloquy in the balcony, and the love passages in the final duet with Lohengrin, were all given with much refined idealism. Miss Josephine Yorke's Ortrud was, again, a display of genuine dramatic power, especially in the great scene with Telramund, and that which follows, with Elsa, at the beginning of the second act. Herr Schott's Lohengrin was another repeated feature in the cast. As before, his best efforts were made in the merely declamatory portions of the music, as in the address to the nobles, the defiance of Telramund, and the putting of Lohengrin's mission of the Holy Grail. The most successful piece of cantabile was the fine melodic passage in the closing love duet, beginning "Breathest thou not with me," which Herr Schott gave with genuine sentimental expression. Mr. Ludwig was again a good representative of the melo-dramatic villain, Telramund, Mr. L. Crotty having, as before, given the music of the Herald with good effect; Mr. H. Pope proving a worthy successor to the former impersonator of the King. The masterly orchestral details (including the imaginative prelude to the opera, and the brilliant and festive introduction to the third act) were splendidly rendered by the fine band, led by Mr. Carrodus. The chorus-singing was generally (but not always) satisfactory; and the stage effects, including magnificent costumes, were all that could be desired. Mr. Randegger conducted with judgment and skill such as he has before evinced in the direction of performances by this company, and otherwise. If the crowded state of the house, and the fact of numbers having in ruin tendered their money at the doors, are to be taken as prognostics, it would appear as if Mr. Rosa had entered on a career of success exceeding his previous experiences in London.

On Monday evening, "The Flying Dutchman" (an English version of Wagner's "Der Fliegende Holländer") was given. This is the second in the series of Wagner's great stage works, and was produced at Dresden in 1813, having been brought out in Italian during Mr. G. Wood's brief occupancy of Drury Lane Theatre in 1870. It was given in English for the first time by Mr. Carl Rosa's company, at the Lyceum Theatre, in 1876. In Monday's performance the part of the heroine, Senta, was finely rendered—both dramatically and vocally—by Madame Alwina Valleria, this being her first association with the Carl Rosa company. In the delivery of Senta's ballad, in the great duet with the Dutch captain, and in the final scene of Senta's heroic self-sacrifice, Madame Valleria sang and acted with high artistic power, and achieved a great and genuine success. The small part of Mary was well filled by Miss Josephine Yorke; Mr. Packard was the same earnest Erik as before; Mr. Ludwig was a picturesque representative of the mysterious Dutch captain, whose music he declaimed well; Mr. J. W. Turner again gave the steersman's song with good effect; and Mr. H. D'Egville, as Daland (the Norwegian captain), showed promise of becoming a useful member of the company. The orchestral details were finely realised, the chorus-singing was generally good, and the scenic effects were excellent. Mr. Randegger again conducted skilfully.

Of subsequent performances we must speak next week.

Mr. John Boosey's London Ballad Concert of last week drew a full attendance to St. James's Hall—this being, indeed, the rule at these attractive performances. The first part of the programme consisted entirely of songs and part-songs by Mr. Arthur Sullivan; all so well known that specific detail is unnecessary. They were effectively sung by Miss M. Davies, Mesdames Antoinette Sterling and Isabel Fassett, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Sontley, Signor Feli, and the choristers of the South London Choral Association. Several pieces were encored. This week's concert consisted of a selection of Irish songs and ballads rendered by eminent artists.

The Royal Albert Hall Choral Society gave the fifth concert of the eleventh season on Wednesday evening, when the programme comprised Dr. Ferdinand Hiller's "Song of Victory," and Mr. Arthur Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch," with Miss A. Williams, Madame Trebelli, Mr. E. Boyle, Mr. Brereton, and Mr. F. King, as solo vocalists.

Mr. E. Crook (a clever pupil of Mr. Carrodus), gave a violin recital at the Royal Academy of Music on Wednesday evening, with a varied selection of solo and concerted instrumental and vocal music.

The managers of the Royal Victoria Coffee Hall have issued the programme of their third series of Thursday evening ballad concerts. The first concert of this series was given by Mr. Clement Hay on Thursday, under Royal patronage. On Feb. 9 there will be an Irish ballad concert; and on Feb. 16 the pupils of the Royal Academy of Music will give a concert.

At the popular concert of last Saturday afternoon, Mr. Charles Hallé reappeared as solo pianist and played with great effect Weber's sonata in E minor. Mr. Sontley was the vocalist, and Herr Straus again the leading violinist. Mr. Hallé and Herr Straus again appeared at this week's evening concert, at which Madame Isabel Fassett sang with success.

Mr. Sims Reeves begins his series of concerts of operatic, national, and miscellaneous music at St. James's Hall next Tuesday evening with an interesting programme.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Tuesday, Jan. 17.

Ever since the reopening of Parliament, Paris and a great part of France has been enveloped in a thick fog, which at certain hours of the day almost attains the consistency and rich yellowness of a London fog. Curiously enough, this unusual state of the atmosphere corresponds very closely with the condition of the political situation. Matters are so obscure that nobody ventures to foresee what is in store. The men who make a business of governing the country have a mania for changing everything. M. Paul Bert was anxious to abolish the public prayers that are offered in the churches on the occasion of the meeting of the Chambers; but finding that a Constitutional law positively ordered the celebration of these prayers, M. Bert took his revenge by lengthening by two hours the day's work of the employees in his ministry. General Farre abolished drums in the army, General Camponen meditates the abolition of military bands; meanwhile, he has actually abolished the traditional headgear of the gendarmes, the famous cocked hat, that last vestige of the military costume of the First Empire, which the gendarmes have worn ever since 1790. Henceforward, this ugly and inconvenient, but always respected, hat will be replaced by a helmet and a shako for the mounted and foot corps respectively, and the gendarme will become in the eyes of the country folk identified with the soldier. But this is not all. Yesterday General Camponen announced to the Chamber a series of important bills relative to army organisation and reform.

And, in order to prove his pre-eminence as Prime Minister, M. Gambetta proposes to revise the Constitution itself! Is there any special need of this revision? The question is not easy to answer, and one as regards which the country at large is comparatively indifferent. However, on Saturday last M. Gambetta read a long—very long—statement setting forth the necessity of this revision and explaining the points on which the revision was to bear. The Chamber listened to M. Gambetta, respectfully, perhaps, but coldly. A committee will be appointed on Thursday to examine the Government bill; there will be an immense debate, and in all probability M. Gambetta will make the revision bill a Cabinet question, by the solution of which he will stand or fall.

The proposition of M. Gambetta may be summed up as follows:—"As regards the Senate: suppression of life members; modification of the mode of election; in financial matters the Chamber of Deputies shall have the first and the last word; re-establishment of the scrutin de liste; abolition of public prayers at the beginning of each Session." If the Chamber votes this bill, and if the Senate accepts it, the National Assembly—that is to say, the two Chambers united in Congress at the Palace of Versailles, will have to proceed to the revision itself, and to fix upon the text of the new clauses of the Constitutional laws. The proposition of M. Gambetta is, as it were, only a preliminary measure, a sort of preface, although in reality the fate of the revision and of the Cabinet depends on this preface.

It is needless to insist upon the importance of the forthcoming debates and upon the uncertainty of their issue. But in observing the developments of the situation it will always be well to bear in mind the profound indifference of the great majority of the nation. The more one observes the French the more one becomes convinced that for the mass of the population the revolution of 1789 has never taken place; they remain conservative, indifferent, egotistical, and wrapped up in material or frivolous interests. Politics and journalism are speculative careers, like the Stock Exchange. Both the politicians and the journalists work more for their own ends than in the interest of the public, and their manœuvres are rarely interfered with by the influence of public opinion. Indeed, public opinion, as a constant and persistent influence, cannot be said to exist in France; if it did men like Rochefort would be stigmatised. Whereas, as it is, Rochefort may calumniate the Ministers, the diplomatists, M. Roustan, General de Cissey, or anybody else; a jury will refuse to convict him, and the public will look on with a smile, and declare Rochefort to be a farceur, a funny man, and there is an end of it.

There has been so much talk about politics this week that there is room for hardly any other topics. The first masked ball was given at the Opera on Saturday. The spectacle was brilliant, if not amusing, and the masks predominated over the black coats. But the company was more mixed than ever, and the costumes were of the most ordinary kind. Decidedly the glory of the opera balls has departed, if it ever existed, except as a legend.

The Census returns for Paris show a total increase of 237,104 in the population as compared with the results of the Census of 1876. The total population of Paris is now 2,225,916. The total population of the department of the Seine is 2,752,810, as compared with 2,410,849 in 1876. These results are necessarily incomplete, owing to the faulty and disagreeable system adopted for taking the Census last December. The greatest increase is in the population of the outlying quarters of the town. The centre is gradually becoming depopulated, like the city of London. In course of time the Parisians will be driven out into the suburbs. Already an important network of metropolitan railways is being planned at the Ministry of Public Works and at the Préfecture of the Seine, and optimists say that in four years' time we shall have elevated railways in Paris.

T. C.

The first Number is issued of "Thrift," a journal of social progress and reform; published by the National Thrift Society, 1, Finsbury-circus, E.C., and by Messrs. Hodder and Stoughton, Paternoster-row.

There were 2665 births and 1737 deaths registered in London last week, the former having been 80 and the latter 31 below the average in the corresponding period of the last ten years. There were 44 deaths from measles, 38 from scarlet fever, 14 from diphtheria, 116 from whooping-cough, 5 from typhus fever, 24 from enteric fever, and 2 from ill-defined forms of continued fever. Attention is drawn by the Registrar-General to the fact that last week there were 21 deaths from smallpox in London, and of these 15 belonged to the south, and 4 to the east group of registration districts. The number of patients in the metropolitan hospitals on Saturday was 504. At the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, the mean reading of the barometer last week was 30.14 in.; the lowest reading was 29.66 in. on Monday morning, and the highest 30.46 in. by the end of the week. The mean temperature was 43.9 deg., being 5.9 above the average in the corresponding week of the twenty years ending 1868. The mean showed an excess on each day of the week. According to the meteorological return, the barometer was on Tuesday higher over our south-eastern counties than it has been for more than forty years, the reading in London in the evening being 30.95 in.; but pressure was inclined to give way in the extreme north and north-east.

ART NOTES.

Mr. Arthur John Smith, of 322, Fulham-road, has executed a small bust of the late Dean Stanley.

A banquet will be given to Mr. G. F. Watts, R.A., in the Grosvenor Gallery, on the occasion of the exhibition of his pictures in that building, Sir Coutts Lindsay in the chair.

Ryde Art Exhibition, which was opened in the Townhall on Dec. 29 by Princess Beatrice, was to have closed last Saturday; but, owing to the great success which has attended it and the interest which the exhibits have aroused, the committee have determined to keep it open until the 4th prox.

The council of the Royal Albert Hall have decided to continue the Fine Art Exhibitions held in the galleries of the hall, and it is intended to make them annual. The exhibition for 1882 is now being organised, and will open in May next. The arrangements for the reception of "crowded-out" pictures from the Royal Academy will be the same as last year.

Distributing prizes at Oldham on Monday night in connection with the Science and Art classes, the Hon. E. H. Stanley, M.P., said, in this country we wanted two types of secondary education. One should be the preparation of men for the University, and the other the preparation of men for the responsibilities of manufactures.

The Pall Mall Gazette is informed that the present value of Mr. Jones's collection of Sèvres porcelain, furniture, pictures, and miscellaneous objects of art bequeathed to the South Kensington Museum is estimated at half a million sterling. Part of these treasures have already been on view. In 1865 Mr. Jones lent to South Kensington Museum his valuable collection of miniatures, which is especially rich in enamels by Petitot, Bordier, and Zincke.

The Sussex Advertiser announces that it has been finally decided to open the proposed Fine-Art and Industrial Exhibition at Lewes on Feb. 13. The exhibition promises to be rich in valuable works of art and historical relics. Some rather famous pictures are to be contributed from neighbouring country houses. Moreover, the authorities at South Kensington have promised to do all that they can in support of the exhibition; and an application is to be made to Sir F. Leighton for a loan of the Chantry Bequest Collection. The Lord Lieutenant of Sussex, the Earl of Chichester, will be invited to open the exhibition, in conjunction with the Speaker.

Sir Daniel Macnee, President of the Royal Scottish Academy, died, in Edinburgh, shortly before twelve o'clock on Tuesday night, at the age of seventy-five. In 1829 he was elected a member of the Scottish Academy, and became a favourite portrait-painter, his portrait of the Rev. Dr. Wardlaw receiving one of the gold medals at the International Exhibition in Paris in 1855. He was elected President of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1876, and in the same year was knighted, and received the honorary degree of LL.D. from the University of Glasgow. He frequently exhibited in the Royal Academy in London. Sir Daniel Macnee's portrait was given in our Number of May 6, 1876.

There is, we learn from the Rhyl Journal, a movement on foot among the artists resident in Wales to establish a society of arts for the Principality. Though a Royal Academy has existed in England many years, and the Scottish and Hibernian academies are old institutions, yet Wales has no kindred society. It is felt that the time has arrived when a Cambrian Academy of Arts should be brought into existence. This, in fact, is already done for the majority of the artists resident in Wales; and those connected with the Principality have agreed to form themselves into a society with the object of holding annual summer exhibitions; and Llandudno has been selected for the purpose.

In a circular issued in aid of an effort to extinguish the balance against the building fund of the Bradford Technical School it is stated that the new building will be formally opened in May or June next by the Prince of Wales. It is the desire of the council to remove the balance before this event. The building is expected to cost, inclusive of site, furniture, and fittings, not less than £25,000, of which about £19,000 has been already subscribed by a number of leading gentlemen of the town, assisted by a munificent donation from the Worshipful Company of Clothworkers of the City of London. A list of the principal subscribers to the fund is appended, and among them are the following:—"The Clothworkers' Company, £3000; Sir H. W. Ripley, £2500; Mr. Henry Mitchell, £2000, and also £1000 in addition, the last two of ten subscriptions of £500 each; Mr. Isaac Holden, £2000; Mr. M. W. Thompson, £1000; Mr. Angus Holden, £1000; Mr. W. E. Forster, M.P., £500.

REDUCTIONS OF RENT.

At the Premier's rent-audit, at the Glynne Arms Hotel Hawarden, last week, it was announced that Mr. Gladstone has again decided to remit 10 per cent of the rentals, and that Mr. Stephen Gladstone, Rector of Hawarden, will also remit 10 per cent on his tithes. The audit took place on Tuesday, but, at the special request of the Premier, the dinner was adjourned to Thursday, so that he might attend. The right hon. gentlemen delivered a long speech on agricultural topics, taking a wide view of the question, from the old protectionist days down to the present time, when the farmer had the opportunity of calling to his aid the results of scientific research and invention. A young man named Wilson, of Kettering, was brought up at the Mold Petty Sessions on Monday charged with annoying Mr. Gladstone at the rent-audit dinner. It was shown that when the prisoner had been drinking to excess he became a lunatic, and he was handed over to the care of the relieving officer of the Hawarden Union.

Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., at his rent-audit at Great Thurlow, Suffolk, returned 25 per cent to his tenants. This is the fourth occasion on which the right hon. gentleman has treated his tenants in this liberal manner.

Mr. Samuel Laing, M.P. for Orkney and Shetland, has considered separately the case of every tenant on his estate of Crook, Orkney, who suffered by the gale of Oct. 20 last, and has allowed abatements from last year's rents varying from 10 per cent to 30 per cent. In some cases these abatements have taken the form of executing tenants' improvements.

In consideration of the depression in business, the Dean and Chapter of Salisbury cathedral have remitted 15 per cent of the rent due by their tenants.

The tenants upon the Wentworth estate of Earl Fitzwilliam presented him on Tuesday with an address in recognition of his having remitted rent for the half year ending November last. The presentation took place at his Lordship's residence, Wentworth Woodhouse.

The Marquis Conyngham has remitted 10 per cent of the rents due from his Kentish tenants for the half year just closed, and made a similar reduction in the amounts due from the tithesayers. Earl Sondes has also remitted 10 per cent of the half-yearly rents of his tenants on his estates in Kent. In both cases similar reductions have been made ever since the agricultural depression set in.

A WESTERLY GALE IN THE ORKNEY ISLANDS: BORAY HEAD, HOY.—SEE PAGE 56.

SKETCHES FROM THE NEW PLAY OF "THE SQUIRE," AT THE ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

A WESTERLY GALE IN THE ORKNEYS.

"The Old Man of Hoy," to whose acquaintance many of our readers were introduced by Mr. S. Read some time ago, stands in the background of his present drawing, which shows the aspect of a westerly gale beating on Roray Head. The isle of Hoy, twelve miles long and five miles broad, containing the highest hills of the Orkneys, is the most westerly of that archipelago, commanding the entrance from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pentland Firth, directly opposite to Dunnet Head, and in sight of the bay of Thurso, to the south; while to the north it approaches near Stromness, a port of the larger middle island, Pomona, in the Orkney group. Nowhere on the mainland coast, except at Cape Wrath, sixty or seventy miles westward of Hoy, can the turmoil of the elements, in the most infuriated mood of wind and sea raging together, be more impressively beheld and listened to, while the mighty cliffs, rising hundreds of yards overhead, confront with an upright wall of solid rock the full onset of the storm-veered ocean, which vainly lashes their feet and streams over the massive shelves and steps of the projecting lower reef, where the strongest ship would be instantaneously dashed to pieces. But the Old Man of Hoy, sublimely impassive, the stern ancient sentinel ever guarding this tremendous passage of the seas, looks on at the strife of reiterated tempests, as he looks on calmly when all is serene and tranquil, an immovable witness of Nature's changeable temper. It would be too much to say, indeed, that he has nothing to lose by it; for the time will surely come, after a few thousand years more, when the base of that grand rock-pillar shall be undermined by the relentless waves, and will one day topple down headlong into the seething waters beneath. The very cliffs and hills of the island are doomed to be laid low by the same finally irresistible force; that of air and water, continually acting in hostile alliance, with the lapse of time, to overthrow the high places of the earth.

"THE SQUIRE" AT ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

A literary controversy upon the claims to original invention of the plot developed in Mr. Arthur Pinero's new play at St. James's Theatre has been noticed by competent observers in this journal. We have no further remark to offer upon that personal subject; but, as the play has decidedly won a fair degree of public favour, owing both to the merits of its composition and to the fine acting of Mrs. Kendal, of Mr. Kendal, of Mr. Mackintosh, and other performers, our page of sketches will be acceptable to those who have spent an agreeable evening at the theatre. They will be able, without doubt, readily to identify all the leading characters portrayed by our own artist; the heroine, Miss Verity, farming her rural estate with skill and success, and bearing the masculine title of "Squire," by the pleasantness of social repute, among her country friends and neighbours; Lieutenant Thorndyke, her unacknowledged husband, by a secret marriage, but with a darker secret behind, and with a narrow escape from the predicament of bigamy; Gilbert Hythe, the farm-bailiff, dressed rather like a gamekeeper, but devoured by jealousy and just indignation; old rustic Gunnion, who succeeds Gilbert in his employment on the farm, and who has a pretty little daughter; the gipsy maid, Christiana, full of malice; and the Rev. Paul Dormer, parson of the parish, whose part is well sustained by Mr. Hare. The story, which here we have only hinted at, comes unexpectedly to a fortunate end by the death of the first wife; and Lieutenant Thorndyke, after all, was not guilty of deliberate fraud, since he had believed her dead long before he wooed and wedded "the Squire." Readers who may not have an opportunity of seeing this interesting play should compensate themselves by the perusal of Mr. Thomas Hardy's fascinating novel, "Far from the Madding Crowd." A good subject of fiction may be treated, with great public advantage, by two or three different authors, in their different ways, as Shakespeare and the dramatists of all ages have not forbore to do. Mr. Hardy's story will be read and enjoyed, long after the play at the St. James's has given place to another theatrical novelty, but "The Squire" still continues to please a London audience.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The Earl of Wharfedale presented the prizes to the Sheffield (Hallamshire) Rifles last Saturday.

The Secretary of State for War is to present the prizes to the Artillery Volunteers at Sheffield to-day (Saturday).

The Council of the National Rifle Association have so far modified the recent decision with respect to the positions to be adopted in volunteer competitions at Wimbledon as to allow competitors to shoot standing, if they like, instead of kneeling.

An official inspection of volunteers connected with the Ambulance Department was made at Guildhall on Wednesday by Surgeon-General Shelton, Army Medical Department, in the presence of the Lord Mayor.

Sir H. Bartle Frere presided yesterday week night at a distribution of prizes to the Wimbledon detachment of the 3rd Surrey Rifle Corps, and, in the course of an address, warmly defended the colonists of South Africa from the charge of want of patriotism or self-sacrifice.

Captain Lord Waldegrave, London Rifle Brigade, made the leading score in the first meeting of the shooting association of that regiment, at the City rifle ranges, Rainham, Essex, last Saturday. About thirty members competed. In his twenty-one rounds, Lord Waldegrave made eleven bull's-eyes, three inners, three magpies, three outers, and a miss; and Private Ridgway, also eleven bull's-eyes, six inners, one magpie, and three outers.

Last Saturday afternoon the Sussex Volunteer Association held their annual meeting at the Brighton Townhall—the president, the Earl of Chichester, Lord Lieutenant, in the chair. The report stated that the deficit of the late secretary, Mr. Verrall, had been covered by the sale of sufficient Consols, and that the operations of the society for the past year had been most successful. At the suggestion of Lieutenant Neves, of the Hastings battery, it was decided to admit the Naval Volunteers; the arm to be used at competitions to be further determined on.

On Tuesday evening the Postmaster-General was present at the distribution of prizes to the 24th (Post Office) Middlesex Rifles; and, after the presentation of the prizes by Lady Turner, Mr. Fawcett addressed the members of the regiment. He said that to no class of persons was the discipline and training of the volunteer service more beneficial than to Post-office servants. Referring to the evil effects of conscription upon the industries and wealth of foreign countries, he said that so long as the volunteer movement flourished there would be no need for a conscription in England.

On Monday the Mayor of Ashton-under-Lyne publicly presented the medalion of the Royal Humane Society to a lad named Edward Wilcox for saving the life of a woman who was drowning.

THE COURT.

The event of the week to her Majesty has been the accession of another granddaughter, the Duchess of Connaught and Strathearn having been confined last Sunday. The best reports both of mother and child have since been received daily by the Queen. From Berlin we hear that a great-grandchild will shortly be hailed by her Majesty, when the Princess Royal of Great Britain will be grandmother. It has also been stated that Princess Elizabeth of Hesse Darmstadt (daughter of the lamented Princess Alice of England), who will soon arrive on a visit to the Queen, is the chosen wife of the Grand Duke of Baden. Divine service was attended, as usual, in the private chapel of Windsor Castle on Sunday by her Majesty and Princess Beatrice, the Rev. Canon Prothero officiating. The Queen's dinner party on Monday included Princess Beatrice, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, Lady Waterpark, the Dowager Marchioness of Ely, the Dowager Countess of Lisburne, Lord Albert Seymour, Major-General Du Plat, and the Master of the Household. The Empress Eugénie, who is for a week or two located at Osborne Cottage, is a frequent companion to the Queen in her daily drives, and, with her suite, often joins the Royal dinner circle. The Hon. Lady Biddulph and the Right Hon. Sir Henry Ponsonby have also dined with her Majesty. The Prince of Leiningen, too, has lunched with the Queen.

On learning of the death of Lady Fergusson, at Bombay, her Majesty telegraphed to Sir James Fergusson her condolence with him in his bereavement.

It is reported that early in March her Majesty will pay an unofficial visit to the Continent, coming back previous to the marriage of the Duke of Albany with Princess Hélène of Waldeck. She will journey to Cherbourg in her steam-yacht Victoria and Albert; but whether her destination will be Italy or the south of France is uncertain. The Queen will again travel incognito.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The visit of the Prince of Wales to Bradgate Hall was concluded as auspiciously as it began. The shooting throughout was highly successful; and the night before his Royal Highness's departure a brilliant pyrotechnic display was given in the park before some thousands of spectators. The Mayor of Leicester was among the guests entertained at dinner during the Royal visit; and the Prince, through his host and the Mayor, has conveyed his gratification at the heartiness of his reception in the district. His Royal Highness, who returned to town late yesterday week, was present on Saturday morning at a meeting of the members of the General Committee of the British Museum. The Prince, who had previously received Prince Ghika, the Roumanian Minister, who presented his Royal Highness with the Order of the Star of Roumania from King Charles, received on Monday at Marlborough House the Japanese Minister (M. Mori), to convey, through him, the expression of his thanks to the Mikado of Japan for the cordial reception which was given by his Imperial Majesty to Princes Albert Victor and George on the occasion of their recent visit to that country. The same evening the Prince returned to Sandringham, where the Princess and his family had remained, they having been present the previous day at the service at Sandringham church, the Vicar officiating. On Tuesday a grand meet of the West Norfolk Foxhounds took place at Narborough Hall. The Prince and Princess, who were present, were received by Mr. Anthony Hammond, master of the hounds, and a large field. After partaking of refreshments their Royal Highnesses joined in the hunt. A fox was found at the back of the hall, but the scent was soon lost; and a second, found near Westacre, went to earth after a moderate run. There was a heavy fog throughout the day. Other runs have been had during the week.

The Prince's yacht Osborne is required by his Royal Highness earlier this spring than is usual, so that probability attaches to the supposition that the Prince, with the Princess and their daughters, may go out in her to Malta to meet the Royal midshipmen.

It is expected the Prince will be present at this year's Welsh National Eisteddfod meetings at Denbigh, as the guest of Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, M.P., one of the presidents of the Eisteddfod.

Prince and Princess Christian arrived at Berlin on Tuesday on a visit of several weeks to the Crown Prince and Princess of Germany. Their Royal Highnesses were received by the Emperor and Empress at noon.

The Duke of Edinburgh, who is on an official tour of inspection through the north of Scotland, arrived at Aberdeen on Monday, where he was received by Captain Best, R.N., Commanding Inspector of the Coastguard for the Aberdeen district. His Royal Highness, after inspecting the Don and other stations south of Aberdeen, drove to Stairs Castle, where he passed the night as guest of the Earl of Erroll. On Tuesday the Duke continued his tour along the coast to Peterhead, staying the night at Lord Saltoun's residence, Philorth House. His Royal Highness on Wednesday visited Banff, Portsoy, Cullen, and Buckie, arriving in the evening at Elgin, where he received the freedom of the city. On Thursday he went to Burghead and Forres, and then on to Inverness, where a right good Highland welcome awaited him. The visit will close next week at Lerwick, where the Duke will lay the foundation-stone of the new municipal buildings. The Duchess of Edinburgh and her children are about passing a short time at Cannes. The Duke of Edinburgh has accepted the presidency of the Triennial Bristol Musical Festival, which will be held next October, and it is expected that his Royal Highness and the Duchess will both be present on the occasion.

Princess Louise of Lorne visited the Exhibition of Fine and Decorative Art at the European Galleries, New Bond-street, on Tuesday.

The anouchement of the Duchess of Connaught and Strathearn took place at ten minutes past three last Sunday afternoon. Her husband and the Right Hon. Sir W. Vernon Harcourt were present; the medical attendants being Dr. W. S. Playfair and Dr. F. H. Laking. The auspicious event was notified by the firing of the park and town guns; and the Emperor and Empress of Germany sent their congratulations to Prince and Princess Frederic Charles of Prussia on the happy occasion. The Duchess and her infant daughter are going on quite well.

The Queen having placed her yacht at the temporary service of the Duke of Albany, the Victoria and Albert will leave for Flushing on the 28th inst., embarking at that port for England the Prince and Princess of Waldeck, the Duke of Albany, and Princess Hélène. The Royal marriage will take place at Windsor shortly after Easter.

The Duke of Cambridge, left Gloucester House on Monday, on a visit to Colonel Tomline, at Orwell Park, Suffolk, for a few days' shooting. Major-General Tyrwhitt has been offered the post of aide-de-camp to his Royal Highness, in the place of the Hon. James Macdonald, deceased.

Princess Frederica of Hanover and Baron von Pawel-Rammingen attended last week the Hon. Mrs. W. Towey Law's private theatricals in the Oak Room at Hampton Court Palace, when the principal scenes in "The Tempest" were performed. Her Royal Highness and her husband left on Saturday for Paris. They visited the Duchess of Cambridge at St. James's Palace on their way through town.

Count and Countess Gleichen and Countess Feodore Gleichen are among the guests visiting Viscount and Viscountess Holmesdale at Riddlesworth Hall.

The Empress Eugénie will remain a few weeks at Osborne Cottage, the guest of her Majesty.

The Right Hon. Lord O'Hagan, ex-Lord Chancellor of Ireland, was on Tuesday night invested with the Order of St. Patrick by the Lord Lieutenant, Grand Master of the Order. The ceremony took place at the Viceregal Lodge, in the presence of the knights and a distinguished company. The guests were entertained at a banquet by his Excellency.

Among the recent hunt balls, the Craven and the Shropshire have been very successful. After the latter a meet took place the next morning at Berwick Hall.

The marriage of Mr. Henry Spedding with Lady Jane Stewart, fourth daughter of the late Earl of Galloway, will be celebrated in the second week of next month.

Lord Eskdail, eldest son of the Earl of Dalkeith, and grandson of the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch, attained his majority on Tuesday. The event was celebrated at Dalkeith, Bowhill, Langholme Lodge, and other ducal estates in Scotland.

BENEVOLENT OBJECTS.

Grants to charitable institutions to an amount of nearly £330 were made at a recent court of the Armourers and Brasiers' Company.

Mr. John Pendlebury, of South Bank, Eccles Old-road, who died on Dec. 1 last, left bequests to charitable institutions in Manchester and Salford to the amount of about £100,000.

His Excellency Count Münster, the German Ambassador, has consented to preside at the annual festival of the Society of Friends of Foreigners in Distress, on March 23 next, at Willis's Rooms.

Vice-Chancellor Hall on Tuesday decided that two bequests of two thousand pounds each to the Bishop of London's Fund and the Society for Improving the Dwellings of the Poor of the Metropolis were not rendered invalid by the Statute of Mortmain.

The annual festival to homeless children in connection with Dr. Barnardo's Home for Destitute Children took place on the 12th inst. at the Edinburgh Castle Hall, Burdett-road, in the east end of London. From the street children who assembled Dr. Barnardo selected a number of the most destitute for admission into the homes.

The death of Miss Hamilton, sister of the late Mr. Hamilton, of the firm of Hamilton and Jackson, shipowners in the African trade, has left £16,000 at the disposal of the Liverpool Corporation for distribution among the local charities. Mr. Hamilton bequeathed the money for this purpose, subject to his sister's life interest.

The gentleman mentioned recently by Sir Sydney Waterlow as having contributed £11,000 towards the erection of a convalescent home at Swanley for the patients of St. Bartholomew's Hospital is Mr. Kettlewell, one of the governors of the hospital, and the owner of large estates in Scotland. The home, when erected, will have eighty-five beds, two fifths for females and three fifths for males. It is expected that the home will be ready for occupation early in the summer of 1883.

A meeting of members of the St. John Ambulance Association was held on Monday for the consideration of plans for placing the seventy-five police stations at which litterers are used in telegraphic communication with the hospitals, and for determining upon the best description of wheeled transport. Resolutions in accordance with these objects were passed. The Grocers' Company has granted £25 and the Skinners' Company £5 5s. to the City district of this association.

The annual general meeting of the friends of the Royal Ear Hospital, Frith-street, Soho, was held on the 12th inst. It is one of the oldest and most deserving of special hospitals, and during the sixty-five years it has been established about 100,000 patients have been treated for ear diseases within its walls. During 1881 there were 600 attendances, at which nearly 2300 separate cases received careful treatment. Of these, a large proportion was reported as practically cured, and many more alleviated. At the earnest request of the surgeons, the committee decided on opening the new in-patient department within the next twelvemonth. It was further agreed to open the out-patient department two more days a week, to meet the convenience of the numerous patients.

ECONOMIC PROGRESS OF ITALY.

At the meeting of the Statistical Society on Monday night—Mr. Jas. Caird presiding—a paper was read by Professor Leone Levi on the Economic Progress of Italy during the last Twenty Years since the Establishment of the Italian Kingdom.

He said secondary instruction had made considerable progress. The franchise was as yet greatly restricted. The rate of taxation in Italy was very high. Land was heavily burdened. The tariff was complicated. The communal and provincial taxes not only added much to the rate of taxation, but greatly aggravated their incidence. Taking the public ordinary revenue of Italy at 49 million pounds, and the communal and provincial at 23 million pounds, or 73 million pounds in all, that gave a proportion of £2 11s. per head; whilst in the United Kingdom, the taxes, public and local, would amount to £2 18s. per head. But in proportion to income, while British taxes amounted to about 10 per cent, the Italian amounted to upwards of 35 per cent. Manufacturing industry was rapidly progressing, both in variety and amount. At the Milan National Industrial Exhibition the clearest evidence was given of the capacity of Italy to produce largely, and of the existence of skill and resources inferior to no other countries. One of the most cheery evidences of progress since the construction of the Italian kingdom was the increase in the amount deposited in the savings banks. In 1860 the total amount deposited was £6,288,000, in 1879 £33,594,000. As a test of the economic results of the formation of the Italian kingdom it was shown that whilst in 1865 the 5 per cent Italian Stock was quoted on the London Stock Exchange at 65½ highest and 63 lowest, in 1881 the highest was 93½ and the lowest 85½. Let Italy succeed in avoiding wars, let her cultivate the arts of peace and commerce, and march in the van of social, moral, and intellectual progress, and she could not fail to become ere long one of the most advancing and influential States—a pledge of tranquillity and strength among the members of the European family.

A discussion followed; and it was stated that Italy, as far as her commerce was concerned, was rapidly improving, especially to the advantage of this country.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

ITALY.

A requiem service for the late Victor Emmanuel was celebrated on Monday in the Pantheon at Rome, in the presence of an immense assemblage, who showed the greatest reverence.

At a banquet to veteran soldiers given last week, Count Biancamano, the Mayor of Rome, declared that the people of Rome would rather see their city perish in ashes than again subjected to Papal domination.

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.

The King of Portugal has been entertaining his Royal guests from Spain with much ceremony. On Thursday week their Spanish and Portuguese Majesties drove in the same state carriage from Belem to the Palace of Pombal, and opened an art-exhibition. At the ceremony, the despatches say, "the clerical element in crimson, violet, and black robes was very conspicuous." On Friday night the Tagus was illuminated. Immense crowds lined the embankment. The Royal party looked on from the Exhibition Palace. On Saturday there was a review; ten thousand men defiled before the Royal tribune in Rocio-square, including a large proportion of marines. On Sunday all four Royal personages came from Belem to Lisbon. Seven state galleys disembarked at the Arsenal; thence carriages were taken to a bull-fight. The accounts say the Portuguese national sport is a prettier pageant and less cruel than that of Spain, the bull's horns being tipped with brass balls. The horses are not gored nor is the bull killed in the ring, as is done at Spanish fights. On Monday morning last the King and Queen of Portugal, with their Royal guests and suite, left for three days' hunting at Villa Vicoza; from which place the Spanish Monarchs will return to Spain by Badajoz.

BELGIUM.

The Brussels season has begun, and promises to be a gay one. Last week the Count and Countess of Flanders gave their first ball, which will be followed by two more on their Royal Highnesses' return from a visit they are paying to the Countess's family at Sigmaringen. There are to be two balls next month; and one after Easter at the Château de Laeken, where last year a splendid fête was given in the Jardin d'Hiver. The prize of 25,000*fr.* given by the King for the best work on moral and political science published within the last five years has been awarded to M. Emile de Laveleye, the eminent professor of the University of Liège, for his work, "La propriété et ses formes primitives."

GERMANY.

The second reading of the motion of Herr Windthorst for the exercise of their ecclesiastical functions by Roman Catholic clergymen without State authorisation was agreed to on the 12th inst. in the German Reichstag by 233 votes against 115. On Monday the Reichstag, after considerable discussion, approved the international convention for guarding against and exterminating the phylloxera; and also, on the first and second reading, the consular treaty between Germany and Greece. At the instance of the Prussian Ministry, Prince Bismarck has, it is said, resolved not to submit the recent Rescript to the German Parliament.

Last Saturday the Prussian Diet was opened in Berlin by a Speech from the Throne read by the Vice-President of the Ministry, Herr Puttkammer. The address referred to the improving state of the national finances, to the forthcoming bills for changes in the fiscal system, and to the further purchase of railways by the State. It was also stated that a bill would be submitted to the Diet for furthering a peaceful arrangement of the religious difficulties. The Upper House on assembling elected the Duke of Ratibor President, Count Arnim-Boitzenburg first Vice-President, and Dr. Beseler second Vice-President, on a second ballot, by 138 votes, 37 being recorded for Count Brühl. In Monday's sitting of the Lower House Dr. Köhler (National Liberal) was elected President. The posts of First and Second Vice-Presidents were conferred upon Herr Stengel and Herr von Heereman. The bill for the settlement of the ecclesiastical question was introduced. A Berlin telegram says that the measure does not appear to give satisfaction in any quarter. It does not go far enough to satisfy the Centre, and makes too many concessions to please the Liberals.

In the Budget which is shortly to be submitted to the Prussian Diet both revenue and expenditure are set down at 33,806,617 marks; or 26,736,201 marks above the figures of last year's estimates. In order to effect this balance the Government will propose a loan to the amount of 4,966,700 marks, which will be mainly devoted to carrying out the economic plans of the Ministry.

The Emperor William has convened a committee of scientific experts to deliberate as to the best way in which Germany could participate in Arctic exploration.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The Education Committee of the Upper House of the Reichsrath has terminated its deliberations on the question of the Czech University in Prague, appointing Herr Unger reporter. The committee agreed unanimously to the establishment of the University, and differences of opinion only existed in regard to the details in the creation of the proposed establishment. The majority of the committee recommend that there should be an entirely independent Czech University, while the majority are in favour of adopting the decisions of the Lower House on the subject without modification.

In Monday's sitting of the Lower House of the Hungarian Diet the Minister of Finance defended the proposals of the Budget, and, replying to various observations, he declared that he entirely concurred in the policy of the Premier, and accepted his share of the responsibility for that policy. M. Rohonczy referred to certain proceedings of the Ministry of Communications, and brought several charges against the Secretary of State, M. Hieronimi, and other officials of the Communications Department. The Minister of that department defended M. Hieronimi and the officials under him; and M. Hieronimi refuted several of M. Rohonczy's assertions.

RUSSIA.

So far from any deficit being anticipated this year in Russia, the revenue, according to the official estimates just published, will precisely meet the expenditure. The total revenue is set down at 762,004,512 roubles, and the total expenditure is estimated at the same figure. Considerable reductions are announced in one or two of the Ministries—notably in the War Office—but the Ministry of the Interior figures with an increase of nearly four million roubles.

TURKEY.

The Porte has addressed a note to the Powers pointing out the rights of the Sultan in Egypt, and, in conclusion, demanding an explanation from England and France of the joint declaration recently sent to the Khedive.

Lord Dufferin had an audience of the Sultan last Saturday. Reforms in Armenia were the principal subject considered. His Majesty assured our Ambassador that the question was receiving his constant attention, and that as soon as the scheme of reforms being considered by his Ministers had been approved he would at once order it to be put into execution.

AMERICA.

The defence of Guitau has been opened, the counsel seeking to show that his client, who frequently interrupted him with contradictions, was insane.

A collision occurred on the Hudson River Railroad on Friday last week, which had very disastrous consequences. The train taking many members of the New York Legislature from the capital broke down when near New York, and was run into by a following train. The stoves in the palace cars set fire to the wreck, and several passengers who could not be extricated were burned to death. Eight persons were killed, and others were fatally injured. Among the dead was Senator Wagner, the inventor of the parlour cars.

CANADA.

The Dominion Parliament has been summoned to meet at Ottawa on Feb. 9.

The Ontario Legislature was opened on the 12th inst. The Speech from the Throne gives the outlines of a number of measures, principally of local interest, to be introduced during the Session. It also refers to the grief of the inhabitants of Ontario at the assassination of President Garfield.

The Dominion Artillery Association Prize, open to all Canadian batteries, was won by the Ottawa Field Battery.

New land regulations for Manitoba and the North-West have recently been issued. They do not affect the free grant and pre-emption system in force, but refer mainly to the sale of lands to companies and associations for colonisation purposes.

INDIA AND BURMAH.

The full text of the remonstrance which has been sent by the Viceroy to the King of Burmah on the subject of the monopolies granted by his Majesty has been published. The remonstrance, which is couched in strong terms, states that the Indian Government attaches great importance to unrestricted trade, and points out that this was the chief object which the treaties concluded with the late King were intended to secure. It proceeds to say that if the King of Burmah continues his present policy of granting monopolies the Viceroy will regard the Government of Mandalay as being indifferent to the maintenance of good relations, and the British Government will hold King Theebaw responsible for any diminution of friendship between the two countries. The Viceroy concludes by disclaiming any wish to interfere with the internal affairs, fiscal or otherwise, of Burmah.

The Burmese Envoy, who recently arrived at Rangoon on a mission to the Viceroy, has returned to Mandalay. His mission is regarded as being a farce and an insult to the Indian Government.

The death is announced at Berlin of Herr Manser, the inventor of the rifle bearing his name.

Five more of the crew of the last Arctic exploring-ship Jeannette are reported to have arrived at Jakutsk.

The Gazette announces that Lieutenant-Colonel John T. Nicolls O'Brien, C.M.G., has been appointed Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Island of Heligoland.

The Nice municipality has agreed on a loan of ten millions for a school of art, the rebuilding of the theatre, and other improvements.

A Royal proclamation has been issued declaring the whole of the Act entitled "An Act to Consolidate and Amend the Law Relating to the Coinage and her Majesty's Mint," to be applicable to, and in force in, her Majesty's colony of Fiji.

Mr. Saul Samuel, C.M.G., Agent-General for New South Wales, has been informed by telegram of the arrival in Sydney of the ship Fortarshire, which sailed from Plymouth with emigrants in October last.

There was a decrease in the exports of bread-stuffs from the United States last year as compared with 1880. In 1881 they amounted to 224,000,000 dols., as compared with 276,000,000 in 1880.

The Australian cricketers have telegraphed declining to play at Lord's on the terms proposed by the M.C.C.—£200 per match. Unless some fresh arrangement be made, they will appear only at Lord's against Middlesex, on July 10, 11, and 12.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK ENDING JAN. 28, 1882.

SUNDAY, JAN. 22.
Third Sunday after Epiphany. Morning Lessons: Isaiah lxii.; Matt. xiii. 1-24. Evening Lessons: Isaiah lxxv. or lxxvi.; Acts xiii. 26. St. Paul's Cathedral, 10.30 a.m., Rev. Prebendary Marshall; 3.15 p.m., Rev. Canon Stubbs; 7 p.m., the Bishop of St. Albans. St. James's, noon.	Westminster Abbey, 10 a.m., Ven. Archdeacon Watkins; 3 p.m., Rev. Canon Barry. Whitehall, 11 a.m. and 3 p.m., Rev. Francis Paget. Savoy, 11.30 a.m., Rev. C. H. Middleton-Wake, Assistant Chaplain; 7 p.m., Ven. Canon Watkins, Archdeacon of Northumberland.
MONDAY, JAN. 23.
Marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh, 1874. London Institution, 5 p.m. (Professor J. W. Judd—Are there Coal-fields under London?). British Architects' Institute, 8 p.m. (Mr. Hugh Stannus on the Artistic Treatment of Ironwork). Royal Academy, 8 p.m. (Professor Armitage on the Composition of Pictures), and on Thursday.	Asiatic Society, 4 p.m. (Mr. E. Thomas on Arab Voyages to India in the Ninth Century; and Mr. W. M. Ramsay on Recent Archaeological Discoveries in Phrygia). Medical Society, 8.30 p.m. (Lectures on the History of the Artistic Treatment of Ironwork). Wattford Orphan Asylum, elections. Social Science Association, 8 p.m. (Mr. James Mottram on Bankruptcy Reform).
TUESDAY, JAN. 24.
Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Professor M'Candrick on the Mechanism of the Senses). Anthropological Institute, anniversary, 8 p.m. Medical and Chirurgical Society, 8.30 p.m.	Civil Engineers' Institution, 8 p.m. (Mr. C. W. Folkard on the Analysis of Potable Water). Gresham Lectures, 6 p.m. (Dr. J. T. Auld on Law) (four days). Colonial Institute, 8 p.m. (Mr. J. R. Saunders on Natal).
WEDNESDAY, JAN. 25.
Conversion of St. Paul. Marriage of the Princess Royal to the Crown Prince of Prussia, 1858. Geological Society, 8 p.m. Hunterian Society, 8 p.m. Royal Society of Literature, 8 p.m. Society of Arts, 8 p.m. (Mr. W. R. Browne on the Causes and Remedies of Bad Trade).	Dental Surgery Association, anniversary, 8.30 p.m. Zetetical Society, 8 p.m. (Mr. Henry Richard, M.P., on the Gradual Triumph of Law over Brute Force). German Hospital, Dalston; annual court, Cannon-street Hotel, 1 p.m. Albert Hall, Burns anniversary, 7.45 p.m.
THURSDAY, JAN. 26.
Moon's first quarter, 7.45 a.m. Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Mr. H. N. Mosley on Corals). London Institution, 7 p.m. (Mr. J. Radcliffe on the Flute—musically illustrated). Philosophical Club, 6.30 p.m. Royal Society, 4.30 p.m.	Antiquaries' Society, 8.30 p.m. Orphan Working School, Cannon-street Hotel, elections. Inventors' Institute, 8 p.m. Society of Arts, 8 p.m. (Dr. Thudichum on Recent Researches into the Theory of Living Catagion).
FRIDAY, JAN. 27.
Browning Society, 8 p.m. Royal Institution, 8 p.m. (Mr. Reginald S. Poole on the Museum and Libraries of Alexandria, 9 p.m.).	Clinical Society, 8.30 p.m. Quekett Microscopical Club, 8 p.m. United Service Institution, 3 p.m. (Captain C. O. Browne on an Attack on Ironclads by Artillery).
SATURDAY, JAN. 28.
Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Professor E. Pauer on Beethoven). Physical Society, 3 p.m.	Botanic Society, 3.45 p.m. Alexandra Hospital for Children, concert, Steinway Hall, 2.30 p.m.

THE CHURCH.

PREFERRMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Bennett, George, Master of the Cathedral School, Salisbury; Minor Canon of Salisbury Cathedral.
 Blakeney, W. N., Curate of St. Andrew's, Nottingham; Rector of West Allington, Lincolnshire.
 Bond, W. H., Curate of Beauchamp Roding; Rector of High Ongar.
 Brodick, Alan, Vicar of Godalming; Honorary Canon in Winchester Cathedral.
 Burne, John Butler; Rector of Wasing, Berks.
 Cole, G. W.; Vicar of Beetham, Westmorland.
 Dand, James John; Vicar of Chieveley, Berks.
 Eardley-Wilmot, E. A.; Vicar of St. James's, Tunbridge Wells, Kent.
 Eyre, A. C.; Rector of St. John the Baptist's, Gloucester.
 Faithful, James Arthur; Incumbent of Holy Trinity, Scarborough.
 Farrar, H. W.; Missions to Seamen Chaplain, the Tyne Mission Ship, South Shields.
 Ford, Edmund Dence; Rector of Pentridge, Dorset.
 Fraser, William, Rector of St. Clement's Longsight, Manchester; Vicar of St. Stephen-by-Saltash, Cornwall.
 Hayward, H. R., Vicar of Cirencester; Rural Dean of Cirencester.
 Hiley, Alfred; Vicar of Walton.
 Jackson, Gerald Henry; Vicar of Titcherington.
 Knight-Bruce, G. W. H., Curate-in-Charge of St. Wendron, Truro; Vicar St. George's, Everton, Liverpool.
 Mayne, William J., Curate of St. Philip and James, Leckhampton; Vicar of Sherbourne-with-Windrush.
 McNeile, H., Curate of Colwich, Staffordshire; Vicar of Belvedere, Kent.
 Meredith, T. E., Incumbent of Burleydown; Rector of Lightfield, Salop.
 Millard, Dr., Vicar of Basingstoke; Honorary Canon in Winchester Cathedral.
 Morton, Henry James; Curate of East and West Harnham, Wilts.
 Noel, H. Anthony, Vicar of St. Stephen-by-Saltash, Cornwall; Rector of St. Clement's, Longsight, Manchester.
 Noel, J. C.; Vicar of Holy Trinity, Trowbridge, Wilts.
 Pigot, J. T., Vicar of Fremington and Rural Dean of Barnstaple; Prebendary of Exeter.
 Prescott, J. P., Curate-in-Charge of Great Alne, Aylesbury; Vicar of Kelly, Cornwall.
 Towers, F. E., Rector of Elmsthorpe, and Vicar of Earl's Shilton, Leicestershire; Rector of Holy Trinity and St. Mary's, Guildford.
 Vernon, W. T., Canon of York, and Rector of Eton; Rural Dean of Beverley.
 Walsh, Walter, Chaplain to the Earl of Devon; Rector of Folkington.
 White, George H., Vicar of Holy Trinity, Heath Town; Vicar of Lawley, near Wellington, Shropshire.
 Wright, George Armitstead; Vicar of Ravenfield.—Guardian.

The Clothworkers' Company have voted £100 per annum for five years to the East London Church Fund, specially for church work under the direction of the Bishop of Bedford in the eastern portion of the diocese of London.

A new set of quarter chimneys have been erected in All Saints' Church, Derby, which play upon the whole of the ten bells, the largest being 32 cwt. The whole of the work was carried out by Messrs. Smith, Midland Clock Works, Derby.

Dr. Short, the aged Bishop of Adelaide, the last survivor in active work of the four Bishops consecrated in Westminster Abbey on St. Peter's Day, 1847, has placed his resignation in the hands of the Archbishop of Canterbury. His Lordship took an affecting leave of the Diocesan Assembly at the autumn Session.

The Bishop of London has requested the Rural Deans to invite the attendance of two lay delegates from each parish to confer with him as to the feelings of the laity with regard to a diocesan conference, the establishment of which in London, as in nearly every other diocese, the Archdeacon of Middlesex has long warmly advocated.

Encouraged by the Bishop of Lincoln, the Church of England at Nottingham is adopting a scheme to meet the religious wants of the people. Since the borough was enlarged in 1877 the population has increased so rapidly that a fund of £60,000 is about to be established, with which to provide eleven mission churches in the town.

At the council meeting of the London Diocesan Home Mission on the 12th inst. a communication was made by Mr. Holland Burne, of Bath, the executor, that by the will of Mrs. Maria Mary Fussell, who died on the 20th ult., the mission benefits to the amount of £100,000, or thereabouts, of which £60,000 will be available in about a year's time, and the remaining £40,000 will fall in on the deaths of certain annuitants.

The Lord Mayor, accompanied by the Lady Mayoress and Mr. Sheriff Ogg, went in state on Tuesday to open a fancy fair in the Collyer Memorial Schools, Peckham, in aid of a fund for providing an organ for the Church of St. Luke, Rosemary-street, Camberwell. This church (of which the Rev. J. Cooper Lintott is Vicar) was erected about seven years ago in memory of the late Bishop Wilberforce, in whose diocese (Winchester) the district formerly was.

The organ of St. Peter's Collegiate Church, Wolverhampton, has been rebuilt at a cost of £1000, and was reopened on the 6th inst., the sermon being preached in the morning by Sir J. C. Hawkins, Hon. Canon of St. Albans. At Evensong a new cantata by Mr. A. H. Mann, Mus. B. Oxford, organist of King's College, Cambridge, entitled "Ecce Homo," was performed for the first time by a special choir and orchestra. The dedication was continued on Sunday week, the preachers being Bishop Abraham and the Rev. J. T. Jeffcock, the Rector. The organ was built by Messrs. Willis.

Another effective Munich window, by Mayer and Co., has been fixed in the north transept of St. Stephen's Church, South Kensington. It represents the Communion of Saints, and is in memory of Mr. and Mrs. Wright, of Eridge House, Fulham.—St. Paul's Church, Mainstone, Herefordshire, has received an addition to its painted glass, in a window from the studio of Mr. Taylor, of Berners-street. The parable of "The Ten Virgins" is the subject of the window, which is the gift of the "Mercer" family, in memory of a lady who died at the age of ninety-four years.—A stained-glass window, to the memory of the late Dr. Humphry Sandwith, C.B., has been placed in the chancel of Thorpe-Salwin Church, near Worksop, by his brother, the Vicar of that parish. The scenes selected are from the Parable of the Good Samaritan, as appropriate to the doctor's well-known benevolent work on fields of battle. The artists are Messrs. Lavers, Barrard, and Westlake.

The Zoological Society in New South Wales, who have successfully introduced trout and perch into that part of Australia, have renewed their efforts to introduce salmon, and have applied for and received from the United States Fish Commission two boxes containing 40,000 ova. These, after great care and trouble being taken with them, have been safely deposited in hatching-boxes at Bowenfels.

A meeting of Convocation of the University of London was held on Tuesday evening, when the debate, adjourned from last May, was resumed on a motion and amendment then brought forward. The former declared that it is desirable that women of the requisite standing should be entitled to become members of Convocation and vote in the election of members of Parliament. The latter simply was, "That female graduates be admitted to Convocation." A long discussion was followed by the withdrawal of the motion and the adoption of the amendment. It was also resolved that there ought to be London University Local Examinations, as well as for the older Universities.

INSTALLATION OF THE MAHARAJAH OF BURDWAN, BENGAL.

THE LATE MR. BERNAL OSBORNE.

The elderly or middle-aged readers of Parliamentary debates have a lively recollection of this gentleman's brisk and trenchant speeches in the House of Commons. His wit, though not of the most finely tempered quality, seldom failed, as Ancient Pistol says, "to make incision;" and, being a two-edged blade, wielded to right and left in the mêlée of debate with little reserve wherever he could hit a palpable blunder or false pretence, it often smote his own party as hard as their opponents. But he was, undoubtedly, an honest Liberal politician, though incapable of persistent combined action with men of diverse convictions and sympathies for a common object of public advantage. He was born in 1812, the son of Mr. Ralph Bernal, formerly M.P. for Rochester, and Chairman of Committees in the House of Commons. He was educated at the Charterhouse and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He held a commission for a time in the 71st Light Infantry, and afterwards in the Royal Fusiliers, and on retiring from the Army entered Parliament for Wycombe in 1841. He subsequently sat for Middlesex, Dover, Liskeard, Nottingham, and Waterford, but retired from Parliament at the general election of 1874. From December, 1852, to February, 1858, he was Secretary to the Admiralty. In 1844 the deceased gentleman married Catharine Isabella, daughter and heiress of Sir Thomas Osborne, Bart., of Newtown Anner, county Tipperary, and of Kincor, county Waterford, when he assumed the name of Osborne in addition to his patronymic. He was Deputy-Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace of the counties of Waterford and Tipperary. Mr. Bernal Osborne's death, which took place at Bestwood, Nottinghamshire, the seat of the Duke and Duchess of St. Albans, has been recorded in the Obituary of this Journal.

The Portrait we have engraved is one drawn by Count d'Orsay in 1846, when Mr. Ralph Bernal, junior, as he was then called, was still comparatively a young man, and in the fashion of that day.

THE LATE MR. RALPH BERNAL OSBORNE.
FROM A DRAWING BY COUNT D'ORSAY, IN 1846.

THE MAHARAJAH OF BURDWAN.

The district of Burdwan, which is comprised within the Bengal Presidency, is situated north of Hooghly and Midnapore, south of Beerbhoom, and extends from Bancoorah, on the west, to Nuddes, on the east, all British dominions. Its population much exceeds two millions; and it is one of the most fertile and productive districts of India, yielding abundant crops of rice, sugar, indigo, cotton, silk, oil-seeds, tobacco, and other articles of merchandise, besides coal and iron. The late Maharajah, who inherited enormous riches, though he did not exercise the powers of government, which had been assumed by the East India Company, long before, in virtue of a special treaty, bestowed large sums of money upon founding colleges and schools, and other useful institutions, for the benefit of his people. His son, the present Maharajah, has passed through his minority, and has now entered upon full possession of the estates and revenues of his predecessors. The ceremony of his formal installation, and investiture with the rank and title of Maharajah Dhiraj Bahadur, conferred by the Viceroy of India, was performed in the town of Burdwan, a month ago, by Sir Ashley Eden, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. This scene at the Durbar or Court held upon the occasion, is shown in our Illustration, from a photograph by Mr. A. J. Caddy, of Calcutta. The Maharajah of Burdwan, who appears standing and listening to the sunnud, or patent of nobility, read by Mr. Cockerell, is accompanied by his young friend, the Maharajah of Cooch Behar, sitting next the empty chair. Sir Ashley Eden, who sits in the chair of state on the dais, is attended by his two aides-de-camp and his private secretary; the Commissioner and the magistrate for the district are present, supporting the new Maharajah. In a brief address to the youthful owner of so large an inheritance, Sir Ashley Eden congratulated him upon having received a good English education, and upon being surrounded by those who were his late father's trusted counsellors and friends. He added, "Owing to the custom which has existed for many years in your family, of giving out portions of the estate in what are known as Putree tenures, your connection with your tenantry, and your interest in their welfare, cannot be so direct and so immediate as it is in estates which are under the direct management of their proprietors; but although this is the case, it is, I feel sure, hardly necessary that I should impress on you that the receipt of a vast inheritance, and the assumption of a high position amongst the nobility of these provinces, entail on you grave duties and deep responsibilities which cannot be ignored. A landholder cannot dispose of his moral responsibility for the welfare of his tenantry by parting with the right of collecting the rents to third parties. I am glad to hear that besides maintaining, on their present footing, the existing charitable and educational establishments, you have taken measures to open a free library at Burdwan; to give a system of works for the supply of pure water to the town of Burdwan, and to provide a suitable building for the school, which is to be raised by your liberality to the status of a college. In addition to these instances of your well-considered liberality, you have subsidised the munificent sum of Rs. 10,000 towards the new hospital at Darjeeling, where you possess considerable property." In conclusion, Sir Ashley Eden again commended the example of the late Maharajah, for whom he had entertained a long and warm friendship; and exhorted his son to worthy conduct. The prescribed "nuzzur," or symbolic gift of feudal homage, was then offered by the young Maharajah; and the complimentary distribution of "uttar" and "pan," or rose-water and betel-nut, among the distinguished company, brought the ceremonial to its close.

EXPLOSION ON BOARD H.M.S. TRIUMPH.

A despatch was received last week at the Admiralty from Rear-Admiral Stirling, Commander-in-Chief on the Pacific Station, reporting an explosion of some "xerotine siccative" on board his flag-ship the Triumph, which caused the death of a seaman and two gunners, and wounded seven other men. This disaster occurred off Coquimbo, on the coast of Chili, on Nov. 22, at eight o'clock in the morning. Two men were killed on the spot, and a third died on the following Saturday, while others were terribly burnt. The material which exploded was stowed under the paint-room, contrary to the Admiralty instructions. It appears that a man went there with a light, and it set fire to the inflammable gas rising from the spilled liquid; he was literally blown to pieces. The substance which has thus been the cause of a serious accident is commonly known as "patent driers," which are used in ironclads to prevent corrosion between the double-bottoms. The Triumph is an iron steam-ship of 6640 tons, carrying engines of 4890 horse power, with an armament of fourteen guns. Her captain is Captain Albert H. Markham. We give an illustration of the ship.

A meeting of sportsmen in South Notts was held at Nottingham last Saturday to elect a Master of the Hunt in place of Lancelot Rolleston, Watnall Hall, who has retired, after a popular mastership of six years. The Earl of Harrington was unanimously elected to succeed Mr. Rolleston.

H.M.S. TRIUMPH, ON BOARD WHICH THE LATE FATAL EXPLOSION TOOK PLACE.

THE COMING SESSION.

Welcome to many a political gladiator have been the clarion notes of the Opposition heralds, summoning the faithful to the feast which precedes the gathering of the Parliamentary hosts to do wordy battle against each other. The gap made in the foremost rank of the Conservative Party by the death of the Earl of Beaconsfield has not been definitively filled: the crown of leadership has not yet been actually assumed by either the Marquis of Salisbury or Sir Stafford Northcote, who respectively hold the reins of the Conservative Peers and Conservative Commons. With ready tact, Mr. William Henry Smith has invited a distinguished circle of his party "to meet Sir Stafford Northcote and Lord Salisbury" at dinner on Saturday, Feb. 4, at 3, Grosvenor-place. As for the leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, he has given the signal to his followers in the form of a circular:—

Pynes, Exeter, Jan. 5.
Dear Sir,—As there can be no doubt that, in the present critical state of affairs, the opening of the next Session will be very important, I trust you may be able to be in your place on Tuesday, Feb. 7.—I remain, yours faithfully,
STAFFORD H. NORTHCOTE.

When Parliament does assemble, on the 7th of next month, the first vexed question to demand settlement will probably again be the position of the House of Commons with regard to Mr. Bradlaugh's claim to take his seat as junior member for Northampton. Although the Earl of Derby has recently added the weight of his opinion to that of Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Bright, who, with their colleagues, thought it would be most expedient to offer no obstacle to Mr. Bradlaugh's entrance, it is reported that when the hon. member approaches the table to take the oath Sir Stafford Northcote will again move that he be not permitted to do so. Whereupon it is further rumoured that the Government will meet the Opposition motion with the convenient issue of "the previous question." But, this troublesome matter once settled, or left unsettled, we have the authority of the Prime Minister for the statement that "the very first question, I may say, of magnitude that her Majesty's Government will have to deal with in the coming Session must be to endeavour to bring the great legislative instrument, the House of Commons, into a condition satisfactorily to perform its duties." This familiar Ministerial declaration was repeated by Mr. Gladstone in the quiet speech he made to his tenants at the rent-audit dinner in the Glyne Arms, Hawarden, on the 12th inst. What Mr. Sala reasonably wishes us to call "the closure," instead of the clôture, will, it is said, be proposed as the Government's remedy for Obstruction. It would certainly be a drastic measure. "Were that matter disposed of," Mr. Gladstone went on to say, "I do not know anything which would stand between us and the endeavour we intend to make to deal with this question of local government, local expenditure, and local taxation." The engrossing subject of the land on this side of St. George's Channel occupied the greater portion of Mr. Gladstone's address. On this point he was studiously moderate. He did not conceal his opinion that farmers would derive vastly more benefit from a genial summer than from the reforms impending: such as the simplification and cheapening of the transfer and descent of land, and the granting of additional security to tenants. It is plain, however, from what Lord Derby lately divulged in his frank, Liberal speech that a Municipal Bill for London will claim precedence of any Ministerial Land Bill next Session.

Irish Home Rule Members are said to be girding up their loins for a resolute attack upon the Government for the incarceration of Mr. Parnell in Kilmainham Jail. Motions of censure have already been drawn up. Meantime, the Irish crusade against English members found vent in a fresh place on Monday, Mr. Slagg meeting with considerable and persistent opposition in Manchester when he (succeeding Mr. Jacob Bright) attempted to address his constituents.

Politics, happily, do not always monopolise the attention of leaders of either party. The public has lately been privileged to learn how readily Sir Stafford Northcote can throw off party cares, and join genially in a ball given to his household at Pynes. On Tuesday Sir Stafford appeared in the pleasant capacity of chairman at an interesting lecture on Canada, delivered brightly by his son, Mr. H. S. Northcote, M.P., in Exeter, where the Northcote family is held in high respect.

THE DEAD OF NIGHT.

Of all expressions, is not this the most expressive? With these words, I think, all weird and ghastly stories should begin: "At the dead of night—"

There is no silence by day like that silence: there is no darkness so utter, no cold so keen, as that of the midnight hour sacred to wandering spirits and burglars. There is nothing so dead as the dead of night.

To walk through a churchyard late on a winter's night, with the church to moonward of you, hiding what feeble light there was, and only allowing it to make faintly visible the white and distant gravestones: this, with the wind rustling the leaves of high and dimly-threatening poplars, would be an excellent test of the "faith in unfaith" of a sceptic. If his pulse did not quicken—and with it his step—he would certainly be a prize sceptic, and have a right to disbelieve in anything he liked.

Even at home, in one's own room, the dead of night is not an easy time to be brave in. Napoleon used to talk of "two a.m. courage"—that which is found in working order when its owner is waked out of his first sleep; and Napoleon no doubt possessed it. But for the run of us, ordinary mortals—can we be sure how we should behave if we woke suddenly and saw, by the glimmering starlight, a burglar ransacking our drawers? Are we quite certain that we should not pretend to be asleep till he was safe off the premises? Not quite, I fear; yet we know the story—a very ghastly one, to my fancy—of the lady who while brushing her hair saw in the looking-glass the reflection of a living eye, that twinkled in a portrait opposite: and who did not start nor shiver, but hummed a tune for a while, then pretended to have mislaid something, looked for it—and finally went down stairs as if to seek it, summoned the men-servants and secured the robber. (Burglars please note, and do not be caught like this again.)

And it was only a woman who did this. Very likely she suffered for it afterwards—the strain of those few minutes would probably lay up a delicate woman for days. Even so Lady Macbeth ruined her constitution by the mental effort of that hour or two in the ghastliest "dead of night" in which she made her husband a murderer. But the bravery—the "two a.m. courage"—of both ladies is unquestionable.

Indeed—to change sides in my argument—nothing is a greater surprise to their friends than the coolness and decision with which even nervous and timid people often act at some especially trying time. The terrible accident—the fire, or explosion, or what not—which ought to frighten them "out of their lives," does not do anything of the sort, but, instead, makes men of them. Is this because such people—vivid in imagination but weak of limb—are apt to picture to themselves the immediate result of any great shock as a state of feeling altogether new, utterly intolerable; so that when the shock comes, and they find themselves—unless they are in actual bodily pain—really very much the same as before, they are vaguely surprised, and, for the time at all events, much relieved? People make to themselves the strangest exaggerated pictures of evils they have never experienced. Brave soldiers have sometimes fancied, before their first battle, that as soon as "it had begun," they would be sure to run away—overlooking the fact that hardly anything ever does definitely begin; that the scenes of life melt into one another imperceptibly, like the dissolving views at the poor departed Polytechnic.

It is quite curious, that terror of the unknown. To give an instance, entirely apart from the gloom of night—a recollection of happy holidays. Only last vacation, Smith, of Trinity, having heard with almost sceptical admiration of the walking feats of Brown of John's and Jones of Caius, determined to join them in a tour. He had longish legs, but was a sedentary, lazy man; and the twenty miles set down for the first day's travel really frightened him—haunted him, even in his dreams. Yet, when they had once started, he was absurdly relieved, at the end of even the first half mile, to find that twenty-mile walking was only walking after all. It was not some new-fangled mode of locomotion fitted for the legs of giants; like the bourgeois in Molière, he had been walking twenty miles all through his life—by instalments. And so he swung merrily along the hard highway, and actually in his new-found confidence "forced the pace" for the first mile or two—strongly though he felt what the result of his hardihood must be! (It was blisters.)

So it is a sort of revelation of one's own identity, to look at oneself from the outside as a person who has experienced some great shock, such as one reads of in books. You see that it is just the same self that you are accustomed to, subject to the same little worries and petty wants—that when awakened by an explosion you are not suddenly clothed by machinery, but that your garments have to be put on and buttoned (to some extent, if not so completely as usual), and that shirt-studs may be lost even when the house is on fire—although on such an occasion one might not stop to look for them.

Only in the dead of night there may be this great difference—darkness. To be made a blind man for the time—and for a time when one most needs all one's senses—this is a sharp trial of the strongest nerve. Danger in the dark—it is really unlike other danger. You can hardly measure it: you cannot feel sure that you are its master. Read, in a volume of old murders, that one which most fascinated De Quincey: the murderer of Ratcliff—highway was not a man one would fear to meet in the daylight—but clothed in the shadow of night he threw half London into a panic. Darkness made him like a vampire or a were-wolf—a monster all the more horrible because of his humanity.

It is the horror of night that makes it the time for suicides—it is not only the desire to die unseen, but a fascination of the midnight Thames, a dreadful weariness that belongs to the lonely space of a dark mountain-side. There is one way, and only one, of actual escape from this desolation—to something different, whatever that something may be. Then, if ever, courage goes: or despair dresses up in wild rags of daring, that make it look like a brave thing to flee from life. I have said that the change from a vague terror to a definite danger gives courage; and so is the possibility of bringing unmeasured sorrow to a certain end a temptation—to that last act which has been called a coward's bravery.

And yet in these our times—strange result of the specialisation which we call civilisation—there is a dismal army of policemen, printers, firemen, who live only in the night, and sleep by day "more than the wild-cat." It is rather dreadful to think of this weird existence—against nature, we should call it, but for the recollection of those colourless zoophytes which swim in the waters of sunless caves. It must make men unlike their fellows—with reversed feelings, perhaps, in time; unready and helpless in the day, full of the rare two a.m. courage, but quite out of the common two p.m. article. Who ever heard of a night-policeman seeing a ghost? Yet, perhaps, occasionally he does—in the daytime! The glare of the sunlight, the rattle of the streets, the freshness of scents, the warm fullness of the air, must dazzle and weary beings only used to the black, silent, ill-odorous, raw and empty dead of night.

POSTAGE OF THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

AT HOME.
The postage within the United Kingdom, including the Channel Islands, is One Halfpenny.

ABROAD.
To places abroad the postage is Twopence, with the following exceptions:—
To Aden, Borneo, Ceylon, India, Java, Labuan, Mozambique, Penang, Philippine Islands, Sarawak, Singapore, and Zanzibar, Threepence.
To Madagascar (except St. Mary), Fourpence.

Copies printed on thin paper may be sent to the Colonies and Foreign Countries at half the rates stated above; but their use is not recommended, the appearance of the Engravings being greatly injured by the print at the back showing through.

Newspapers for foreign parts must be posted within eight days of the date of publication, irrespective of the date of the mails.
Office: 198, Strand, W.C.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.

There is to be a fresh competition for the four groups of statuary to be placed on Blackfriars Bridge.

By a majority of one, the London School Board has directed the St. Paul's Industrial School Committee to resume the inquiry into the management of that school.

It is stated that the Incorporated Law Society do not propose to take any steps with regard to the solicitors who have been imprisoned for bribery at elections.

The Governor and Company of the Bank of England have voted £500 towards the Lord Mayor's Fund at the Mansion House for the Defence of Property in Ireland.

The Birmingham Town Council on Tuesday, by 20 votes to 6, decided not to grant the use of the Townhall for an address by Miss Parnell.

The annual soirée of the Bradford Chamber of Commerce was held on Monday evening—Major Shepherd presiding. The annual report was presented and adopted.

At the Mansion House yesterday week the Lady Mayoress entertained a large number of guests at a juvenile ball. More than 1500 children and their friends assembled in the Egyptian Hall, and a most enjoyable evening was spent.

Edward Hanlan, of Toronto, the present Champion Sculler of the World, arrived at Liverpool on Tuesday. He revisits England to compete with Robert Watson Boyd, the Newcastle-on-Tyne sculler, in a match for five hundred pounds a side and the Championship of the World. This match is to take place on the Tyne on April 3.

An order was made by the Court of Appeal last Saturday to wind up the Haven Gold-Mining Company, formed with a capital of £100,000 to work as a gold-field a piece of land in New Zealand, leased at a small rental by a native chief. The company had been previously the subject of legal proceedings, Vice-Chancellor Bacon having refused a winding-up order.

A public meeting was held in the Manchester Townhall on Tuesday afternoon, under the presidency of the Mayor, for the purpose of promoting a National Conservatoire of Music, on the lines indicated by the Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke of Albany, and Prince Christian, on their recent visit to Manchester. A resolution approving of the formation of a National Conservatoire of Music was unanimously adopted.

The new Vestry-hall at Wandsworth, which has been in course of erection for the past two years, will be publicly opened next Tuesday, in the presence of Sir Henry Peck, Bart., M.P., Sir Trevor Lawrence, Bart., M.P., Lord Middleton, and other Surrey noblemen and gentlemen. The building has cost upwards of £13,000, and contains a large number of apartments adapted for the various purposes to which they are intended, the principal room being a large public hall is capable of accommodating about 1000 persons.

A number of gentlemen attended at the Crystal Palace on Tuesday evening on the invitation of Mr. E. H. Johnson, manager of the Edison electric light system, to witness the experimental lighting of the concert-room in anticipation of the forthcoming exhibition. The lamps were hung in festoons between the pillars in the galleries. In the centre of the room a magnificent glass chandelier was hung, and on one of the tables, at which the guests were dining, an épergne of natural flowers was illuminated by one of the lamps being set in their midst. There were in all some 215 lights, each of them of sixteen-candle power, but remarkably steady and soft.

The Moderators and Examiners for the Cambridge Mathematical Tripos have issued the list of candidates who have acquitted themselves so as to deserve mathematical honours. Of the ninety-five competitors, ninety have been approved, including one agrolat. The further examination for the Tripos is being held this week. The final list arranged in order of merit as Wranglers, Senior Optimes, and Junior Optimes will be published in the Senate House on Friday, the 27th inst. The Examiners and Moderators for mathematical honours report that the following female students have acquitted themselves so as to deserve mathematical honours—Miss Burstall, Miss Julyan, and Miss Lister, all of Girton.

A congress of teachers of the French language and literature was opened on Thursday week in the large hall of the Merchant Taylor's School, Charterhouse. The meeting on the following day was held at St. Paul's School, St. Paul's-churchyard; and on Saturday the members assembled at the rooms of the Society of Arts, Adelphi. The main object of the congress is the inauguration of the National Society of French Teachers in Great Britain, which has the support of Messieurs Victor Hugo, Léon Gambetta, Challemeil-Lacour, and other eminent Frenchmen. M. Antonio Roche has been elected President of the Executive Committee; and it has been determined to establish a journal to represent the profession. The head masters of English schools will be invited to take part in the next Congress, which will be held at Oxford in January next.

A meeting of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute took place on Monday, when the chair was taken by the Master of the Charterhouse, and a paper "On Biblical proper names, personal and local, illustrated from sources external to Scripture," was read by the Rev. H. G. Tomkins. Communications from Professor Cheyne and others were read, after which a discussion took place, in which the Chairman pointed out the value of the investigations so carefully carried on by the author. Mr. Hormuzd Rassam gave numerous Arab traditions, and cases of the permanence of the early names in the East, and their remarkable significations, instancing the name Babylon, and its meaning. He added that in his recent excavations he had come across a tradition that its ruins contained antediluvian records. That, however, was a question that certainly remained to be proved, but there was no doubt of the value of the records now safe on their way to England; more he would not say. The Rev. Dr. Stern and Mr. Trelawny Saunders followed, the latter pointing out that many names in the early history of the Israelites appeared on Egyptian records, and would seem to be traceable to Hindoo sources. In Palestine and Egypt there was a tradition that civilisation came from the east, and in India that it came from the north-east, therefore the cradle of the human race seemed to lie between.

AUGENER and CO.'S CIRCULATING MUSIC LIBRARY, to which is added Lonsdale's Library, is the largest in Europe. Annual subscription two guineas. One guinea returned at end of subscription. See Prospectus, 81, Regent-street, London.

TO SCHOOLS.—Suitable selection parcels of MUSIC are sent out on approval, with liberal discount, on receipt of good London reference. Catalogues gratis.—AUGENER and CO., School Department, 80, Newgate-street.

Just published, price 1s.
THE MOORE and BURGESS CHRISTMAS AND NEW-YEAR'S ALBUM FOR 1882. THE BEST EVER PUBLISHED. containing seventeen entirely New and Original Copyright songs, by the most eminent Authors and Composers of the day, with the full Choruses and Pianoforte Accompaniments. Post-free, 1s. stamp. Address: Manager, Publishing Department, St. James's Hall, London. No less than eight of the above songs are introduced into the Holiday Programme.

LOAN OF WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS, for the use of Amateurs and Students. The Subscription Portfolio contains a choice Collection by Leading Artists. Catalogue and Terms forwarded on application. ARTHUR ACKERMANN, 101, Regent-street, London, W.

CHROMOPHOTOGRAPHY. (KRAUS' PROCESS). The New Art (emulating any person without previous knowledge of either Painting or Drawing) to Colour Photographs on convex glasses, in imitation of China and Enamel Painting. Boxes containing every requisite, 25s. and 30s. Particulars post-free. Specimens shown on application at the Sole Agents, J. BARNARD and SON, 23, Oxford-street, London, W.

VITREMANIE, superseding Diaphanie. An easy and inexpensive method of decorating window panes, churches, public buildings, and private houses, by which may be produced the rich colouring and beautiful designs equal in appearance to real stained glass. Handbook of Designs and full instructions, 1s. 10. Boxes, comprising designs, &c., at 25s. and 30s. Particulars post-free. Sole Importers, J. BARNARD and SON, 23, Oxford-street, London, W.

MADAME ELLIOT makes up DRESSES stylishly and fits elegantly. 8, Great Portland-street, Oxford-street.

MADAME ELLIOT'S CORSETS. Splendid Shapes. French and English make, 5s. 6d., 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 21s., 35s., 42s. To avoid delay, send size of waist and P.O.O. for the amount. Corsets exchanged if not approved. Corsets made to order; also, Corsets made for every figure (embonpoint, deformities, curvatures, spinal complaints, &c.). Also specialists in Ladies' Tonnures, Tonnures-Jupons, Crinolinettes, &c.—8, Great Portland-street, Oxford-street.

PRATT'S LADIES' BELTS AND ABDOMINAL SUPPORTS. ARE CONVENIENTLY RECOMMENDED AS THE MOST COMFORTABLE AND EFFICIENT EVER MADE. Apply to the Ladies' Attendant, J. F. PRATT, 43 (late 42), OXFORD-STREET, LONDON W.

NOTICE.
JAMES SHOOLBRED and CO.'S USUAL STOCK-TAKING SALE will be on WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, and FRIDAY, JAN. 25, 26, and 27. TOTTENHAM HOUSE, Tottenham-court-road.

CAMBRIC POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS. REAL IRISH CAMBRIC—ALL PURE FLAX. Children's .. 2s. 6d. per doz. Hemstitched. Ladies' .. 3s. 3d. " " " " Gent's .. 4s. 10d. " " " " "The Cambrics of Robinson and Cleaver have a world-wide fame."—The Queen. Samples and Price-List post-free. ROBINSON & CLEAVER, Manufacturers to the Queen, Belfast.

SHETLAND SHAWLS.—The Marvel, two yards square, White, 1s. 10d.; Black, Grey, or Cardinal, 2s. The Zephyr, finely fringed, White, 3s. 3d.; Black or Cardinal, 3s. 6d., post-free.—ROBINSON and CLEAVER, Belfast.

NEW BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, and CO.'S
NEW LIST.

MAGYARLAND. A Narrative of TRAVELS through the SNOWY CARPATHIANS, and great Afield of the Magyar. By a FELLOW of the CARPATHIAN SOCIETY (Diploma of 1881), and Author of "The Indian Alps." 2 vols., royal 8vo., cloth extra, with about 120 Woodcuts from the Author's own Sketches and Drawings. 3s.

A LADY TRADER; or, Adventures in the Transvaal. By Mrs. HECKFORD. 1 vol., crown 8vo., cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

PAUL THE MISSIONARY. By the Rev. WILLIAM M. TAYLOR, D.D., Minister of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York City. Illustrated. Crown 8vo., cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

NOAH'S ARK. A Contribution to the Study of Unnatural History. By PHIL ROBINSON, Author of "In My Indian Garden," "Under the Pankah," &c. Small post 8vo., 12s. 6d.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.—The POETICAL WORKS OF OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES. In 2 vols., 18mo., exquisitely printed, and chastely bound in limp cloth, gilt top, edges uncut, 10s. 6d.

SCHWATKA'S SEARCH. Sledging in the Arctic in Quest of the Franklin Records. By WILLIAM H. GILDER, second in Command. 1 vol., demy 8vo., Maps and Illustrations, price 12s. 6d.

THE LAND OF DYKES AND WINDMILLS. or, Life in Holland. With Anecdotes of Noted Persons and Historical Incidents in connection with England. By FREDERICK SHENCKEL WILD, Author of "Harrington," "Stonewall Lodge," &c. Crown 8vo., 12s. 6d.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON: his Life and Philosophy. By G. W. COOKE. Post 8vo., cloth extra, 8s. 6d.

At all Libraries.

WAITING. By A. M. HOPKINSON. 3 vols.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, and RIVINGTON, Crown Buildings, 18, Fleet-street, E.C.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

FAITH AND UNFAITH. By the Author of "Phyllis," "Molly Bawn," "Mrs. Gouffrey," &c. 3 vols., post 8vo.

POOR ARCHIE'S GIRLS. By KATHLEEN KNOX. 3 vols., post 8vo.

London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 15, Waterloo-place.

NOTICE.—NEW STORIES.

CORNHILL MAGAZINE for FEBRUARY will contain the First part of a New Story, entitled

DAMOCLES.

By the Author of "For Percival," &c.

With Illustrations by Mr. W. Small.

IN THE APRIL NUMBER will commence a Novel entitled

NO NEW THING.

By the Author of "Madelonnette de Mersac," "Matrimony," &c.

With Illustrations by Mr. Du Maurier.

London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 15, Waterloo-place.

BELGRAVIA for 1882. (Price One shilling Monthly.) A New Serial Story, entitled ALL

PORTS AND CONDITIONS OF MEN, by BESANT and RICE.

Authors of "Ready-Money Mortuary," illustrated by Fred

Barnard, was begun in the January Number of "Belgravia," which Number contained also the First Chapters of a New Novel, entitled THE ADMIRAL'S WARD, by Mrs. ALICE

ANDER, Author of "The Wounding of a Soldier," &c.; the First Portion of a Comedy in Two Parts, by OLIVER, entitled RESURGEO; a poem by WILKIE COLLINS, entitled HOW I MAINTAINED

HIM; and the First of a Series of Twelve Papers, by Mrs.

MACQUOID, entitled ABOUT YORKSHIRE, with numerous

Illustrations by Thomas H. Macquoid.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE for

1882 (price One shilling Monthly). The January Number of this Periodical contained the First Chapters of a New Serial

Story, entitled DUST, by JULIAN HAWTHORNE. SCIENCE

NOTES, by W. MATTHEW WILLIAMS, will also be continued monthly. CHATTO and WINDUS, Piccadilly, W.

NEW BOOKS.

FRENCH COURT AND SOCIETY. Lady JACKSON.

A HUNTER'S WANDERINGS IN AFRICA. Mr. J.

CASELLOUS.

DIARY OF AN IDLE WOMAN IN SICILY. Mrs.

ELLIOT.

IN AND ABOUT DRURY LANE. Dr. DORAN.

SCENT IN THE CRIMEA AND CAUCASUS. Mr.

PHILIP WOLLEY.

EDWARD BENTLEY and Son, 8, New Burlington-street.

Now ready, 8vo., with Illustrations, 15s.

GRIFFIN, AHOY! A Yacht Cruise to the Levant and Wanderings in Egypt, Syria, the Holy Land, Greece, and Italy in 1881. By General E. H. MAXWELL,

C.B.

HENRY and BLACKETT, Publishers, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

CHEAP EDITION of Miss HAY'S Novels.

Price 2s. picture boards; 2s. 6d., cloth gilt, uniform with

"The Lion's Money," "FOR HER DEAR SAKES," "BRENDA YORK," &c.

LONDON: J. and B. MAXWELL, Milton House, Shoe-lane, E.C.

NEW ETYMOLOGICAL WORK BY DR. CHARNOCK.

Now ready, in crown 8vo., 6s., cloth lettered.

PRENOMINA; or, The Etymology of the Principal Christian Names of Great Britain and Ireland.

LONDON: TACKESS and Co., 5, and 35, Ludgate-hill.

PRACTICAL LESSONS IN PAINTING

ON CHINA, PORCELAIN, &c. By Madame LABRONNE

DELAHAYELLE. From the French by Gustave A. Bouvier.

Fifth Edition. Price 1s. 6d., post-free, 1s. 10d.

LONDON: LEIGHTON, LANGE, and Co., 60, Regent-street, W.

Enlarged Edition. pp. 300, bound, 1s. or 1s. 6d.

HOMOEOPATHIC FAMILY

INSTRUCTOR. By Drs. R. and W. EPPS.

Describes fully and Prescribes for general Diseases.

LONDON: JAMES EYRE and Co., 45, Threadneedle-street.

JUST PUBLISHED, post-free, 2 stamps,

DYSPEPSIA and the SEVERER FORMS

OF INDIGESTION. A small pamphlet on these distressing complaints and their complete cures. Published by the Author,

EDWARD KING, Esq., Staff Surgeon R.N., 23, Warwick-st., Rugby.

Third Edition, price 1s., post-free,

THE New Electrolytic Treatment of Cancer

and of simple Tumours. By G. EDGELOW, M.D.

NELSON and Co., 21, Duke-street, Grosvenor-square, W.

CHRISTMAS CARDS at CHAPMAN'S.

Twenty-five shilling worth of Christmas, New-Year,

Birthday, Valentine, and Easter Cards, 20 assorted in a box, fresh and perfect copies, suitable for scrap-books, screens, &c.,

sent post-free on receipt of P.O.O. for 5s. 6d.; stamps 2d. extra.

THOMAS CHAPMAN, Stationer, 34, Leicester-square.

CHRISTMAS CARD ALBUMS, 3s. 6d.,

6s. 6d. New Year scrap-books, 2s. 3d., 4s. 6d., 6s. 6d., 8s. 6d., strongly-bound scrap-books, 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 6s. 6d., 7s. 6d., sent post-free on receipt of P.O.O. payable at Charing-cross to THOMAS CHAPMAN, 34, Leicester-square.

PETER ROBINSON, OXFORD-STREET.

WINTER STOCK-TAKING SALE.

GREAT REDUCTION IN ALL DEPARTMENTS.

SILKS, VELVETS, SATINS, and BIROCADES.

100 pieces Black Striped Velvet .. per yard 3s. 6d.

200 pieces Rich Coloured Brocade Velvet 4s. 6d.

100 pieces White Brocade Satin 5s. 6d.

50 pieces of All-Silk Damask 2s. 11d.

100 pieces Silk Brocade 2s. 6d.

100 pieces Black Brocade Velvets at a great reduction.

200 pieces Rich Black Satin Brocade .. per yard 4s. 11d.

Black Satin Duchesse, per yard .. 5s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and 7s. 6d.

50 pieces Coloured Satin Duchesse .. per yard 3s. 11d.

Black Satins, from 1s. 9d.

DRESS MATERIALS.

Foulés, Cashmires, Drap d'Italie, Brocade Cashmires, Satin

Stripes, Double Belge, &c., reduced to 6d., 1s., and 1s. 6d. per yard.

Fine Cashmere Merinos, Coloured and Black, at 1s. 6d. and 2s.

per yard.

Very fine Cashmere, new shades, 2s. per yard.

Best Japanese Silks, in plain colours and with rich Satin

Stripes, 1s. per yard.

200 pieces All-Wool Scarborough Serge, in Navy, Bronze, Dark

Green, Brown, and Black, at 9d. per yard.

Rich Velvet Velveteens, very wide, in Black and all the new shades of colour, reduced to 2s. per yard.

Coloured Brocade Velveteens, reduced to 1s. per yard.

Aberdeen Wireweaves, the original make, very scarce, reduced to 9d. per yard.

All last season's best Percales, Brilliante, Ginghams, &c., reduced to 3d. and 4d. per yard.

180 pieces best Satines (Pompadour), last year's printing, reduced to 6d. per yard.

PETER ROBINSON, OXFORD-STREET.

SALE of MANTLES, COSTUMES, &c.,

being

THE STOCK of WESTROP and CO.,

100, REGENT-STREET.

PURCHASED for Cash, and now SELLING at LESS than HALF PRICE.

Circulars of Particulars post-free.

PETER ROBINSON, Oxford-street, W.

NICHOLSON'S

ANNUAL WINTER

CLEARANCE SALE

OF LADIES' WEARING APPAREL AND DRAPERY

of every description is now proceeding, and will be continued until Feb. 1, 1882.

GOODS IN ALL DEPARTMENTS ARE GREATLY

REDUCED IN PRICE.

A considerable saving may be effected by selections from the stock as now reduced.

DETAILED CATALOGUES GRATIS, ON APPLICATION,

OR SENT POST-FREE.

50 to 55, ST. PAUL'S-CHURCHYARD.

JAY'S, REGENT-STREET.

A CATALOGUE.

In consequence of numerous applications having been made to Messrs. JAY, for a Catalogue of their weekly sale of super-abundant stock, Messrs. Jay will have ready by Monday next, the 23rd instant, a descriptive Catalogue of the Mantles,

Costumes, &c., with the late and present prices opposite each article. A Catalogue will be forwarded gratis on application.

WEEKLY REDUCTIONS PRIOR TO STOCK-TAKING IN FEBRUARY.

MESSRS. JAY beg to announce that in lieu of a "Sale," which generally results in the first comers securing the best bargains, they will up to the time of their

Stock-taking in February, adopt a plan of making WEEKLY

REDUCTIONS of their surplus stock of all goods, which they are disposed to sell at a loss to themselves and to the advantage of their customers.

Habitual customers will at once notice the reductions, and others will find some great and reasonable bargains.

GUIDE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Model Mantles.

No. 3408. 23 Guineas; reduced to 12 Guineas.

No. 3409. 28 Guineas; reduced to 15 Guineas.

No. 3412. 33 Guineas; reduced to 15 Guineas.

Model Costumes.

No. 344. 24 Guineas; reduced to 12 Guineas.

No. 14. 48 Guineas; reduced to 27 Guineas.

No. 72. 42 Guineas; reduced to 15 Guineas.

Mourning orders will be forwarded as usual, at any time, and at any distance, on receipt of letter or telegram; but no other goods can be sent on approbation.

MOURNING FOR FAMILIES.—Messrs.

JAY'S experienced assistants travel to any part of the kingdom, free of expense, to purchase, they take with them dress and millinery, ladies patterns of materials, all marked in plain figures and at the same price as if purchased at the warehouse in Regent-street. Funerals, at stated charges, conducted in London or country.

JAY'S,

THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE,

REGENT-STREET, W.

PETER ROBINSON'S

COURT and GENERAL MOURNING

WAREHOUSE,

REGENT-STREET.

FREE OF CHARGE.—MOURNING.

Upon receipt of letter or telegram,

Goods will be forwarded, free of extra charge, for selection, to English or foreign addresses, if desired; or Patterns will be sent, with Book of Illustrations, by first post.

THE COURT and GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE,

226 to 232, REGENT-STREET, LONDON.

The Largest Mourning Warehouse in Europe.

JANUARY, 1882.

STOCK-TAKING SALE.

GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICE

of Goods in all Departments.

For ONE MONTH only.

ALSO, THE IMPORTANT SALE OF

THE STOCK of Mr. BARKER,

of the Westbourne-grove

Mourning Warehouse,

which has been bought for cash,

at a great discount off, by

PETER ROBINSON,

and will be sold at a VERY GREAT REDUCTION,

at his MOURNING WAREHOUSE,

226 to 232, Regent-street,

on JAN. 14 and following days.

It consists of the General Stock of a

Mourning Warehouse:

Namely, Dresses, Costumes, Mantles, Jackets, Millinery, Silks,

Materials by the Yard, Gloves, Hosiery, &c.

Circulars of the Sale sent on application.

PETER ROBINSON, MOURNING WAREHOUSE,

226 to 232, REGENT-STREET.

CHOCOLAT MENIER.

Awarded the GRAND DIPLOMA OF HONOUR.

CHOCOLAT MENIER, in 1/2 lb. and 1/4 lb.

Packets.

For BREAKFAST and SUPPER.

CHOCOLAT MENIER.—Awarded Twenty

POOR CHILDREN AT THE PANTOMIME: SKETCHES AT COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE ON THURSDAY, JAN. 12.
SEE "PLAYHOUSES," PAGE 51.

THE PRINCE OF WALES IN LEICESTER.

The visit of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to the Earl of Stamford and Warrington, at Bradgate Park, Leicestershire, came to an end on Friday, last week, the Prince having arrived there on the Monday evening. Bradgate is situated five or six miles north of the town of Leicester, and at an equal distance, or more, to the south of Loughborough; it is within the famous tract of ancient woodland called Charnwood Forest, much of which has been cleared of trees. The Barony of Groby, in this neighbourhood, was held by Sir John Grey, the first husband of Elizabeth Woodville, who afterwards became the Queen of Edward IV. Henry Grey, Lord Grey of Groby, in the reign of King Henry VIII., built the old hall of Bradgate, which was afterwards occupied by the Duke and Duchess of Suffolk, parents of Lady Jane Grey, and she was born here in 1537. The remains of this building, called "Lady Jane Grey's house," consisting of the two towers and the chapel, of brick with stone quoins, are still to be seen in Bradgate Park. Our Artist's Sketches represent these ruins, as well as the modern mansion, in the Elizabethan style, and the entrance to the Park, which has many beautiful features, a fine avenue of Spanish chestnuts, some grand old oaks, and a trout-stream flowing in a rocky bed. The town of Leicester, where the Prince of Wales, on his arrival, received an address of welcome from the Mayor and Corporation, affords the subjects of several of these Sketches. It is a place of great historical antiquity, having been the Roman military station of Ratae, and a portion of the Roman wall is still extant. The gateway and pieces of walls belonging to Leicester Abbey, in which Cardinal Wolsey died, are seen at the north side of the town, on the banks of the small river Soar. The Church of St. Mary de Castro, which is, though not the most ancient, the one of most architectural interest, has a Norman porch, at one side, and Norman chancel, with Early English and later Gothic building in the nave and aisles, and with a lofty tower and spire. St. Nicholas' Church is of greater antiquity, having been constructed of materials taken from the Roman city wall. St. Margaret's, which is of Perpendicular architecture, stands on the site of the ancient Cathedral Church; there was, in Saxon times, a Bishopric of Leicester, now superseded by that of Lincoln. The Townhall was built in Queen Elizabeth's reign; and its Mayor's Parlour, with rare stained-glass windows and carved chimney-piece, is of some antiquarian interest. Our Illustrations of Leicester are from photographs by Mr. Hudson, of that town.

The arrival of the Prince of Wales at Leicester, at five o'clock on Monday evening, by the Midland Railway from London, was made an occasion of public festivity. The streets were decorated and illuminated with much taste, and so was the railway station, which was crowded with spectators, including the Mayor, Corporation, and magistrates of the ancient borough. On the platform were General Burnaby, M.P., Colonel Blewitt, and a guard of honour of one hundred Leicestershire Volunteers, under the command of Colonel Sir Henry Halford. His Royal Highness, on alighting, was received by Lord Stamford, the crowd cheering, and the band playing "God Save the Queen." His Royal Highness and Lord Stamford walked along the platform, the Mayor and the Town Clerk advancing to meet them. The Mayor having presented to his Royal Highness an address of welcome, the Prince handed to the Mayor a written reply, in which he gave hopes that the Prince and Princess of Wales might be able, some time this year, to visit Leicester for the opening of the Abbey Park. The band played "God Save the Prince of Wales" as he entered Lord Stamford's carriage, to drive through the town, where the crowd was extremely enthusiastic. The streets were densely packed, the mounted police finding it difficult to clear a passage. A telegram was dispatched to Bradgate Park, and a large bonfire was lighted on a hill top. The village of Groby had illuminations—the Pool there, forty acres in extent, being surrounded by coloured lights. At Bradgate Hall, the tenantry of Lord Stamford, who had assembled, greeted the Prince with hearty cheers. The next three days were chiefly devoted to shooting in the woods around Bradgate and Groby. The sportsmen were the Prince of Wales, Lord Stamford, Viscount Newport, the Earl of Lathom, Colonel Kenyon Slaney, Lord Ormathwaite, Earl de Grey, Sir F. Johnstone, Mr. Trelawney, Mr. de Lisle, Colonel Teesdale, the Earl of Hardwicke, Mr. Christopher Sykes, Colonel Lloyd, and Lord Forester. Haywood was first shot over and furnished splendid sport, the pheasants rising nicely, owing to the bright sunshine which prevailed in the middle of the day. Homewood, a plantation of great extent, was next entered and furnished excellent shooting, both hares and pheasants being plentiful. This was on the second day. The attendance of spectators was enormous, hundreds of conveyances of all kinds lined the roads, and several thousand people, many of whom had walked several miles, watched the shooting with the keenest interest. On the road from Leicester to Bradgate was one continuous stream of conveyances, and there could not have been less than between five and ten thousand people in the field adjoining the wood where the Royal party was shooting. The fog then became rather dense, and the pheasants refused to rise. The cessation of firing led the people to suppose the sport was over, and in their loyal enthusiasm they advanced, cheering vociferously, and unwittingly prevented the Royal party shooting over the remaining part of the wood. His Royal Highness then left the wood and walked along the road towards the entrance to the private grounds, the crowd cheering tremendously. So great was the enthusiasm that the cheering was heard two miles off. On reaching the private gate Lord Stamford addressed the spectators. He said,—"Ladies and gentlemen, I am instructed by his Royal Highness to thank you for your loyal and hearty reception. I am sorry, however, that the very great crowd has spoilt his Royal Highness's sport. (A voice, 'It's loyalty, my Lord,' and cheers.) I know it is the loyalty of the people; this is the first time his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has paid us a visit, but I hope he will pay us another during the summer. I now call for three hearty British cheers for his Royal Highness (Great cheering). Cheers were afterwards given for Lord Stamford. His Royal Highness then entered the carriage and drove off amid great enthusiasm. The Prince bowed repeatedly in response to the cheers. At night there was a brilliant illumination in the park and grounds; many thousands of brilliantly coloured lamps were placed round the walks with beautiful arrangements on the lawn and among the trees. There was also a splendid display of fireworks, which was witnessed by several thousand people.

Sir John Holker, Q.C., was sworn in as Lord Justice of Appeal before the Lord Chancellor, at his country residence, Blackmoor, Liss, Hants, on Saturday afternoon last; and took his seat in the Court of Appeal, at Lincoln's Inn, on Monday.

Under the special patronage of the Prince and Princess of Wales and all the members of the Royal Family, and with the direct sanction of the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, a military assault-at-arms and military concert by the combined bands of the Guards, will take place at the Royal Albert Hall on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 11, in aid of the Royal Cambridge Asylum for Soldiers' Widows.

POETRY.

Enthusiastic persons reside for some time in more or less interesting places abroad, become familiar with and enamoured of the past and present history, aspect, manners and customs, to say nothing about the most famous personages, of those places, and, having in their souls the spirit of poetry, write, it may be an epic, or it may be a drama, such as Savonarola: by Alfred Austin (Macmillan and Co.), and expect that the subject which they, in consequence of the atmosphere they have breathed and of the local circumstances of which they have felt the inspiring influence, found so deeply absorbing, will be regarded in the same light by the public in general. Such expectations are very often disappointed; and it will be a matter for felicitation, as well as for surprise, if a disappointment of the kind should not result from the publication of the tragedy in which Savonarola is the principal figure. It is doubtful whether that zealous priest, whose character and career are boldly likened by the author of the tragedy to those of the Founder of Christianity, has left behind him a sufficiently world-wide celebrity to make a play of which he is the central personage an object of popular, or even numerous, appreciation. It may be that, as the author asserts, "with one supreme exception, Savonarola is the most interesting figure in human story;" but, while the "supreme exception" is treasured up in the minds and hearts of all Christendom, the name of Savonarola has made but a feeble impression upon the mass of mankind. Savonarola belongs almost entirely to Florentine history; to care much about him it is necessary to be conversant with the situation of Florence at the age in which he lived; and it is doubtful whether even in Florence itself at the present day he is remembered, beyond the circle of refined, cultivated, erudite, enthusiastic strangers that are within the gates, with more than lukewarm feelings whether of gratitude, or of reverence, or of admiration. Even the genius of George Eliot failed to render the story of Savonarola, as it is told in "Romola," nearly so popular as that of "Adam Bede" with the British public; and it is to be feared that the tragedy of which Savonarola is the hero, whatever may be its excellence as a play, will be scarcely so successful as the novel. Thus much it has seemed needful to say, because the author of the tragedy openly declares that he wrote his play with the intention, nay hope, of having it acted and of helping thereby to uphold the dignity of the English stage. He will certainly not lower that dignity, but it is doubtful whether he will extort much more from an audience than their profound respect. The very care he has taken to be true to the age, the nationality, the localities, the political and clerical parties, and all the historical accessories he depicts will be likely to tell rather against him than for him with spectators and hearers who would prefer for the most part an unreality with which they can sympathise to a reality which they cannot appreciate. It would be different, of course, with the select few who are imbued with the love and veneration for Florence and all that is Florentine which it is the fashion for persons of culture and leisure to profess; and many more than the select few may derive pleasure from a perusal, whatever may be the case with a representation, of a play which does credit to the author as a conceiver of character and an exponent of earnestness and eloquence. There are many situations which would be very striking from a spectacular point of view, but some of them are scarcely in accordance with the spirit of our times; and it is a question whether there is movement enough to carry the business through triumphantly. A reader of the play, however, will be frequently impressed with the felicity of the diction, the vigour of the prophetic and denunciatory addresses, the charm of the softer passages, the happy touches of quiet humour.

Long-winded speeches are the main characteristic of the tragedy entitled Mary Stuart: by Algernon Charles Swinburne (Chatto and Windus), with which the author completes the "trilogy" devoted to the tragic history of the Scottish Queen. There are five acts, but, if the truth must be told, there is little dramatic action; the time is principally spent in mouthing, which is a very different thing from dialogues, soliloquies, and addresses, such as lead up naturally and briskly to foreshadowed catastrophe, reveal the secret workings of the heart and the peculiarities of an individuality, and fill the reader's mind, by means of mingled narrative and description, with a clearly conceived array of incidents and with a vision, as it were, of distinct, though immaterial, scenery. There is little or nothing of the majesty or magnificence which reminiscences of Queen Elizabeth and her Court might suggest; little or nothing of the pathetic grace which the picture of Mary, Queen of Scots, in her sorrows and trials, might well exhibit. To make of the two queens little more than two common spiteful women, of whom one falls to cursing like a very drab, when her indignation is roused, and the other prays secretly to man for vengeance, and openly to God for mercy upon her enemies, when she sees no means of escape from death, may be true to nature and to fact, but is certainly not in accordance with the lofty dignity of true poetical tragedy. The author, of course, gives evidence here and there of his excellence in the art of pretty versification; but, on the whole, his blank verse is remarkable for nothing so much as for an affectation of antiquated diction, curious conceits, and difficult, involved constructions; whilst his invective bears a strong resemblance to sheer Billingsgate and his outbursts of indignation or protest to the screamings of an infuriated scold. He may be capable of the depth, breadth, and height required for a grand dramatic composition; but, so far as he has gone at present, his readers will probably consider that his proper place is among the lyric bards, especially among such as are rather impetuous and petulant than powerful and passionate, but melodious, luscious, sibilant, alliterative.

A devotedly loyal attachment, such as a chivalrous subject may feel towards his Queen, seems to have inspired the poem entitled Ad Reginam: by George Eric M. Lancaster (David Bogue), wherein the most creditable sentiments are expressed in such musical numbers as were to be expected of him who wrote "Pygmalion in Cyprus," and thereby won general recognition as the possessor of a real poetical instinct. There are three cantos, and in each of them there are stanzas full of fire, tuneful, exhilarating, and eminently patriotic. Added to the longer poem is a collection of sonnets, not many in number, but graceful in execution; and altogether the little volume is likely to be highly appreciated, especially by Scotsmen, to whom the dreadful wrong that was meditated, not so long ago, against the "tartans" will be a more intelligible cause for an exhibition of poetical frenzy than to the ordinary Englishman.

A very neat, quaint little book is that entitled The Guitar-Player: by Kenningale Cook, LL.D. (Pickering and Co.), containing the titular and sundry other poems, which testify of the endowments and the acquirements, as regards fancy and style of utterance, characteristic of the Muse's family. The meaning, if any, of the titular poem is not easily discovered; but, as with "Christabel" and "The Ancient Mariner," there is sometimes a singular piquancy about that which is "incomprehensible and without head or tail." The author is hardly careful enough in his language sometimes; he spoils his lines by the introduction of some too familiar, colloquial, almost vulgar phrase, which produces the effect of bathos. Sometimes he attains considerable success in the manner of Suckling and other minor poets whose simple verse not unfrequently depends for its charm upon a pretty conceit—as, for instance, when he tells his ladylove the reason why he adores her most when she wears the least of ornament: because there is then, or there seems to be, so much more of herself. A simple, obvious idea, no doubt, but pretty enough. And there is more that is better, both of the same and of a different sort.

The dark side of life, the life of the poor and miserable, of those who dwell in sordid places and among sordid cares, is the principal theme, treated with a certain pathos, a somewhat grim irony, and no little command of versification, in Lays of a Londoner: by Clement Scott (David Bogue); but heroic actions are also celebrated in the semi-poetical, semi-prosaic, altogether colloquial and familiar fashion for which the verses that appear from time to time in Punch are distinguished. Indeed, many of the lays collected in the volume under consideration had previously done duty in the columns of that paper, and their quality has thus a notable voucher. The subjects are, of course, various: the woes of the City clerk, who has to live on a pound a week or less, and yet be "respectable"; the smallpox; the poor little children, who never see the green fields; the heroic conduct of the gallant captain who gives his life-belt to the poor little "stowaway" and takes his chance, which turns out to be a certainty, of drowning, and so on: all incidents drawn from the newspapers of the day, and handled in a rough, off-hand, commonplace way, in the spirit of the late Thomas Hood.

THE OLD CLOTHES EXCHANGE.

In that respectable City business street, Houndsditch, directly opposite St. Mary Axe, is the entrance to a court named "Phil's Buildings." Here, from four to five o'clock daily in the afternoon, may be witnessed a curious scene of bustle and petty traffic, collecting together several hundred dealers in cast-off articles of clothing, who have gone their morning rounds, as we meet them all over London, picking up whatever they can hope to sell for shillings or pence. The court is a place not of wretched aspect, but flanked by decently-built houses, one or two of which are occupied by persons in the trade, whose open doors allow piles of second-hand apparel to be seen in the passages and rooms, with desks or tables for the receipt of custom. Other premises seem to be let as lodgings, and there are no signs of disorder or squalid misery. At the upper end rises a lofty gateway, bearing a twofold inscription, which first advertises the entrance to a public-house bearing a highly distinguished title—not "the Methuselah Arms," but the name and "arms" of a venerable Jewish patriarch in the City of London—and which further announces that it is the portal to the "Clothes Mart and Exchange." Having paid the admission fee of one penny, at the barrier placed across the steps leading up to Phil's Court, the visitor may pass through the iron gates beyond, and find himself in the queer place and company shown in our illustration. To the left is the public-house, which seems to be quietly and properly conducted, and which supplies not only beer and strong drink, but tea and coffee, and a variety of cheap eatables, for the refreshment of the weary people who have trudged through five or ten miles of streets, carrying heavy loads, since the hour when they ought to have had their breakfast. The market-place is a paved space, nearly 100 ft. square, with covered stalls and benches extending its whole length, and with racks or hurdles fixed against the side walls, all convenient enough for the purpose of showing goods for sale. At this hour of High Change, when two or three hundred men and women are assembled here, the pavement, as well as the benches, will be littered over with huge sacks half-empty of their contents, with heaps of old boots and shoes, indiscriminately mingled, with bundles of old umbrellas and parasols, with coats, waistcoats, and trousers more carefully laid out to view, and with shawls, mantles, and other articles of female apparel, while hats and caps are ranged in the upper tier. The avenues between are thronged with poor folk of a class whom we believe to be quite as honest as their neighbours; and who certainly work hard enough to get their living, and render useful service to the poorest class of all, the purchasers of this rejected gear, which is better than no clothing at all. A majority at least of the men engaged in this trade are easily recognised as Jews; and it need scarcely be said that Jews are sober, civil, orderly in their behaviour, and not in the habit of using foul language. The women, of whom a smaller proportion seem to be Jewesses, do not always behave so well. Some of them are apt to be quarrelsome with each other; and one vehement scold, who sees her opposite neighbour, by quiet assiduity, taking up the best of the custom on that side, has begun a course of loud and calumnious vociferation, which fails, however, to win the approval of her hearers. In general, both men and women here show a degree of patience and good temper, which is creditable to those who must already have suffered much fatigue—considering the weight of their sacks and bags—and who are doomed, we fear, often to sad disappointment in being unable to sell what they have brought to market. Some of the women are mothers, and have their little children with them playing about under the stalls. It is true that they are not so neat and clean as one would like to see them; and their dress will frequently be made up of oddly mixed garments from the unsaleable stock-in-trade, such as the remainder of a sealskin jacket, not worth as many pence as it once cost guineas, or a shawl of handsome pattern now degraded to extreme dinginess, thrown over a miserable cotton gown. Their occupation and condition of life, indeed, can scarcely be expected to favour a high standard of æsthetic culture, or particular refinement of manners; but the frequenters of the Clothes Exchange in Houndsditch are possibly not worse, in the essentials of morality, than some highly respectable people at the West End.

Sir Erasmus Wilson, has given £10,000 to the University of Aberdeen for the purpose of endowing a chair of Pathology.

Further trials on a large scale of the asbestos paint, stated to be fire-proof, were carried out last Saturday, in the grounds of the Crystal Palace. The Lord Mayor and a large party, including Captain Shaw, the lessees of the principal theatres, and representatives of Insurance companies were present, on the invitation of the chairman, Mr. J. J. Allport, and the Directors of the Company. The chief experiments consisted of two model theatres, built, the one of ordinary wood and the other of the like wood painted with several coats of asbestos paint. Below the floor, raised from the ground about three feet, were piled shavings and wood, while upon the floor were more shavings and wood. These bonfires were lighted, and the wooden structure was speedily a mass of flames, giving out a scorching heat at a hundred feet away. The bonfires failed to ignite the painted edifice, and more shavings and wood and lighted materials were pitchforked on to it and under it during the whole period of three-quarters of an hour whilst the wood building was blazing.

OUR FEATHERED FRIENDS IN WINTER.

Now, when the winds of Winter are sobbing through the woods, and shivering oaks and elms are glad to hide their naked limbs in the soft snow, how like a dream it seems to think of green-wood trees and flowers and singing birds! But if a dream to us, who, seated by our glowing hearths, can listen complacently to the sough of the wind outside the warm drapery of our windows, how infinitely more dream-like must be those summer days to the little feathered folk whose very existence seems to us bound up in leaves and sunshine! Where now are all those blithe warblers, that in months gone by charmed us with their rapturous bursts of melody? Vast flocks of them, we know, have gone to distant lands, whose palm-fringed shores know not what winter snows or winter winds are like. Not a few took their flight ere yet their sylvan haunts had been touched by Autumn's magic wand; but the great bulk of the birds who have forsaken us winged their way to the South in October's nut-brown month, a few stragglers remaining until November. Many, however, of the birds that sang so sweetly to us in sunnier days are still in our midst: in the cold and cheerless woods, some of them; in the frost-bound hedges, others; and in the nooks and crannies of ivied ruins; and some are wandering disconsolately by stretches of the frozen river, and some on the wild, bleak moor; while others, again, pressed by cold and hunger, forgetting their natural timidity, have ventured close to the habitations of man.

Amongst the birds that, in this inclement month of January, habitually flock around the abodes of man, are, besides the inevitable sparrows and the ever-welcome robin, chaffinches, greenfinches, linnets, goldfinches, and yellow-hammers. Right to our very doors they come when the cold is at its worst, though, when the weather does not press them too hard, they keep, as a rule, to the farmyards and adjacent stacks. Go to any one of the farmsteads that are dotted thickly over all the country side, and we never fail to see a troop of the trustful little creatures we have named, augmented here and there by some stray local residents. Of the finches that invade the farmyards, there is none so common as the gaily dressed little chaffinch, whose white-barred wings at once attract our attention, as well as that pretty reddish-brown breast of his, which he seems to be ever trimming. Though the snow on the fields lies inches deep, he is pert and gay as ever; but we miss the sweet sprightly song that came so incessantly from his small throat in the days of leaves and sunshine. He spends much of the short winter day in the farmyards; though, if the weather be not too severe, the fields have still a resistless charm for him; and when evening closes in upon the frost-bound earth, if there be evergreens or shrubberies at hand, it is there that he will seek his night's repose. It is also amongst the perennial branches of the evergreens and shrubberies surrounding man's habitations that the greenfinch, in company with sparrows, linnets, and thrushes, takes shelter for the night. This pretty finch, by-the-way, is much more noticeable now than in more genial seasons, for, when the trees are clothed in their summer dress, so much does he look like "a brother of the dancing leaves," he is often overlooked; in the farmyard, however, when driven thither by the cold, his plumage of richest green and yellow is seen to advantage. The brilliant little goldfinch, though often seen in the farmyards, prefers the tangled, weed-choked hedges, especially where there is a plentiful sprinkling of thistles and docks; and the same may be said of the linnets, whose numbers are now considerably augmented by their banding themselves with congeners from colder regions. More familiar as a winter visitor to the farmyards is the yellowhammer, whose bright yellow plumage and sprightly ways make him a favourite everywhere.

But of the birds that come close to our dwellings in these opening days of the year, the favourite of all is unquestionably the robin. Other birds may have richer voices, and many are far handsomer; still the redbreast has ever held the first place in our hearts. There is something irresistibly engaging in the way in which he lets us come so very near him. Some natural timidity, of course, he has; but when he looks at us askance with those bright, wistful eyes of his, there seems such trust in us our hearts are touched at once, and we are ready to believe all the sweet tales that have been told of him. Strewing with leaves and flowers the graves of the friendless, and "covering with moss the dead's unclosed eyes," may be sentiments scarcely tenable in this matter-of-fact age; yet many of our poets, Shakespeare himself included, have loved to tell how "the little redbreast teacheth charity." Myths though they be, the pretty things that have been told of Robin, have no doubt helped to make him the privileged bird he is—especially that most touching one of all which tells of him fluttering up to the Cross and drawing one of the thorns from the Saviour's suffering brow, staining thereby for ever afterwards his breast with blood. Setting aside, however, the fictions that have been told of him, in addition to his charming confidence in man, he has another claim upon our affections—his rich, plaintive song. He is a perennial singer; but it is in winter, when nearly all the other birds are silent, that we love best to hear him. It is in winter, too, that his red breast is reddest.

The robin, however, is not the only bird out of whose little heart the music is not crushed by winter snows and frosts. Hopping incessantly from twig to twig, drooping its wings and saucily elevating its mite of a tail, the tiny wren looks so utterly insignificant, we smile at the idea of its being hardy enough to sing in January; but wait until the little thing rests for a moment, and immediately we are lost in wonder that so loud a lay can come from so small a throat. In the long winter nights the wrens manage to keep alive by huddling close together, in bunches of from four or five to a dozen or more, on sheltered boughs and in old nests and holes; presenting to the eye nothing but a shapeless mass of downy feathers. But not all the wrens can keep their spark of life alight; for, alas! after a severe season we find many a frozen bunch of them. There is, however, a still smaller bird than the wren which braves our winters, the gold-crest, that "shadow of a bird," whose entire length is but three and a half inches.

Besides the redbreast and wren, there is one other bird which sings to us in January, and that, too, during those stormy bursts of weather when even Robin's brave little heart fails him. Amid driving snow, and above the howling of the blast, the mistle-thrush, or "storm-cock," may be heard pouring out his loud wild notes, as if in defiance of the storm. A frequenter of our woods and fields in more genial seasons, he now roams from place to place in search of food, congregating at times with the fieldfares, that late in November came to us from the Far North. When the snow is deep, the fieldfares keep to the hedgerows and outskirts of woods and coopes; but when the weather is at all mild, they come in large flocks to the fields, where we find, too, the redwing, another of the thrushes that seek shelter in England during the winter. Our own song-thrush and the blackbird keep pretty close to the hedgerows and to the evergreens and shrubberies that surround country dwellings; but, being solitary in their habits, we see little of them, except at feeding-time in the early morning and evening.

One of the most interesting of the thrushes, in this icy month, is the dipper, or water-ouzel. His haunts are as different from the other thrushes as his personal appearance. He is a bird of the wild. If you wish to have a peep at him, you must go to some deep secluded glen, where a rushing stream dashes headlong down a rocky bed from the bleak uplands. A dumpy little bird is the water-ouzel, reminding us at first of the wren, from his quick jerky movements and his comical little tail; but he is twice the size of our tiny winter songster. He is a solitary little fellow, keeping throughout the year to one special part of the stream he haunts. No matter how deep the snow may lie on the banks of his beloved stream and on the ledges of rock, or how many dripping icicles there may be hanging all around him, there he is, flitting from stone to stone, flitting incessantly his apology for a tail; now stopping to pick up a scrap of food, now diving beneath the waters, that, like himself, are restless ever, now walking in the shallows, now skimming the ice where the water is still, now suddenly disappearing.

In the leafless woods, too, clinging persistently to the place of its birth, we may even yet find many a little feathered thing that seems too frail for aught save everlasting sunshine; and by frozen river banks, and where troubled waves beat on cheerless shores; and on the wild and trackless moor, where we find the gaily-dressed little stonechat. W. OAK RHIND.

ON THE FARM IN WINTER.

When the ground is hard and the frost severe, the winter-work on the farm begins; such as the improvement of roads, the mending of hedges, repairing ricks, loading in the fold, carting soil and hauling tiles, or taking hay and straw to market, together with a general fagoting and lopping in ash-beds, woods, and orchards; for the men are then at work with their "bills," and the kid-pile stacks are rising. With such winter-work come the winter sounds of the chaff and turnip cutter, and the swing of flails—at least in those parts where old modes prevail—and the winter ways, too, of the birds about then—the larks and the fieldfares in the stubbles for warmth, and the blackbirds and thrushes nestled under the hedges; whilst the sparrows and finches, for food, flock to the big barn-doors, and the titmice cling close to the ricks; the rooks and the starlings being in the meadows together, and in the turnip-fields ring-doves and wood-pigeons.

Then, while the cattle are in their covered sheds, and racks are well filled where the sheep are, a sky all leaden or of the coldest blue, looks down on a wide white world, where every tree is a mass of twigs, and each dead leaf is stiffened; and where, as magpies chatter the whole day long, to blue-winged jays that scream, the mistle-thrush answers the robin's song, and the wren, too, keeps them company, for the time has come when the squirrels sleep half their time, and the bats are housed for the winter. When such is the case, and the slightest sound rings through the frosty air sharp and clear, the whole of the winter-work goes by routine; but with such an absence of frost as this winter has shown, that the farmer is able to get on the land, much of it gives place to both ploughing and sowing.

There is one occupation, however, which must go on, be the season quite mild, or severe; and that is the work of the bill men, who have to get it all over before the rise of the sap, that the poles may be harder and stronger. In some places, both lopping and felling begin in December; but in hop-districts where ash-beds—for poles—are most frequently planted, it is not customary to commence until cider-making is over, which—where the apples, by preference, have to be "frosted," that their juice, for the most part, may be thereby retained—is often as late as the middle of January, when the work sets in and goes on with vigour; and that, not only as to ash and hazel, for poles and hetherings, but with oak and poplar, for gate-posts and palings. For the latter purpose, by-the-way, no wood beats poplar, as palings made with it, and painted, last fifty years; and as being a wood which not easily burns—it chars, not blazes—it is useful for flooring in hop-kilns and houses. As oaks, however, are not then felled—as the bark at that time would not strip readily—those cut up, as a rule, are wind-blown ones only, laid low by the gales of winter, when their branches and butts are both chopped up to add to the ash and elm. But as the apple-trees then have to be well trimmed, the bulk of the fagoting comes from the orchards, and it is by far the best for firing, not splitting or flying like oak and ash.

Where, in the winter months, a "fall" is due, the ash-poles, with hackers or axes, are cut off at the butt, and the roots left in the ground; and this may happen each season when the growth is large, and it has been planted for succession; when, having being collected, sorted, "sharped," and dipped in boiling creosote to prevent decay, they are duly stacked till wanted. When poles are thus cut down each year, it adds to woodland beauty; as the butts are soon circled—through light let in—by wild-flowers in abundance, which show by their presence for many a spring, where such winter-work has been.

The Council of Legal Education have awarded to Frederick Mackenzie Maxwell, of Lincoln's Inn, and to William Baxter, of the Inner Temple, studentships in Jurisprudence and Roman Law of 100 guineas each, to continue for two years; and to Thomas Bateman Napier, of the Inner Temple, a studentship in the same subjects of 100 guineas for one year.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

- | | |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| BOOTS.
Lays of a Londoner. By Clement Scott.
CHAPMAN AND HALL.
The New Ceylon. Being a Sketch of British North Borneo, or Sabah. Written and Compiled by Joseph Hutton. Maps.
CHAPMAN AND HALL.
Vignettes from Nature. By Grant Allen. Poetical Ingeniousness and Eccentricities. Selected and Edited by W. T. Dobson. Connoisseur's Cookery. A Family Handbook. By Catherine Ryan.
DOUGLAS, EDINBURGH.
Our Mission to the Court of Morocco in 1860. Under Sir John Drummond Hay, K.C.B. By Captain Philip Durham Trotter. Illustrated.
FIELD AND TUBBS.
Bartolozzi and His Works. By Andrew W. Tuer. A Biographical and Descriptive Account of the Life and Career of Francesco Bartolozzi, R.A. Illustrated. With a List of Upwards of 2000 of the Great Engraver's Works.
HATCHARDS.
A Narrative of Personal Experiences and Impressions During a Residence on the Hopfields throughout the Crimean War. By Lady Alicia Blackwood.
HODDER AND STOUTON.
The Acts and Epistles of St. Paul. By the Rev. F. A. Halliwell.
JANZEN.
The Gospel of Christ. By the Right Rev. Dr. Anthony W. Thorold.
LOW AND CO.
The Great Musicians. Edited by Francis Haver-Furcell. By William H. Cummings.
Biographies of the Great Artists—Melomont. By John W. Mollett.
Kerrill. By Miss E. Minor.
The Revolution. By H. A. Taine. Translated by John Durand. Vol. II. | Low's Select Novels—A Gentleman of Leisure. A Novel. By Edgar Fawcett. METRAN.
A Charge Delivered to the Clergy of the Diocese of Rochester in 1881. By Dr. Anthony W. Thorold. With Map.
OLIPHANT, ANDERSON, AND FERRIS, EDINBURGH.
Bits from Blackberry; or, Bell o' the Bannan. By John Strathmore. With Six Original Illustrations.
REYNOLDS AND CO.
The Shalonski Family. A Tale of the French Invasion of Russia. By Eugene Toot. Translated from the Russian by Charles James Cooke.
RIVINGTONS.
Here and There. Quaint Quotations. Selected by H. L. Sidney Lear.
SATOELL AND CO.
Belcanto. Being Essays on Sundry Aesthetic Questions. By Vernon Lee.
STRAHAN AND CO.
Rural England. By L. G. Seguin. With Illustrations from Designs by J. E. Millais and Others.
TACCHETTI, LEIPZIG.
Of English Literature in the Reign of Victoria. With a Glance at the Past. By Dr. Henry Morley.
TIMESLY BROTHERS.
Read Scripture, Coaches and Coaching. By Captain M. E. Haworth.
WARD, LOCK, AND CO.
Without a Home. By E. P. Roe. 2 vols.
WARREN AND CO.
A Book of Nonsense. By Edward Lear. The Home Book for Young Ladies.
WHITE AND CO.
Two Men and a Maid. A Tale. By Harriet Jay. 8 vols. |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|

IMAGINATIVE LITERATURE.

The literature that appeals to the imagination has always received the largest welcome from readers. In one form or another it is a literature that suits all stages of society and all periods of life. A good story is the greatest delight of a child and the pleasure it affords is inexhaustible. In the early years of childhood, a boy or girl may be said, without much exaggeration, to live between the covers of a book. The heroes of fiction are more real to them than the unheroic people whom they meet with day by day, and the author who knows how to minister to the wants of young readers is the veritable King of hearts. He has a place at every fireside, in every school-desk and play-box, and under many a pillow. Well thumbed and shabby his story-book may be, but these tokens of youthful affection show by the most satisfactory of proofs how much the volume is beloved. If the fame of a writer depend upon the number and appreciation of his readers, who is there that can boast a reputation more widely spread than the novelists who, like Marryat and Kingston, Andersen and Jules Verne, "Lewis Carroll" and Mr. Hughes, have produced their choicest work for children and young people?

There are authors, too, of high and far-reaching genius who afford equal delight to old readers and to inexperienced travellers in "the realms of gold." If that beloved writer, Sir Walter Scott, has made, as George Eliot once said, "a chief part in the happiness of many young lives," he has also given exquisite pleasure to men of the widest knowledge and the most cultivated intelligence. It was the greatest poet Germany has produced who called Scott a genius who had not his equal, and added that "Waverley" may be set beside the best works that have ever been written. And what Goethe expressed so warmly has been felt also by men of widely different powers—by James Watt, who loved all stories "as much as any milliner's apprentice of eighteen," while avowing a special admiration of Sir Walter's; by Hawthorne, the most original of American novelists, who is said almost to have worshipped the Waverley Novels; by Dean Stanley, who has praised in no weak words the wisdom as well as the poetical beauty, "the far-seeing toleration and the lofty sense of Christian honour" that breathe through every volume of Scott's romances; and by Keble, who wrote of Scott with the love that a man of such deep concentrated feeling might be supposed to feel for a friend. Walter Scott, by-the-way, who was ever ready to appreciate the genius of others, paid a high tribute to the literary craft of Miss Edgeworth and Miss Ferrier, two novelists who deserve to be better known than they probably are in our day; and the consummate art of Miss Austen won, as it well might, his highest admiration. He could do the big bow-wow style himself, he said, but Jane Austen's delicate style of work was not within his power. In her own peculiar range she is indeed inimitable, and almost deserves the extraordinary praise awarded her by Macaulay. How much he loved those famous novels the readers of his biography know, and they may also remember how his friend Lord Holland would lie tranquilly on his bed, when attacked with gout, while his sister sat by his side reading the same novels, "of which he was never wearied." Jane Austen was the daughter of a country clergyman, and so also was Charlotte Brontë, another writer who in fiction occupies a distinct realm of her own. These are great names in literature, and remind us of one yet greater in intellect than either, albeit less of an artist than Miss Austen and less passionately eloquent than Currer Bell. George Eliot's imagination was but one gift among many, and her novels, despite Mr. Ruskin's disparagement, and far from faultless though they be, deserve to rank with the finest prose specimens of imaginative art. What happy hours do we all owe to writers such as these, whose works, like those of Thackeray and Dickens, Kingsley and Blackmore, stimulate and strengthen the mind instead of enervating it. This, indeed, is the effect of all imaginative work of a high order, an effect of which we are even more conscious when reading poetry than prose.

Poets have a selecter audience than poetical novelists, but the delight they afford is generally keener and more intense. They give us "nobler loves and nobler cares;" they fill our minds with images of beauty and sooth our ears with their music; they make Nature more impressive and life more pregnant with meaning. "Poetry," said Wordsworth, "is the first and last of all knowledge; but these are the words of a poet, who, it may be urged, would naturally magnify his office. Charles James Fox, however, uttered a similar opinion when he called it "the only thing after all." The poets, he used to say, had more truth in them than all the historians and philosophers together; and another well-known statesman, the adviser of William, the early patron of Swift, apparently acknowledged the supremacy of poetry when he expressed his opinion that, "of all the members of mankind that live within the compass of a thousand years, for one man that is born capable of making a great poet, there may be a thousand born capable of making as great generals and Ministers of State as any in story." It would be curious, by-the-way, to note how men whose lot has placed them in the busiest arenas of life have been wont to find rest and relaxation in the society of poets or in the study of poetry. So it is that Southampton's and Pembroke's names are linked to that of Shakespeare, Raleigh's and Sidney's to that of Spenser, while Bolingbroke and Atterbury at once recall the memory of Pope. In our own days a Prime Minister has translated Homer, and another Prime Minister has written more than one volume of criticism on the Iliad and the Odyssey. The greatest of living orators has acknowledged the debt he owes to the poets of his country; and, looking back again to an earlier period, one remembers with no small interest that the chief religious reformer of the eighteenth century, whose labours still exercise a vast influence on our own, commended the study of Spenser to his divinity students. And if John Wesley loved the "Faerie Queene," so also did Lord Chatham, who is said to have been always reading that poem; and the accomplished Lord Somers, who, in the last portrait for which he sat to Sir Godfrey Kneller, desired to be painted with Spenser in his hand.

A long essay might, indeed, be written showing how the practical life of Englishmen has been influenced by imaginative literature. The poets and poetical novelists are "wondrous potentates," whose sway has been universally acknowledged. Carlyle was bold enough to ask his countrymen which of the two they would the sooner give up, India or Shakespeare? and to answer the inquiry in favour of the poet. Happily, we can keep both, and need not, therefore, discuss a question so difficult. Enough if we acknowledge the immeasurable debt we owe to the great masters of song, not only because they awaken in us the sense of harmony and beauty, but because their noble words, listened to in Australia and New Zealand, in Canada and South Africa, as well as in this "dear island," serve to knit together in one body the whole English-speaking race.

We must be free or die, who speak the tongue
That Shakespeare spake; the faith and morals hold
Which Milton held—in everything we are sprung
Of Earth's first blood, have titles manifold.

J. D.

VISIT OF THE PRINCE OF WALES TO LEICESTER.

SEE PAGE 66.

THE PRINCE PASSING THROUGH LEICESTER.

BRADGATE HALL, SEAT OF THE EARL OF STAMFORD AND WARRINGTON. ARRIVAL OF THE PRINCE.

VISIT OF THE PRINCE OF WALES TO LEICESTER.

1. "Little Matlock," near Entrance to Bradgate Park.
4. Lady Jane Grey's House, Bradgate.

2. Ruins of Leicester Abbey.
5. Old Townhall, Leicester.

3. St. Mary's Church, Leicester.
6. Chimney-piece, Mayor's Parlour.

OBITUARY.

LORD LURGAN, K.P.

The Right Honourable Sir Charles Browlow, Baron Lurgan, of Lurgan, county Armagh, Knight of the Order of St. Patrick, Lord Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the county of Armagh, and formerly a Lord in Waiting to the Queen, died on the 16th instant, at Brighton. His Lordship was born April 10, 1831, the eldest son of Charles, first Lord Lurgan (so created in 1839), by Jane, his second wife, fourth daughter of Mr. Roderick Macneill, of Barra, county Inverness, and succeeded to the Peerage at his father's death, April 30, 1847. He served, formerly, in the 43rd Regiment. The ribbon of the Order of St. Patrick was conferred on him in 1864. From 1869 to 1874 he was a Lord in Waiting to the Queen. Lord Lurgan married, June 20, 1853, Hon. Emily Anne Browne, fourth daughter of Lord Kilmaine, and leaves three sons and six daughters. His eldest son and successor, William, now third Lord Lurgan, Lieutenant Grenadier Guards, was born Feb. 11, 1858.

SIR RICHARD MALINS.

The Right Hon. Sir Richard Malins, lately one of the Vice-Chancellors, died at his residence, 57, Lowndes-square, on the 15th inst., aged seventy-seven. He was third son of Mr. William Malins, by his wife, the eldest daughter of Mr. Thomas Hunter; was educated at Cambridge, and called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1830. For many years he enjoyed a large practice in the Equity Courts, and attained silk in 1849. In December, 1866, he was appointed a Vice-Chancellor, and in the February following received the honour of knighthood. His Parliamentary career dated from 1852 to 1865, during which period he sat as the Conservative member for Wallingford. He married, in 1831, Susannah, eldest daughter of the Rev. Arthur Farwell, of St. Martin's, Cornhill. Within the present month three of our most eminent Judges—Lush, O'Brien, and Malins—have passed away.

We have also to record the deaths of—

Mr. John Trevor Barkley, C.E., well known for his connection with the development of resources in Turkey, and for his extensive knowledge of Eastern subjects generally.

Mr. John Jones, on the 7th inst., at his residence, 93, Piccadilly, in his 83rd year. He has bequeathed to the nation a large and valuable collection of works of art.

The Dowager Lady Fairbairn, on the 11th inst., at The Vicarage, Waltham St. Lawrence, Berks, aged ninety. Her Ladyship was widow of the eminent engineer, Sir William Fairbairn, F.R.S.

Major A. C. Skynner, late 16th Lancers, on the 4th inst., at Leatherhead, aged eighty-one. He was only son of Captain Skynner, H.E.I.C.S., of Moon Hall and Melmoth Lodge, Cookham, Berks.

The Rev. Berkeley Addison, M.A., Vicar of Jesmond, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Hon. Canon of Durham, aged sixty-seven. He was educated at St. Peter's College, Cambridge, and was Chairman of the Newcastle School Board.

Dr. James Edgcombe, at Upper Norwood, on the 10th inst. He gained distinction in his career at Guy's Hospital, was a member of several learned societies, and a contributor to current medical literature.

Sheriff Hallard, Senior Sheriff-Substitute in the county of Middlesex, in Edinburgh, aged sixty-one. Educated at Edinburgh University, he was admitted a member of the Faculty of Advocates in 1844, and appointed Sheriff-Substitute in 1852. He was author of several legal treatises.

Mr. Alexander Sim, known as "Captain Sim," on the 9th inst., at 29, Clement's-lane, City, in his ninety-third year. He was employed in the merchant service while a mere child, and for a long period was master of a ship in the Australian trade. Since 1841 he was a member of the Reform Club.

Harriet Maria, Dowager Lady Nightingale, widow of Sir Charles Nightingale, Bart., on the 22nd ult., at Hounslow, aged eighty-one. She was the youngest daughter of Mr. Edward Broughton Foster, of Kingston-on-Thames, Surrey; was married, in 1829, to Sir Charles Nightingale, Bart., of Fort Grange, county Inverness, and was left a widow in 1876.

Mr. John Flint South, F.R.C.S., long senior surgeon of St. Thomas's Hospital, and twice—viz., in 1851 and 1860—President of the Royal College of Surgeons, on the 8th inst., at Blackheath Park. He filled many important professional positions, and contributed most useful works to surgical literature. Mr. South was brother to the late Sir James South, the Astronomer. He was twice married, and had three daughters.

At the last quarterly meeting of the council of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, Mr. Spencer Wells, surgeon to the Queen's household, was appointed Hunterian orator for 1883, when the next Hunterian oration will be given.

At the meeting of the Royal Geographical Society on Monday night two valuable papers descriptive of recent journeyings in the interior of Africa were contributed. Sir John Kirk, Consul at Zanzibar, took part in the proceedings.

The rank of Queen's Counsel has been conferred upon the following gentlemen:—Mr. Philip A. Myburgh, Mr. R. Bannatyne Finlay, Mr. W. Bowen Rowlands, Mr. Charles Crompton, Mr. Joseph Addison McLeod, Mr. Pembroke S. Stephens, Mr. F. W. E. Everitt, Mr. Thomas William Snagge, Mr. Herbert Hardy Cozens-Hardy, and Mr. Norris.

At Cardiff on Monday the committee appointed for the purpose of securing in that locality the proposed University College for South Wales met and decided to raise a fund of fifty thousand pounds towards the building fund, and for establishing scholarships. Additional subscriptions amounting to more than three hundred pounds were announced, bringing up the total already promised to about eight thousand pounds.

In our Artist's narrative, last week, of a trip with the Trinity House steam-yacht Vesta to relieve the crews and repair damages of the light-ships, lighthouses and buoys outside the Nore, and on the Essex and North Foreland coasts, it was mentioned that "On reaching the East Ouse gas buoy we found it had gone out." We are requested to say this is not quite accurate. The gas-light had not "gone out;" but the buoy had been run into, and damaged, and knocked out by a passing ship. For the discovery of that ship a reward has been offered in the public press. The apparatus used for this buoy is that of Pintsch's Patent Lighting Company (Limited), New Broad-street, City; and the managing director, Mr. W. B. Rickman, has requested us to give this explanation.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

G A (City Club).—Accept our cordial thanks for your kind attention.

A C (Staines).—Herr Kellner's compositions are always fresh, and frequently very difficult. He seems to be a favourite author with our readers.

A S (Vienna).—You may rely upon it that any contribution you send shall receive early and considerate attention.

G O N (Madras).—Your solution and analysis of No. 1968 are correct. We shall be glad to hear from you regularly.

P R I S T O N (Preston).—We hope you may be induced to change your present resolution. We shall miss you from the ranks of our solvers.

D W I K (Folkestone).—We know of only one English translation of Damiano, that by Sarratt; but there are many translations into French. Apply to the editor of Le Stratège, Rue St. Saver, Paris.

W A C.—Solutions may be sent on postal cards.

G W (Southport).—The problem shall be examined. Thanks.

A M (Nottingham).—A capital game, and very acceptable.

H L (Bordeaux).—We shall be pleased to receive further specimens of chess skill in your city.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1975 received from E L G, Cant, A C (Staines), Elgim, H Stebbing, and A Galliard.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1976 received from Loch Goll, Cryptotype, John Tucker, H V G, James Wemyss, Cant, W J Eggleston, A C (Staines), Marion J Glossop (aged fourteen), H Stebbing, and A Galliard.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1977 received from H B, Dr F St, E Loudon, W Biddle, Loch Goll, Bowditch, Sirius, James Dobson, Norman Rumbelow, R H Brooks, H A L S, S Lowndes, E Casella (Paris), M O'Halloran, L Sharwood, E Sharwood, D W Keil, Otto Fuldner (Ghent), A Wignmore, R L Southwell, H Lucas, L L Greenaway, C W Millsom, W Dewse, A M P rter, Ben Nevis, A Karberg, F G Parsloe, H K Awdry, G Seymour, N H Mullen, L Wyman, G S Oldfield, C Warburton, John Balfour, J Hall, Shadforth, W A Clarke, F Johnston, Schmucke, Hereward, David Rowland (Pae), N S Harris, Harry Springthorpe, W Hillier, W J Budman, H Blacklock, R Gray, Alfred Schaup (Vienna), G Edmundson, A Chapman, Smutch, J Humstead, J W W, A C (Staines), W Bygott, Alpha, H Stebbing, L H Goodbody, J P Macdonald, A Galliard, M C Heywood, R Jessop, G W Law, Joseph Ainsworth, M Tipping, and S Bullen.

NOTE.—For the information of a number of correspondents, we note here that this problem cannot be solved by 1. R to Q sq. by 1. R to R 7th, by 1. R to R 8th, or by 1. Kt to B 4th. In the first three cases mentioned Black has a good defence in 1. B to K B sq. and in the last, among others, 1. R takes B.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1976.

WHITE. BLACK.
1. Q to Q B 2nd. R takes R (ch) *
2. Q takes R (ch). K takes Q
3. Kt to Q B 3rd. Mate.
* If Black play 1. B to Q 7th, White continues with 2. Kt to Q 8th (ch), and mates next move.

PROBLEM No. 1979.
By D. W. CLARK (Barnaul, Siberia).

BLACK.

WHITE.
White to play, and mate in three moves.

A smart Skirmish between two members of the Société Philomathique, Bordeaux.

(Two Knights' Defence.)

WHITE (M. G.).	BLACK (Mr. Lee).	WHITE (M. G.).	BLACK (Mr. Lee).
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	14. Q to Q 3rd	B to B 4th (ch)
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd	15. Kt to Q 4th	Kt to Kt 5th
3. B to B 4th	Kt to B 3rd	16. P to Q B 3rd	Q to R 5th
4. Kt to Kt 5th		17. B to B 4th

Many players of the present day prefer 4. P to Q 4th—a move which, without incurring risk, leads to an even game.

White has played the opening somewhat feebly, and here he should have dislodged the Kt by 17. P to K R 3rd.

17. R to K 6th
Cleverly played.

18. Q to Q sq
B to B 4th

19. P to Q Kt 4th
Lost time. 19. Kt to Q 2nd, followed by 20. Q Kt to B 3rd, seems to offer his own chance in this position.

20. B takes Q B P
P to K Kt 4th

21. P takes B
R takes B

22. P to K R 3rd
Long delayed, and now too late.

22. R takes R P
and White resigned.

DEATH OF MR. BODEN.

It is with sincere regret that we announce the death of this distinguished English chessplayer, which occurred on the 18th instant, after a brief illness. Mr. Boden's first appearance in the chess arena was in the tournament of provincial players, held in London in 1851, when he carried off the first prize. The publication of his "Popular Introduction to Chess," soon afterwards, brought him prominently before the chess world, but since that time he engaged in few public matches or tournaments. He was, however, always ready to break a lance with the strongest players of our time, and the result of his contests with Horwitz, Harwitz, Buckle, Andersen, and Morphy prove his claim to rank among the great masters of the game. Mr. Boden edited the British Chess Review, a periodical brought out in 1854; and from April 24, 1858, to January, 1859, conducted the chess department of the Field. The death of a distant relative, from whom he inherited some property, enabled Mr. Boden to devote himself to landscape painting, and in its pursuit he achieved the most gratifying success. Mr. Boden died in the fifty-sixth year of his age, and was interred at Woking on Tuesday last, in the presence of a large number of metropolitan chessplayers.

As we go to press, information comes to hand of the death of Mr. Francis Burden, a well-known London chessplayer, at Belfast, on the 13th inst.

A match of a novel character was played on the 9th inst. at the City of London Chess Club, when a team of the third-class players yielded the odds of Pawn and move to a selected team of the fourth class. Twenty-two competitors engaged in this contest, which, after a well-fought battle, ended in favour of the third class, with a score of seven games to four.

A few years ago the Bermondsey Club was the strongest of all the metropolitan district associations, but lately it has suffered some loss of prestige. On the 12th inst. the disfavour of fortune fell upon our transportive friends rather overwhelmingly in a match against the North London Club, whose representatives scored six games to nil! Oh, what a falling off is there!

University College, Liverpool, was opened last Saturday by a public meeting, over which the Earl of Derby presided. He said the college was founded upon an unsectarian principle, for the community as a whole. A hundred thousand pounds had been raised for the purposes of the institution, which the Corporation had provided with a building, and seven professorships had been endowed with ten thousand pounds each. This college would afford further evidence that commerce and culture are natural allies. Professor Rendall, the principal of the college, gave the inaugural address.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated June 21, 1875) of Sir Frederick Hutchison Hervey Bathurst, Bart., late of Clarendon Park, Salisbury, who died on Oct. 29 last, was proved on the 30th ult. by Sir Frederick Thomas Arthur Hervey Bathurst, Bart., the son, and Arthur Brooke, the acting executors, the value of the personal estate being over £80,000. The testator gives to his said son his interest in the collieries at Lanchester, Durham, and all his furniture, effects, horses, carriages, farming stock, and crops; his plate, pictures, and certain diamonds are made heirlooms to go with the estates; to his executor, Mr. Brooke, £200; and the residue of the personality between all his children, except his eldest son, and his daughter, Mrs. Augusta Frederica Buckley. He devises all his real estate in the counties of Wilts, Somerset, Devon, and Southampton, or elsewhere, charged with the payment of £10,000 in favour of his younger sons, to the use of his said son Frederick Thomas Arthur Hervey, for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively, according to seniority in tail male.

The will (dated Aug. 6, 1872) of Mr. William Atkinson, late of No. 47, Gordon-square, who died on Oct. 31 last, was proved on the 29th ult. by Mrs. Mary Ann Atkinson, the widow and sole executrix, to whom he gives, devises, and bequeaths all his real and personal estate for her own absolute use and benefit. The value of the personal estate amounts to £76,000.

The will (dated July 31, 1878) of Mr. John Paynter, formerly of Shroton House, near Blandford, Dorset, but late of No. 23, Berkeley-square, who died on Nov. 16 last, was proved on the 12th ult. by Mrs. Margaret Paynter, the widow and sole executrix, the personal estate exceeding in value £67,000. The testator appoints, devises, and bequeaths all his estate and effects, whether real or personal, to his wife absolutely, for her own separate use and benefit. The deceased was formerly a Captain in the Scots Fusilier Guards.

The will (dated Aug. 1, 1878) of Mr. William Law, C.B., late of the Treasury, and of No. 24, Queen's-gate-terrace, Kensington, who died on Oct. 2 last, was proved on the 28th ult. by William Morton Phillips and Henry Jordan Thornhill, the executors, the personal estate exceeding £49,000. The testator, after giving legacies to his executors, godchildren, and servants, leaves the residue of his real and personal estate upon trust for his wife for life or widowhood; in the event of her marrying again she is to receive a fixed annuity of £500, and then for all his children in equal shares.

The will (dated Nov. 8, 1875), with four codicils (dated Aug. 21, 1878; Jan. 8 and April 7, 1879; and May 27, 1880), of Mr. Henry Goddard Awdry, formerly of Notton Lodge, Lacock, Wilts, but late of Bournemouth, who died on Sept. 15 last, was proved on the 12th ult. by Mrs. Mary Edmonds Awdry, the widow, and Jasper Kevick Peck, the executors, the value of the personal estate exceeding £34,000. The testator, subject to the payment of a few legacies, leaves all his property upon trust for his wife for life; at her decease there are legacies to nephews and nieces; and the residue of his property is to go to his children, if any; and, in default of children, to his nephew, James Awdry.

The will (dated March 4, 1880) of the Rev. Henry Boucher, late of Thornhill House, Stalbridge, Dorset, was proved on the 12th ult. by John Du Boulay and Henry Pickett, the executors, the value of the personal estate being over £34,000. The testator leaves to his wife, Mrs. Frances Boucher, certain plate, an annuity of £300, and a life interest in a farm and some land, over and above what is secured to her by settlement; and numerous bequests to relatives, friends, and servants. The residue of his property he gives to the said John Du Boulay.

The will (dated May 20, 1878) of Mr. Thomas Brereton Howard, late of Brereton Hall, Brereton-cum-Smethwick, Cheshire, who died on July 31 last at Portsmouth, was proved on the 13th ult. by Andrew Johnstone, the sole executor, the personal estate exceeding £27,000. The testator gives to Mr. Johnstone £1000; and the residue of his real and personal estate equally between his mother, Mrs. Harriette Howard, and his brother, Clulow Howard.

The will (dated April 28, 1879) of Jemima, Dowager Baroness Dimsdale, late of Essendon Place, Herts, who died on Nov. 4 last at Bath, has been proved by Robert Dimsdale, Baron of the Russian Empire, the son and sole executor, to whom the testatrix gives, devises, and bequeaths all her real and personal estate absolutely. The personality exceeds £9000.

The will (dated June 23 and 26, 1875) of Captain Charles Hutchinson, R.N., late of St. John's Vicarage, Forton, Gosport, who died on Sept. 28 last, has been proved by the Rev. Francis Edmund Hutchinson and the Rev. Charles Pierrepont Hutchinson, the sons, the surviving executors, the personal estate amounting to over £6000. Among other things bequeathed to his eldest son, Francis Edmund, to be held as heirlooms in his family, are a silver-gilt cup presented to one of testator's ancestors by Queen Elizabeth, a folio first edition of the plays of Shakespeare, and two 12mo volumes of old plays published by Nicholls, from which the testator states Shakespeare took six of his.

During the twelve months ending Dec. 31 last the total number of emigrants who left the Mersey for foreign parts was 228,813, being 45,274 more than for the year 1880.

The Council of King's College, London, have elected Mr. W. H. Hudson, M.A., formerly Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, to the Professorship of Mathematics, vacated by the Rev. W. H. Drew.

In a letter written by Mr. Lewis, the able and energetic secretary to the Royal National Life-Boat Institution, it appears that in 1879 3690 lives were lost in the inland waters of Great Britain and Ireland; the majority of the deaths occurring in lakes and navigable streams, and, next to these, in canals.

SUBSCRIPTION TO THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

AT HOME.

Twelve months (including Christmas Number), £1 9s. 3d.
Six months, 14s. Christmas Half-Year, 15s. 3d.
Three months, 7s. Christmas Quarter, 8s. 3d.

Copies will be supplied direct from the Office to any part of the United Kingdom and the Channel Islands, for any period, at the rate of 6d. for each Number, paid in advance.

ABROAD.

The yearly subscription abroad is 36s. 4d. (on thin paper, 32s.), with the following exceptions:—

To Aden, Borneo, Ceylon, India, Java, Labuan, Mozambique Penang, Philippine Islands, Sarawak, Singapore, and Zanzibar, 41s. (thin paper, 34s.)
To Madagascar (except St. Mary), 45s. (on thin paper, 38s. 4d.)

Subscribers are specially advised to order the thick paper edition, the appearance of the engravings in the thin paper copies being greatly injured by the print at the back showing through.

Newspapers for foreign parts must be posted within eight days of the date of publication, irrespective of the departure of the mails.

Subscriptions must be paid in advance, direct to the Publishing Office, 198, Strand, in English money; by cheque crossed the Union Bank of London; or by Post-Office Order, payable at the East Strand Post Office, to George C. Leighton, of 198, Strand, London.

THE VENDOR GUARANTEES A DIVIDEND AT THE RATE OF SEVEN PER CENT FOR THREE YEARS.

RIVER GAMBIA TRADING COMPANY, LIMITED.

Incorporated under the Joint Stock Companies' Acts, 1862 to 1883, by which the liability of each Shareholder is limited to the amount unpaid on his shares.

CAPITAL, £150,000, in 150,000 shares of £1 each.

FIRST ISSUE OF £100,000, IN 100,000 SHARES OF £1 EACH, of which 30,000 are reserved in part payment to the Vendor, 15,000 have been applied for by the directors and their friends, and will be allotted in full, and the balance is now offered to the public for subscription at par.

Payments—2s. 6d. per share on Application.
2s. 6d. " " on Allotment.
10s. 0d. " " One Month after Allotment.
10s. 0d. " " Two Months after Allotment.

DIRECTORS.

Mr. STEPHEN J. HILL, C.B., K.C.M.G. (late Governor of Sierra Leone and the Gold Coast, Chairman).
• WILLIAM GODDARD, Esq. (of Wm. Goddard and Co., Bathurst, and Drapers'—Gardens, E.C.), Managing Director.
• WILLIAM JAMES INGRAM, Esq., 65, Cromwell-road, South Kensington.
• RICHARD LIEPMANN, Esq. (Messrs. Liepmann, Lehmann, and Co., Merchants, Glasgow).
• D. S. PEDDIE, Esq., Chartered Accountant, 1, George-street, Edinburgh.
• JOHN SKINNER, Esq. (late of the Oriental Bank), 2, Beaumont-square, West Kensington, W.
• Will join the Board after completion of the Purchase.

BANKERS.

Messrs. MARTIN and CO., 2, Lombard-street, London, E.C.
THE UNION BANK OF SCOTLAND, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Branches.

BROKERS.

Messrs. ST. ALPHONSE and HALLS, 4, Adams-court, and Stock Exchange, London, E.C.

ESTIMATORS.

Messrs. JOHN ROBERTS, Esq., 21, George-street, Glasgow.

Messrs. HART and WATSON, 65, St. Vincent-street.
Messrs. MOWAN, DUNCAN, and FINLAY, 57, St. Vincent-street.

ADDRESSERS.

Messrs. JAMES BLACK and CO., 23, King-street.

DRAWERS.

DAVID HALL, Esq., 3, Royal Exchange-place.

SOLICITORS.

Messrs. HARWOOD and STEPHENSON, 31, Lombard-street, E.C.

AUDITORS.

W. G. GRIFFIN, Esq., Chartered Accountant, 5, Great Winchester-street, E.C.

TEMPORARY OFFICES.

1, DRAPERS' GARDENS, THROGMORTON AVENUE, E.C.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed for the purpose of acquiring and developing the business of Mr. William Goddard, who, and his predecessors, Messrs. Forster and Smith, have been successfully engaged in trading as West African Merchants for upwards of fifty years; the profitable and increasing trade now opening up on the River Gambia has induced Mr. Goddard to obtain the co-operation of additional capital.

Bathurst, the head-quarters of the business as now carried on, is the chief town of the colony on the Gambia, and the seat of Government. It is within fourteen days' steam of Liverpool, only a few days distant from St. Vincent (Cape de Verde Islands), which is (via Madeira) in telegraphic communication with Europe, and is the healthiest place on the West Coast of Africa. The Mails are carried by the British and African Steam Navigation Company, whose steamers call at Bathurst once in three weeks.

There are numerous factories and trading stations belonging to Mr. Goddard on both sides of the River Gambia, the principal one being at McCarthy's Island—200 miles up—where there is a large and commodious stone-built dwelling-house, offices for agent, wharf, retail store, warehouse, and all the requirements for a large trade.

The River Gambia is navigable as far up as the falls of "Barraconda" (a distance of 400 miles), and an expedition under the command of His Excellency Governor Gouldsbury, C.M.G., the administrator of the colony, has just returned, having succeeded in reaching Timbo, a town hardly inferior to Freetown as a centre of commerce throughout the journey his expedition was well received by the kings and chiefs, who expressed a great desire to trade direct with the English merchants.

This expedition will no doubt be the means of opening and extending the trade for many hundred miles beyond the present limits, thereby providing a new market for imports, and a fresh field from which to draw exports.

The imports consist of Manchester Goods, Iron in bars and pots, Hardware, Gunpowder, Tobacco, Rice, Sugar, Soap, Salt, Provisions, Marine Stores, Crockery, Brass Rods, Wines, Spirits, Swords and Blades, Amber, Coral, Beads, &c.

The exports include Ground Nuts, Hides, Ivory, Beeswax, Cotton, Gold, Kauri, &c. The demand for these products is practically unlimited. Ground Nuts alone over 5,000 tons (valued at over £200,000) having been exported in one year, principally to France and the Continent.

The property which the Company proposes to acquire from Mr. Goddard includes Freetown, and European and other residences, substantially built of brick and stone, and furnished with all modern requirements, extensive warehouses, retail stores, wax-house, with all the necessary appliances for clarifying beeswax, and a fleet of schooners, cutters, and other river craft. These vessels, when in number, are in good working order, and vary from 5 to 300 tons register. There are, in addition, canoes, long-boats, flats, surf-boats, and gigs. They are employed in importing goods, and in collecting and exporting the various products before mentioned. The Company will also acquire the entire goodwill of the business as at present carried on by Mr. Goddard.

The river frontage of the property is very extensive, and a substantial wharf, built this year, allows large steamers and sailing-vessels to unload and load alongside.

The European and native working staff, both in Bathurst and at the various factories and stations on the river, is most efficient, and capable of conducting a very much larger business without any increase of expenditure; and as the business is a going concern, in full working order, the shareholders should have an immediate return for their capital.

The Vendor, Mr. William Goddard, has consented to act as Managing Director at a remuneration to be agreed upon, thus securing to the Company the services of a gentleman who has an experience of West African trade of upwards of thirty years, and who was for seventeen years sole agent for Messrs. Forster and Smith. In connection with the following facts may be interesting:—At the time Mr. Goddard acted as manager for Messrs. Forster and Smith, a considerable capital was employed, and a trade amounting to from £50,000 to £100,000 was done. Since the business came into the hands of the present owner the following gratifying results have been obtained with a small capital:—

1879 and 1880—Amount of Goods sold and bartered £45,515 0 0
Gross Profit upon this trading £31,429 0 0

With the view of extending the trade in the Upper River, the Directors propose to purchase a steamer and steam-launch of light draught, which, in addition to taking up merchandise and bringing down produce, could be profitably employed in towing craft in the river and creeks. The Directors intend to establish a direct trade with the United States and West India, for the purpose of importing Tobacco, Rum, Timber, Shingles, Flour, &c.

The Freehold land, towns lots, dwelling-houses, warehouses, shops, &c., are valued at £21,000; the stock (including Manchester and other goods ready for barter in Freetown) and on the way, and running accounts now due) at £30,000; and the Company have arranged to purchase these, together with the goodwill of the business, for a sum of £20,000.

The Vendor has agreed to accept payment as follows:—£27,000 in cash, and the remainder £23,000—fully paid-up shares of the Company (the greatest number which by the rules of the Stock Exchange he can take), thus showing his confidence in the future success of the Company.

A careful consideration of the figures laid before them justifies the Directors in stating that a remuneration for a substantial reserve fund, a good dividend, may be confidently expected, and it may be added that the Vendor has made arrangements to their satisfaction, enabling him to guarantee a dividend at the rate of 7 per cent per annum for a period of three years.

Application will be made in due course to the London Stock Exchange for an official quotation of the Shares of the Company. The only contracts entered into by the Company are one dated Sept. 14, 1881, and made between William Goddard of the one part, and Henry B. Webb, as Trustee for the Company, of the other part; and another dated Oct. 31, 1881, and made between the Company of the first part, the said William Goddard of the second part, and the said Henry B. Webb of the third part. These Contracts, a statutory declaration that they are the only Contracts entered into by the Company, and copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, may be seen at the Office of the Company.

The Vendor pays all expenses incident to the incorporation and formation of the Company up to the first allotment of shares, with the exception of Brokerage.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares can be obtained from the Offices of the Company, or from the Bankers, Brokers, or Solicitors.

Applications for Shares must be made on the enclosed form, accompanied by a deposit of 2s. 6d. per share. A less number of shares are allotted than are applied for, the surplus of the deposit will be applied in whole or in part, as the case may be, to the payment of the amount due on allotment. Where no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full.

BANK OF NEW ZEALAND

(Incorporated by Act of General Assembly, July 29, 1861.)
Bankers to the New Zealand Government.
Capital subscribed and paid up, £1,000,000.
Reserve Fund, £1,000,000.
Head Office—Auckland.

BRANCHES AND AGENCIES.
In Australia—Melbourne, Sydney, and Newcastle.
In Fiji—Levuka, Suva.

In New Zealand—Auckland, Blenheim, Christchurch, Dunedin, Invercargill, Napier, New Plymouth, Pictou, Wellington, and at least two other towns and places throughout the Colony. The Bank grants Drafts on all their Branches and Agencies, and transacts every description of banking business connected with New Zealand, Australia, and Fiji on the most favourable terms.

The London Office RECEIVES FIXED DEPOSITS of £20 and upwards, rates and particulars of which can be ascertained on application.
F. LAZARUS, Managing Director.
No. 1, Queen Victoria-street, Mansion House, E.C.

MALVERN COLLEGE.

The next Term commences on Friday, Jan. 27.
Entrance Examinations on Jan. 28.
For Particulars apply to HENRY ALDEN, Esq., Secretary.

THE COMMITTEE of the JEWS' HOSPITAL and ORPHAN ASYLUM return their best THANKS to the Proprietors of the "Illustrated London News" for their liberality in admitting the children of the institution to the performance of the pantomime at Covent Garden Theatre on Thursday, the 12th inst.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE—PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION, PROBATE—TO ROBERT HALL, of Australia, Shipowner.

TAKE NOTICE, that a Citation has been issued under Seal of the Principal Probate Registry of the High Court of Justice, dated the 2nd day of November, 1887, whereby you, Robert Hall, and one Thomas Watkins, are cited to appear within thirty days after the publication of this Notice and accept or refuse probate of the will of Richard Watkins, late of Boulogne-sur-Mer, in the Kingdom of France, gentleman, deceased, of which will you are the executors, or show cause why letters of administration (with the said will annexed) of all and singular the personal estate of the said deceased should not be granted to Anne Watkins, the lawful widow and next of kin of the deceased, with an intimation that in default of your appearing the said letters of administration will be granted to the said Anne Watkins.
H. L. BRANCO, Registrar.

RODRIGUES' MONOGRAMS.

ARMS, CORONET, CREST, and ADDRESS DIES Engraved as Gems from Original and Artistic Designs. NOTE-PAPER and ENVELOPES, brilliantly illuminated by hand in Gold, Silver, Bronze, and Colours.
BEST RELIEF STAMPING, any colour, 1s. per 100.
All the New and Fashionable Note-Papers.—42, Piccadilly.

ARMS and CRESTS FOUND, PAINTED, and Engraved on Signet Rings, Seals, Dice, Book-Plates, Gold, Silver, Plate, and Ivory. Official Seals and Presses.

H. RODRIGUES, HERALDIC ENGRAVER, 42, PICCADILLY.

BALL PROGRAMMES at RODRIGUES'.

All the New Patterns of the Season, arranged, printed, and stamped in the latest fashion.

BILLS OF FARE, GUEST CARDS, WEDDING CARDS, and INVITATIONS in every variety.—42, Piccadilly.

VISITING CARDS at H. RODRIGUES'.

A VISITING-CARD PLATE elegantly engraved, and 100 SUPERFINE CARDS Printed, for 4s.
HENRY RODRIGUES, 42, Piccadilly, London.

DIAMONDS. Mr. STREETER,

SAPPHIRES. NEW BOND-STREET,

CATS' EYES. London; and

OPALS. COLOMBO, CEYLON.

EMERALDS.

PEARLS.

ALEXANDRITES.

ELKINGTON and CO.

ELECTRO PLATE. SILVER PLATE. CLOCKS and BRONZES.

ELKINGTON and CO.

TESTIMONIAL PLATE. CUTLERY, &c. Illustrated Catalogue post-free.

ELKINGTON and CO., 22, Regent-st., or 42, Moorgate-st., City.

ALFRED B. PEARCE, 39, Ludgate-hill.

INVITES INSPECTION of all that is new and beautiful in useful and ornamental CHINA and GLASS, including a d. Dinner Services ("Cottage"), 60 pieces ... 35 0
Dinner Services for 12 persons (106 pieces) ... 35 0
China Dessert Services for 12 persons (106 pieces) ... 14 0
Gift China Tea Services, 40 pieces, 1/4 ... 2 pieces 8 6
China Breakfast Sets for 6 persons, 1/4 ... 1 for 4 persons 5 6
Toilet Services (for Washstands), 6s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and 3 9
White Stone Jugs, "The Grecian," set of three 1 8

Quart Decanters, good cut glass, 5s. per pair ... plain 4 0
Claret Decanters (with handle), 4s. each ... and 3 0
Plain light Claret Glasses, well made, 6s. per doz. ... 4 6
Wine Glasses, plain or cut, Ports and Sherries, per doz. 1 9
Engraved Wine Glasses, do. do. ... green bowl 3 6
Hock Glasses, ruby bowl, 6s. per doz. ... 3 6
Tumbler, cut, 5s. 3d.; plain, 2s. 6d. moulded, per doz. 1 6
Plain light Finger-Glasses, taper shape ... per doz. 6 6

Other articles proportionately cheap.
Descriptive Catalogue sent post-free.
ALFRED B. PEARCE, 39, LUDGATE-HILL. Established 1760.

GARDNER'S DINNER and TABLE GLASS SERVICES.

Free, graceful, and original design, of unequalled value. Dinner Services, from 21s. Table Glasses, of the best Crystal, for twelve persons, complete, 6s. Cash discount, 15 per cent. Coloured Photographic Sheets and Illustrated Glass Catalogue post-free.
42 and 44, West Strand, Charing-cross.

D. GLETT—GASOLIERS in CRYSTAL GLASS and ORNOLU or BRONZE. Medieval Fittings.

A large Stock always on hand. Every article marked with plain figures.—Manufactory, 55 and 56, High Holborn.

LAUNDRY PLANS, several Hundreds, for Hand and Steam Power, as fitted up by us for Family Mansions, Schools, Hotels, Workhouses, and Asylums. Can be seen upon application.—THOMAS BRADFORD and CO., 140-3, High Holborn, London; and Crescent Iron Works, Manchester.

WHITE WOOD ARTICLES, for Painting, Fern Printing, &c.; Blotting-books, Screens, Paper Knives, &c. Priced List free. Book of Instructions, 1s. 6d. Wm. BARBAR, 119, Edgware-road, London.

SPECTACLES VERSUS BLINDNESS.

One-fourth of those suffering from blindness can trace their calamity to the use of common spectacles or lenses imperfectly adapted to the sight. Mr. HENRY LAURANCE, F.R.S., Oculist, Optician, PERSONALLY adopts his Improved Spectacles at his residence, 3, Endeavour-gardens, Euston-square, daily (Sundays excepted) ten to four. Sir Julius Benedict writes:—"I have tried the principal opticians in London without success, but your Spectacles have done admirably. The clearness of your glasses, as compared with others, is really surprising." Dr. Bird, Chelmsford, late Surgeon-Major, W.E.M., writes:—"I could not have believed it possible that my sight could have been so much improved and relieved at my age—eighty-two. I can now read the smallest print although suffering from cataract on the right eye." Similar testimonials from John Lowe, Esq., M.D., J. P., Lynn, Physician to H.R.H. Prince of Wales; Ven. Archdeacon Palmer, Clifton; Major-General Spurgin, C.B., Aldershot; Rev. Mother Abbess St. Mary's Abbey, Hildesheim; Rev. J. Hargreaves, Uxbridge; and hundreds of others. Mr. LAURANCE'S Pamphlet, "Spectacles, their Use and Abuse," post-free.

BINDING the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

Half-yearly Volumes bound in the new appropriate covers, with gilt edges, at 5s. 6d. each, if sent carriage-free to LEIGHTON, SON, and HODGE, 16, New-street-square, Fleet-street. The only Binders authorized by the Proprietors.

NICE, Cannes, Menton, Ospedaletti, and San Remo.

TO VISITORS TO THE RIVIERA.

FOR SALE, in the above Riviera towns, most BEAUTIFUL GROUNDS, suitable for VILLAS, full south, facing the Sea, and well sheltered from wind. Good water, and a square metre or yard. Full Particulars on application to the Societe Fonciere Lyonnaise, 23, Rue de Grammont, Paris; or to its Agencies in Nice, Cannes, and San Remo.

DR. DE JONGH'S

(KNIGHT OF THE ORDER OF LEOPOLD OF BELGIUM, KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOUR)

LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL.

THE PUREST. THE MOST EFFICACIOUS.

THE MOST PALATABLE. THE MOST DIGESTIBLE.

Proved by thirty years' medical experience to be

THE ONLY COD-LIVER OIL which produces the full curative effects in

CONSUMPTION and DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, AND WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D., Physician to the Westminster Hospital.

"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL, Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patient protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

DR. HUNTER SEMPLE, Physician Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest.

"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL introduced into medical practice by Dr. DE JONGH, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion, that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is by no means disagreeable, and might even be called pleasant. I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S., Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognized; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils of fish, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognized."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 6d.; Quarts, 8s., by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

SOLE AGENTS, ANSAR, HARFORD, and CO., 77, STRAND, LONDON.

CHAPPED HANDS and SKIN. BREIDENBACH'S AMANDINE renders the Hands and Skin beautifully Soft and White. Price 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. Sold by all Chemists, Druggists, and Fancy Dealers. 157a, New Bond-street, London, W.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER

RESTORES in perfection for restoring grey, white, or faded hair to its youthful color, gloss, and growth. It renews its life, strength, and growth. Dandruff quickly removed. A matchless Hair Dressing. Its perfume rich and rare. MORE ECONOMICAL, remarkable celerity of prompt action—in fact, every good quality guaranteed for Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.

BRIDAL BOUQUET BLOOM.—A lovely liquid for beautifying the Complexion. Ever young. One trial of it will convince any lady of its great superiority over any other liquid or face powder. In a moment of time it imparts to the face, neck, arms and hands a delicate softness and marble purity, with the tint and fragrance of the lily and the rose. It removes Freckles, Sunburn, and all roughness and blemishes. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR.

If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original color, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORINE. For the Teeth and Breath.

Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalcules," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Florine removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherries. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

LEWIS'S Contains Bromine and Iodine, the vital, refreshing, and health-giving principles of sea-water. A most valuable remedy for all eruptions of the skin, pimples, blotches, &c.

IODINE Braces and invigorates enfeebled constitutions, gives a healthy glow to the skin, stimulates every organ of the human frame, and is a grand substitute for sea-bathing.

SOAP.—For Hot Climates it is invaluable, quickly curing prickly heat, and skin disorders. Price 6d. and 1s., of JAMES LEWIS and SON, 12, Old Bond-street, London.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.

The Pills purify the blood, correct all disorders of the liver, stomach, kidneys, and bowels. The Ointment is unrivalled in the cure of bad legs, old wounds, gout, and rheumatism.

SAD, BUT TRUE.—The history of mankind convince us that disasters are in reality stepping-stones for higher progress. To prevent disastrous diseases from poisoned blood use ENO'S FRUIT SALT. No one can have a simpler or more efficient remedy. By its use the poison is thrown off, and the blood restored to its healthy condition by natural means. I used my FRUIT SALT freely in my last attack of fever, and I have every reason to say it saved my life.—J. C. ENO, HATCHAM FRUIT SALT WORKS, S.E. CAUTION.—Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

Prices, 2s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Sold by all Chemists.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE. PULVERMACH'S "GALVANISM,"

NATURE'S CHIEF RESTORER OF IMPAIRED VITAL ENERGY.

In this Pamphlet the most reliable proofs are given of the vast and wonderful curative powers of Pulvermacher's Patent Galvanic Chain-Bands, Belts, &c., in Rheumatic, Nervous, and Functional Disorders. Sent post-free for three stamps on application to

J. L. PULVERMACH'S GALVANIC ESTABLISHMENT, 191, Regent-street, London, W.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.

SUBSTANTIAL ARTISTIC FURNITURE

OETZMANN & CO., (Incl.)

HAMPSTEAD-ROAD,

NEAR TOTTENHAM-COURT-ROAD.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZMANN

and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD-ROAD, near Tottenham-court-road, London. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishings, Ironmongery, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Brackets, Clocks, Plants, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout. Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality. OETZMANN and CO.

THE "CANTERBURY" EARLY

ENGLISH DINING-ROOM SUITE, 20 Guineas, in solid American Walnut or Oak, consisting of a Sideboard with two drawers and cupboards, with bevelled plate-glass back; an extending Dining-Table, Six Chairs, and Two Arm-chairs, stuffed, all hair, and covered in leather or Tapestry. Illustrations of this Suite post-free on application.—OETZMANN and CO.

EARLY ENGLISH BRACKETS IN BLACK and GOLD, or Walnut and Gold, with Decorated Panels, 10s. 6d.; Ebonyed Chippendale Hanging Corner Whittens, with four bevelled plates, 2s. 6d.; Richly Decorated Early English Bracket, Grandiose, 3 ft. high, with plate-glass back, 42s.; and a large variety of Decorative Furnish

THE OLD CLOTHES EXCHANGE, PHIL'S-BUILDINGS, HOUNDSDITCH.—SEE PAGE 66.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.

No. 2230.—VOL. LXXX.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1882.

WITH TWO SUPPLEMENTS SIXPENCE.
By Post, 6d.

1. Heavy Going.

2. Joining the Herd.

3. An Awkward Spill.

4. "Hold your 'oss, Sir!"

5. A Harbour of Refuge.

6. Rather Unpleasant.

WITH THE ROYAL BUCKHOUNDS: SKETCHES IN THE FIELD.—SEE PAGE 78.

MARRIAGES.

On the 23rd inst., at St. George's Church, Penang, by the Rev. J. Walker, Colonial Chaplain, Robert Douglas Hewett, of the Perak Civil Service, eldest son of the late Thomas Douglas Hewett, of H.M.'s Indian Navy, to Sophie, second daughter of Leonard Wray, Esq., formerly of Banstead and Walthamstow.—By telegram.

On the 21st inst., at St. Peter's, Kirkley, Suffolk, by the Rev. Henry Joseph Musket, M.A., Rector of Clippesby, Norfolk, uncle of the bride, assisted by the Rev. W. W. English, M.A., Rector of the parish, Alan Swatman, youngest son of the late Rev. John Collett Reynolds, Rector of Bolton St. Peter's, Suffolk, to Julia Musket, only child of T. W. Etheridge, Esq., of Kirkley, Lowestoft.

DEATHS.

On the 22nd inst., at No. 14, Kensington Palace-Gardens, Helena Louisa Antrobus, second daughter of Edmund E. Antrobus, Esq.

At Rome, on Sunday morning, the 15th inst., Mary Isabel, the beloved wife of Luigi dei Marchesi Vanni-Pasqua, and younger daughter of the late James Lindsey Brougham, Esq., and Mrs. Davison, of Haddesley House, Feby, Yorkshire, aged 35.

On the 22nd inst., after a few days' illness, at his residence, 44, Portland-place, W., Hugh Henry Robertson-Aikman, of Ross and Broomelton, Leamshire, and of New Parks, Leicestershire, in his 63rd year. Friends were kindly accept this intimation.

On the 19th inst., at 5, Chester-place, Hyde Park-square, in his 82nd year, Martin Schlesinger, Esq.

On the 12th inst., at Green Park, Bath, the residence of her son-in-law (Dr. Henry Denning), Charlotte Eliza, widow of the late Major-General Henry Dunn O'Mahon, third daughter of the late James Robertson, Esq., and niece of General Sir Frederick Williams of Kars, Baronet, G.C.B., &c., aged 85 years.

* * The charge for the insertion of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, is Five Shillings for each announcement.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEB. 4.

SUNDAY, JAN. 29.

Fourth Sunday after Epiphany.
Morning Lessons: Job xxvii.; Matt. xvi. 1-11. Evening Lessons: Job xxviii. or xxix.; Acts xvii. 16.
St. Paul's Cathedral, 10.30 a.m., Rev. Canon Stubbs; 7 p.m., the Dean of Carlisle.
Westminster Abbey, 10 a.m., Ven. Archdeacon Cheetham; 3 p.m., Canon Barry.

MONDAY, JAN. 30.

King Charles I. beheaded, 1649.
London Institution, 5 p.m. (Mr. Frederic Harrison on the Real Value of Mechanical Invention to Civilisation).
Geographical Society, 8.30 p.m. (Mr. Cuthbert E. Peck—Across Iceland by the Springskandr Route).
Medical Society, 8.30 p.m.

TUESDAY, JAN. 31.

Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Professor McKendrick on the Mechanism of the Senses).
Civil Engineers' Institution, 8 p.m. (Discussion on the Analysis of Potable Water).
Photographic Society, 8 p.m.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 1.

Partridge-Shooting ends.
Institute of Chemistry, anniversary, 5 p.m.
Pharmaceutical Society, 8 p.m.
Entomological Society, 7 p.m.

THURSDAY, FEB. 2.

Candlemas.
Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Professor H. N. Moseley on Corals).
Royal Society, 4.30 p.m.
London Institution, 7 p.m. (Mr. James Sully on the Phenomena and Causation of Dreams).
Antiquaries' Society, 8.30 p.m.
Linnean Society, 8 p.m. (papers by Mr. O. Tepper, Major-General Benson, and Mr. R. D. Fitzgerald).

FRIDAY, FEB. 3.

Full Moon, 5.58 a.m.
Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Professor Tyndall on the Action of Molecules on Radiant Heat).
Architectural Association, 7.30 p.m. (Mr. Hugh Stannus on the Treatment of Sculpture with Architecture).
Geologists' Association, anniversary and conversazione, 7.30 p.m.

SATURDAY, FEB. 4.

Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Professor Faurer on Beethoven).

BRIGHTON.—EVERY SUNDAY.—A Cheap First-Class
Train from Victoria at 10.45 a.m., calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon. Day Return Tickets, 10s.

A Pullman Drawing-room Car is run in the 10.45 a.m. Train from Victoria to Brighton, returning from Brighton by 5.30 p.m. Special Cheap Fare from Victoria, including Pullman Car, 15s., available by these Trains only.
Special Cheap Return Tickets by Pullman Limited Express every Sunday, from Victoria, 12.30 p.m., returning from Brighton by any Train the same day, including the Pullman Limited Express, at 9.30 p.m. Fare there and back, 15s.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM at BRIGHTON.—EVERY

SATURDAY, Cheap First-Class Train from Victoria at 10.45 and 11.50 a.m., and London Bridge at 9.30 a.m., and 12.0 noon, calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon.
Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea (including Admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavillion Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds), available to return by any Train the same day, except the Pullman Car Trains.

TICKETS and every Information at the Brighton Company's
West-End General Office, 28, Regent-circus, Piccadilly, and 8, Grand Hotel-buildings, Trafalgar-square; also at the Victoria and London Bridge Stations.
(By order) J. P. KNIGHT, General Manager.

INMAN ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS.

LIVERPOOL TO NEW YORK.
City of New York, Thursday, Feb. 1, (City of Paris) Thursday, Feb. 16.
City of Montreal, Tuesday, Feb. 7, (City of Paris) Tuesday, Feb. 21.
Saloons and State Rooms, amply fitted, with every modern comfort and convenience. Apply to THE INMAN STEAMSHIP COMPANY, Limited, 22, Water-street, Liverpool; A. H. JOHNSON, 9, Rue de la Harpe, Paris; or to ELVES and ALLEN, 59, Cannon-street, London, E.C.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.

SPECIAL FEATURES IN THE

MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS'
HOLIDAY PROGRAMME.

The NEW and BEAUTIFUL SONGS contained in the First Part.
G. W. Moore's new and enormously successful Comic Songs.
THE ARCHER HAT, and THE GOLDEN SLIPPERS.
The new and spirited Finale to the First Part.
Walter Howard's new Comic Song, "HEIGHO! SAYS THE SAILOR'S WIFE."
Robert Seymour's Specialities.

THE YANKEE PICNIC, and THE BABY ELEPHANT.

EVERY NIGHT at EIGHT.

MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, and SATURDAY, at THREE and EIGHT.

NEXT TUESDAY AFTERNOON at 2.30, NEXT TUESDAY NIGHT at 7.30.

M. FREDERICK BURGESS'S SEVENTEENTH

ANNUAL DAY and NIGHT DRAMATIC and MUSICAL FESTIVAL AT

ST. JAMES'S GRAND HALL,

REGENT-STREET AND PICCADILLY.

ONE OF THE MEMORABLE EVENTS OF THE SEASON.
Inasmuch as it affords an excellent opportunity for families residing in the suburbs of London to see
THE WHOLE OF THE MOST EMINENT and POPULAR COMEDIANS connected with the London Stage
IN THE SAME ENTERTAINMENT.

THE MOORE AND BURGESS MINSTRELS

will give an Exceptionally Fine Programme upon this occasion.
Tickets and Places may be secured at Austin's Universal Ticket Office, St. James's Hall, daily from 9.30 a.m. until 7 p.m.

Patrons, &c., Stalls, 3s.; Balcony, 2s.; Gallery and Back Area, 1s.
A list of results in the country, or in the suburbs of London, may secure places by letter, including either cheque or post-office order, payable to A. Austin, St. James's Hall.

INSTITUTE OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.

THE SIXTEENTH WINTER EXHIBITION is NOW OPEN, from Ten till Six. Admission, 1s.; Catalogue, 6d.
Gallery, 55, Pall-mall, S.W. H. F. PHILLIPS, Secretary.

GROSVENOR GALLERY WINTER EXHIBITION.

The Winter Exhibition at the Grosvenor Gallery is NOW OPEN, from Ten till Six. Admission, 1s.; Catalogue, 6d. The exhibition includes a COMPLETE COLLECTION OF THE WORKS OF G. F. WATTS, R.A., forming the first series of Annual Winter Exhibitions illustrating the works of the most eminent living painters. Admission, 1s.; Season Tickets, 5s.

DORE'S GREAT WORKS.—"ECCE HOMO" ("Full of

divine dignity."—The Times) and "THE ASCENSION." "CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM." "CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM." with all his other Great Pictures.—DORE GALLERY, 35, New Bond-street. Daily, 10 to 6. 1s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.—The EXHIBITION OF

WORKS BY THE OLD MASTERS and by DECEASED MASTERS OF THE BRITISH SCHOOL is NOW OPEN. Admission, from Nine a.m. till Six p.m., 1s. Catalogue, 6d.; or bound in cloth, with pencil, 1s. Season Tickets, 5s. At dusk the galleries are lighted by the electric light.

LYCEUM.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. Henry Irving.

Every Evening, at Half-past Eight, James Albery's Comedy, TWO ROSES.—Mr. Dugby Grant; Mr. Irving; Our Mr. Jenkins; Mr. David James; Mr. Howe; Mr. Terrier; Mr. G. Alexander; Miss Woulford Emery; Miss H. Moberg; Mrs. Pouncefort; Miss Ewell. At Half-past Seven, THE CATS OF THE WATER-GATE. Mr. Terrier; Miss Ewell; Mr. Dugby Grant; Miss H. Moberg; Mrs. Pouncefort; Miss Ewell. Open Ten to Five. Seats also booked by letter or telegram.

SANGERS' GRAND NATIONAL AMPHITHEATRE.

THE GREAT CIRCUS COMPANY.—The MENAGERIE and GORGEOUS PANTOMIME, BLUE-BEARD. The spectacular display in the Marriage Scenes does by far eclipse any production ever previously submitted. The Company numbering 500 People, 50 Magnificent Horses, 30 of the Smallest and Handsomest Ponies, 100 of the Lilliputian Army, 100 Christian Ladies in the Oriental Costumes, 50 Savages, 50 Star-Bearers in attendance on Blue Beard, Solim, and his 250 followers in Gold and Silver Armour, 100 Ladies-in-Waiting upon Fatima, in Costumes composed solely of jewels, producing an effect perfectly bewildering; 12 Camels and Dromedaries, and the pure White Horses of the Sun. The Marriage Procession of Bluebeard, in which will appear 20 Elephants, 20 Zebras, Blue Beards, Fatima, with their numerous Attendants, seated in magnificent array upon the back of the monster elephant Ajax. There is nothing like it under the sun. Performances daily, at Two and Seven o'clock. Proprietors and Managers, J. and G. SANGERS.

SANGERS' ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Important

Announcement.—As a preventive to fire, which of late has been an lamentably prevalent in theatres, &c., the Proprietors have ENTIRELY DISPENSED with the use of GAS in their large Establishment, which is entirely illuminated, interior and exterior, with the ELECTRIC LIGHT system, the aid of which considerably improves the brilliancy of the magnificent Pantomime and Circus performance. No danger of fire or explosion.

SANGER'S NATIONAL AMPHITHEATRE and

CIRCUS.—Many thanks to the press and public in general. There is but one opinion that SANGER'S is the BEST PANTOMIME EVER PRODUCED in LONDON, and the most extensive Equestrian Company ever organised.

MR. and MRS. GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.—

Managers, Messrs. Alfred Reed and Corney Grais.—ST. GEORGE'S HALL, Langham-place, AGES AGO, by W. S. Gilbert and Frederic C. J. MASTER TOMMY'S THEATRICALS. A new Musical Sketch by Mr. Corney Grais. Concluding with NO. 20, by F. C. Burr and German Reed. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday at Eight. Thursday and Saturday at Three. Admission, 1s., 2s., 3s., 4s., and 5s.

Now ready,

VOL. 79 ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS,

Elegantly Bound, cloth gilt, price 20s.

CASES, for binding above 2s. 6d.

PORTFOLIOS, to hold Six Months' Numbers 4s. 6d.

READING-CASES, for Single Number 2s. 6d.

198, Strand, W.C.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1882.

The shifting combinations revealed by the kaleidoscope are not more varied than have been the political fluctuations in France during the past week. Almost every day there has been an apparent "crisis," owing to the differences between M. Gambetta and the Chamber of Deputies, aggravated by the Prime Minister's indiscretion and want of tact. The French are a severely logical nation, and in political affairs they have rarely recognised the wisdom and the safety of mutual concessions. They are now learning a lesson which has for several generations been an axiom of English statesmanship. When the Chamber, alarmed at the Premier's attitude and covert threats, chose a committee of thirty-three to report on the revision scheme, nearly every member of which was hostile to the scrutin de liste, a conflict seemed inevitable, and a coup d'état not impossible. The most flighty of Paris correspondents, confident as to the course of events although everything was fluctuating, predicted the overthrow of the Government, and the installation by Sunday next of a new Cabinet under M. Ferry or M. de Freycinet, or with all the outside leaders combined. Neither he nor other political prophets reckoned on the controlling influence in such emergencies of President Grévy, nor the impossibility of forming a stable administration with M. Gambetta, the country being still at his back, as leader of the Opposition. When matters had come to a deadlock—when the Committee almost unanimously vindicated the principle of unlimited revision as the inherent right of a Congress composed of the two Chambers, and pointedly condemned the substitution of "a personal will" "for that of the nation"—the retirement of M. Gambetta appeared inevitable. But the word compromise, so familiar when political exigencies have arisen in this country, has been heard and welcomed. A basis of reconciliation seems to have been found in the Premier's proposal of a limited revision of the Constitution, and in the proposal to postpone the scrutin de liste so as to satisfy the amour propre of the Chamber. If, as is probable, the Gambetta Cabinet should remain in office, it may yet, amongst other things, save the commercial treaty with England.

Serious troubles have arisen on the southern frontier of Austro-Hungary. For three years the two provinces which revolted from Turkey, and thereby precipitated the war between the Czar and the Sultan, have been under the Austrian yoke, and there is abundant evidence that the bureaucratic system imported into Bosnia and Herzegovina has altogether failed to conciliate their mixed populations. The territory virtually ceded to Austria by the Treaty of Berlin had to be conquered, and now has to be reconquered. In an unlucky moment the Vienna Government decided to apply the law of conscription to these half civilised and intractable races. Passive resistance has been followed by concerted action, and has developed into an insurrectionary movement and a guerilla war in parts of Herzegovina and southern Bosnia, and the chiefs have gone so far as to unfurl the banner of autonomy under the suzerainty of the Sultan. While we hear of desultory conflicts all along the frontier of Montenegro—which little State has been summoned to the aid of its big neighbour—we are better able to estimate the gravity of the occasion by the mobilisation of the Austrian army, and the dispatch of regiment after regiment from the capital to the disaffected districts. A protracted campaign in this difficult, mountainous, and thinly peopled region would seriously impair the prestige of Austria, and might precipitate grave complications. The Montenegrins, despite their Prince, are in sympathy with the insurgents; Russia will hardly observe unmoved the progress of the struggle; Italian sympathies in favour of Austria, notwithstanding King Humbert's late visit to Vienna, are anything but cordial; and the Sultan must view with grim satisfaction the revolt of provinces which are still nominally under his sway.

In less than a fortnight the Parliamentary Session will open, and the extraordinary bitterness, amounting to rancour, of Opposition attacks on the Government fore-shadows a lively political campaign; unless, as Sir W. Harcourt declares, all this clashing of cymbals is mere "sound and fury, signifying nothing." The Home Secretary derides the idea of a dissolution ventilated by opponents who, amid all their clamour, deprecate the return of the Conservatives to power while Ireland remains in its present critical condition. If, however, such violent diatribes as those of Lord Lytton, Lord Randolph Churchill, and, worst of all, the Quarterly Review, are to have any effect on public opinion, the question will arise—how is the country to be governed? Either the Opposition should deal with Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues in a spirit of fair play, and co-operate in carrying out such reforms as are necessary to the dignity, and even the existence, of Parliamentary Government, or they should candidly declare that, her Majesty's Ministers having lost the confidence of the country, the Conservative leaders are prepared to take their places. The legitimate outcome of the fierce criticism and invectives of recent recess speeches should be a vote of no-confidence in the Government; but these tactics the Conservative press, for obvious reasons, repudiate.

Intense interest has been felt as to the issue of the great political struggle in the North Riding of Yorkshire. In that important electoral division, which has a constituency of more than twenty thousand voters, the seat which became vacant by the death of Lord Helmsley has for three weeks been contested with extraordinary vigour. On the side of Mr. Dawnay were ranged not only the Conservative landed proprietors, but Lord Zetland, the Duke of Cleveland, and Earl Grey, who have been, nominally at least, adherents of the Liberal party, but are alarmed at the prospect of land reform. His opponent, Mr. Rowlandson, an occupier of the soil, has been essentially the tenant farmers' candidate, though he was well supported by the commercial interests that have their centre in the Cleveland iron district. The conflict terminated on Tuesday by the return of Mr. Dawnay, who, however, obtained a majority by only 386 votes upon a gross poll of 15,884 electors. Considering the enormous territorial influence brought to bear in favour of the Conservative candidate, that for more than fifty years the representation of the North Riding has been divided between the two parties, and that one Liberal sits for the constituency, the Conservatives have little reason for congratulation in holding the contested seat by so slender a majority. Their victory—if victory it can be called—has been dearly bought. To a large extent, the farmers of the North Riding seem to have voted for their own interests, regardless of their former alliance with a party that has given them nothing but empty promises; and should the Government have the opportunity of bringing forward measures for their relief, this ominous breach between the Tory landlords and their tenants will be further widened.

"Under which King, Bezonian"—is a familiar quotation that comes uppermost in surveying the prospects of the Opposition. Some days ago it was reported that the difficulty as to the dual leadership of the party had been adroitly solved by Mr. W. H. Smith. The late First Lord of the Admiralty had, it was announced, made arrangements for a banquet at his residence, at which the leading Conservatives of both Houses were invited "to meet Sir Stafford Northcote and Lord Salisbury." Hence it was inferred by keen-witted politicians that the priority of the right hon. baronet had been semi-officially acknowledged, and that henceforth his Lordship would "ride behind." Hardly, however, were congratulations on this happy solution of a perplexing problem exhausted, than it was intimated that the grand banquet had shrunk to the dimensions of "a small dinner party," composed of the members of the late Cabinet who may be then in town, "to meet Lord Salisbury and Sir Stafford Northcote." This careful reversal of the two distinguished names has an evident purpose. The public are still free to choose between them.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

A journey last Saturday to Messrs. Williams and Norgate's, in Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, and the expenditure of a few shillings placed me in possession of a genuine and highly interesting Curiosity of Literature. What do you say to a Turkish Ambassador at a great Court in Frangistan translating into the tongue of the Hellenes a poem written by an Italian Ghaour in the fourteenth century? Such is the ΔΑΝΤΕ Ο ΑΔΗΣ ΜΗΤΑΦΡΑΣΙΣ ΚΟΝΣΤΑΝΤΙΝΟΥ ΜΟΡΣΟΥΡΟΥ: otherwise Dante's Inferno, translated into Greek verse by Musurus Pasha, D.C.L. To be sure, the distinguished Ottoman diplomatist is a Christian Greek, born at Constantinople of Cretan parents; and is a master not only of his vernacular Romaic, but of the language and literature of ancient Hellas. Yet it is strange, passing strange, to read in lieu of one's familiar "Nel mezzo del cammin," &c.,

Ἐν τῷ μέσῳ τῆς τριβῆς τοῦ βίου τούτου.

(Of course, one went at once to the "crack" passages, such as "E li parenti miei furon Lombardi" (Musurus, for the sake of quantity, translates "Lombardi" by the more mediæval than Attic Λογγοβάρδοι). I cannot quote the passage in its entirety for fear of the wrath of the compositors; yet I may entreat them to set up in Greek type the Pasha's rendering of La ciate ogni speranza, voi ch' entrate.

It is

Ἄφεσ πᾶς εἰς τὴν πύσαν ἔλπειδα.

Musurus' "Hades" will be, doubtless, carefully picked to pieces by our Academic Hellenists—the pages have delicious broad margins for the scribbling of notes and queries upon—but I prefer to regard the work as a curiosity indirectly bearing on the Eastern Question; and I will place the Inferno of the deathless Alighieri, translated by Musurus Pasha, lovingly on a shelf, side by side with the strangest edition of Dante in the original that I have yet acquired. The text is founded on a manuscript of the Fourteenth Century, with the commentary of Guiniforti delli Bargigi, and an introduction by the advocate G. Zacheroni, who published the work in exile at Marseilles in 1838, and prefixed to it a sardonic dedication to Pope Gregory XVI. "To you, Holy Father," writes the rancorous avvocato, "do I inscribe this edition of a poem descriptive of a region in which the Ghibelline has placed so many of your predecessors."

Mem.: The Holy Inquisition, aided by the Papal gendarmes, had seized a consignment of early copies of the Inferno, which the Avvocato Zacheroni had sent to Rome.

From Greek and Italian verse to Mr. Oscar Wilde the transition is very easy indeed. The New York Herald is full of delicious details of the reception in the Empire City of "the tall and æsthetic young man," as the Herald reporter calls Mr. Wilde. He has breakfasted with Miss Kate Field, President of the Co-operative Dress Association; and Miss Clara Morris, the celebrated American actress; and a few special guests, posed "while this uncommon young man" "ground the edge of his keen appetite." I should have dearly liked to see them "posing." And a certain Gloomy Chieftain (by the name of B.) should have been hidden in a horseman's coat, behind a screen, as Johnson was at Mr. Cave's dinner party, to mark the play made with the Blue Point oysters and the tender loin steaks.

Later in the afternoon Mr. Oscar Wilde "robed himself" to dine with Mr. "Sam" Ward at the residence of that genial millionaire in Clinton-place. I would sooner they had dined at the Brevoort House, or Delmonico's, or at Pinard's in East Fourteenth-street, or, especially, at a rare old restaurant (in Lafayette-place, I think), whither "Uncle Sam" took us one night, and gave us some old madeira, half a glass of which produced at once in my mind the persuasion that I was the Adelantado of the Seven Cities, and that I had a galleon of my own, aden solely with quicksilver and pieces of eight, coming from Vera Cruz, and due, on the morrow morning, at Sandy Hook.

The hospitable board of the most accomplished Amphitryon on the American continent was "graced with a mammoth bed of flowers: the central part being composed of lilies of the valley." Two spotless "calin" lilies, tied together with a crimson satin ribbon, were placed by the side of Mr. Oscar Wilde's plate. "The flowers were the gift of the female admirers of the æsthetic young man." This is an extremely odd world.

The guests invited to meet "Our Mr. O. W." were very choice. The company included the Hon. William M. Evarts, one of the ablest lawyers in the Union and some time Secretary of State; Mr. Sidney Webster, a nephew of the late Daniel Webster, Mr. William H. Hurlburt of the New York World, the King of American Journalists, a deep scholar and bright wit; Mr. W. R. Travers, a wealthy dilettante, I believe, and Mr. Stephen Massett, otherwise "Jeems Pipes of Pipesville." A rare gathering; but it wanted, say, "Heliogabalus and Jack the Painter" to make it complete.

The wines were as surprising as the guests. "The poet and æsthetic commented upon the excellence of the Prince John Van Buren Malmsbury Madeira, which is the special pride of the host." I remember the late Mr. John Van Buren very well. He was the son of Mr. Martin Van Buren, Eighth President of the United States. His name is enshrined in one of the very earliest of the so-called "nigger" ditties—a song called "Zip Coon," which is nearly contemporary with "Jim Crow." The burden haunts me:—

Maan Van Buren die berry soon,
De berry next President will be Zip Coon.

John Van Buren was a very handsome man, of strikingly aristocratic mien and manners. He was known in fashionable New York Society as "Prince" John, for the reason that, being a sojourner in England in the first year of her Majesty's reign, he had had the honour, at a ball at Buckingham Palace, of dancing with the youthful Queen of England. The Americans are an extremely odd people.

Says Mister Punch with respect to the "Clôture," "Object to it because it is French? So is Premier. But if we want good, forcible, colloquial English, why not call it 'the Shut-Up?'" Aye, jester; but there is no such noun substantive as "the shut-up," which is so much ungrammatical slang. It is true that we call the head of the Cabinet indifferently the "Premier" or the "Prime Minister;" but the French have no such term as "Premier" in their political vocabulary. M. Gambetta is, or was (for there is no knowing what may happen in France by the time this sheet goes to press), "Premier Ministre" or "Président du Conseil des Ministres." Were he spoken of as "le Premier" there would be a roar of laughter. People would be thinking of a "jeune premier" at the Vaudeville. "Premier" and "Prime," as we use them, are more Old Norman than modern French words. Thus, "premier Baron," "prime warden," "primogeniture."

Did King Charles II. (who never said a foolish thing and never did a wise one) really make the remark that "English Bishops were not like the Bishops of other countries, because they were not at the head of their profession"? Such an ostensible quotation from the dicta of the Merry Monarch was made the other day by the Rev. Dr. Belcher at a public meeting held to protest against the continued imprisonment of an obstinate Ritualist clergyman. Dr. Belcher's statement moved the audience to "laughter and cheers." If the Second Charles really made the observation attributed to him, he was guilty of, for once, an extremely foolish utterance. Nor Bishops, nor Archbishops, nor Cardinals in Catholic countries can be said to be at "the head of their profession," seeing that the Head of that profession is the Pope.

On the other hand, here is a well-authenticated anecdote about an obstinate Bishop which I find in Elmes' "Memoirs of the Life and Works of Sir Christopher Wren." The great architect had an uncle, Dr. Matthew Wren, Bishop of Ely and Registrar of the Order of the Garter, who having, as a staunch Royalist, incurred the displeasure of the Long Parliament, was immured in the Tower for nearly twenty years. Not long before the death of Oliver Cromwell that Prince went to dine with his son-in-law, Claypole; and at his table Oliver found young Mr. Wren, already famous for his attainments in the mathematics. After some little time, the Lord Protector, fixing his eyes on Mr. Wren, said, "You have an uncle who has long been confined in the Tower." "He has so, Sir," replied young Mr. Wren; "but he bears his afflictions with great patience and resignation." "He may come out if he will," pursued Oliver. "Will your Highness permit me to tell him this from your own mouth?" asked Wren. "Yes, you may," answered Oliver. And then he went away.

But when the overjoyed nephew related to his uncle the particulars of this interview, the good but obstinate Bishop replied, "with warm indignation, that it was not the first time he had received the like intimation from that miscreant; but he disclaimed the terms proposed for his enlargement, which were a mean acknowledgment of his favour and an abject submission to his detestable tyranny."

To the columns of a daily contemporary Mr. Algernon Charles Swinburne contributes a fine piece of poetic frenzy on the Persecution of the Jews in Russia. I note in Mr. Swinburne's "cascading" lines these words, "by lying tongues adored." I was not aware till I read the Swinburnian effusion that adoration was an articulate performance. I always thought that it was one of attitude and gesture expressive of love, reverence, and worship. The position of "adoration" is minutely described by Mr. Anthony Rich in his "Dictionary of Roman and Greek Antiquities." The body was slightly inclined forward and the knees half bent, while the right hand gently touched the object (say, the altar of the goddess) which was adored. The left hand was raised to the mouth and kissed, while it was waved in the direction of the venerated object. The movements in what the learned Rich terms the "pantomime" of adoration are exactly figured in a woodcut taken from Gorkæus, in which a warrior is represented mutely adoring a statue of Victory.

Mem.: "Lying mouths" would be quite admissible, since the Latin word adoratio is derived from ad os.

Everybody remembers the famous assertion of a right to "the Pursuit of Happiness" contained in the American Declaration of Independence. That renowned composition would seem to have been "running in the heads" of the framers of a remarkable resolution unanimously adopted at an Anti-Liquor Traffic meeting recently held at the Townhall, Kensington. The meeting were of opinion that

The promised Government measure of reform will be vitally defective unless it confers on the localities a complete local option with regard to the discontinuance of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, in order that they may, if so minded, come into possession of those blessings of a social, moral, educational, industrial, and pecuniary nature which are enjoyed by places where no sale of intoxicating liquors is at present permitted.

If Kensington form a part of the Borough of Chelsea, the "old Court Suburb" already possesses, so it strikes me, a large number of blessings of a "social, moral, educational, industrial, and pecuniary nature." With the blessings of Kensington Palace, the Royal Albert Hall and Memorial, the National Training Schools for Music and for Cookery, the South Kensington Museum and the Gardens of the Horticultural Society, to say nothing of the Brompton Oratory and the excellent Victorian and Elizabethan Schools in Sloane-street, South-Western London would appear to be exceptionally "blessed;" and as for "pecuniary" beatitude, only think of the millionaires who dwell in the Cromwell-road and at Prince's-gate!

There is another institution also in the south-west, wholly beneficial, and thoroughly meriting the best of good words. This is the Evening College for Women, in Queen-street, Brompton, a school established by that admirably useful association the Women's Education Union, of which H.R.H.

Princess Louise is president. The College, of which Mrs. K. Thornbury is superintendent, and Miss Louisa Brough secretary, gives systematic teaching in evening classes to women employed during the day. There is a circulating library open to members at the trifling charge of sixpence a term: there is a reading-room; there are free lectures; and the evening students may obtain tea and coffee and other light refreshments. The minimum age for admission is fifteen years.

Is it not better that working women (especially the young ones) should frequent the Brompton Evening College than that they should amuse themselves during their brief intervals of leisure by reading the "Penny Awfuls," or poring over the revolting assize and police cases which form the staple of our weekly newspapers. No doubt unthinking people may sneer at the idea of a sempstress or a shopwoman taking lessons in "Composition, Elocution, English History, Literature, and Geography." Let the sneerers sneer, and may the Brompton Evening College for Women prosper!

When Napoleon the Great was told that Greuze had died in poverty at the Louvre, in which huge edifice the French Government formerly gave lodging—but not board—to a certain number of distinguished artists, he exclaimed, "Why did he not come to me? I would have filled his 'Cruche Cassée' with gold." I was reminded of this anecdote while looking over the very sumptuous art book (published by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co.), "The Great Historic Galleries of England," carefully and lovingly edited by Lord Ronald Gower, F.S.A. The volume just published comprises, among its splendid illustrations, which are executed by the Woodbury process, a copy of Greuze's exquisite "Girl with Doves," from the Hertford House collection. Lord Ronald tells us that the "Girl with Doves" was executed expressly for a Mr. Wilkinson, who paid the painter 5400 francs (say, £180) for it. In 1823 the picture was bought by M. Nieuwenhuys for 245 guineas. Jean Baptiste Greuze was not yet "up" in the market. The work then passed into the hands of Mr. W. Wells, of Redleaf; and at his sale in 1848 it was bought by the late Marquis of Hertford for £787 10s. At the present day it would probably fetch twice that amount. Thrice, possibly. Jean Baptiste Greuze is very much "up" in the market, indeed. At the San Donato sale Greuze's "Broken Eggs" realised no less than 5010 guineas. Poor man!

Another handsome contribution to Art-bibliography which I have before me is "Bartolozzi and his Works," by Andrew W. Tuer (2 vols. London: Field and Tuer), being a copiously illustrated biographical and descriptive account of the life and career of the famous Italian engraver-Academician. The work comprises a catalogue raisonné of upwards of two thousand of Bartolozzi's engraver's prints—the most extensive record of his work yet compiled. The "getting up" of the work is as luxurious as it is tasteful; and it is dedicated to her Majesty the Queen. Among the plates are two exquisite impressions of the well-known "St. James's" and "St. Giles's Beauties" after Benwell; and on the frontispiece of either volume is a delicious little vignette of "Love and Fortune" after Cipriani, with the epigraph "Sous leurs heureuses mains le cuivre devient or." "Why Certainly?" as Mr. Coghlan's "Colonel" would say: still, engraved copper-plates have had, time and again, the most disastrous of destinies. It is a matter of history that the heirs of the illustrious Jacques Callot sent scores of his most magnificent etched plates to the coppersmiths to be hammered into pots, kettles, and stew-pans.

In his sketch of "Bartolozzi's family," which supplements the biography of the engraver, Mr. Tuer tells us that Bartolozzi had a brother named Gaetano, whose eldest daughter, Lucy Elizabeth, married Armand Vestris, a dancer at the King's Theatre, and the grandson of the renowned Vestris, "who was designated by the Parisians 'le Dieu de la Danse.'" It would be more strictly accurate to say that the grand-paternal Vestris, who was one of the most conceited of mankind, was fond of declaring, in a strong southern accent, "Moi, je suis le Dieu de la Danse." He asked such extravagant terms once in entering into a re-engagement at the Opera that the gentilhomme de la chambre charged with the direction of the Académie Royale curtly told the rapacious dancer that the annual salary which he demanded exceeded the income which the King allowed his Marshals. "Under those circumstances," replied the unabashed Vestris, "I should advise his Majesty to make his Marshals dance—if they can."

Madame Vestris's younger sister, Josephine, "married a Mr. Anderson, a singer, and appeared to have dropped into the obscurity of private life." I remember Miss Anderson well. She was an extremely pretty woman and a charming singer, and I saw her perform in a burlesque extravaganza at the opening of the old Princess's Theatre, under the Maddox management in 1842-3. Her husband was a well-known "sporting character," and something more. He was a most skilful and refined miniature-painter.

On Wednesday, the eighteenth instant, there were grand doings at the Victoria Hospital for Sick Children, of which H.R.H. Princess Louise is Patron, and in the prosperity of which she takes the warmest personal interest; frequently visiting the Hospital, which is in the Queen's-road, Chelsea, and cheering the poor little sick folk by her gracious presence and kindly sympathy. The Hospital has also had, since 1876, a Convalescent Home for Children at Churchfields, Margate. On the afternoon of the 18th Princess Louise went to the merciful institution at Chelsea to witness a Christmas-Tree celebration, and to distribute gifts to the nurses. Each and all the children had a toy and kind words from Royal hands and lips, and the Princess spent two hours at the pleasant fête. Mr. George Grossmith kindly gave a little musical entertainment; and the nurses were indebted to Mr. W. S. Gilbert for some very pretty gifts. G. A. S.

PROPOSED RAILWAY BRIDGE OVER THE FORTH.—SEE PAGE 78.

ELEVATION AND SECTIONAL PLAN OF THE FORTH BRIDGE.

THE LAST MAORI TROUBLE IN NEW ZEALAND.

We have received from correspondents in Taranaki, or New Plymouth, on the west coast of the North Island, the only part of New Zealand still containing Maori tribes imperfectly reconciled to British rule, a number of sketches illustrative of the last difficulty with the natives. It will, in all probability, be the very last that is likely to demand even the show of a considerable military force; since it has been promptly settled, by the resolute action of the Colonial Government, happily without any fighting, but with the complete submission of those who had seemed to cherish a rebellious spirit in opposition to lawful authority. The relative position of the "Maori" and the "Pakeha," as the native and the European races are called in the Maori language, has been entirely reversed by the progress of colonisation, since the era of the former obstinate wars between them. Throughout the whole extent of the islands constituting New Zealand, North and South, the total number of Maori people scarcely exceeds 42,000 or 43,000, while the aggregate of English colonists is about ten times that number. And of the Maori population only a small part, less than one quarter, belongs to those tribes which have preferred as yet to dwell in seclusion, under their own chiefs, beyond the pale of the Colonial settlements, in the interior and western districts of the North Island. The greater part of the Maori nation has long since become fully accustomed to the administration of British laws, and to the use of property, industry, and trade in accordance with the customs of their white fellow-citizens. The chiefs, who are extensive landowners, are quite eager, in Auckland and in Napier or Hawke's Bay, to get their estates surveyed and put up for sale or lease, of course to their own profit; and they solicit, as a favour, the making of a road by the Colonial Government, which will add to the value of their lands. It is only among some of the Taranaki tribes, in a condition of barbarous ignorance and superstition, that a few chiefs and priests have been able to keep up a sullen feeling of passive hostility; and by methods similar to those of the Irish Land League, strengthened with vague prophecies of a miraculous interposition, have obstructed the colonial settlement in that territory.

TE WHITI, THE MAORI PROPHET.

Two years ago, in January, 1880, a Royal Commission was appointed to inquire into the claims and grievances of the natives in regard to land. The Commissioners proposed (and the proposal was sanctioned by Parliament) setting aside 260,000 acres as a native settlement, on condition that its occupiers should loyally accept the Government proposals and act according to law. Some of the natives who accepted these terms have already received Crown grants of land. The chief named Te Whiti and his family rejected the terms and refused to listen to explanation, declining even the invitation of the Governor to a friendly interview or to listen to the proposals made by a Minister in person. Month after month large assemblies of natives were held at Parihaka, to the neglect of agriculture and the fomenting of dissatisfaction. The speeches of Te Whiti roused angry feelings and open resistance to law; fences were built on lands not set apart for the natives, and an intention was shown of defending the fences when their removal was ordered by the Government. Apprehensions of danger were excited among the settlers by the threatening language of Te Whiti and the attitude of his followers, compelling the Government to maintain a large constabulary force. The time had come when the offers of the Government must be accepted or refused once for all, and the settlers receive a guarantee that they may live on their land in security and peace. Te Whiti and his followers had now to decide whether they will accept the Parihaka block, with other specified reserves, or for ever forfeit all claim and title to these lands. The Government Proclamation formally stated that fourteen days' grace will be allowed, after which these offers will be withdrawn, unless within that time

NEW ZEALAND SKETCHES: NATIVE TROUBLES IN TARANAKI.

1. Camp of the Armed Constabulary, Rohatu.
2. Road through Waimate Plains (confiscated land).
3. Mount Egmont, from Oeo, Waimate Plains.
4. Memorial to Miss Dobie, Murdered by a Maori.

5. Colonial Rifle Volunteers.
6. St. Andrew's Church, Cambridge, Waikato.
7. Telegraph Station, Pungarehu Camp.
- 8, 9, 10. Maori Head-dresses of Huia Feathers.

11. Armed Constabulary.
12. Taranaki Mounted Rifles at Revolver Practice.
13. Maori, Old Style and New Style.
14. Maori going to Te Whiti's Meeting at Parihaka.

Te Whiti and his followers signify their acceptance of them and their willingness to submit to the law and the Queen and to bring their claims before the Commissioners. In conclusion, the natives were urged to forsake Te Whiti and obey the law.

The execution of measures to enforce this proclamation was undertaken by the Hon. Mr. Bryce, Minister of Native Affairs, accompanied by two other members of the New Zealand Government, the Hon. Mr. Rolleston and the Hon. Mr. Atkinson. They collected in Taranaki, at the beginning of November, a force of Armed Constabulary and Volunteer Riflemen, exceeding two thousand, which nearly equalled the number of all the Maoris in the tribes adhering to Te Whiti, assembling in the "pah" or fortified village of Parihaka. It should be understood that of all this multitude, gathered by the summons of the Maori Prophet, who was reputed a great politician as well as an orator, the large majority did not belong to the district, and could have no concern of ownership or occupation with the disputed neighbouring lands. They were malcontents of distant parts, or rash youths who were duped into the belief that Te Whiti intended to head an insurrection, and that they would have a chance of fighting. Mr. Bryce therefore began by issuing notices to all persons belonging to other than Parihaka tribes, that they should forthwith return to their homes. Having fixed head-quarters at Pungarehu, with the Armed Constabulary and the Taranaki Mounted Volunteers and Rifle Volunteers, under command of Colonel Roberts, he waited for the Volunteer contingents of other Provinces, from Auckland, the Thames, Wellington, Wanganui, Canterbury, Nelson, and Marlborough, collected at the Rahotu camp, to the west of Parihaka. It cannot be said that these Colonial military preparations were needless or useless; since they may have caused Te Whiti to decline a hopeless conflict. But it is now manifest that the Maori Prophet had no idea of fighting. Mr. Bryce, however, resolved to arrest Te Whiti, in the midst of the Maori assembly at Parihaka, and to take him prisoner.

On the morning of Nov. 5, two bodies of troops from Pungarehu and from Rahotu, 1700 in all, formed a junction, under the general command of Colonel Roberts, and advanced to Parihaka, where they were inspected, and then marched into the Maori pah. The Armed Constabulary entered first, while the main body was made up in the following way:—On the left flank were the Nelson and Thames Volunteers, under the command of Major Pitt, and on the right flank the Canterbury and Marlborough Volunteers, the centre being occupied by the Wellington and Thames Naval brigades. The entrance into Parihaka was made at nine o'clock. Te Whiti declined to make any answer to the Proclamation, and the Riot Act was read. The Maoris all seemed in good spirits, and assumed an air of indifference to the whole of the proceedings. At the end of one hour, allowed by law to elapse after reading the Riot Act, the word was given to the forces to close in on the marae, the meeting-place where the prophet generally delivers his speeches, and where the natives were congregated together. This having been done, Major Tuke went up to Te Whiti and took him prisoner. The chief gave himself up without any resistance, and the Maoris remained passive. Tohu, the war-chief, was arrested soon after; and, still later, Hiroki, the alleged murderer of McLean, a Government surveyor on the Waimate Plains, in 1878, was taken into custody. In none of these cases was any resistance offered by the Maoris. The Volunteers were well placed in the advance, and means were adopted with the view of quelling any attempt at violence on the part of the Maoris. Te Whiti and Tohu were sent to New Plymouth for trial in charge of a strong escort.

The native settlement at Parihaka has been broken up and dismantled, a quantity of arms and ammunition being seized. All the natives who were strangers to the place have been dispersed without resistance, and perfect quiet now prevails in the district. The volunteers have been released from service, but the constabulary remain on duty. The making of roads in the Waimate plains has been commenced.

Our Illustrations of the colonial troops and their encampments, and of the Maori people, are from sketches by the Rev. Philip Walsh, of Waitara, Taranaki; the portrait of Te Whiti, from a drawing by Mr. W. Gordon, of Taranaki. The monument erected over the grave of Miss Dobie, the victim of an atrocious crime, in November, 1880, is shown in one of the sketches. This memorial of the unfortunate young lady, whose deplorable fate excited the greatest horror and bitter indignation, both in New Zealand and in England, has been generously erected by the non-commissioned officers and privates of the Armed Constabulary.

We give an illustration also of a more hopeful and gratifying subject—St. Andrew's Church, at Cambridge, in the Upper Waikato district of Auckland, New Zealand, of which the Rev. W. N. Willis is the incumbent. The foundation-stone was laid by Governor Sir Arthur Gordon, in January, last year; and the Bishop consecrated the church in August. It is a substantial building, in the Early English style, of the best Kauri timber, and has cost £2400. Cambridge is a rising little town, of 1200 inhabitants, on the Upper Waikato river, above one hundred miles south of the city of Auckland.

THE RAILWAY BRIDGE OVER THE FORTH.

We give some Illustrations of the engineers' design, approved by the Board of Trade on Dec. 9, for the construction of the great railway bridge over the Forth, which will place England and the southern part of Scotland in much nearer communication with Fife, Perthshire, Aberdeenshire, and the eastern Scottish Highlands. The present design for this work, by Mr. John Fowler, C.E., and Mr. B. Baker, C.E., 2, Queen's-square, Westminster, is quite different from that of the late Sir Thomas Bouch, who had previously constructed the unfortunate Tay Bridge at Dundee. The leading feature of Bouch's design for the Forth Bridge was that it was a suspension bridge, or rather a combination of two double suspension bridges, hung on piers carried to the extraordinary height of 596 ft. in the middle and of 584 ft. at the ends. It was deemed necessary to adopt this principle on account of the extraordinary length of span required by the unusual breadth of deep water that has to be traversed. It should be explained that on each side of the island of Inchgarvie there is a deep valley some 1600 ft. broad. The depth on the north side is 210 ft., and that on the south side is 180 ft., below the water level. These broad and deep depressions in the river bed, which must be crossed at a single span, constitute the great engineering difficulty of the undertaking. In other respects, the conditions are even less exacting than those in the case of the Tay bridge. The breadth of the river is less, and over the rest of the channel the depth of water is only 30 ft., and very secure and workable foundations can be obtained. Sir Thomas Bouch, as we have said, adopted the plan of suspension bridges. Messrs. Fowler and Baker, now engineers of the Forth bridge, have departed from this plan, and propose to cross the deep valleys by two huge steel girder bridges of 1700 ft. span. There will be two adjacent spans, each 675 ft., on the return sides of the girders to the nearest piers; and between the piers, in comparatively shallow water, there will be eighteen openings of 150 ft.

each. The joint span of the two girder bridges, taken in one, would cross the whole width of Hyde Park, from Piccadilly to the Marble Arch. The under side of the girders will be arched. Their depth will be no less than 340 ft. at the piers, and it will gradually diminish towards the centre, where it will be about 50 ft. This minimum depth of 50 ft. will be continued for about 500 ft. in length, so that there will be a clear headway of 150 ft. above high-water level for that space in the centre of each opening. Another striking peculiarity of the design is that the sides of the bridges will not be perpendicular throughout, but will be inclined inwards at a considerable angle for some distance from each pier. At the piers, the two main girders will be 120 ft. apart at the bottom, and only 50 ft. apart at the top. The difference between the upper and the lower sections gradually diminishes towards the centre, where the distance between the two girders is narrowed to 25 ft. both at top and at bottom. This form has been adopted in order to enable the structure to resist the pressure of the wind. It is believed that if the bridge were constructed on this plan it would be in a condition, even if loaded with a couple of 900-tons trains, to withstand the enormous pressure of 112 lb. to the square foot without a bolt or a rivet being loosened. As Sir Thomas Bouch believed that he had met the utmost exigencies of the case in providing against a wind-pressure of only 10 lb. to the square foot, some idea may be formed of the superiority that is claimed for the new design. The adoption of steel instead of iron as the material of construction will add greatly to the strength of the structure, while diminishing its weight. The lower members of the girders and the struts which bind them together will be steel tubes varying from 12 ft. to 5 ft. in diameter. The amount of steel to be used in the structure is estimated at 50,000 tons; and the cost of the whole work, including the connecting lines of railway, will be £1,600,000. It will be four times the size of any bridge ever yet built. The bridge is not to be the work of the North British Railway only. Three great English companies—the North-Eastern, the Great Northern, and the Midland—have an interest in the stupendous undertaking; and the consulting engineers of these companies have approved the design which has been briefly described. The fact that these companies have interested themselves in this project may be taken as an index of the importance that is attached to it. The development of the commerce of the east of Scotland depends essentially on the practical annihilation of the estuaries of the Forth and the Tay; and with the reconstruction of the Tay bridge and the construction of the Forth bridge, both now within sight, that important end will have been successfully attained.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

There was a great crowd at the Haymarket on Thursday, the 19th inst., to witness the revival of the late Mr. Robertson's comedy of "Ours," with an exceptionally interesting dramatis personæ. The stalls and private boxes of the house, which under the Bancroft leaseholdship have become so tastefully splendid in construction and decoration, were filled by those ladies and gentlemen of high social standing, literary and artistic eminence, or general intellectual culture, whom you are at liberty to call the "Upper Five Hundred," or "la Crème de la Crème," or "la Fine Fleur;" but who in the argot of the Theatrical World are brutally but comprehensively styled "First Nighters." It was literally "a first night" to me; for a double pleasure was in store for me. I was about to witness that which I felt certain would be the very clever performance of an accomplished troupe of actors and actresses; and it so chanced that I had never seen "Ours" played before. Neither in town nor in country. The Robertsonian comedies were, I take it, mainly produced between the years 1865 and 1868, inclusive; and during those years, as also during the two preceding, I was almost continuously abroad in America, the West Indies, Mexico, Algeria, Spain, Italy, and the Tyrol, gazing upon certain Dramas framed on a somewhat larger scale than Mr. Robertson's light and pleasant conceits are devised, and including some "highly startling effects," involving the expenditure of many millions of pounds sterling (the American Tragedy alone cost Four Hundred Millions), and not unfrequently presenting tableaux of real Battle, real Murder, and real Sudden Death.

I thought "Ours," at the Haymarket, a very pleasing, and, in the third act, a very sprightly performance. The roly-poly pudding making and leg of mutton roasting scene in the Crimean hut, interpreted by two such finished artists as Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft, was really irresistibly droll; and, although I fancy that I have seen the "Playing at Soldiers" episode before (in the sawdust of a circus, if I remember aright), the sprightliness, archness, and vivacity of the always delightful Mrs. Bancroft, and the grace and refinement of Mrs. Langtry, were to me the source of much comfort and joy. The first act I could not help thinking rather cold and dull. You will remember that Mr. Dombey Senior, passing his second honeymoon in Paris, made a similar complaint of the aspect of the gay Lutetia; and it may be that it is the present writer, and not the first act of "Ours," that is dull and cold. But the second act is full of dramatic vigour and bustle, and brightens one up wonderfully. Rarely, perhaps, has there been a more affecting piece of "staginess" than the departure of the invisible troops for the Crimea to the sound of drums and fifes, the cheering of the crowd, and the strains of "God Save the Queen." This triumphant display brought the curtain down on the second act amidst a display of tremendous enthusiasm on the part of the audience; and the scene, moreover, gave Mrs. Langtry the opportunity of exhibiting emotionally dramatic qualities which, as Miss Hardcastle in "She Stoops to Conquer," she had not been called upon to make manifest. The conclusion of "Ours," although everybody except the much-enduring Russian Prince Perovsky is made happy—although Blanche Haye marries Angus MacAlister, and Hugh Chalcot pairs off with Mary Netley, and Sir Alexander and Lady Shendryn are reconciled after their long and bitter estrangement, strikes me as being artistically somewhat lame and impotent, for the reason that it is quite within the domain of probability that on the very night of these happy proceedings Sir Alexander Shendryn and Angus MacAlister may get knocked on the head in the trenches, or captured in a Russian sortie, in which case Prince Perovsky would be no longer in "doleful dumps," but would be master of the situation in resuming his suit for the hand of Blanche Haye. Supposing some playwright were to attempt to dramatise Mr. Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," and that he were to make his drama conclude with the Duchess of Richmond's ball and the marching away of the troops to Quatre Bras. For aught that the audience could tell, it might be Rawdon Crawley or William Dobbin, and not George Osborne, who was destined, three nights afterwards, to be lying on the plateau of Mont St. Jean, dead, with a bullet through his heart. That would not be good art, I conceive. The end of a play should be like not a stage in, but the end of a journey; not the renewal, but the definitive taking up of a bill of exchange.

The Mary Netley of Mrs. Bancroft was, of course, altogether enchanting. It excited the admiration even of that immensely aged and tremendously-laden-with-experience philosopher, the dramatic critic of the Times, who was "laid on" to notice "Ours" instead of the gay and festive youth who wrote such wonderful things about Mrs. Langtry as Miss Hardcastle as to make even the white hairs of our venerable friend the Saturday Review to stand on end. Much of the dialogue in "Ours" either lacks point, or it has grown old-fashioned. Mrs. Bancroft is inimitable and unsurpassed in emphasis, in the art of putting things clearly and forcibly, and in bringing out all the brilliance which is latent in an apparently obscure utterance. When the Koh-i-noor was first exhibited in this country most people thought it a rather ugly and misty looking mass. But when the '51 World's Fair was over, some cunning lapidaries from Amsterdam took the Koh-i-noor in hand, and by skilful manipulation, while slightly reducing the great gem in size, brought out, in fullest glory, its unrivalled sparkle. Mrs. Bancroft is a dramatic lapidary; and it is only a pity that she cannot always find a Koh-i-noor that will bear cutting. Mr. Bancroft, as the seemingly cynical, but really manly and kind-hearted Hugh Chalcot, was very funny in the hut scene; but I liked him much better in his quiet and more sarcastic moods. Mr. Arthur Cecil looked and talked like a Russian gentleman in plain clothes, but failed altogether to remind me of a Russian general in full uniform. Mr. Pinero made a great deal of the henpecked and unjustly suspected Sir Alexander Shendryn; and Miss Le Thiere was a really admirable Lady Shendryn, notwithstanding the embarrassing circumstance peculiar to the "Robertsonian comedies" that some of the characters are frequently left on the stage without anything whatever to do while the other characters talk. Miss Le Thiere was often left sofa, "sitting celibate, like a fly in the heart of an apple." She would have been in better case had she been Queen Dido sitting at her palace gate; for she could at least have "darned her worsted hose," and "sighed as she drew the needle through." Mr. Conway made very good love as Angus MacAlister; Mr. C. Brookfield rendered very aptly the somewhat crude humours of that very much married man, Sergeant Jones; and Mr. Smedley was very graceful and earnest in the not overwhelming part of Captain Samprey.

To my mind, the Blanche Haye of Mrs. Langtry was a most charming performance. I liked her much better in Blanche than I had done in Miss Hardcastle, because I still obstinately persist in believing that she will discover ere long that her real forte is in the character of heroines of genteel comedy who do not travesty themselves as barmaids, and that through genteel comedy she will ascend to the highest rôles of the romantic drama. I unfeignedly believe that she will succeed, because in her every word, gesture, and movement, I see intelligence, perseverance, and volition. And I have faith in volition. I believe that by means of Strong Will a person not physically or mentally incapacitated for a particular pursuit will eventually succeed in the vocation to obtaining excellence in which he or she has set himself or herself with all his or her soul and strength. I do not believe in failure—accidents, of course, always excepted—in the case of those who work hard, indefatigably, and hopefully; and I know, myself, that but for Strong Will I should be at this day a most lamentable and ignominious failure. G. A. S.

WITH THE ROYAL BUCKHOUNDS.

The scene represented in a drawing by Mr. R. C. Woodville, which appears in our large Engraving, is a "Meet of the Royal Buckhounds;" and the Sketches that fill our front page set forth, in a playful humour, some of the incidents likely to occur among London sportsmen, who are not all equally skilful riders across country, though many of them are doubtless well up to the ordinary performances of the field. The nearness to town, within an hour's railway journey, of the usual places of meeting for the Queen's pack, in Berkshire and in Buckinghamshire, with the general supposition that this kind of chase does not exact such a critical display of bold and sharp riding as the crack sport of foxhunting, may probably tempt a greater number of second-rate equestrians, mounted on quiet horses which are scarcely accustomed to much leaping, into the train which follows her Majesty's buckhounds, under the direction of the Earl of Cork. It is, nevertheless, a dignified and somewhat aristocratic recreation, with a flavour of historical antiquity, like the Emperor Napoleon III.'s famous chasse in the Forest of Fontainebleau; and, while the animal that is pursued—not to be killed, but to be caught alive and replaced in the cart, to be hunted again another day—is one of the noblest beasts of ventry, the hounds, which are kept by Mr. Frank Goodall in the Ascot Heath Kennels, are among the finest of the canine species. A series of illustrations of those kennels was presented in this Journal two years ago. The deer, stags, and hinds, to the number of twenty or thirty couple, are preserved in the Swinley Plantation, near the Ascot side of Windsor Park. Some of the old ones have been hunted seven or eight years, and seem to understand it as well as the hounds do; their horns are cropped, to prevent their killing the dogs when they turn at bay.

THE MUSICAL WORKS OF THE PRINCE CONSORT.

These works have just been issued in a very handsome volume by Messrs. Metzler and Co., of Great Marlborough-street. We have previously drawn attention to the (then forthcoming) work, the publication of which we have now to notice. Few if any, readers will require to be told that Prince Albert was a man of many and varied accomplishments, among which, music was a favourite pursuit with him. He not only performed on the pianoforte and the organ, but had also a talent for composition, the evidences of which are offered by this volume, which has been brought out by permission of her Majesty. Its contents comprise forty pieces, consisting of solo and choral movements, secular and sacred, and closing with a melody for the violin; all with a pianoforte accompaniment. The vocal music is mostly to German text, in some instances (church services, anthem, &c.) to English words; and in one case, the "Invocazione all' Armonia," to Italian. The work is edited by Mr. W. G. Gusina, master of her Majesty's band, and forms an interesting proof of the intellectual and artistic recreations of the accomplished Prince whose life offered an honourable example to Royalty. The music, generally, is distinguished by that tone of earnest and serious thought that was characteristic of the mind of the illustrious composer.

Lord Derby has become a life member and vice-president of the National Health Society.

Our Portrait of the late Vice-Chancellor Sir Richard Malins is from a photograph by the London Stereoscopic Company, of Regent-street and Chancery; and that of the late Dr. James Edgewood, from one by Messrs. H. and R. Stiles, of Hammersmith-road and High-street, Kensington.

MUSIC.

THE CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

The performances of opera in English at Her Majesty's Theatre are maintained with the spirit and variety that have characterised the previous seasons of this company; indeed, the present series (the sixth) bids fair to surpass in interest those which have preceded it. As previously said, the scheme includes four operas of Wagner's, two of which—"Lohengrin" and "The Flying Dutchman"—have already been given, as noticed by us; repetitions of these and of "Rienzi" being promised, besides the production of "Tannhäuser" in English—the scheme also including the first hearing of English versions of Balfe's "Pittore e Duca" ("The Painter of Antwerp") and Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini." Balfe's opera was announced for this (Saturday) evening, and must therefore be noticed by us next week. The proceedings since our last record included the first and second appearances of Miss La Rue, who, as Lazarillo, in Wallace's "Maritana," made a highly favourable impression, although under the influence of considerable nervousness. Afterwards, as Frederic, in "Mignon," the young lady greatly enhanced her success. Her voice is of pure quality, her intonation and phrasing are good, her appearance is prepossessing, and her stage action anything but that of a novice, although she is young and inexperienced. Miss La Rue gave the music of the character now referred to with brightness of vocalisation and refinement of manner, and she will probably confirm her success in her promised appearance in the still more arduous part of Carmen. The performance of "Mignon" now alluded to included Mr. B. McGuckin's first assumption (in London) of the character of Wilhelm Meister, in which he obtained a well-deserved success. He sang the music—especially the farewell to Mignon in the first act, and the Romance in the last act—in excellent cantabile style; and was greatly applauded in those and other instances. Of the high merit of Miss Julia Gaylord's Mignon and Miss G. Burns's Filina, it is unnecessary to say more than that they were fully equal to former representations; Mr. Crotty's Lothario, Mr. G. H. Betjemann's Gurno, and Mr. C. Lyall's Lactes, having been as satisfactory as on previous occasions. The "Bohemian Girl," with a familiar cast, was given on Saturday evening. Mr. John Lew replaced Mr. Randegger on those occasions.

The first morning performance took place on Saturday, when "Lohengrin" was the opera. Repetition performances were announced for Monday and Tuesday, and Balfe's opera (as already said) for to-night (Saturday), having been postponed from Wednesday.

This week's Monday Popular Concert included the first performance here of an octet for stringed instruments by the Norwegian composer Johann Svendsen, of whose music we have had previous occasion to speak in terms of praise as being among the best of contemporary productions. The work now referred to consists of four divisions, each containing passages of interest, but all wrought out with a diffuseness and fragmentary effect that induce weariness before the close of a composition occupying nearly an hour in performance. There are occasional touches of northern romanticism that are interesting, particularly in the last movement, which is, in every respect, by far the best portion. It was excellently rendered by Herr Straus, MM. L. Ries, Wiener, A. Gibson, Hollander, Zerbin, Pezzé, and Piat. Mlle. Krebs, who was the pianist, played with much effect two of Mendelssohn's "lieder ohne worte" (adding a third for the encore), and one of the same composer's "Sieben charakterstücke." Miss Santley sang, with much refinement, Gounod's "Blanche colombe," Schubert's "Hark, hark, the lark," and Mr. Sullivan's "Orpheus with his lute." Other items of the programme call for no specific mention.

The Guildhall Orchestral Society gave a concert at the Mansion House on Saturday afternoon, when both the vocal and instrumental performances testified to the great progress made by the institution since its recent foundation. Mr. Weist Hill, conductor of the concerts, and Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, has proved his worthiness of each position by the excellent results already obtained.

The programme of the concert of the Borough of Hackney Choral Association, given at Shoreditch Townhall on Monday evening, comprised Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion," Schubert's "Song of Miriam," Schumann's "Requiem for Mignon," and other pieces.

Mr. Sims Reeves gave the first of his series of concerts of operatic, national, and miscellaneous music at St. James's Hall on Tuesday evening, when the eminent tenor sang, with his wonted fine artistic taste, "My Pretty Jane" and "The Bay of Biscay," although suffering from temporary throat ailment, for which an apology was made. His reception was enthusiastic. Madame Marie Roze, Mr. Herbert Reeves, and other well-known vocalists contributed to a varied programme, which included fine performances by the members of the Achromic Union, Mr. Lazarus (clarinet), Mr. H. Nicholson (hute), Mr. Malsch (oboe), Mr. Mann (horn), and Mr. Wotton (bassoon), with Mr. S. Naylor at the pianoforte. The second concert of the series is to take place on Feb. 7.

Burns's birthday was celebrated by attractive concerts, of a national character, at the Royal Albert Hall and St. James's Hall, on Wednesday evening.

The scheme of the seventieth season of the Philharmonic Society comprises some features of special interest, performances being promised of Rubinstein's "Paradise Lost," a choral ode by Brahms, and his new pianoforte concerto. Liszt's symphonic piece, "Hungaria," a new pianoforte concerto by Sgambati; and new orchestral works by Mr. F. Corder, Mr. C. V. Stanford; besides standard compositions of the great masters. The first concert takes place on Feb. 9, the dates of the others being Feb. 23, March 9 and 23, April 27, and May 11. Mr. W. G. Cousins holds the office of conductor, as heretofore, and the rule so beneficially established last season, of having at least two rehearsals for each concert, will again be followed.

The essential features of the programmes for this year's Birmingham Festival are already decided on. The performances open on Tuesday morning, Aug. 29, with "Elijah," the evening concert bringing forward Sir J. Benedict's new cantata, "Graziella." On the next morning Gounod's oratorio "The Redemption" will be produced for the first time. The work was specially commissioned for Birmingham, and is intended by the composer to be worthy of his great renown. The Wednesday evening's concert will include Mr. A. R. Gaul's cantata "The Holy City" and Mr. C. V. Stanford's orchestral serenade, both new works; another novelty, special to the festival, being Herr Gade's cantata "Psyche" to be produced at the Thursday evening's concert, on the morning of which day "The Messiah" will be given. On Friday Cherubini's Mass in C, Mozart's G minor symphony, Brahms's "Triumphlied," and Beethoven's "Mount of Olives" will be performed; and in the evening Gounod's oratorio will be repeated. The co-operation of Madame Albani in this work will be a feature in its performance.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

Paris, Tuesday, Jan. 24.

One of the toys of the New-Year's season, invented by some ingenious manufacturer au courant with the tendencies of the time, was "Le Stock-Exchange," further qualified as a "Jeu de Bourse pour grands et petits enfants." We are living in an age of progress indeed. In 1865 Monsieur Benoiton, in Sardou's famous comedy of Imperial manners, had not, it is true, reached such a degree of cynicism in the education of his worthy son, the precocious Fanfan; but still he had begun to open up the path. "Why did France," asks M. Benoiton, "linger so long in the embarrassments of military glory? Because our children were brought up to play with little leaden soldiers and little drums and little guns." In the education of Fanfan, M. Benoiton did not follow this method. No! He gave him, first of all, a little pair of scales, to teach him to weigh things well; a little telescope, to enable him to see a long way ahead; a little compass, so that he might always know which way the wind was blowing; and, finally, a little safe, in order that he might learn that order and economy are the essential bases of morality! The education of Fanfan was, perhaps, preferable to that fostered by such toys as "Le Stock-Exchange." Fanfan would have bought Rentes, but he would have avoided Union Générale like poison. The fabulous rise in this stock within the past year has turned many heads, and endless stories have been told about humble folk who were blacking boots one week and riding in their carriages the next. Thanks to the Conservative and clerical interests and influences to which the Union Générale owed its origin, and thanks to the confidence inspired by the report that the expelled Jesuits had put into it immense sums of money realised by the sale of their property in France, the shares of this bank tempted people who had never before thought of speculating. Cupidity was encouraged by religion and patriotism. Well, at last the bladder has burst. On Thursday there was a terrible panic on the Bourses of Paris and Lyons, and at the present moment hundreds of people are ruined and thousands have received a lesson that will, perhaps, teach them that steady industry is a surer road to fortune than speculation. The panic raged fiercely on Thursday and Friday; it appears, indeed, to have been for the moment one of the most violent on record, and it is certainly one of the most widely spread, for the frenzy of speculation had gained even the severe salons of the Faubourg Saint-Germain, and almost in every social gathering the argot of the Bourse had dethroned conversation. Now the panic is at an end, some big bankers have formed a syndicate to save the honour of the Paris market and to pocket the millions that financial power managers to glean even out of disaster. Union Générale shares, quoted 2399 before the panic, have fallen to 1000.

The political crisis has been almost as fertile in surprises as the panic on the Bourse. The words coup d'Etat have been pronounced, and M. Gambetta and his projects continue to occupy the gazetteers and the public. The Committee of thirty-three appointed by the Chamber to report upon M. Gambetta's proposition of revision finished their labours on Monday, and M. Andrieux read the report to the Chamber. The Committee declared it to be their opinion that the Congress was all-powerful, and that the Chambers could not limit the questions which it is to discuss. But the most curious part of the report was a direct attack upon the Government apropos of the Scrutin de Liste, and a severe personal reference to M. Gambetta, against whom the opposition is growing in solidity. The debate was fixed for Thursday, so that it is quite possible that by the time these lines are in print France may have another new Ministry.

But enough of politics and finance. Let us turn our attention to the things that help to make life agreeable—literature and art. The gaudy red cloth bindings of the New-Year books have at length disappeared from the shop-windows, and the smart yellow-covered volumes of fiction have once more made their appearance. Amongst the novelties must be noticed a new novel by Edmond de Goncourt, called "La Faustin," a study of womanhood and of modern Parisian life. La Faustin is a great actress, the leading tragicomienne of the Comédie-Française. In short, as far as the temperament and similarity of the woman are concerned, La Faustin is Rachel. The book is written with that exquisite delicacy and research of style and that curiously vivid and profound observation that characterise the work of the author of "Renée Maupérin" and "Manette Salomon." "La Faustin," both in style and in the treatment of the subject, has a certain distinction, an elegance, a surety and justness of touch that show a master's hand.

I have in a previous letter spoken of the great success that Kate Greenaway's picture-books have obtained in Paris. With the exception of Frère Lénfant de Metz, and other second-rate men, few French artists in modern times have been tempted by child-life. I note the fact in passing apropos of the first batch of a series of lithographs which M. Charles Serret has just had printed by Lemerac and Co., under the title of "Petites Filles et Bébés de France." M. Serret draws children's heads with singular charm. He is a real artist. Kate Greenaway seems to me to have but one note, and in all her work there is a certain affectation of mediævalism. M. Serret, in his lithographs, draws the modern child with more regard for the nature of the child than for oddities or prettinesses of costume. There is one of the lithographs representing three little folk overtaken by an April shower, a marvel of grace, and rendered with a perfect sentiment of child-life. These lithographs are in folio size, and in order to render them worthy to figure in the choicest collections only comparatively few copies have been printed.

The death of the art-critic and historian, Charles Blanc, has already been noticed in this journal. The blow for his brother, Louis Blanc, has been terrible. The affection that united these two men was well known; it has been immortalized in the "Corsican Brothers." There is, however, another legend, whose authenticity I will not guarantee, which illustrates this phenomenon. Charles Blanc, it must be stated, was a man of ordinary stature, while Louis is scarcely to be distinguished from a boy except by the sub-cutaneous wrinkles that line his face. Charles was two years younger than Louis, and the legend says that, being placed in a boarding-school where the food was not over abundant, Louis, as the elder brother, feeling it his duty to watch over his junior, used to give him half his rations; and so Charles waxed a fine man, while Louis remained stunted in his growth, and became, with Thiers, Napoleon, Julius Caesar, and Saint Paul, an example of the physical littleness of great men. For the past two years Louis Blanc has been suffering from an incurable malady. He was unable to follow his brother's funeral on foot, and now his condition has become so alarming that he has been removed from Paris into the country, where he lies in a dangerous state. Louis Blanc is now over seventy years of age.

T. C.

The subsidence of land in the Cheshire salt districts continues to excite considerable alarm.

THE COURT.

Her Majesty visited the Duchess of Connaught and Strathearn at Bagshot Park last Saturday. Leaving Osborne at half-past nine in the morning, the Queen crossed in the Alberta to Stokes Bay, where she travelled by special train on the South-Western Railway to Bagshot, where the Duke of Connaught met her Majesty at the station, and drove with her to his house. The Queen lunched, and returned by the same route to Trinity Pier, East Cowes, arriving at Osborne between five and six. Princess Beatrice passed the day with the Empress Eugénie at Osborne Cottage. Her Majesty and the Princess attended Divine service, as usual, performed at Osborne by the Hon. and Rev. Francis Byng, Vicar of South Kensington, who dined with the Queen the same day. The Royal dinner party on Monday included the Empress Eugénie, Princess Beatrice, Lady Abercromby, the Dowager Marchioness of Ely, Madame d'Arcos, the Duc de Bassano, Paron de Corvisart, Captain Thomson, Major-General Du Plat, and the Master of the Household; Mrs. Bigge and Mlle. Corvisart being invited to join the Royal circle in the drawing-room. On Tuesday the Empress Eugénie, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, visited the Royal Victoria Hospital, at Netley, having crossed over in her Majesty's yacht Alberta, Captain Thomson. The Marquis of Hartington, Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Sir Henry and the Hon. Lady Ponsonby and Captain and Mrs. Bigge have dined with her Majesty. The usual daily out-of-door exercise has been taken by the Queen, the Empress Eugénie frequently accompanying her Majesty and Princess Beatrice. Lady Abercromby has succeeded Lady Waterpark as Lady in Waiting.

Mr. William Patrick Andrew, of St. Bernard's, and of Charlesfield, Midlothian, has been knighted.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales have been entertaining a small party at Sandringham; the Prince of Leiningen and Viscount and Viscountess Sydney being of the guests. Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone were prevented accepting their Royal Highnesses' invitation. Among the amusements enjoyed by the Royal party were some good days' hunting; the last being with the West Norfolk hounds at Harpley. One evening Mr. J. L. Toole and his company gave a successful performance; the pieces played being the "Steeplechase," "Our Clerks," and "Ici on Parle Français." Mr. Toole and his company were subsequently entertained at supper, and the Prince, who was present, after drinking Mr. Toole's health and thanking him and his company for the pleasure they had given the Princess and his guests, complimented the manager upon the satisfactory carrying out of the arrangements in converting the bowling-saloon into a theatre. Their Royal Highnesses' party broke up last Saturday, when the Prince of Leiningen and the other guests left. The Prince and Princess, with their daughters, attended Divine service on Sunday at St. Mary Magdalene's Church, the Rector and the Dean of Westminster officiating. On Monday his Royal Highness went on a visit to Mr. Sykes, M.P., at Brantingham Thorpe, for a week's hunting and shooting. Tuesday was passed shooting through Lord Londesborough's covers, the Royal party having tea with Mrs. Wilson at Warter Priory.

Feb. 17 is appointed for the Honourable Artillery Company's ball, at which the Prince and Princess will be present.

The mails for her Majesty's ships Bacchante (on board which are the Prince's sons) and the Cleopatra are ordered to be sent to Suez, to care of her Britannic Majesty's Consul, via Brindisi.

The Duke of Edinburgh, on his visit to Inverness, inspected the Coastguard station and the Naval Reserve; formally opened the new Townhall, which has been erected at the cost of £12,000; lunched with the Provost at his residence; inspected the Brilliant training-ship; and, finally, received at the Townhall an address and the freedom of the city. Inverness was en fête, the inhabitants generally turning out to welcome the Royal visitor. In the evening the town and river were brilliant with illuminations, the Duke driving out to witness them. He left on a further tour of inspection—first to Wick, where he passed the night, yesterday week, at Ackershill Tower, the seat of Mr. Duff Dunbar, on Sinclair's Bay; and left the next morning by special train for Thurso, where he laid the foundation-stone of the Dunbar Hospital. After the naval inspection his Royal Highness returned to Wick, and subsequently went off in the Lively for the Orkneys, a gale being looked for. The Duke landed at Kirkwall on Sunday night; and the next morning, after making his inspection, received the freedom of the burgh. On Tuesday his Royal Highness landed at Lerwick, in the Shetlands, where some 400 of the Naval Reserve were drawn up in line between Fort Charlotte and the Custom House pier. Commander Lecocq conducted the Duke to the north gate of the fort, whence he proceeded to the parade-ground and inspected the Reserve, afterwards examining the armoury and buildings, and also laid the foundation-stone for a new Townhall; an enthusiastic reception was accorded him. The Lively left for Stornoway, a hearty welcome being given his Royal Highness at Lewis and at other stations where inspections have been made.

Princess Louise of Lorne distributed the gifts at the juvenile festival to the children of the Victoria Hospital for Children, Chelsea, a few days since, when a song of welcome to her Royal Highness, written for the occasion, was sung by the little inmates. An illuminated Christmas-tree, plentifully filled, was in each ward.

The convalescence of the Duchess of Connaught having so favourably advanced, and her infant daughter being well, the bulletin ceased last Saturday. The Duke of Connaught has been elected President of the Court of Governors of St. Thomas's Hospital.

The Duke of Albany is gazetted a Colonel in the Army.

The Empress of Austria starts for England on the 2nd prox., travelling via Calais and Dover.

Lieutenant-Colonel George Stanley Byng, assistant private secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, nephew of Viscount Torrington, was married to Alice Arabella, second daughter of Mr. James Jameson, of Airfield, in the county of Dublin, at St. Mary's Church, Donnybrook, on the 19th inst., by the Rev. Canon Ryder. Lord William Compton was best man.

The marriage of Mr. Charles W. L. Scott with Lady Agnes Tollemache is fixed to take place early next month; and that between Mr. Chandos Pole, Radbourne Hall, Derbyshire, and Miss Violet Denison, daughter of Mr. W. and the Hon. Mrs. Beckett Denison, will take place early in March.

Mr. D. R. Shearer, from Bradford Grammar School, has been elected to the vacant mathematical scholarship at New College, Oxford University.

The King of Italy has conferred the order of Commander of the Royal Order of the Crown of Italy upon Mr. R. Richardson-Gardner, M.P. This distinction has been conferred as a token of gratitude for the interest and care taken by him in behalf of the members of the Milan Blind Institution during the visit that they paid to London.

A MEET OF TH

FOX HOUNDS.
1892.

THE CHURCH.

PREFEMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Bathurst, William Jesse, to be Rector of St. John's, Horslydown.
Baumgartner, Henry Aigerson; Vicar of Nettlebed, Oxon.
Bennett, William, Vicar of Holy Trinity, Gt. Heath; Vicar of Stixwold.
Pond, George; Perpetual Curate of Farnworth.
Bowden-Smith, Frederick Hermann; Rector of Weston Patrick.
Bowring, Edgar F.; Perpetual Curate of Christ Church, Sharnley Green.
Burows, Leonard Francis; Rector of Linsington.
Bury, William; Rector of Harleston.
Cramer, H. G.; Curate of Great Gransden; Rector of Little Staughton.
Doughty, Thomas; Curate of Walditch, Dorset.
Edwards, David; Rector of Nash-cum-Upton, Pembroke.
Feuwick, J. B.; Rural Dean of South Division of Andover.
Finney, W. H.; Rector of Spexhall, Norfolk; Rector of Holy Trinity, Rusholme.
Garforth, J.; Rector of Holy Trinity, Rusholme; Rector of Spexhall, near Halesworth, Norfolk.
Hall, E. G.; Curate of St. Mark's, Hamilton-terrace; Vicar of St. Silas's, Pentonville.
Hamilton, George Henry Manners; Vicar of Tandridge.
Hargrove, Joseph; Rector of Silsoe.
Herber, Samuel Asher; Rector of North Lew and Ashbury.
Hilliard, E. S.; Assistant-Curate of St. Mary's, Reading; Organist, Secretary of the Additional Curates Society for the Metropolitan District.
Holhouse, Arthur Carsten; Vicar of Heilidon, Northamptonshire.
Horton, J. H.; Rector of West Heslerton.
Ireland, William Milton, Vicar of Holybourne; Vicar of Whaddon.
Jones, F. E. Lloyd, Chaplain of Newgate; Vicar of Holy Trinity, Halifax.
Kinglake, Frederick Charles; Rector of West Monkton.
Lush, Vicar-General; Incumbent of St. Peter's, Hamilton, and Archdeacon of the Waikato, New Zealand.
Maister, Archibald A.; Curate of Powerscourt-cum-West Milton, Dorset.
McDougall, F. T.; late Bishop of Labuan and Sarawak; Vicar of Milford.
Margesson, Reginald W.; Rector of Blendworth.
Mason, E. R.; Prebendary of Tachbrook in Lichfield Cathedral.
Mathews, Henry Staverton; Rural Dean of Alton.
Monteath, R. R.; Vicar of Studley St. John, North Wilts.
Nutt, B.; Chaplain of the Royal Isle of Wight Infirmary, Ryde.
Phillips, J. W. H.; Rector of Little Wymetham and Curate of Rushbrook.
Prescott, Isaac Philip, late Vicar of Priors Marston, Warwickshire, and for some time Rector of Willingale Doe and Shellow, Essex; Rector of Kelly, Devon.
Russell, Henry Patrick; Rector of St. Mary, Tavy.
Schmid, Theophilus F.; Curate of Fownhope; Vicar of Little Dewchurch.
Spanow, John Beridge; Rector of Algarth with Foadyke.
Stephenson, John Joseph; Vicar of St. Saviour's, Champion-hill.
Stringer, Thomas; Vicar of Christ Church, Portadown.
Terry, Stephen; Rector of Lusham.
Waller, George; Rector of St. John's, Stamford.
Warner, Charles; Prebendary of Moreton Magna, in Hereford Cathedral.
Wheeler, A. W.; Vicar of Christ Church, Sayers-common, Hurstpierpoint.

A gold repenter, which has cost nearly £70, has been bought, by a number of small subscriptions, for the Bishop of St. Albans, in order to replace that which had been stolen from his Lordship while he was staying last month at Cassiobury.

An elegant marble tablet has been erected in St. Chad's Church, Shrewsbury, to the memory of Major Geddes, 53rd Shropshire Regiment (who died Oct. 31, 1881), by the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of his company.

The annual pastoral of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol has been issued. Speaking of local and diocesan subjects, he recounts that ten churches have been built, or are in course of building, or of enlargement, or renovation, or improvement.

Yesterday week the foundation-stone of St. Barnabas Church, New Sutton, was laid by the Earl of Egmont. The portion of the church which is now being proceeded with, the chancel and the nave, is intended to accommodate about 300 persons, and will cost from £2500 to £2600. When wholly completed the church will hold 500 persons.

A tablet, in Carrara marble, was erected in the nave of Canterbury Cathedral on Tuesday, to perpetuate the memory of Lieutenant and Adjutant G. A. Colvill, Lieutenant T. F. C. Armstrong, Sergeant and Orderly Room-Clerk S. Julian, and twelve rank and file, who died while serving with the 1st Battalion 3rd East Kent Regiment (The Buffs) in the campaign in the Malay Peninsula; also in memory of Captain H. J. M. Williams, Lieutenant B. E. Mason, Second Lieutenant C. E. Mason, Second Lieutenant G. R. J. Evelyn, and twenty-seven rank and file, who fell while serving with the 2nd Battalion 3rd East Kent Regiment (The Buffs) in the Zulu war. The monument has been subscribed for by the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the regiment.

The Bishop of Durham has issued a pastoral letter on the co-operation of laymen in Church work. His Lordship has decided to license lay readers to work under the authority of parochial clergymen, with the object of enlisting the zeal of earnest laymen who either have independent means or are earning their livelihood by hand or brain, but are desirous of helping in Church work for love of that work without payment. The Bishop hopes that by this means parish priests may be able to check the tendency towards Congregationalism which appears to threaten a real danger to the Church of England. Clergymen in charge of populous or straggling parishes are tempted to concentrate time and energy on their congregations to the neglect of the wider interests of their parishes. His Lordship proposes to admit lay readers to their office by an appropriate service in his episcopal chapel or elsewhere, as most convenient.

The ancient Church of St. Nicholas, Stretton, was reopened on the 19th inst., after a careful restoration, at a cost of upwards of £1600, about £100 of which has yet to be collected. Mr. Fowler, of Louth, was the architect, and Mr. Halliday, of Greatham, the contractor. The sermon at the reopening was preached by the Archdeacon of Oakham, the prayers being read by the Rector, the Rev. Edward Bradley (who is known in the literary world as "Cuthbert Bede"). Four memorial windows, by Clayton and Bell, have been placed in the church. The expenses of the restoration have been chiefly defrayed by liberal subscriptions from Lord and Lady Aveland, Baroness Willoughby de Eresby, the Hon. Miss H. D. Willoughby, the Hon. Mrs. Tryon, Lord and Lady Francis Cecil, W. Cunliffe Brooks, M.P., Caroline Duchess Dowager of Cleveland, W. Hancocks, Miss Hancocks, H. P. Woodward, W. Bradley, and others. About £80 was collected at the reopening service, which was followed by a lunch, given by the Rector and Mrs. Bradley, in the school-room.

ART NOTES.

Mr. Henry Woods, painter, and Mr. G. F. Bodley, architect, have been elected Associates of the Royal Academy.

The Lord Mayor has granted the use of the Egyptian Hall on Feb. 28 next for a conversazione for the purpose of promoting the interests of the City of London Society of Artists, and exhibiting sketches and works of art to be balloted for among the Fellows and subscribers to the society.

The Sussex Advertiser announces that the Lord Lieutenant of Sussex, the Earl of Chichester, has consented to preside at the opening of the Lewes Fine-Art Exhibition on the 13th proximo. The Speaker apprehends that his presence will be required in the House of Commons.

Dr. Lyon Playfair, in distributing the Science and Art prizes in Glasgow, alluded to the fact that he was a fellow-student in Glasgow with David Livingstone, Sir Joseph Hooker, Sir Andrew Ramsay, of the Geological Survey, and other men who had risen to eminence.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

ITALY.

The Chamber of Deputies has adopted the Electoral Reform Bill, as amended by the Senate, without discussion.

GERMANY.

On the 20th inst. the Court festivities of the season were ushered in by the holding of a Chapter of the Black Eagle.

In yesterday week's sitting of the German Parliament Clause 1 of the Bill relative to the incorporation of Hamburg in the Zollverein was adopted, in accordance with the proposals of the committee, the House previously rejecting an amendment to this clause, moved by Herr Haenel, for the purpose of reserving the rights of the city of Hamburg. The discussion of the bill was continued next day. Clause 2, which authorises a grant of 40,000,000 marks from the Imperial funds to defray the expenses of the incorporation, was adopted by 171 votes against 102; and the remainder of the bill was agreed to without modification, together with the resolution moved by the committee.

In the German Parliament on Tuesday a debate took place on the Royal Rescript of the 4th inst. Prince Bismarck, in defending it, said that the formula, "The King reigns but does not govern," did not apply in Prussia, and was in contradiction with her institutions. In the Ministry the King commanded, and the Ministers obeyed. A tumult ensued, when the Prince said that no one could charge him with cowardice, and the uproar increased when, advancing towards the Extreme Left, he exclaimed in a loud voice: "The untruthfulness of your statements that I am a coward should make you blush to the roots of your hair." Professor Haenel, by whom the debate had been introduced, said he had made no allusion involving a charge of cowardice. He could only assume, therefore, that the Prince required such an assertion for the basis of his remarks, and had himself drawn that interpretation. Prince Bismarck replied that he could not accept the reproach. The accusation that he had sought the cover of the King's name in order to escape responsibility was a charge of cowardice. Correspondents in describing the scene say it was such as probably had never before been witnessed in the German Parliament.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The Education Committee of the Upper Chamber of Austria has reported in favour of radical modifications in the scheme for the Prague University. The alterations are altogether favourable to the German element, recommending among other things that all Czech students should, on entering the service of the State, pass an examination in German.

In the Upper House on Tuesday the Government presented a bill for amending some of the provisions of the Elementary Schools Law. The bill, in its preamble, declares that the object of elementary schools is to give religious and moral education; and it goes on to provide that, after completing their sixth year of schooling, children may, under certain circumstances, be partially relieved from further attendance. The House afterwards adopted provisionally the commercial convention with France.

On Monday, in the Lower House of the Hungarian Diet, M. Tisza, the Minister President, replied to the interpellation of M. Helty with regard to the disturbances in Southern Dalmatia. The Minister's statement was loudly applauded, and the House resolved to take formal note of his declarations.

RUSSIA.

The 19th inst. was the 10th of the Epiphany. The usual ceremony of blessing the water of the Neva in front of the Winter Palace was performed by the High Priest, in the presence of several members of the Imperial family. The Grand Duke Vladimir represented the Emperor on this occasion. Within the Palace all the military standards were sprinkled with holy water before a large number of officers.

The Golos reappeared on the 18th inst. after nearly six months' suspension, having been pardoned a week or two before the expiration of the penal term.

The boys who took part in the anti-Jewish riots in Warsaw have been severely flogged in the presence of the chief of police, their parents, and the representatives of the press. The older rioters will be tried by court-martial.

It appears from the report of the Relief Committee appointed after the recent outrages at Warsaw that the total number of victims was not less than 10,000, and of these the list of families completely ruined exceeds 900.

AMERICA.

Mr. Scoville concluded his arguments for the defence yesterday. Guiteau addressed the Court last Saturday from a seat in the witness-box. He contended that he was insane when he shot President Garfield. At one part of his speech he appeared to break down; he began to sob, and for a few seconds buried his face in his handkerchief. He soon recovered his composure, and with much effect gave a description of the circumstances attending his crime. He began the proceedings on Monday by saying that he was receiving hundreds of letters, many from ladies. He thanked the ladies of America for the many tender letters they had sent him. He also told Mr. Porter that if he misinterpreted the law he would interrupt freely. Mr. Porter, who was unwell, then began his closing address. Alluding to his physical infirmity as owing to his labour in the case, and referring to Guiteau's warning, he said that the whole trial had been conducted at the convenience of the prisoner and his counsel. He described the prisoner in strong language and analyzed his conduct. Guiteau occasionally interrupted him; and finally Mr. Scoville said that Mr. Porter was misrepresenting the testimony. This caused a controversy between the counsel. Mr. Porter spoke for three hours. Then, complaining of illness, his argument was suspended till Tuesday.

A strong feeling is being manifested throughout the country against the continuance of polygamy in Utah, and meetings in favour of its suppression have been held in several of the principal cities. The Judiciary Committee of the Senate has reported a bill for the suppression of polygamy, and depriving polygamists of their rights of citizenship.

The Legislature of Iowa have elected the Republican candidates, Messrs. James F. Wilson, and J. W. McDill, as United States Senators for that State.

The total number of immigrants who arrived in the United States last year is officially estimated at 719,000.

CANADA.

The Marquis of Lorne landed at Halifax on Saturday, after having had a stormy passage from England. He suffered but little from sea-sickness. A very large number of persons, including the principal civil and military officials, greeted his Excellency on his arrival, and a salute of nineteen guns was fired from the citadel. A guard of honour from the 19th Regiment escorted him to the residence of the Lieutenant-Governor. After dinner the Marquis left by special train for Ottawa.

The Provincial Council of Nova Scotia was opened at Halifax on Thursday week by the Hon. Adams G. Archibald, the Lieutenant-Governor, who, in his speech on the occasion, referred to the prosperous condition of the province.

The Legislature of British Columbia has been summoned to meet on the 23rd of next month.

AUSTRALIA.

Mr. Saul Samuel, C.M.G., the Agent-General for New South Wales, has received a telegram from Sydney notifying that the Government of New South Wales have issued a proclamation prohibiting the introduction of horned cattle and sheep, fodder and fittings, into the colony from any place other than the Australian and New Zealand colonies, cattle or sheep shipped prior to the notification excepted.

The Royal Society of New South Wales, whose official house is in Elizabeth-street, Sydney, have offered a series of eight prizes, of £25 each, for the best essays on subjects relating to the aborigines, the mineral wealth, botany, climate, agriculture, water supply, and so forth, of that country. The competition is not confined to members or to residents in Australia. Four of the series of papers are to be sent in not later than Sept. 30, 1882; the remainder by Aug. 31, 1883.

In a cricket-match between the English Eleven and Eleven of New South Wales, played at Sydney, the English team were victorious by sixty-eight runs.

INDIA.

A Chapter of the Star of India was held at Calcutta on Tuesday for the investiture of Sir James Gordon, Sir Lepel Griffin, and the Nawab of Bhawalpore.

The Earl of Ilchester and the Earl of Durham were present at a fancy ball given on the last day of 1881 by the Governor of Bombay. Lord and Lady Lawrence have been staying with the Lieutenant-Governor at Lahore.

SOUTH AFRICA.

The state of affairs in Basutoland is disquieting. The chief Masupha persists in his refusal to restore the cattle taken from the loyal Basutos. Letsea, the Basuto paramount chief, has occupied the famous stronghold Thaba Bosigo. It is believed that this has been the result of an arrangement with Masupha, who was in occupation.

M. Louis Blanc is seriously ill, and has been ordered by his physicians to leave Paris for the country.

Madame Montauban, widow of General Count de Palikao, of the Chinese Summer Palace celebrity, died on Monday, aged eighty.

Tuesday's Gazette announces that Mr. Arthur E. Havelock, C.M.G., Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the West Africa Settlements, is to be also her Majesty's Consul for the Republic of Liberia.

The Serbian Skuptschina was opened on Sunday by Prince Milan, who, in his speech from the Throne, referred to the cordial relations existing between the Principality and the European Powers, and spoke of the measures for internal reform to be shortly presented.

The Roumanian Senate and Chamber of Deputies re-assembled on Monday after the recess. M. Rosetti, the Minister of the Interior, announced in the Chamber that he had resigned office. M. Theodore Bratiano, the elder brother of M. John Bratiano, the Premier, died on Sunday.

Information has been received at Bombay confirming the rumour of a plot to assassinate the Prime Minister of Nepal. Twenty-one of the conspirators had been summarily executed. Fearing the outbreak of disturbances in Nepal, the British outposts at Segowlia had been strengthened.

Traces of Lieutenant De Long and his missing companions of the Jeannette have been found by searchers who have gone in an easterly direction from the mouth of the Lena. In places marked by cairns have been found a ship's log and several instruments, as well as some of the Lieutenant's letters.

The Gazette of Tuesday night contains the following:—The Queen has been pleased to appoint George Philippo, Esq. (Chief Justice of Gibraltar), to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the Colony of Hong-Kong; Hugh Riley Semper, Esq. (a Puisne Judge of the Colony of British Guiana), to be the Chief Justice of Gibraltar; and Francis Fleming, Esq. (Attorney-General of Barbados), to be a Puisne Judge of the Colony of British Guiana.

GARIBALDI.

Garibaldi once more, after twenty-two years, went over—er, rather, was taken—to Naples on Saturday last.

A description in the Daily News says:—"Garibaldi lies stretched in a half-sitting posture in an invalid chair, wrapped in a fawn-coloured mantle. Around him, in attitudes of evident solicitude, stand his wife, his sons, the physicians, and some young ladies. A parasol is held over his head, for the sun is hot. Little Manlio, whose golden locks, flowing down to his shoulders, are surmounted by a high-crowned, soft felt hat, looks about him with evident interest. Menotti advances and bows repeatedly in answer to the continued cheering. It is a short but all too noisy quarter of an hour for an invalid. He is about to be transferred from the steamer. We see the face of the aged hero—alas! more aged than the actual number of his years warrants. He lies immovable. He cannot turn his head. In his left hand he holds a white handkerchief, which he sometimes feebly moves in answer to the affectionate cheers. His countenance wears the waxen tint of confirmed sickness, and his eyes are cavernous. There is no sign of the emotion he must feel at again seeing Naples, returning as an invalid to seek health where he was once so strong a help. He is carried up the steps of the villa and disappears, while the cheering continues unceasingly. The Syndic, on welcoming Garibaldi in the name of the city of Naples, received the following reply:—"Naples is not only most beautiful, but also good and generous. I arrive here rather indisposed. I require rest and quiet. Pray tell the Neapolitans that I want no demonstrations, no visits, no visits at all—not even of my personal friends." He repeated these words, and to-day his wish is placarded everywhere."

It appears that, as soon as it was known that Garibaldi was worse than usual in health, the Esploratore, paddle-wheel despatch-boat, the fastest in the Italian navy, was sent to Capri, and physicians having advised his removal to Naples, this was carried out with every possible tenderness.

A consultation has been held by seven of the most eminent physicians of Naples, who all approved of the treatment adopted by Garibaldi's physician, and praised his courage in removing the General from Capri.

Mr. Gilbey, of Elsenham Hall, Essex, chairman of the Horse Show Committee, writes to say that through the aid of the press the committee appointed by the council of the English Cart-Horse Society, of which the Hon. Edward Coles is the president and the Earl of Powis is vice-president, have been successful in raising the necessary funds for the show to take place at the Agricultural Hall, London, on Feb. 28 and two following days. The list contains fourteen classes, with valuable money prizes; also three champion cups of the value of eighty guineas, including one cup given by the Lord Mayor of London. From the increasing interest taken in the old "shire-bred" English cart-horse, there is every prospect of a very large entry.

BEG!

FROM THE PICTURE BY E. K. JOHNSON, EXHIBITED IN MR. M'LEAN'S GALLERY, HAYMARKET.

THE COMING SESSION.

London looks less empty. No allusion is intended to the Fog, which has filled town with gloom for many a dull day, but to the sure signs that the end of the Recess is close at hand. Regent-street and a few other West-End thoroughfares are daily becoming more animated; the Clubs are less deserted; and the demand is increasing for the best places in the principal theatres. Besides, did not Mr. Gladstone and his leading colleagues on Tuesday quit their bright, salubrious country seats for sooty London, there to hold council together by the gaslight rendered indispensable?

Whilst the metropolis has complained of the blinding and choking mantle of Cimmerian darkness thrown over it (and, may be, has cried out, not without cause, in these days of scientific discoveries, when the Fairy Queen Electricity bids fair at length to shine in all her effulgence), the political outlook at home has not grown perceptibly clearer. Though Earl Granville, in inviting the Liberal peers to assemble on Feb. 7, thought it was sufficient to intimate that "important business will be proceeded with," the Prime Minister felt called upon, in requesting his followers to assemble on the same day in the House of Commons, to emphatically warn hon. members that "matters of pressing interest will at the earliest practicable date be submitted." These pressing matters—the most expedient way of dealing with Obstruction and the Bradlaugh difficulty—have, doubtless, engaged the attention of Ministers at the series of Cabinet Councils now being held in Downing-street. But the solutions offered outside this charmed circle differ as greatly as Liberals differ from Conservatives.

Good selections have been made in the persons of the Earl of Fingall and Lord Wenlock to respectively move and second the Address in the House of Lords. In the Lower House, the Premier's choice could not fall on a better new member than Lord Ebrington to discharge the graceful duty of paraphrasing with point the Queen's Speech.

Undue stress, it appears, was laid upon the simple fact that Mr. W. H. Smith had invited his colleagues in the late Cabinet "to meet Lord Salisbury and Sir Stafford Northcote"—named the second time in accordance with Sir Bernard Burke's table of precedence—on Feb. 4 at dinner. The Conservative Leaders in the Lords and Commons will, as usual, entertain their chief supporters at separate banquets on the eve of the Session; and will learn the heads of her Majesty's Speech as early as the Premier's lieutenants will.

Meantime, the unorthodox member for Northampton has announced to his congregation at the Hall of Science that he has duly received Mr. Gladstone's formal circular regarding the opening of the Session, and that "he intended to be in his place, if he could, on Feb. 7." No stronger inducement than this could be offered to ensure the attendance in their places of the Fourth Party, or rather, Party of Four, at least.

The smart and courageous, if flippant, Commander of this redoubtable Party of Four—to compare which with the "three tailors of Tooley-street" there is an irresistible temptation—has been stigmatised by Sir William Harcourt, in company with another active member of the quartet, as "the pea-shooters and pop-guns of Woodstock." The pellets Lord Randolph Churchill, Lord Lytton, and Sir Henry Drummond Wolff vigorously discharged at Woodstock, on the 19th inst., may have been found sufficiently stinging by the Home Secretary to justify this figure of speech. Be this as it may, the policy of the Government both at home and abroad was assailed with great vivacity by the late Viceroy of India and the two liveliest members of the Fourth Party, whose animation has certainly done something to relieve the speeches of the Recess and the Session from monotony and tedium, for which small mercy the Liberal Leaders do not, however, appear to be sufficiently grateful.

The Ministers whose public utterances call for passing notice have spoken without disclosing anything we did not know before. Wordy as ever, Mr. Childers at Pontefract on the 19th inst. succeeded in satisfying his constituents; but his complacent speech hardly served to restore confidence in the complicated Army system, which the Secretary for War is endeavouring to reform in a piecemeal and seemingly inadequate fashion. At Knottingley, the following evening, Mr. Childers repeated the Ministerial commonplaces with regard to the pacification of Ireland, and Obstruction in Parliament; and conveyed the scarcely novel news that bills dealing with County Government and Bankruptcy would probably be introduced in the coming Session. The Secretary for War made up for past neglect of the Volunteers at Sheffield on Saturday. Laudation of Ministerial intentions, and sweeping censure of Conservative criticisms, chiefly characterised the addresses which Sir Henry James and Sir William Harcourt delivered last Saturday, at Burton-on-Trent, on the not very apropos occasion of Mr. Bass's presentation of an Institute to the town. The proximity of the date, indeed, to the polling day for the North Riding election in all probability prompted the speakers to impart much of an electioneering tone to their speeches, and to animadvert with especial bitterness on Earl Grey's letter to the electors—who have returned the Conservative candidate after all.

Amusing has it been to contrast the confident ring of these Government speeches with the pointed attacks upon the Ministry, both with regard to what has been done in Ireland and in Afghanistan, by Mr. E. Stanhope at York, Mr. Gibson at Edinburgh, and Mr. James Lowther at Batley, on the 19th inst. Vary the language as they might, the same sentiment ran through each of these Conservative deliverances, which may be paraphrased in the old lines, save that the True Blue colours are held to be spotless:—

We have many faults, Lib'ls have but two:
There's nothing right they say, and nothing right they do!

Which sentiment was not by any means indorsed, we need hardly say, by the two zealous junior members of the Ministry who spoke on Monday and Tuesday—Mr. Trevelyan at Bury; and the Solicitor-General at the conference of the National Liberal Federation, held at Nottingham.

The thief who, in the month of September last, removed from the house of Mr. John Derby Allcroft, at Lancaster-gate, the well-known picture by Cooper of "The Monarch of the Meadows," has at length been traced. David Atkins, Camden Town, a dealer in secondhand books, was arrested on Monday night with the picture in his possession, and, after evidence of the identity of the work had been tendered at the Marylebone Police Court on Tuesday, Mr. De Rutzen ordered a remand.

The Duke of Manchester presided on Tuesday evening at the Royal Colonial Institute, when a paper on Natal was read by Mr. J. R. Saunders, who instanced facts to show that Sir Bartle Frere was in no way responsible for the Zulu war, and urged that the colonists might be safely trusted to govern the country and take care of the natives. Sir B. Pine, who had been recalled after quelling a rebellion, said he would leave his case to history; and Sir Bartle Frere, after saying that he would leave the past to be dealt with by the future, expressed the opinion that the colonist would treat the natives well, and ought to be trusted with the government of the territory.

The Extra Supplement.

"BEG!"

With a pretty, childish, feminine grace of pleasant wilfulness and caprice, that is delightfully natural, this young person, in Mr. E. K. Johnson's picture, at once tempts and defies the greedy pug-dog, her especial pet, to snatch a morsel of food which she holds on a level with her own head. She has a sweet little face; and the air of vigorous determination, both in her countenance and in her gesture, promises a fine development of womanhood some ten years hence, when she may have lovers, one or several, to be teased by playing with their feelings in a more indirect and diplomatic way. But the time is not yet come, for which, perhaps, in the unconscious exercise of a social prerogative of her sex, this girl is already most innocently practising and trying her hand. The four-footed follower, adoring his mistress, and grateful for every caress or kind word she will give him, still keeps an eager eye upon the main chance of a substantial gift, which he vainly hopes to get without the trouble of raising his fore-paws in the attitude of mimic supplication. She does quite right to teach him to "beg;" for it will be a pretty trick to make him perform in the drawing-room, to amuse her Mamma's visitors; and this accomplishment will add to his value in the esteem of the whole family.

IRELAND.

The Lord Lieutenant on Tuesday last received the Lord Mayor and Corporation of Dublin, who presented a memorial for the release of Mr. Parnell, M.P., and the other "suspects." His Excellency declined to enter into any discussion as to the wisdom of the Legislature in passing the Coercion Acts, or respecting the conduct of the Government, and intimated that in existing circumstances it was impossible for the Executive to comply with the prayer of the memorial.

Mr. Forster the same day received a deputation on the subject of the working of the Intermediate Education (Ireland) Act. It was admitted that the Act had proved a success; but it was explained that more money was wanted. The Chief Secretary, having remarked that the deputation would more appropriately have appealed to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, said that to yield to the request of the deputation would lead to the endowment of secondary as well as primary education in the three kingdoms; and to this he was opposed.

Messrs. Parnell, O'Kelly, and O'Brien, having completed their terms of imprisonment, have received formal notice of a further remand for three months. Miss Reynolds, a lady Land Leaguer, was yesterday week discharged from Cork Prison, her term of imprisonment having expired. Four lady Land Leaguers have been liberated from Limerick Jail. Miss M'Cormack, a lady Land Leaguer at Tulla, has been sent to prison for a month for refusing to find bail for her good behaviour.

The Marchioness of Queensberry has addressed a long letter to Irishmen strongly condemning the present agitation. She is especially severe on the lady Land Leaguers. "I am glad," she writes, "that the line is so clearly drawn between the 'ladies' and the women of Ireland. Woman's mission in society is a pure, a holy, and a regenerating one; and as an Irishwoman I rejoice that the women of Ireland leave the platform, the scenes of strife and outrage, to the undisputed possession of the 'ladies.' The latter, happily, do not seem to be very numerous, and though they may enjoy the patronage of Dr. Croke and Dr. Nulty, they succeed only in making much noise and bringing ridicule on themselves and their cause, whatever it is."

The Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin (Dr. McCabe) has issued a pastoral, in which he says that much has already been done to redress the long-standing wrongs of the Irish people, and that time and the power of honest public opinion will gradually but surely destroy the last vestige of unjust laws, and expresses a hope that the people may not listen to the open or secret abettors of violence or to the counsellors of extravagant expectations.

It is stated that there are now nearly 70,000 applications for the fixing of a fair rent entered in the Irish Land Court, and it is thought that several more Sub-Commissioners will be appointed. At present the total number of cases disposed of each week all over the country is only about 350.

A case containing 10,000 copies of United Ireland, intended for circulation in various parts of Ireland, was seized in Dublin on Saturday. It had arrived by steamer from Liverpool.

A conference of the tenant farmers of Ulster was held yesterday week at Belfast. Resolutions were passed in favour of an extension of the principles embodied in the Land Act in favour of the tenants. Among the speakers was Mr. C. Russell, M.P., who maintained that the judgment of the Chief Land Commissioners in the appeal on the previous Wednesday was in harmony with the intentions of the House of Commons. He expressed a hope that the Government would be able to throw open the prison gates.

Two further outrages, in each of which a process-server was the victim, are reported from Ireland. In one case death resulted, Thomas Abram having been fatally shot in his own dwelling at Graylagh on Sunday night, and in the other a man named Neligan was so beaten with sticks and stones, near Skibbereen, that his life was in danger.

A magazine belonging to Mr. Hogan, the Limerick agent under the Explosives Act, was broken into on Sunday night, and six hundred pounds weight of dynamite stolen. The store is near the Ballinacurry Police Barracks. Arrests have been made in connection with the robbery, and several more farmers have been lodged in prison under the Coercion Act.

The revelations of "Captain Moonlight" have caused some stir. Jeremiah and James Twohig, two of the thirty men arrested for the "Moonlight" raids near Cork, were tried in that city on Monday. Connell, the so-called "Captain Moonlight," who has turned informer, gave evidence, describing the plans for the attacks upon certain houses, and said he had been engaged in over twenty similar raids. He produced a copy of an oath which the members of the band took, and said that the orders for the midnight attacks were given in writing. Mr. Justice Fitzgerald said if Connell's evidence might be trusted Fenianism was rife in the country, and was carried on under the cloak of the Land League. The men were sentenced to seven years' penal servitude.

After this trial, it may be taken for granted that the informer in "Arrah-na-Pogue" will be received with particularly warm hooting on the revival of Mr. Boucicault's popular drama in Dublin next week.

There were 2629 births and 1700 deaths registered in London last week, the former having been 128 and the latter 139 below the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. Twenty deaths from smallpox were registered during the week.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.

Lieutenant-Colonel Robert Rintoul, late Major half-pay 16th Lancers, and formerly of the 4th Dragoon Guards, has been appointed Deputy-Lieutenant for the Tower Hamlets.

The Standing Orders of both Houses of Parliament were on Tuesday duly complied with in respect of the Central Metropolitan Railway Bill.

We learn from the Sussex Advertiser that it is now settled that the next show of the Royal Counties (Hants and Berks) Agricultural Society is to be held at Brighton next June.

The first general meeting of the London Chamber of Commerce was held (by permission of the Lord Mayor) in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House on Wednesday, Mr. C. Magniac, M.P., president, in the chair.

The Albert Medal of the second class has been conferred upon Frederick Jagers, a South Shields boatman. He had distinguished himself by gallant efforts to save life at two wrecks at South Shields in October and November last.

Another extensive robbery of jewellery is recorded, about £1000 worth of valuables having been stolen on Monday night from the trap of a wholesale jeweller which was standing outside the shop of a customer in Tottenham-court-road.

Thomas Butler, the pointsman whose unfortunate error led to the disastrous collision at the Desford Junction in October last, was tried at the Leicester Assizes on Tuesday for manslaughter, and acquitted.

A billiard-match for a stake of £1000 was finished on the 19th inst., John Roberts beating Cook by 1658 points in a game of 5000 up. Several marvellously good breaks were made by the winner.

The Postmaster-General has, it is stated, decided to introduce a bill into Parliament next Session to raise the minimum annual savings bank deposit for any one person from £30 to £100, and the total deposit from £150 to £300.

Acceding to the request conveyed in an influentially-signed memorial, the Lord Mayor has convened a public meeting next Wednesday, in the Mansion House, to give expression to opinion respecting the persecution of Jews in Russia.

A new Townhall was opened at Penny Stratford on Monday. The event was celebrated by a public dinner, at which Sir Philip Duncombe, of Brickhill Manor, presided. The event was further commemorated by a dinner to the poor and aged.

Mr. Joseph Fardale, Chief of Police, Leicester, has been appointed Chief Constable of Birmingham, in the place of Major Bond. There were ninety-two applications, the appointment being worth £700 per annum.

Lord Lytton on Tuesday opened a free public library at St. Albans, and in the course of his remarks drew attention to the benefits which were to be gained by a study of its contents, with especial reference to the literature of imagination.

The building which has lately been erected in the London Hospital grounds for the accommodation of the students was formally opened on Tuesday by Mr. W. J. Thompson, the chairman of the College Board.

The combined Leicestershire Hunt Ball is to take place at the County Assembly Rooms, at Leicester, on Feb. 9, under the patronage of the Duke of Rutland, Earl Ferrers, and the masters of the other five packs hunting within the county, viz.:—The Atherstone, Billesden, Cottesmore, Pychley, and Quorn. The gathering is expected to be most brilliant.

The Lord Mayor presided yesterday week over a meeting of the executive committee of the Mansion House Fund for the Defence of Property in Ireland. A report from the commissioner, Mr. Kavanagh, M.P., was submitted, in which an outline was given of the recent successful efforts of the association to defeat the machinations of the Land League for the prevention of the payment of rent. The defence fund amounts to £17,000.

The annual meeting of the South Wales Institute of Engineers was held at Cardiff on the 19th inst. Mr. Edward Williams, of Middlesbrough, was elected President for the ensuing year. A discussion took place on a paper by Mr. Thomas Canning, giving an account of experiments upon coal-mines. The writer attributed several explosions, including that at Risca in 1880, when 120 lives were lost, to lightning, and suggested as a remedy the use of conductors.

A large company of ladies and gentlemen, amongst whom were Sir Henry Peck, M.P., and Lady Peck, Sir Trevor Lawrence, M.P., and most of the principal inhabitants of the district, assembled on Tuesday evening in the new Townhall at Wandsworth for the purpose of assisting at its inauguration. The building, which is situated at the east end of High-street, and has been executed from the designs of Mr. G. Patrick, is in the Renaissance style. The task of formally opening the building was performed by Sir Henry Peck in an appropriate speech, after which the company were entertained with a concert, under the direction of Mr. R. Sparke Distin.

Sir E. Watkin, M.P., presiding at the half-yearly meeting of the South-Eastern Railway, referred to the works in connection with the Channel Tunnel, and to the formation of an independent company for carrying out the experiments. It had been agreed that the Channel Tunnel Company should give the South-Eastern £20,000 of fully-paid-up shares, besides covering the expense of the foreshore and the necessary land works, so that the shareholding interest of the railway company in the tunnel would be secured without any risk. Sir Edward Watkin, accompanied by Sir Garnet Wolseley and several of the directors of the South Eastern Railway Company, paid a visit last Saturday to the Channel Tunnel works. The party was understood to be perfectly satisfied with the progress the work is making.

Mr. G. W. P. Bentinck, M.P. for West Norfolk, has, in consequence of the depressed condition of agriculture, made a return of 20 per cent on the rents of his tenants. He has also, as has been his custom for several years past, given £200 for the purchase of warm clothing and coals for the poor of Marshland, a district in which he holds extensive property. Mr. Henry Chaplin, M.P., has returned to his tenants on the Blankney estate 10 per cent on their rents for the past half year; and to the tenants on the Louth and Tathwell estates, who have suffered more seriously, 29 per cent, besides returns to a considerable amount in special cases.—Captain Jarvis, Doddington Hall, Lincoln, has returned 10 per cent to his Lincolnshire and Nottinghamshire tenants on their half-year's rents.

Mr. Bourke, M.P., yesterday week explained to a large meeting of Turkish bondholders the arrangement he has made in their interest at Constantinople. A resolution was at once submitted approving of the scheme, and thanking Mr. Bourke. This was supported by a representative of the Belgian bondholders. Mr. Nelson, chairman of the committee of holders of Nine per Cent Treasury Bonds, criticised the arrangement, and moved an amendment disapproving of it, and appointing a committee to devise a new scheme. This was supported on a show of hands by only four persons, and the original motion was declared to have been carried unanimously.

FUNERAL PROCESSION OF THE LATE EMPRESS OF CHINA.

FROM SKETCHES BY MRS. ALBERT E. PIRKIS, BRITISH LEGATION, PEKIN.—SEE PAGE 86.

1. Sedan Chair containing Sacred Tablet for the Temple of Ancestors. 2. Imperial Umbrella. 3. Mounted Spearmen. 4. Soldiers. 5. Policemen, with whips, to keep back the crowd.

THE LATE DR. JAMES EDGCOME.

THE LATE DR. EDGCOME.

Dr. James Edgcome, who died at Upper Norwood on the 10th inst., was born at Penryn on March 17, 1806, and was educated at Truro Grammar School. He became eventually a student at Guy's Hospital, and was a pupil of the late Sir Astley Cooper, the eminent surgeon. He became an L.S.A. in 1827, and M.R.S.C. in 1828; and was surgical prizeman and gold medallist of his year. After going through the medical schools in Paris he settled in the North of England, and practised for many years in Newcastle-on-Tyne. While there he devoted special attention to the various outbreaks of cholera which occurred in England during the first half of the present century, and in 1831 was appointed Government Commissioner to inquire into the first appearance of that epidemic in Sunderland. He subsequently graduated as Doctor of Medicine at St. Andrew's University, and for the last twenty years resided in London, where he had a considerable consulting practice. He was a large contributor to the medical literature of his time, and was especially known as an able speaker, a terse and vigorous writer, and a brilliant conversationalist.

THE LATE VICE-CHANCELLOR SIR R. MALINS.

THE LATE SIR RICHARD MALINS.

The death of this esteemed lawyer, a retired Vice-Chancellor, and sometime member of the House of Commons, was recently announced. Sir Richard Malins was born at Evesham in 1805, the third son of the late Mr. William Malins, of Ailston, Warwickshire, and Mary, eldest daughter of Mr. Thomas Hunter, of Pershore, Worcestershire. He was educated at Caius College, Cambridge, and graduated in 1827 in mathematical honours, being sixth junior optime in the same tripos in which Professor de Morgan and Mr. Baron Cleasby were wranglers, and Professor B. H. Kennedy was a senior classic. He entered at the Inner Temple in 1825, before leaving Cambridge, but was not called by the Honourable Society till 1830. From the first Mr. Malins sought practice as a conveyancer, having chambers in Fig Tree-court, Temple, afterwards in New-square, Lincoln's-inn, and in Stone-buildings, Lincoln's-inn. His business as an equity draftsman ultimately took an extensive development, which justified him in assuming the silk gown in 1849, and in the same year he finally adopted Lincoln's-inn as his own inn, being admitted (ad eundem) a barrister, and immediately afterwards a bencher of that society. In July, 1852, he was first returned for Wallingford, in the Conservative interest; he was re-elected in March, 1857, but lost his seat at the general election in July, 1865. In December of that year he succeeded Sir R. T. Kindersley in the post of Vice-Chancellor, and was knighted in the following month. He retired from the Bench a few months ago. Sir Richard married, in 1831, Susanna, eldest daughter of the late Rev. Arthur Farwell.

DISCOVERY OF FOSSIL REMAINS AT LEGHORN.

We have received from Lieutenant-Colonel H. Robley, of the Sutherland and Argyll Highlanders, two sketches to illustrate an interesting geological discovery made on Dec. 20 at Leghorn, in Tuscany. This took place at the docks of Messrs. Orlando Brothers, who are building the Lepanto, Italian iron-clad (a sister ship to the Duilio), as shown on the slips, with a steamer parallel to her ready for launching. In digging the channel for the latter purpose many huge bones were found by the workmen excavating; then some enormous cylindrical pieces were found, and these were not carefully removed, as they were supposed to be part of a pine tree embedded in the mud. Soon afterwards they found two huge molar teeth, in perfect preservation; more pieces of bone, and then another fragment of a tusk, which was very difficult to extricate. The sketch shows the excavation made to draw out the long tusk. This was at a depth of about twelve feet under the level of the sea, the strata being formed first by a sea deposit, then by what is called here "Panchina;" further down blueish-grey clay, yellow sand, peat, and shells; some of the shells being of very rare species. The tusk is almost certainly identified as belonging to the Elephas antiquus, of the quaternary period, of which it is rare to find samples in perfect preservation. Its dimensions were ascertained as follows:—Length of tusk, as it is, 11 ft. 6 in.; weight, 3 cwt.; diameter, 1 foot. The exterior colour is reddish brown; the ivory when cut is very pale and soapy. The tusk has a very slight curvature, and was supposed at first to be that of a mastodon; but all indications point to its belonging to the Elephas antiquus, or meridionalis, probably to the first-named, as it is larger than any specimen yet found. The molars are very heavy. It is supposed that these remains were carried down by some stream in prehistoric times; for, as yet, other parts have not been discovered. The eminent geologist, Professor Meneghini, Rector of the University at Pisa, has examined these remains, and attaches the greatest importance to this discovery of the quaternary period.

DISCOVERY OF FOSSIL REMAINS AT LEGHORN, TUSCANY.

FUNERAL OF A CHINESE EMPRESS.

We have to thank a lady correspondent at Pekin, Mrs. Albert Pirks, of the British Legation there, for the sketches of the ceremonial procession attending the funeral of the deceased "Empress of the East," Tung-tai-hou, one of the two Dowager Empresses who were Regents during the minority of the present Emperor of China. The proper official name of this Imperial lady, who was forty-five years of age when she died, was Hsiao-Hsiao-cheng-hsien-hwang-hou. Mrs. Pirks writes us the following account of the funeral, which took place early in November:—"Before the tomb was closed on her mortal remains enshrined in their magnificent coffin, the tablet which had been prepared for the Temple of Ancestors was brought to be inscribed. The Viceroy, Li-hung-chang, wrote the Chinese inscription; and the Chief Secretary, Pau-chien, wrote the Man-chu inscription of the deceased's name. Just before the door of the tomb is closed for ever, it is supposed the soul of the deceased imparts some of its life to the tablets in presence of the coffin. By the writing of the name (it is thought) is also conveyed an influence which would subsequently render the tablet a genuine representative of the dead in its place in the Temple of Ancestors. It was conveyed back to Pekin with this idea, in a long procession of high officials and various attendants, which arrived outside the east gate of the city on Nov. 12. The Emperor went out to meet it and returned the same day; but the tablet remained outside the city walls until the 13th. The road through the eastern part of the city was prepared, as for the Emperor, by levelling and by spreading yellow earth, and banners were placed at intervals, and matting and blue cloth put up where any streets crossed, to guard the tablet from the view of the people. A notice had been sent to all the Legations requesting all foreigners to refrain from going into the streets through which the procession would pass in going to and returning from the Tung-ling, or Eastern Imperial Tombs. It seemed quite impossible to get a chance of seeing it from a shop window, or for a lady to venture in the streets, which were cleared and guarded by soldiers. Finding, however, that the tablet would pass over the Pei-yu-ho-chiao, a bridge within sight of the extreme north-east corner of the British Legation, we mounted to the roof of a cow-house at dawn of day, and, after waiting patiently till nearly ten o'clock, we were rewarded by a sight of the procession.

"First came a number of officials in their Sedan chairs, each with a large mounted retinue, all hurrying to the palace; then a number of mounted military mandarins acting as escort, in Court dress, with the usual heraldic embroidery. Then, in complete silence, came the Imperial umbrella, flag, and sedan-chair (containing the tablet), all of a most lovely yellow satin. The chair was carried by eight bearers, in crimson dresses with yellow spots; it was followed by more mandarins, and by a very effective troop of spearmen, wearing yellow jackets with black sleeves, and carrying long lances. On arriving at the Temple of Ancestors, which is within the principal south gate of the palace, on the east side, the tablet was met by some of the Ministers of State and the Princes. It was placed by a member of the Imperial family near the tablet of the Emperor Hsien-feng, on the east side, in the shrine prepared for it. Opposite to it, on the west, is the spot where the tablet of the present Empress Regent will be placed after her death. Both will in this way share in the sacrifices which are offered to all the Emperors twice a year and on other special occasions, when announcements are made of events important to the Imperial family, accompanied by the prescribed offerings."

EDUCATION.

Resolutions in favour of the Public Libraries Act were adopted at a crowded public meeting held at Twickenham on Monday evening and attended by representatives of all classes.

The Grammar School at Crewkerne, founded in 1499 by John de Combe, has been rebuilt at considerable cost, and has this week been formally reopened by the Bishop of Bath and Wells, Lord Bridport, as Warden of the School, attending on the occasion. The contractor was Mr. Trevena, of Plymouth.

A lecture was given at the Bedford College, York-place, on the 18th inst., at the beginning of Lent Term, by Mr. James C. Morison, to a large audience. The subject of the lecture was the higher education of women, considered in relation to women's rights and women's duties.

Highbury Athenæum, a handsome stone building in the Italian style of architecture, intended for concerts, entertainments, and public meetings, was formally opened on Monday night. An inauguration conversation, numerous and fashionably attended, was held in the great hall. The proceedings opened with an address by the chairman, Mr. Charles Horsley, C.E., F.G.S. The musical portion of the programme consisted of selections, vocal and instrumental, from the works of Hérold, Mendelssohn, Bizet, Bishop, Haydn, Sullivan, and other popular composers.

The industrial school scandal was further discussed at the London School Board on Thursday week. A letter from Mr. Scrutton, stating that he intended to bring the matter before a law court, was referred to the special committee of inquiry, with an instruction to suspend further proceedings pending the result of the action. In the course of the debate it was mentioned that Mr. Scrutton had commenced an action for libel against Miss Helen Taylor. The estimates for the year were presented, showing that £679,595 will be required. The debate on the proposed sale of the training-ship Shattisbury was resumed and concluded. The proposal was rejected by a large majority.

THE NORTH RIDING ELECTION.

The contest for the Parliamentary representation of the North Riding of Yorkshire has during the past fortnight been watched by all politicians in England with a great deal of eager interest. The nomination took place at York, on Thursday last week, when the Hon. Cuthbert Guy Darnley (Conservative), of Baldersby Park, Thirsk, was nominated by Sir William Worsley, and seconded by Sir Frederick Milner. Mr. Samuel Rowlandson (Liberal), farmer, of Newton Morrell, was proposed by the Right Hon. John Charles Dundas, and seconded by Mr. Thomas Gill. Both candidates afterwards addressed large meetings in the cattle market of York; but meetings of their respective partisans have been held from day to day, through two or three weeks of canvassing and public discussion, in many of the market towns. The North Riding is of great extent, nearly a hundred miles across from west to east; and, while the moorland districts are very thinly and sparsely peopled, the constituency includes Middlesbrough-on-Tees, South Stockton, and the Cleveland iron and coal district. There are, in all, about 20,000 electors on the register, comprising a variety of classes; but the appeal on both sides, in the present instance, seems to have been addressed more particularly to the agriculturists. Mr. Rowlandson, who is a small landowner, but renting a thousand acres near Richmond, under two landlords, stood up for the claims of the tenant farmers of this country to reforms in the laws regarding compensation for improvements of an estate, with security for tenants' capital so invested, and abolition of the power of distraining for rent; as well as control over local taxation by the establishment of elective County Boards, and other measures advocated by the Liberal party. On the other hand, Mr. Guy Darnley, brother of Lord Downe, a considerable North Yorkshire landowner, aided by the Right Hon. James Lowther, M.P., the Hon. E. Stanhope, M.P., Mr. G. Lane Fox, and other leading Conservatives, denounced the principles of the "Farmers' Alliance," as injurious to the agricultural tenant not less than unjust to the proprietor of the soil. The North Yorkshire rural interest being chiefly pastoral, nothing could be gained there by talking of the reimposition of a small fixed duty on foreign corn; and Mr. Lowther's recent suggestion to that effect seems to have done the Conservatives more harm than good. Several great landed proprietors and peers, the Earl of Zetland, Lord Wharfedale, Earl Grey, Lord Bolton, and Lord Downe, having expressed their favourable inclination to the Conservative candidate, or their dislike of the present Liberal Government, the influence of feudal and aristocratic connections was on the side of Mr. Darnley. The Liberal cause was actively maintained among the middle and working classes, both in the rural districts, the dales of the moorland country, and in the industrial towns of the Lower Tees. Mr. Bolckow, the great ironmaster of Middlesbrough, Mr. Joseph Pease, of Darlington, Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., Sir H. Meysey-Thompson, Mr. Isaac Lothian Bell, Mr. George Howard, M.P. for East Cumberland, Mr. Milbank, M.P. for the North Riding, Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P., and other distinguished Liberals of the North of England, have spared no cost or personal efforts to carry this election. Several of the wealthy men of both parties, Lord Zetland, Mr. Green Howard, and Mr. Bolckow made contributions of £1000, and many others gave £500, to the expenses of the contest, while hundreds of private carriages were lent for the conveyance of voters. The Liberal colour was yellow, the Conservative was blue; and there was a profuse display of these colours in flags and garlands, and in the ribbons and rosettes worn by enthusiastic partisans, both men and women. The polling in the several districts took place on Tuesday last. The result was declared at York Castle on Wednesday afternoon, as follows—Darnley, 8135; Rowlandson, 7749. The Hon. Guy Darnley is therefore elected, by a majority of 386 votes.

BENEVOLENT OBJECTS.

The Duke of Connaught has fixed Feb. 15 for the dinner, at the Freemasons' Tavern, on behalf of the Royal Association in Aid of the Deaf and Dumb, Oxford-street.

Prince Leopold (Duke of Albany) will preside at the sixty-seventh anniversary festival of the Royal Caledonian Asylum, which will take place at the Freemasons' Tavern on Feb. 23.

Lady John Manners, who takes a warm interest in the temperance movement, assisted at the opening of the Dysart Coffee Tavern in the Market-place at Grantham on Wednesday.

Under the presidency of Lord Leigh, the annual meeting of the supporters of the Midland Counties Hospital for Incurables has been held at Leamington. The report, which was unanimously adopted, states that all the debt has been liquidated, and that there is a balance remaining of £138. There are twenty patients in the home, of whom five are entirely free, the remainder contributing from half a guinea to a guinea per week.

At a meeting on Monday of ladies and gentlemen connected with the operations of the Charity Organisation Society it was agreed, after some discussion, that a special committee on convalescent work should undertake the duty of making arrangements for the boarding out in the country of children in a delicate state of health. It was also resolved that further hospital accommodation was needed for men and boys of the better class, and for consumptive and infectious cases.—On the same day the Home Secretary made a non-political speech, the occasion being the annual meeting of the Derby Charity Organisation Society, the purpose and operations of which he warmly commended. He said that charity was one of the greatest of human graces, but, like other things, it was capable of being abused, and when it ran to waste it produced more evils than it cured. It was the object of these organisations to direct charity into the proper channels, in order that, like a beneficent stream, it might fertilise and not destroy.

At the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street, on Monday morning, the annual meeting of the governors of and subscribers to the London Orphan Asylum, as well as the election of candidates to its benefits, was held. Mr. Arthur Haddon Capel (treasurer) occupied the chair. In the report submitted by the board of management, and which was read and adopted, it was stated that the asylum has been sixty-eight years in existence. During the year ninety children were admitted to the benefits of the home: of these eighty were admitted by election, eight by purchase, and two by presentation. In the course of the year ninety-seven children left. With those that day elected there are 535 under the protection of the asylum. Satisfactory reference was made to the educational status of the children. Contained in the document, amongst other pleasing statements, was the following:—"The demand for boys and girls from the institution to fill suitable situations on leaving is as large as ever."

The building fund of the Leicester-square Soup Kitchen and Refuge has reached £506. Two of the subscribers have promised £50 each. The amount required to rebuild the premises, which are very old and unsafe, is about £2000. The building will be proceeded with this summer if £1000 should be forthcoming by the end of March. The refuge will be enlarged to do more work of a permanent character. This institution may fairly claim to be not only the original soup-kitchen but also the father of the Shoeblack Brigades, as in 1847 it started men cleaning boots in the streets, permission having been obtained from Sir Richard Mayne for them to be allowed to do so. It was visited in 1848 by the Prince Consort, who commended its utility and economy, and gave a generous donation. Its first general report, of 214 pages, was largely distributed throughout the country and aroused public attention to the condition of the poor at that period; and it has for thirty-five years furnished succour and timely aid to the varying wants of the needy. Last year 165,000 meals were given and 115 tons of coals.

CENTENARY OF THE PHOENIX FIRE OFFICE.

In this era of Thrift and Providence, the Centenary of one of our foremost Insurance Societies is an event well worthy of comment. The recent fatal fire in London, and the extensive conflagrations of late in Glasgow, Bristol, and other commercial centres have only too forcibly reminded us of the risks the community daily runs from one element of danger only. In the metropolis we confide in our fire brigade, with its fifty principal stations and its 500 men, involving an annual expenditure in money approaching £100,000 (of which the fire offices contribute about a fourth), and of water no less than twenty millions of gallons; yet here in London we have from 1500 to 2000 fires every year. Fresh in our recollection still is the great fire in Tooley-street, at which Braidwood, the valuable superintendent of the Fire Brigade, lost his life, and the fire-offices lost from £2,000,000 to £3,000,000. Thus the world has warning of what fire can effect; while, on the other hand, it is encouraged by seeing what fire-offices can do. The usefulness of such institutions is apparent enough, and had its witnesses before we were born. By one company, in 1807, £200,000 was paid for loss by a fire which occurred in the island of St. Thomas, West Indies. In 1842, by the same company, £216,000 was paid to recoup the claimants of the Hamburg fire of that year; and again, in 1846, the same company discharged its obligations caused by the fire at St. John's, Newfoundland, amounting to £114,500. More recently we find the same company bearing its share of the Tooley-street fire, amounting to £130,000, of the Chicago fire nearly £100,000, and of the Boston fire £50,000. We have spoken generally of fire insurance, but have, in conclusion, adverted to the experience of one well-known and successful company—the Phoenix. This company it was which, in 1791, suffered by the great fire in Ratcliffe, and which involved it in a greater loss than had previously fallen on any fire-office. It was apprehended by some that such a commercial venture as the Phoenix then was would flinch from further contact with the flames. Far from being dismayed by this event, however, its proprietors were stimulated to fresh contributions; and from the occurrence of this conflagration dates the remarkable prosperity of this company, which revived, as from its ashes, invigorated and improved. It is this Phoenix Fire Insurance Company, which, at the close of a hundred years, after paying upwards of £13,000,000 in losses and satisfactory dividends to its proprietors, has just celebrated its centenary, and survives to afford protection from the flames that fostered its growth.

THE WEATHER.

RESULTS OF METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS AT THE NEW OBSERVATORY OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY.

Lat. 51° 28' 6" N.; Long. 0° 18' 47" W. Height above Sea, 34 feet.

DAY.	DAILY MEANS OF				THERMOM.		WIND.		General Direction.	Rain in 24 hours.	Rain in 10 a.m. to next morning.
	Barometer Corrected.	Temperature of the Air.	Dew Point.	Relative Humidity.	Amount of Cloud.	Maximum, read at 10 p.m.	Minimum, read at 10 p.m.
Jan. 15	30.085	41.0	37.8	90	10	43.1	38.0	SSW.	120	0.010
16	30.046	39.6	35.5	86	10	47.0	37.9	SSW.	99	0.000
17	30.002	32.6	31.7	97	10	39.0	32.0	SSW. W.	110	0.010
18	30.017	32.0	31.3	98	10	37.8	29.9	W.S.W.	71	0.005
19	30.047	36.9	35.5	95	10	39.5	32.4	WNW. S.W. S.	63	0.000
20	30.071	36.8	34.2	88	10	41.3	36.1	S. S.W. W.S.W.	74	0.000
21	30.086	36.5	32.5	87	4	41.5	32.3	N.W. N. W. S.W.	69	0.000

The following are the readings of the meteorological instruments for the above days, in order, at ten o'clock a.m.:

Barometer (in inches) corrected	30.045	30.033	30.013	30.041	30.009	30.032	30.031
Temperature of Air	37.7	32.0	31.6	31.6	31.2	30.9	30.1
Temperature of Evaporation	38.0	41.2	31.9	31.4	35.0	30.0	31.7
Direction of Wind	SSW.	SSW.	SSW.	W.	WNW.	SSW.	W.S.W.

SUN FIRE and LIFE OFFICES, Threadneedle-street.

E.C. 1, Charing-cross, S.W.; Oxford-street (corner of Vere-street), W.
FIRE.—Established 1710. Home and Foreign Insurances at moderate rates.
LIFE.—Established 1810. Specially low rates for young lives. Immediate settlement of claims.

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS.

Assurance Against Railway Accidents Alone. Assurance Against Fatal Accidents at Sea. Assurance of Employers' Liability. Railway Passengers' Assurance Company. The Right Hon. Lord KILGARRIE, Chairman. £1,700,000 has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 61, Cornhill, or 8, Grand Hotel-buildings, Charing-cross, London.

W. J. VIAN, Secretary.

WHAT IS YOUR CREST and WHAT IS YOUR MOTTO?

Send name and county to CULLETON'S Heraldic Office, Plain Sketch, 25, 6d.; Colours, 7s. The arms of man and wife blended. Crest engraved on seals, rings, books, and steel dies, 8s. 6d. Gold seal, with crest, 28s. Solid gold ring, 18-carat, Hall-marked, with crest, 42s. Manual of Heraldry, 60 engravings, 2s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn-street (corner of St. Martin's-lane).

CULLETON'S GUINEA BOX OF STATIONERY

contains a Ream of the very best Paper and 500 Envelopes, all stamped in the most elegant way with Crest and Motto, Monogram, or Address, and the engraving of Steel Die included. Sent to any part for P.O. order.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn-street (corner of St. Martin's-lane).

VISITING CARDS by CULLETON.—Fifty best quality,

2s. 6d. post-free, including the Engraving of Copper Plate. Wedding Cards, 50 each, 50 Embossed Envelopes, with Maiden Name, 13s. 6d.
T. CULLETON, Seal Engraver, 25, Cranbourn-street, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

FOR ARMS and CREST send Name County to T.

MORING, Inns of Court Heraldic Offices, 323, High Holborn, W.C. Plain Sketch, 3s. 6d.; Coloured, 7s. 6d. Seals, Dies, and Diplomas. Illustrated Price-List post-free.

VITREMANIE, superseding Diaphanie. An easy and inexpensive method of decorating windows in churches, public buildings, and private houses, by which may be produced the rich colouring and beautiful designs equal in appearance to real stained glass. Handbook of Designs and full instructions, 1s. 1d. Boxes, comprising designs, &c., at 21s., 31s. 6d., 42s. Particulars post-free. Sole inventors, J. BARNARD and SON, 233 (late 329), Oxford-street, London, W.

CHROMOPHOTOGRAPHY—(KRAUS' PROCESS).

The New Art enabling any person (without previous knowledge of either Painting or Drawing) to Colour Photographs on convex glasses, in imitation of China and Enamel Painting. Boxes containing every requisite, 2s. and 2s. 6d. Particulars post-free. Specimens shown on application at the Sole Agents, J. BARNARD and SON, 233, Oxford-street, London, W.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S STEEL PENS.

PARIS GOLD MEDAL.

SCRAPS for SCREENS and SCRAP-BOOKS, Coloured.

Immense variety of Flowers, Figures, Birds, and Landscapes, from 1s. per sheet; one doz. assorted, 10s. 6d.—WILLIAM BARNARD, 115, Edgware-road, London.

LARGE HOUSE (Ten Bed-rooms) and GROUNDS

WANTED, in KENT. Neighbourhood of Chesham, Ebbwasi, Kewton, Haydon Common, or Bromley preferred.—Direct, J. S., 132, Highbury New Park, N.

NEW MUSIC.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW DANCE

MUSIC.
Nearest and Dearest Waltz ..	D'Albert.
Patience Waltz and Quadrille ..	D'Albert.
Patience Lancers and Polka ..	D'Albert.
Olivette Waltz and Quadrille ..	D'Albert.
Olivette Lancers and Polka ..	D'Albert.
Drink, Popsy, Drink, Polka ..	D'Albert.
Venetia Waltz ..	Caroline Lowthian.
Je "Aime Vale ..	Waldteufel.
Mother Hubbard Polka ..	Caroline Lowthian.
The Dado Polka ..	A. Beck.

Price 2s. each net.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW SONGS.

The Jovial Beggar ..	Mrs. Arthur Goodere.
What shall I say? ..	Tully.
Gates of the West ..	Caroline Lowthian.
Shepherdess Song ..	Alice Borton.
When all the world is young ..	Alice Borton.
Soft, soft wind from out the ..	Alice Borton.
sweet South ..	Alice Borton.
Margaret to Dolcino, and ..	Alice Borton.
Dolcino to Margaret ..	Alice Borton.
The Reason Why ..	F. Cowen.
In youth's season ..	Gounod.
My Beloved ..	Pinsuti.
In the twilight of Spring ..	Sullivan.
(Drawing-room version of "Silver ..	"d is the raven
hair," from "Patience.") ..
Two's the best of company ..	Miss A. M. Wakefield.
When the heart is far away ..	Miss A. M. Wakefield.

Price 2s. each net.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW PIANOFORTE

PIECES.
Janatha ..	Monnet Musical .. 2s. 6d. net.
Janatha ..	Valse Brillante .. 2s. 6d. net.
Janatha ..	Gavotte .. 2s. 6d. net.
Lord Duppil ..	Gavotte .. 2s. 6d. net.
Jules de Sival ..	Handelian Dance .. 2s. 6d. net.
Cotford Dick ..	Echoes of the Hunt (Fantasia on Whyte-Melville's Hunting Song) .. 2s. 6d. net.
Smallwood ..	Allegretto à la Rigodon .. 1s. 6d. net.

WHYTE-MELVILLE'S HUNTING

A RUM ONE TO FOLLOW, A BAD ONE TO BEAT. E. R. TERRY. 2s. net.
THE GOOD GREY MARE. THEO. MARZIALS. 2s. net.
THE GALLANT SQUIRE. E. R. TERRY. 2s. net.
THE CLIPPER THAT STANDS IN THE STALL AT THE TOP. J. L. MATTON. 2s. net.
DRINK, PUPPY, DRINK. 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street; and 15, Poultry.

ECHOES OF THE HUNT. A Transcription.

for the Pianoforte of Whyte-Melville's Hunting Song. "Drink, Puppy, Drink." "The Clipper that stands in the stall at the top." and "The Gallant Squire." By COTSFORD DICK. Price 2s. net.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street; and 15, Poultry.

PATIENCE. An Aesthetic Opera. By

W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN. Now being performed at the Savoy Theatre with enormous success.
Libretto .. 1s.
Vocal Score .. 2s.
Pianoforte Solo .. 3s.

All the following sent post-free for half price.

PIANOFORTE ARRANGEMENTS.

Boyton Smith's Fantasia ..	4 0
Ditto, Duet ..	5 0
Kune's Fantasia ..	4 0
Smallwood's Easy Fantasia ..	3 0
Prod. Godfrey's Grand Selection. (As played by all the ..	4 0
Military Bands) ..	4 0
Ditto, as a Duet ..	4 0

CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street; and 15, Poultry, E.C.

MRS. L. MONCRIEFF'S NEW SONGS.

"T'WAS ONLY A YEAR AGO, LOVE. A CREOLE LOVE SONG. THOUGHTS AT SUNRISE." Price 2s. each net.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street, W.; and 15, Poultry, E.C.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S THREE-YEAR'S

SYSTEM OF HIRE OF PIANOFORTES, HARMONIUMS, AND AMERICAN ORGANS, by which the instrument becomes the property of the Hired at the end of the third year, provided each quarter's hire shall have been regularly paid in advance. Pianofortes, from 3s. Harmoniums, from 5s. 6d.; and American Organs, from 5s. 6d. a Quarter.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S PIANINOS, from

30 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S YACHT PIANINOS,

with folding keyboards, from 50 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S IRON-FRAMED

COTTAGE PIANOFORTES for Ocean Steamers and Extreme Climates, from 35 to 65 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S Early English

PIANOFORTES, artistically designed Ebonyed Cases, from 45 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S Iron Double

Overstrung PIANOFORTES, Check Actions, &c., from 60 guineas.

CHICKERING PIANOFORTES, from

120 guineas, with American discount.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ALEXANDRE

HARMONIUMS, for Church, Schools, or Drawing-Rooms, from 6 to 150 guineas; or, on the Three-Years' System, from 5s. 6d. per quarter.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S IMPROVED

AMERICAN ORGANS, combining Pipes with Reeds, Manufactured by Clough and Warren, Detroit, U.S.A. A large variety on view from 15 to 200 guineas. Price-Lists on application to CHAPPELL and CO.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S PET ORGAN,

Seven Stops, including Sub-bass and Octave Coupler. Elegant Carved Walnut Case. 18 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S Favourite

ORGAN. Five octaves, ten stops, four sets of reeds, two knee swells, elegant carved Canadian Walnut case, price 25 guineas. With thirteen stops, octave coupler, and two knee pedals, 30 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S NEW STYLE

VICTORIA CASE. Twelve stops, five sets of reeds, sub-bass and Octave Coupler. 37 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S CENTENNIAL

GRAND ORGAN, 15 Stops, 9 Sets of Reeds, and Combination Tubes, 85 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S PIPE and REED

ORGAN, Style 119. Organ Pipe Front, handsomely diapered, seventeen stops, thirteen sets of reeds. 135 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S GRAND

ORGAN MODEL. Two claviars, two and a half octave of pedals, twenty-three stops, seventeen sets of reeds, elegant diapered pipes, solid walnut case. 225 guineas. The most perfect American organ manufactured. Illustrated List free.

INSTRUMENTS by ALL MAKERS may be

HIRED or PURCHASED on the Three-Years' System. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street. City Branch, 15, Poultry, E.C.

A LARGE DISCOUNT TO PURCHASERS

FOR CASH.

CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street. City Branch, 15, Poultry, E.C.

NEW MUSIC.

CAVALIER SONGS. By C. VILLIERS

STANFORD. Words by Robert Browning.
1. MARCHING ALONG.
2. KING CHARLES.
3. BOOT, SADDLE, TO HORSE AND AWAY.
Price 2s. each net.—Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

MRS. MONCRIEFF'S NEW SONGS.

MY HEART IS LIKE A SINGING BIRD.
O! SWALLOW, SWALLOW!
Price 2s. each net.—Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

OLD IRISH MELODIES. Arranged by

C. VILLIERS STANFORD. The Words by Alfred I. Graves. Sung with the greatest success at the Ballad Concerts.
Price 2s. each net.—Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

THE FOGGY DEW. Sung by Mr. Edward Lloyd.

FATHER O'FLYNN. Sung by Mr. Santley.
A SAILOR LAD. Sung by Miss Mary Davies.
T'WAS PRETTY TO BE IN BALLINDEERY. Sung by Mrs. Hutchinson.

MAUD V. WHITE'S NEW SONGS.

TO ALTHEA IN PRISON. Sung by Mr. Santley.
OPHELIA'S SONG. Sung by Miss Mary Davies.
Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

ZAVERTAL ROCOCO. MUSICAL

SKETCH A LA GAVOTTE, for Pianoforte. Price 1s. 6d. net.—Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

BOOSEY'S SHILLING ALBUMS for

PIANOFORTE. In the "Musical Cabinet."
212. BOOSEY'S MARCH ALBUM. (36 Marches.)
203. 210. 213. RUBINSTEIN'S THREE ALBUMS. (26 pieces.)
206. RUBINSTEIN'S SIX STUDIES.
207. RUBINSTEIN'S SIX PRELUDES.
214. ROBERT SCHUMANN'S ALBUMBLATTER. (20 pieces.)
209. BACH'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM. (13 pieces.)
204. BRAHMS' PIANOFORTE ALBUM. (4 pieces.)
190. FIELD'S NOCTURNE ALBUM. (10 Nocturnes.)
114. BEETHOVEN'S WALTZ ALBUM. (45 Waltzes.)
117. CHOPIN'S WALTZES, complete.
143. CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS, complete.
171. CHOPIN'S NOCTURNES, complete.
80. STEPHEN HELLER'S TWELVE SHORT PIECES.
85. HELLER'S PROMENADES D'UNE SOLITAIRE.
161. HELLER'S PETIT ALBUM. (10 pieces.)
100. SCHUMANN'S KINDERSCENEN, &c.
118. SCHUMANN'S FIRST ALBUM FOR YOUTH.
120. SCHUMANN'S SECOND ALBUM FOR YOUTH.
180. SCHUMANN'S THIRD ALBUM FOR YOUTH. (Ballads.)
23. OVERTURES (1st book), including Figaro, Fra Diavolo, Crown Diamonds, William Tell, Freischütz, Zampa.
21. OVERTURES (2nd book), including Macbeth, Oberon, Gazza Ladra, Buryanthe.
Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

NEW CANTATAS for AMATEURS.

HAMILTON TIGHE, by GEORGE FOX: the words from "Ingolish Legends," with solos for Soprano and Bass occupying twenty minutes in performance. 1s. THE SONG OF THE MONTHS, cantata for mixed voices, by FRANCIS HOWELL. In 1st number the solo 2s. 6d. net. 2nd number the solo of THE ROSE MAIDEN, Cantata, by F. H. COWEN, 2s. 6d. net.
Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

NEW NUMBERS OF THE CHORALIST.

Price 1d. each. Grief, Prize Madrigal, Mair; Bridal Chorus, Cowen; Song of Peace, Sullivan; The Hop-pickers, Philip; The Jovial Beggars, Montgomery; The Little Drummer, Kappay; Love me little, love me long, Montgomery.
Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

SIXPENNY CHORAL BOOKS. Edited

by the Rev. C. S. BARE.
A GARLAND OF SONGS. (48 pieces.)
THE CHILDREN'S CHORAL BOOK. (44 pieces.)
THE GOLDEN HARVEST. (12 early Part-Songs.)
THE CHILDREN'S VOCAL HANDBOOK. (Instructions in Part-Singing.)
Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S SHILLING

PIANOFORTE TUTOR. 40 pages, music size. 100th Thousand.

BOOSEY and CO.'S MARCH ALBUM, containing 36 celebrated Marches. 64 pages. Price 1s.

THE CAVENDISH MUSIC BOOKS.

Each containing 32 pages of music, full size, price 1s. 4d. are now published. A list of contents gratis.
Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

THE ROYAL SONG BOOKS, containing nearly 2000 Songs of all countries and composers, in 22 volumes. Price 2s. 6d. each, paper covers; 4s. cloth, gilt edges. List of contents gratis.—Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S NEW SONGS.

FATHER O'FLYNN. Sung by Santley.
GIPSY JOHN. By F. CLAY. Sung by Santley.
THE OLD BARGE. By BEHREND.
THE OLD BARGE. Sung by Madame Patey, Madame Fassett, and Miss Damian.
LEAVING YET LOVING. By MARZIALS.
THE MILLER AND THE MAID. By MARZIALS. Sung by Miss Mary Davies.
WHISPERS. By S. ADAMS. Sung by Edward Lloyd.
THE LITTLE HERO. By S. ADAMS. Sung by Maybrick.
THE LONG AVENUE. By MOLLOY. Sung by Antoinette Sterling.
GREAT GRANDMOTHER. By MOLLOY. Sung by Madame Sherrington.
2s. each net.—Boosey and Co., 235, Regent-street.

AUNTIE. Weatherly and BEHREND.

Sung by Madame Patey. Immensely popular. 2s. net.
PATEY and WILLIS, 39, Great Marlborough-street, London, W.

THE LOVE CHASE. MICHAEL

WATSON.
"One of the best hunting songs ever written."—Review.
Compass, D to E. 2s. net.
PATEY and WILLIS, 39, Great Marlborough-street, London, W.

A WINTER STORY. MICHAEL

WATSON.
Sung with the greatest success by Madame Patey.
In E Flat, F, and G. 2s. net.
PATEY and WILLIS, 39, Great Marlborough-street, London, W.

'T'WAS ONLY A YEAR AGO, LOVE.

By Whyte-Melville and LEONARD BARNES.
"A remarkably pretty song set to charming music."—Sporting and Dramatic News. In A flat, B flat, and C. 2s. net.
PATEY and WILLIS, 39, Great Marlborough-street, London, W.

FIDELITÉ. Valse. GEORGES LAMOTHE.

On Gatty's popular song. "True till death." 2s. net.
PATEY and WILLIS, 39, Great Marlborough-street, London, W.

ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST.

G. A. MACFARREN'S ORATORIO. This celebrated Work is published in the Tonic Sol-Fa Notation, as well as in the usual form. All applications for its performance to be made to the Publishers. Orchestral Parts can be had on Hire. Chorus Parts—Soprano and Alto, 7d. each; Tenor and Bass, 1s. Full Score, One Guinea; Vocal Score, B flat, bound, 2s. net.
STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER, and Co., 54, New Bond-street, W.

AUGENER and CO.'S CIRCULATING

MUSIC LIBRARY, to which is added Lonsdale's Library, is the largest in Europe. Annual subscription two guineas. One guinea returned at end of subscription. See Prospectus.
81, Regent-street, London.

TO SCHOOLS.—Suitable selection parcels of MUSIC are sent out on approval, with liberal discount, on receipt of good London reference. Catalogues gratis.—AUGENER and Co., School Department, 86, Newgate-street.

NEW MUSIC.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS' LIST OF NEW

AND POPULAR MUSIC.

FAITHFUL FOR EVERMORE. A

BALLAD. Price 2s. net. M.S.
Do you remember the wild, weird music
Sung by the waves on the shore?
Do you remember the old brave promises,
Faithful for evermore?
Verse by Mary Mark Lemon; Music by SUCHET CHAMPION.

THE CHILD'S LETTER TO HEAVEN.

Song. C. and S.
Words by Frank W. Green; Music by W. C. LEVEY.
A most effective song for both drawing-room and concert-hall.
Price 2s. net.

NEW DRAWING-ROOM DITTY.

MORE THAN ONE (High Baritone or Tenor). Price 2s. net. Words by Henry S. Leigh; Music by HAMILTON CLARK.

GOOD SONGS FOR CHRISTMAS-TIME.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS; or, Memories of the Cradle. "A comic ditty commenting on the numerous virtues of Emma Jane." Written and composed by HENRY S. LEIGH. Net 1s. 6d.

WINTER EVERGREENS

(Messa-Soprano or Baritone). Price 2s. net. Words by Carpenter. Music by GLOVER.

IN DAYS OF OLD (Baritone).

Price 1s. 6d. net.
Words by Bellamy; Music by J. L. HATTON.

GOOD DANCE MUSIC FOR CHRISTMAS-TIME.

POLKAS.
THE FLIRT .. DARWIN .. 3s.
FIRST KISS .. FARMER .. 3s.
ROSE OF THE VALLEY .. FARMER .. 3s.

VALES.

SUZANNE .. GRENVILLE .. 4s.
BILLYE TAYLOR .. GODFREY .. 4s.
FIRST LOVE .. FARMER .. 4s.

QUADRILLES.

BILLYE TAYLOR .. COOTE .. 4s.
CHRISTMAS .. FARMER .. 3s.
LITTLE FAIRIES .. FARMER .. 3s.

NEW POLKA. NEW POLKA.

A TON BRAS. By T. RIEFFLER.
This capital Polka, now the rage in Paris, has been purchased by J. Williams. English Edition now ready, post-free, 1s. stamp.

THE GOOD YOUNG MAN WHO DIED.

An Aesthetic Lay. Words by H. P. Stephens; Music by E. SOLOMON. Post-free, 2s. stamp.
May be sung in public without fee by all singers.

SUNG BY ARTHUR ROBERTS.

YOU OUGHT TO KNOW BETTER
THAN THAT. Words, Sidney Grandy; Music, E. SOLOMON. Post-free, 2s. stamp.
"He's a dark grey moustache, he was dressed very dash,
And he wore a tall chimney pot hat.
A middle-aged man. Oh! for shame, Mary Ann,
You ought to know better than that."
May be sung in public, by all singers, without fee.

CIRO PINSUTI'S SONGS.

DREAMS, ONLY DREAMS .. M.S. net 2 0
FAIRER THAN MORNIN' .. S. & M.S. 1 6
I LOVE MY LOVE .. S. & M.S. 2 0
LOVE WILL SHINE ALL THROUGH .. C. 2 0
MAIDEN'S FLOWER SONG .. M.S. 1 6
THE OWL (Sung by Mr. Santley) .. Bar. 2 0
THE RAFT (Sung by Big Foli) .. D. 2 0
WHAT WE HAVE LOVED WE LOVE
FOR EVER .. M.S. 1 6
WILT THOU BE MINE .. Bar. 1 6

J. L. MOLLOY'S SONGS.

LITTLE MAID OF CHINA .. M.S. net 4 0
THE BIRD AND THE CROSS .. M.S. 2 0
TOLD IN THE TWILIGHT .. C. 2 0
BECAUSE I DO .. M.S. 2 0

TO CHORAL SOCIETIES, &c.

New Cantatas by GEORGE FOX.
JOHN GILPIN .. 2s. 6d. net.
THE MESSENGER DOVE .. 2s. 6d.
Note.—A liberal discount allowed on a number of copies.

WESTMINSTER BELLS (A Reverie).

Pianoforte Solo. By CH. TOURVILLE. Post-free, 18 stamps. "A charming morceau, in which the celebrated tones of 'Big Ben' are cleverly and artistically reproduced."

HENRY FARMER.

THE VIOLIN STUDENT (Viola and Pianoforte). No. 1. Largo .. Handel.
2. Gavotte .. Rameau.
3. Slumber Song .. Schumann.
4. Stray Thought .. Schumann.
5. Andantino .. Schubert.
6. Minuet .. Boccherini.
1s. 6d. net each number.
London: JOSEPH WILLIAMS, 34, Berners-street, W.; and 123, Cheapside, E.C.

STANDARD TEXT-BOOKS.—MUSIC.

Rockstro's Harmony. 2s. West's Hints to Teachers. 1s.
Rockstro's History of Music. 2s. Hamilton's Singing. 2s. 6d.
Pinsuti's Daily Vocal Exercises. 1s. 6d.
Hamilton's Tutor. 2s.
Hamilton's Harmony and Thorough Bass. 1s.
Pinsuti's Hints on Singing. 1s.
Payment as above received in postage-stamps.
London: ROBERT COCKS and Co., New Burlington-street.

VIOLIN MUSIC.

Amateurs seeking a large and varied list of good Classical and Standard Music will find a valuable selection in ROBERT COCKS and Co.'S THEMATIC CATALOGUE of violin music. 50 pages. Post-free.—London: 6, New Burlington-street.

FLUTE MUSIC.

A CATALOGUE OF FLUTE SOLOS.
Flute and Piano.
Flute and Violin.
Flute and Cello Music.
Trios for Flute, Violin, and Cello, &c.
Duets for Two Flutes.
Trios for Three Flutes.
28 pages, gratis and post-free.
Published by ROBERT COCKS and Co.

CLASSICS FOR YOUNG PIANISTS

(Edited by F. LEMOINE).
1. Tema. Extract (Mozart). 4. Choral Fantasia (Beethoven).
2. Marcia alla Turca (Beethoven). 5. Hush, ye Pretty, hoven).
3. Rondo all' Ongarese (Haydn). 6. Tema con Var., from Septett (Beethoven).
Each post-free for 18 stamps.
London: ROBERT COCKS and Co.

THE SILVER WEDDING LANCERS.

Just published.
Composed by J. L. GOODWIN.
A thoroughly original and clever net.
Post-free for 24 stamps.
London: ROBERT COCKS and Co., New Burlington-street.

THE EASIEST PIANOFORTE TUTOR EVER PUBLISHED.

DE LORME'S A B C INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE PIANO. The rudimental explanations are given in a very simple form, and in a series of short stages. Everything necessary for the pupil to learn will be found intelligible to the youngest capacity. Price 2s. net.
DUFF and STRAWAT, 2, Hanover-street, W.

PLAYED WITH GREAT SUCCESS at the Prince of Wales's Theatre.

THE SWING POLKA. By ALBERT ROSENBERG. The Twelfth Edition of this celebrated polka is now ready. To prevent mistakes and disappointments, orders should specify "Rosenberg's Swing Polka." 2s. net.
DUFF and STRAWAT, 2, Hanover-street, W.

NEW MUSIC.

THE COLLECTED COMPOSITIONS

Just published.
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT, comprising

SONGS, INVOCATION TO HARMONY, THE DEUM,
CHORALES, &c.

Edited by W. G. CUSINS,
Her Majesty's Master of Musicks.

Elegantly bound in cloth.
Price One Guinea.

METZLER and CO.,

35, 37, and 39, Great Marlborough-street;
26, 27, 28, and 29, Marshall-street, Regent-street, London, W.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

METZLER and CO.'S NEW LIST.

Violins, Flutes, Guitars, Musical Boxes, Cornets, Zithers, Toy Instruments for Toy Symphonies, Digitiums, Brass Instruments for Military School Bands, &c.

MASON and HAMLIN ORGANS.

Prices from 2 to 200 guineas. New Model, two complete sets of reeds, 17 guineas. Organ used by Mr. Sankoy, 50 guineas.

MASON and HAMLIN ORGANS.

The List Organ, the only American Organ made combining great power and pipe-like quality of tone, price

ELECTION SKETCHES IN THE NORTH RIDING.—SEE PAGE 86

ROYAL VISIT TO SHETLAND.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, Admiral Superintendent of Naval Reserves, has this week been making an official visit to the Shetland Isles. He arrived on Tuesday morning at Lerwick, in H.M.S. Lively, a despatch vessel, and inspected the local Coastguard and seamen of the Royal Naval Reserve, under the orders of Commander Le Cocq. He afterwards received an address of welcome from the Corporation of Lerwick, and laid the first stone of the new Townhall and Municipal Buildings; after which he was entertained with a luncheon in the County Hall, where Major Cameron presided over a numerous company of guests.

We present a series of Illustrations of the Shetland Isles, from photographs by Messrs. G. W. Wilson and Co., of Aberdeen. "Pray, Sir, where is Shetland?" a general officer is reported to have asked, on being introduced at a party in London some years ago to a young gentleman from that remote corner of Great Britain. Shetland is so seldom heard of and so little known that it may not be altogether unnecessary to give the young gentleman's answer. "Shetland is the name given to a group of islands about 150 miles north of Britain." Orkney and Shetland, which form one Scotch county returning a member to Parliament, were given in pledge for the dowry of Princess Margaret of Denmark on her marriage to James III. of Scotland. Previous to that, Orkney and Shetland were ruled by the Scandinavian sea-kings. As Karl Blind, in an article in the Nineteenth Century on the discovery of Odinic songs in Shetland, says:—"To this day the Shetlanders, lying midway between Norway and Scotland, look upon themselves as a people quite apart. In character and traditions a good deal of their Scandinavian origin still clings to them." The natives insist that they are not Scotch, but Shetlanders. Ethnologists who have visited Shetland generally agree that the natives are mainly Scandinavian. Dr. Beddoe says, "The Shetlanders come nearer to the English than to the Scotch in figure and features, and even in the colour of their hair." Shetland consists of about a hundred islands, the largest being sixty miles long and forty-eight broad at the widest part.

Only about thirty of the islands are inhabited, some of them being mere rocks. Shetland, the Ultima Thule of the Latin classics, lies in the same latitude as St. Petersburg and a part of Greenland, so far north indeed that during part of the summer there is no darkness, and you may read your newspaper at midnight; while, in winter, the Aurora Borealis may often be seen. Yet Shetland, owing to the Gulf Stream, which sweeps round its shores, is by no means a land of frost and snow. The climate is as mild as that of some parts of Britain further south. M. Biot, the well-known French philosopher, who lived for several months in one of the islands, Unst, says of Shetland—"If there were only trees and sun, no residence could be more pleasant; but if there were trees and sun, everybody would wish to go thither, and peace would exist no longer." Except a few which have been carefully planted and tended in gardens and private grounds, there are absolutely no trees in Shetland. To a native of "sunny France" like M. Biot, Shetland may have seemed sunless, but Englishmen would not find matters much worse than at home in that respect. Everybody has heard of Shetland hosiery and Shetland ponies. The making of hosiery is the only manufacture in the islands. It is carried on by the women, who knit with their own hands the real Shetland shawls, gloves, and socks. The men are generally fishermen or sailors. Large quantities of fish are caught round the coasts and exported to Ireland and Spain. Strange to say, few of the Shetlanders can swim, though they are accustomed to the sea from childhood, and not only men and boys row boats from island to island, but women also. So expert, indeed, are the Shetland women at the oar that they have, on at least one occasion, challenged a boat's crew from a man-of-war to a race, and left the male competitors far behind.

We give a view of Lerwick, the capital of Shetland, the most northern town in Great Britain, and, as our Illustration shows, a quaint town, too, standing partly in the water. The town is built of grey stone, and stands on Bressay Sound, a fine natural harbour, which in summer is sometimes crowded with Dutch fishing-vessels of antiquated build, and is visited in spring by the Arctic whalers, who call to obtain hardy Shetlanders for the whale hunting, or "fishing," as it is called. Instead of spending their wages when paid off at Liverpool and other ports, the Shetland sailors generally go home for part of the winter and drill with the Naval Reserve, "keeping Yule" in jovial style. In summer steamers run twice a week between Lerwick and Aberdeen, and once a week in winter; but the Lerwick people have often to wait much longer than a week for letters from the south, as the sea is frequently too rough for vessels to reach the islands. Lerwick has a few handsome buildings, and is well supplied with places of worship, at which the Lerwick ladies make a great display, on Sunday, of the finery for which their knitting is usually bartered. Fort Charlotte, from which the view is taken, and which therefore does not appear, stands at the north end of the town. At the south end there is a handsome school, built and endowed at the expense of the late Mr. Arthur Anderson, chairman of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam-Ship Company, who was a native of Shetland.

Bressay Lighthouse, which stands on the south end of the island of Bressay, serves to guide ships into Lerwick harbour or Bressay Sound. Near the lighthouse is the Cave of Bressay, or the Orkneyman's Cave, as it is sometimes called. This cave is wide enough at the entrance to admit several boats at a time, and a single one can penetrate to a considerable distance, the cavern becoming narrower as you proceed, till at last a beach is reached. From the roof of the cavern numerous stalactites hang, many of them assuming most fantastic shapes. The cavern is quite dark, and the smallest noise resounds like thunder. The report of a pistol is enough to deafen you. Emerging from the cave of Bressay, and rounding the Bard, the point in which Bressay terminates in the south, you pass some fantastic forms of rocky scenery and reach the Island of Noss.

The Holm of Noss, one of the places which strangers to Shetland are generally shown, is a small islet 160 ft. high, precipitous on all sides, and separated from the Island of Noss by a distance of 65 ft., which used to be traversed by a "cradle" swung on ropes, a cragsman having succeeded in scaling the cliffs of the Holm and establishing communication. The Holm and cliffs are full of sea-fowl. If you fire a gun the air is darkened by a cloud of them. Not far from the Holm is the Noup of the Noss, a bluff precipice rising 577 ft. out of the sea. The late Dr. James Copland, a well-known London physician, who wrote the "Dictionary of Medicine," was born in Noss.

The fishermen's huts at Stennis must not be mistaken for the regular residences of the Shetland fishermen. These huts, or "ledges" as they are generally called, are merely used by boats' crews for a short time in the summer, during the "haaf" or deep-sea fishing, which is carried on by open boats, each manned by six men, and carrying from 4000 to 6000 fathoms of line, with 1000 to 1200 hooks baited by small fish. The hooks are sunk close to the bottom, in water varying in depth from fifty to one hundred fathoms; and after resting for about two hours, the men "haul" their lines, from 12 cwt. to 15 cwt. being reckoned a fairly good haul. The fish are split open, dried on the beach in the sun, salted, and packed for export. The "haaf" fishing is exceedingly dangerous. Last summer many boats were lost, with their crews, and numerous women and children deprived of their bread-winners. A fund was opened at the Mansion House, London, for the relief of the consequent distress, and was liberally contributed to, as it deserved to be, for the Shetland fisheries are a nursery of sailors, and many of the best seamen to be found in English ships are supplied by Shetland.

Fitful Head is a bold precipice rising out of the sea to a great height. Although it is supposed that it was Foulca which Agricola saw from Orkney when he explained "Despecta est et Thule," Fitful Head is generally the part of Shetland first seen on approaching the islands by the mail-steamers from the south. Readers of Sir Walter Scott's novel the "Pirate," most of whose scenes are laid in Shetland, will remember Fitful Head as the residence of Norna the Reim-kennor, who was on such intimate terms with the clerk of the weather as to be able, according to popular belief, to obtain fair or foul winds for seamen. Muness Castle, in the island of Unst, the most northern of the Shetland group, is represented in our next Illustration, or rather the ruins of Muness Castle, for only ruins are left. This castle was, as an inscription over the door tells us, built in 1598. On a tablet in beautifully raised letters are the lines—

List ye to know this building quha began?
Laurence the Bruce, he was the worthy man,
Quha earnestlie his airts and asprying prayis,
To help and not to hurt this wark alwayis.

This injunction has not been paid much attention to, for some of the finely carved stones of the castle appear to have been used for building cottages and walls close at hand. Lawrence the Bruce, it may be added, was a Perthshire gentleman, who is said to have removed to Shetland in consequence of having slain a neighbour. To the antiquarian, Unst is perhaps the most interesting of all the Shetland Islands. Even before the time of the Norseman, Unst appears to have been a place of importance. The remains of what appear to be Druidical circles are to be seen there. In Unst the "Great Ting," or Parliament of Shetland, is said to have met before Tingwall, near Lerwick, became the meeting place. On a conical-shaped rock, rising nearly 200 ft. out of the sea off the coast of Unst, stands the Muckle Flugga lighthouse, the tower of which had to be raised 50 ft. above the rock—that is to say, 250 ft. above the sea, to render the light safe from the fury of the waves. This fact will serve to give some idea of the force of the sea there. Communication between the rock and Unst is frequently impossible, and the light-keepers' lives must be rather monotonous. A visitor, describing their quarters, mentions that the walls are papered by pictures from the Illustrated London News.

Scalloway Castle is represented in another of our Illustrations. Scalloway is a small town, on the west coast of Shetland, distant about four miles from Lerwick, and stands on a bay studded with numerous islands. Patrick Stuart, who in 1595 succeeded his father, Robert Stuart, illegitimate son of James V. of Scotland, as Earl of Orkney and Shetland, built Scalloway Castle, or rather compelled the poor Shetlanders to build it for him. For some time he oppressed and robbed the people with impunity, till he gave offence to the Bishop, who had him brought to Edinburgh, where he was executed. The rents of Shetland were subsequently farmed by various Scotchmen from the Crown. The memory of Patrick Stuart and of the rapacity of other Scots may perhaps account to some extent for the Shetlanders' anxiety to have it understood that Shetlanders are not Scotchmen. Be this as it may, Scalloway Castle serves to preserve the evil memory of Patrick Stuart. Before Lerwick became the capital, courts of justice, or perhaps it would be safer to say law, used to be held in Scalloway Castle, and not far off was the place of execution. In "Shetland Historical and Descriptive," by the late Dr. Robert Cowie, it is stated that so late as the beginning of the last century, women were burnt for witchcraft at Scalloway.

Sumburgh Head, the southern extremity of the mainland, or largest island of Shetland, is shown in our last Illustration. To readers of the "Pirate," Sumburgh Head is classic ground. It was on Sumburgh Head that Cleveland, the pirate, was wrecked; and close at hand are still to be seen the ruins of Jarlshoff. On the top of Sumburgh Head stands a good lighthouse, which sailors have much reason to be thankful for. Between Sumburgh Head and Fair Isle, where the commander of the Spanish Armada was wrecked, there is the formidable "Sumburgh Roost," in which the attentions of the steward are often as indispensable to passengers as Sumburgh Lighthouse is to the sailors.

NEW MUNICIPAL BUILDINGS, INVERNESS.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, going to the north of Scotland, last week, on Admiralty service, to inspect the Coast Guard and Naval Reserve stations, visited the town of Inverness, and opened the new Municipal Buildings, to the satisfaction of the loyal Provost and burghesses. This handsome edifice with a frontage of seventy-three feet, shown in our Illustration, is of the decorated Gothic style of architecture, and has been erected at a cost of £14,000. Of that large sum, £4000 was paid for certain old and dilapidated buildings, previously existing at the back of the old Townhall, the site upon which the present structure is built. A liberal bequest of £5000, by the late Mr. Duncan Grant, of Bught, was the first occasion of the magistrates and burghesses discovering the old Townhall was not suitable to the present age. It was just at the principal entrance that the famous "Clachnacuddin," or "Stone of Tubs," used to stand; so called from the traditional fact that on this stone women rested their water buckets, when conveying to their homes water from the river, about 150 yards distant. This stone is now placed under the sink of the Forbes Memorial Fountain, in the same manner as the old Coronation Stone, removed from Scoone Palace, now rests under the Coronation Chair in Westminster Abbey.

All architects resident in the burgh were invited to submit plans; but those of Mr. William Lawrie were selected for the Municipal Buildings. The Forbes Memorial Fountain originated in the bequest of £500 by the late Dr. Forbes, a citizen of Inverness. It has been erected in the centre of the paved square immediately in front of the principal entrance to the new Townhall.

THE SAILOR PRINCES IN THE EAST.

The Illustration represents the Flying Squadron, consisting of the Inconstant, the flag-ship of Admiral the Earl of Clanwilliam; the Bacchante, having on board their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales; the Tourmaline, Carysfort, and Cleopatra. The ships are passing through the Inland Sea of Japan—sometimes called the Mediterranean of the East—between Kōbe and Yokohama. This route was chosen in preference to the direct way to Shanghai, in order to give their Royal Highnesses an opportunity of seeing the exquisite scenery of the picturesque Inland Sea. Nothing can exceed the beautiful verdure of the hills; for the industry of the Japanese does not leave a spot uncultivated. The steep rocks are cut in terraces, some not broader than steps, just wide enough for the growth of cabbages. The passage between these hills was so winding and tortuous, and the navigation among the innumerable islands so difficult, that the ships had to anchor every night, and they took three days to clear the defile from Kōbe to Simonosaki. Our Illustration is from a sketch by Lieutenant Percy Scott, R.N., of H.M.S. Inconstant.

Another Illustration gives a view of the environs of Colombo, in the British Asiatic island of Ceylon, where the Sailor Princes of Wales and Great Britain will presently be greeted with a loyal welcome. Colombo will henceforth supersede Galle as the port of rendezvous for the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steam-ships, going to and from India, China, and Australia. It is the British official capital of Ceylon, and a place of much commercial importance, especially for the export of coffee from the neighbouring plantations. The whole population, including both the native and the European town, is estimated at 120,000, whose dwellings extend four miles along the seacoast. The older part of the European town was built by the Dutch or by the Portuguese, former possessors of Ceylon. Many of the people in Colombo are Tamils, or Southern Indians, Moors, Malays, Banyans, or Parsees, besides the native Cinghalese. There is a railway from Colombo up to Kandy, the ancient native capital, and to Gampola and Newera Ellia, in the coffee districts.

The receptions of the Lady Mayoress (Mrs. Ellis) began on Tuesday, from three to five, and will be continued every succeeding Tuesday during the same hours until further notice. On Feb. 16 a ball will be given at the Mansion House; and on the 28th an art conversation, in connection with the City of London Society of Artists, of which the Lord Mayor is the president. On March 3 the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress will entertain the Masters of the City Companies at dinner at the Mansion House; and on the 15th the leading bankers and merchants of the City, including the governor and directors of the Bank of England.

VOLUNTEER AMBULANCE DRILL.

The official inspection of a Volunteer class, of which the members have completed a course of instruction in ambulance duties, took place last week in Guildhall, the Lord Mayor presiding and presenting the certificates awarded to those who had proved themselves efficient. The class, who mustered above ninety men in all, were put through the stretcher drill and field-dressing exercises by Surgeon R. T. Daniell, M.D., of the 2nd Middlesex Artillery Volunteers. Major-General Higginson, C.B., arrived to witness a subsequent drill. The class was inspected by the president of the organisation, Surgeon-General Shelton, Army Medical Department, with whom were Brigade-Surgeon Kidd, Surgeon-Major Don, Surgeon-Major A. Clarke, and others of the Army Medical Department, Captain Pringle, Staff officer, and Lieutenant M'Kay, of the Army Hospital Corps, and Lieutenant A. MacIure, jun., of the London Scottish, the honorary secretary of the Volunteer Ambulance Department. A squad of men having been told off to act as wounded, the class treated them for such injuries as the instructor directed, and soon there was a long row of red-coated Volunteers extended on mats with heads and faces bandaged, tourniquets on the arms or thighs, or in other ways treated as if their wounds had been attended to on the field. At the word of command some were gently laid upon regular stretchers, others placed on improvised stretchers, formed by throwing a great-coat over a couple of rifles, and a few were carried in the arms of their comrades. At the conclusion of the drill Surgeon-General Shelton gave an account of the work which had been done, and bore testimony to the value of the services performed by the Volunteer Ambulance Department at the Windsor and Edinburgh reviews. The Volunteer Ambulance Department, which was originated in 1876 as "The Volunteer Sick Bearers' Association," has, under the patronage of the Duke of Cambridge, and with the friendly assistance of the heads of the Army Medical Department, now been officially recognised by the War Office. Members of the Volunteer force who join the classes are instructed in ambulance duties and the proper treatment of wounded in the field, in accordance with the practice prescribed in the official Redbooks of instruction and the system adopted by the Army Hospital Corps at Aldershot, so that in case of emergency they would be able to work with the regulars. Since the classes of instruction commenced over 1200 men have been enrolled in London alone, and 845 of these have attended the requisite number of lectures and drills, and entitled themselves to certificates of proficiency. In the provinces a large number of men have been under instruction, and over 470 certificates have been granted, bringing the total number of efficient to 1315. Allowing two men to a company, however, it is calculated that about 5000 men of the Volunteer forces should be available and competent to undertake this duty. It should be observed that this movement has been carried on without any pecuniary help from the Government.

HOSPITAL AMBULANCE.

An ambulance-waggon built on very ingenious principles has been presented to the London Hospital, Mile-end-road, by Mr. James H. Crossman, of the firm of Mann, Crossman, and Paulin, deputy chairman of the hospital. The inventor is Dr. Benjamin Howard, of New York, who has had a large experience, both in America and in Europe, of ambulance requirements, and the builder is Mr. J. U. Burt, Swinton-street, Gray's-inn-road. The vehicle stands about 5 ft. 10 in. in height by 6 ft. 6 in. in width from the outside. It weighs about 6 cwt., and is able to turn exactly in its own length. When a sufferer has to be placed in the ordinary kind of ambulance, he has to be lifted at least four feet from the ground, a thing which he dreads extremely, and four or five men have to be employed to raise him. By Dr. Howard's plan that painful process is entirely avoided. The floor of the waggon being only about fifteen inches from the ground and a falling leaf provided, which serves as a step, the patient, once laid upon the stretcher, may be put in and taken out with great ease, and without the infliction of any pain whatever. The stretcher rests on a tramway with springs, independent of those of the car itself, and may, with its burden, be pushed forward and drawn back again with one hand. The risk of jolting is guarded against by the very easy springs on which the vehicle is hung and by indiarubber tires with which the wheels are covered. Besides the stretcher already mentioned, there is room within the car for another, which can be suspended, and by an ingenious economy of space a seat within is provided for a surgeon or other person in charge of the patients. A box under the driver's seat may be used for holding medicines and surgical instruments. The donor proposes the establishment of a hospital and ambulance service throughout London, to be worked by communication between the hospitals and the police stations on the same plan as the fire brigade system is worked. New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, and all the great cities of America have their ambulance services, while London is absolutely without proper means of removal in case of disease or accident, and is mainly dependent on the four-wheeled cab, which inflicts a vast amount of needless pain upon the sufferers.

MR. JUSTICE KAY ON BUBBLE COMPANIES.

Mr. Justice Kay, in making an order to wind up the La Conception Gold-Mining Company (Limited), said:—"How the British people can be induced to subscribe to such bubble companies as this certainly exceeds my conception altogether. The company was formed, not for the purpose of purchasing Châteaux en L'Espagne, but for purchasing a mining company. The directors found that they were unable to buy the property, and then at a meeting of shareholders it was decided that either a mining company must be purchased or else the company must be wound up. More money was wanted, and then they set about the purchase of another property. That property they found they could not acquire, and then more money was asked from the credulous public in order, I suppose, to pay the expenses of winding-up and to equalise the calls on the shareholders. I do not want to encourage actions against directors or to induce people to throw good money after bad; but I think this is a case in which it is clear that there should be a winding-up without delay, as delay means great expense, and that the carriage of the winding-up should be given to the person who is likely to carry it on in the interests of the shareholders. Mr. Leaf holds 500 shares, and he appears to be in the position of a bona-fide shareholder; and I think the best thing to do is to make a compulsory order on both petitions, with the usual order as to costs, and a reference to chambers appointing a liquidator."

Rear-Admiral William Graham, C.B., succeeds Rear-Admiral John D. M'Crea, as Admiral Superintendent at Malta.

Mr. W. C. Mulvey has been appointed secretary to the City of London Liberal Association, in the place of Mr. Sidney Smith, retired.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

MECHANISM OF THE SENSES.

Dr. John G. McKendrick, F.R.S.E., the newly-elected Fulmerian Professor of Physiology, gave the first of a course of eleven lectures on the Mechanism of the Senses on Tuesday, the 17th instant. In his introductory remarks he commented on the general conditions of sensory impressions, and classified the organs of the nervous system into central organs, peripheral or terminal organs, and nerves. He then described the minute structure of a nerve, and illustrated its functions engaged in the transmission of sensations to the central organ, the brain. The apparatus, which is very simple in the lower forms of life, were shown to be very complex in man and the higher animals. The element of time in all sensory operations was alluded to, and various modes of estimating it were demonstrated. In the living body muscular fibre is made to contract by a change which takes place in a motor nerve which is distributed to it. This change, again, is effected only by the activity of the central nervous organ with which the motor nerve is connected. Finally, allusion was made to the general structure of the various terminals in the tongue, nose, skin, eye, and ear. The lecture was fully illustrated by diagrams and experimental apparatus.

CORALS AND THEIR ALLIES.

Professor H. N. Moseley, F.R.S., gave the first of a course of four lectures on Corals on Thursday, the 19th inst. He began by noticing the prevalent error, found even in books of travel, educational works, and examination papers, which regards corals as analogous to honeycomb and as built up by insects. The term "coral" cannot now be applied scientifically to any group of animals, unless it be confined to the Madreporia. At present this term covers all Coelenterata possessing a continuous calcareous skeleton, and these do not form a natural group. After explaining the general range of the Coelenterata, and the essential differences between Anthozoa, or sea anemones, and their allies, and the Hydrozoa, or jelly-fish, and their allies, to both which some corals belong, the Professor began a detailed account of the Zoantharia division of Anthozoan corals—viz., the Madreporia, or ordinary reef-corals, which in essential structure are closely allied to sea anemones. Of these last the anatomical structure was exhibited, in accordance with recent discoveries, including the well-developed nervous system described by the brothers Hertwig. This was followed by a description of the exact relations of hard skeleton of the Madreporia with the soft tissues of the body; and the development of a Madreporia was traced from the egg. Diagrams were also exhibited, showing the remarkable differences in the arrangement of the principal longitudinal muscles with regard to the mesenteries in various Anthozoa, such as the Madreporia and Alcyonaria. The Professor stated that the departures from a radial symmetry are so complex in the Anthozoa that it is impossible at present to form any scheme on which their genetic history and evolution can be accounted for. Light, no doubt, will be thrown on the subject by extended investigations. The lecture was illustrated by a series of photographs magnified and projected on the screen by electric light.

COMETS.

Dr. William Huggins, F.R.S., gave the first Friday evening discourse of the season on the 20th inst. He began by remarking that though comets are not now regarded as portents, yet, in some respects, they are still great mysteries. There is no consensus of opinion as to their nature. Within a few years much new knowledge has been obtained by the spectroscopic, and from investigation of the identity of orbits of comets and of showers of shooting stars. Dr. Huggins then proceeded to distinguish between known truth and speculation. The form and appearance of different comets were shown on the screen, and photographs by Janssen and Common of the comet of June, 1881. The results of spectroscopic research were then described, showing that carbon, combined with hydrogen, exists in the cometary matter. The photograph of the bright comet of June, 1881, taken by the lecturer, extended our knowledge by showing that a nitrogen compound of carbon, probably cyanogen, was probably present, and also proved that the continuous spectrum was really due to reflected solar light. Meteorites were next considered; and it was shown that in most meteorites gases are occluded, which, if set free by heat, might present a spectrum similar to that of comets. Several hypothetical views were then considered in connection with the question whether the sun's heat were sufficient to cause the self-light of comets. The material view of the tails of comets was discussed in connection with an assumed solar repulsive force; and the lecturer mentioned the growing feeling that the phenomena of comets are electrical in their character. Finally, he referred to the alternative theory of Professors Wright and Johnston Stoney, who do not consider the bright lines in cometary spectra to indicate heated matter, but suppose the hydro-carbon gas to be opaque in these parts of the spectrum, and so to reflect to us the solar light falling on the cometary matter, giving in this way a spectrum of bright lines.

BEETHOVEN.

Professor Ernst Pauer gave the first of a course of four lectures on Ludwig van Beethoven on Saturday last, the 21st instant. In a characteristic biographical sketch he adverted to the composer's birth, at Bonn, Dec. 17, 1770, his early predilection for music and his precocious manifestation of genius, which induced his mercenary dissipated father to urge on his musical education with cruel harshness. His first lessons received from his father included the works of Mozart, Haydn, Bach, and Clementi, which were ever after his favourites. One of his early masters was Neefe, who greatly influenced his future character. His first compositions were nine variations on Dressler's march in C minor and three sonatas. His school instruction was very elementary. He obtained a valuable friend and patron in Count Waldstein, and his social position was bettered by his becoming organist to the Court, and his acquaintance with the Breuning family. He went to Vienna, where music was highly favoured, in 1787, and finally settled there in 1792. Here he met with the brilliant Mozart and the courtly Haydn, with whom he greatly differed in character and appearance. His life was saddened by disappointments in love, and by his deafness, which he bore with heroic resignation. The influence of this calamity appears in his music, which is essentially subjective, while that of other composers is cosmopolitan in character. He died calmly, on March 25, 1827. The beautiful illustrations on the pianoforte were the Moonlight sonata, composed under the influence of his love for Giulietta Guicciardi, and the grand sonata in C major, dedicated to Count Waldstein.

Professor Tyndall will give a discourse on the Action of Molecules, free and constrained, on Radiant Heat, at the next Friday evening meeting, on Feb. 3.

Practice for the University Boat-Race has begun on the Cam; and on Monday the Oxford crew began, being coached by Mr. Kindersley over the short course to Ilfey.

VOYAGES AND TRAVELS.

Arctic exploration, perhaps more usefully directed to surveying the northern coasts and islands, both of Asia and America, than to the romantic enterprise of reaching the Pole, has of late years been tolerably active. When the Swedish scientific expedition, conducted by Professor Nordenskiöld, having circumnavigated the whole of the Eastern Continent, returned to Europe in the spring of 1880, we gave some account of its geographical achievement, with a few illustrations of the festive welcome at Stockholm. Baron Nordenskiöld's complete narrative of The Voyage of the Vega Round Asia and Europe, translated into English by Mr. Alexander Leslie, fills two volumes now published by Messrs. Macmillan and Co. Their interest is not lessened by the more recent news of the perils and hardships that have been endured in those seas by the American expedition of the Jeannette, sent forth by Mr. J. Gordon Bennett, of New York, with a view to explore the Siberian Arctic shores from the opposite direction. Nordenskiöld had already, before sailing in the Vega, on his last and greatest voyage, which he commenced in July, 1878, performed in 1875 and 1876 two important feats of nautical enterprise, crossing the Kara Sea to the mouth of the great Yenisei river, and proving that there was a possibility of commercial traffic. Those voyages have been related in another volume; but half the first volume of the present work is acceptably employed in a very instructive historical review of all the preceding attempts and advances, during three centuries past, towards the opening of "the North-East Passage." In these successive efforts of English, Dutch, Russian, and Norwegian mariners to solve a difficult but still fascinating problem, was gained our acquaintance with Nova Zembla, more correctly written "Novaya Zemlya," and with the gulfs and inlets of the Siberian coast. The air of romance, with all the substantial reality, belonging to such ancient stories of remote adventure, is set off here by the reproduction of quaint old charts and queer woodcut pictures, copied from books of another age. We are thus prepared to follow with an accumulated interest the voyage of the Vega and her consort, the Lena, when, on Aug. 16, 1878, they reached Cape Chelyuskin, the most northerly promontory of Asia, longitude 103 degrees East of Greenwich, latitude 77 deg. 36 min. above the Equator. The small steam-vessel called the Lena was soon afterwards sent up the river of the same name; while two others of the squadron, likewise for purposes of mercantile experiment or inquiry, were dispatched to the Yenisei. The Vega, a steamer of 300 tons burden and sixty-horse engine power, specially fortified to endure the contact with ice, commanded by Lieutenant Palander, of the Swedish Royal Navy, under the direction of Professor Nordenskiöld, proceeded eastward to emerge into the Pacific, at Behring's Strait, on July 20, 1879. From the end of September to the beginning of July, she was frozen up in Kolyutachin Bay, within two degrees of longitude of the East Cape of Siberia; but it seems to be certain that, but for the accidents of the season and weather, or had the steamer got there a few days sooner, she could easily have entered the Pacific before the navigation was closed by winter. The personal experiences of the officers and crew during their long detention on that distant shore, about two hundred miles to the inside of Behring's Strait, will be read with interest, of course, but cannot be so painfully exciting as those hereafter to be told of the shipwrecked Americans from the unfortunate Jeannette. This work is, nevertheless, one of great value to the world of science, and perhaps to that of commerce, by the large amount of accurate information that is supplied concerning all the easterly portion of Siberia, its land, climate, products, and people. Everything previously ascertained by earlier parties, mostly Russian, upon the above matters, is carefully brought into view, making, with Nordenskiöld's own records of observations by himself and his staff, a very complete account of the entire subject. The volumes are furnished with several good maps, and with a great variety of wood engravings. They conclude, after the pleasant descriptions of visits to Japan, China, and Ceylon, on the homeward route, with that of the congratulations offered to Professor Nordenskiöld and his comrades in several European capitals, and, still better, of his welcome home in Sweden.

We are invited, again, to a journey Through Siberia, in two volumes by Mr. Henry Lansdell, who visited all the principal Russian towns and stations, traversing the whole of that vast territory from west to east, in the months of June, July, August, and September, 1879. His book, published by Messrs. Sampson Low and Co., deals more particularly with the social and administrative conditions of those Asiatic provinces of the Russian Empire. He went on a special errand of religious philanthropy, which reminds us of John Howard, who ended his life in Russia, having gone thither to examine the state of the prisons, with a benevolent endeavour to improve their management, and to mitigate the sufferings of those confined in them. Mr. Lansdell, like Howard, had devoted his spare time, for some years before, as a volunteer agent of Christian charity and humanity, to labours of this kind in different countries of Europe, usually taking with him, for distribution, a store of Bibles and tracts in the languages required. We see no reason to doubt that his mission was performed in a manner to yield salutary fruits, as it was not undertaken in a presumptuous or censorious spirit; and it should be satisfactory to learn that many of the distressing accounts of cruelties inflicted upon prisoners in Siberia are grossly exaggerated, if not altogether fictitious. Compulsory exile, attended in the case of heinous criminals with penal servitude, can nowhere be otherwise than painful. This is the latest authentic description of Siberia, by an English traveller across its breadth of 8000 miles, from the Ural Mountains to the Pacific coast, visiting Tiumen, Tobolsk, with the Obi, Tomsk, Barnaul, Krasnoyarsk, on the Yenisei, Ispravnik, Kansk, Alexandrevsky, Irkutsk, the Lena, Yakutsk, Lake Baikal, Troitzkosavsk, and the frontier town of Kiakhta. We can promise the readers of Mr. Lansdell's book a great deal of entertainment, combined with instruction, in the survey of such an immense field of topography, natural history, and ethnology, and in the plentiful anecdotes of wayside experience and casual observation. It must not be supposed that the author has come forward with an undertaking to be the political apologist of the Russian Government. He does not enter into any question relating to the justice of its sentences of transportation to Siberia, or to the merits of its rule either in Europe or in Asia. Two score or three score persons, among those transported in the course of a twelvemonth, are condemned for political offences. The number yearly sent off is from 17,000 to 20,000, the bulk of whom are pauper ne'er-do-well vagrants, who are expected to earn their livelihood in Siberian colonisation. About 8000 of the above number, when they reach their destination, are allowed personal freedom, and these often have their families with them. The climate, within the settled zone of territory, is probably not less salubrious than that of the North-West Territory of Canada; while the industrial resources of Siberia, mineral as well as agricultural, seem capable of supporting a large population. On the whole, Mr. Lansdell considers that the treatment of Russian convicts there is not worse than in the penal establishments of the principal States of Europe. His statements are characterised by an imposing air of precision, and are fortified by official statistics, which claim due attention from those candidly disposed to investigate the subject.

Still rambling about within the huge compass of the Russian Empire, we accompany Mr. Edward Rae through The White Sea Peninsula, which means Russian Lapland and Karelia; but who has ever before heard of Karelia? It is the country east of Finland, to the White Sea, opposite the Gulf of Archangel. This volume (published by Mr. Murray) is a well-timed complement, or companion descriptive piece, to that of "Siberia in Europe," by Mr. Seebohm, the ornithologist, which we lately noticed with approval. Mr. Edward Rae and "the Doctor," constituting what they called "the Expedition," in the summer of last year arrived at Kola, which is on the banks of a river and fjord opening to the Arctic Ocean, a hundred and fifty miles beyond Vardoe and the Varanger-fjord of Norway. Then, hiring a small steam-boat, with a Russian crew, they circumnavigated the great eastern peninsula of Lapland, examining its seacoast; but, crossing the White Sea to the Karelian shore, turned again due north, up the Gulf of Kandalaks, and traversed the breadth of the peninsula, overland and by the inland lakes, to return to Kola, whence they had started. They visited the rich island monastery of Solovetzk, already described by Mr. Hepworth Dixon, and the heterodox town of Kem, inhabited by hardy fishermen who are "Old Believers." These Karelians are a simple, honest, strict, and sober people; "among twenty thousand poor, hard-living peasants," says the author, "apart from unlawful wood-cutting, there are three crimes annually; and of these one theft; drunkenness does not exist among them. Peaceable, domestic, and forgiving, mixed with the Russians, they have lost their energy and independence." They are a branch of the Finnish nation, but scarcely 15,000 in number; while the Russians in their country are 17,600, and the Lapps are some 2000. The country, in its natural scenery, climate, and products, seems to resemble Swedish Lapland, of which many tourists have given an account. Mr. Edward Rae and his travelling comrade got so far as Novaya Zemlya. He writes in a lively, easy, pleasant style, and his book is furnished with many woodcuts and a few etchings, which add to its attractive character.

Two very agreeable volumes, entitled A Lady's Cruise in a French Man-of-War, by Miss C. F. Gordon Cumming, are published by W. Blackwood and Sons. It is not long ago since we noticed Miss Gordon Cumming's "At Home in Fiji," but it seems that book was far from exhausting the store of knowledge which she has brought home with her from the Pacific Islands. While in Fiji a French Roman Catholic Bishop appeared, who was making a round of his diocese, and as his "See" might have been truly written "Sea," he had a French man-of-war to take him about among the isles to visit the places under his charge. Miss Gordon Cumming received an invitation from Monseigneur Eloi, as well as from the captain, to be one of the party, and thus to have the advantage of further experiences in the region. The result has now appeared under the title of "A Cruise in a French Man-of-War," and as the author is, at the same time, an artist, we have the advantage of her pencil, which she has employed to bring home representations of the wonderful scenery she saw. From reading, we have all a vague notion that some of the isles of the Pacific are so beautiful in their aspect, so lovely and genial in their climate, that they well merit the reputation of being the real earthly paradise; but it is doubtful if any book has yet appeared which conveys this idea so completely as Miss Gordon Cumming's two volumes. Though the isles may be Edens, man is, as at first, the Old Adam who dwells upon them. This book tells us of the fierce tribal wars, combined with cannibalism and other dark deeds, which were practised by the natives; of their strange gods, of fish, eels, sharks, centipedes, feathers, rags, and other living and inanimate things to which they paid worship. The appearance of the first missionaries on this uninviting field, and the history of their peaceful contests, often ending to them with an opposite result, in death and martyrdom, with their triumphs at last,—all this is told, and it reads more like a romance than a plain true tale. There are now schools and colleges, with a supply of native preachers, and a few pages of the book are devoted to some of their curious renderings of Scripture, and adaptations to native ideas. So many of the South Sea customs resemble those of the primitive Jews, that these people realise them much more vividly than we do, living in Europe under such changed conditions. "The sling and stone," "The smooth stone of the brook," the "arrows . . . the poison whereof drinketh up my spirit," and other phrases, exactly suit what everyone is familiar with in the Pacific. Saul encamped under a tree, "having his spear in his hand," would pass anywhere as a description of an old South Sea Chief. Again, the words, "The trumpeters stood before the King," come home to them, for a native King has men beside him with perforated shells, through which they blow a deafening blast in honour of a Chief, or to rally warriors in time of war. A widow must marry the brother of her deceased husband, which is according to the old Mosaic law, and relics of this custom may be found among many primitive races. A future political importance is likely to be in store for the South Sea Islands, which is to be realised when the Panama Canal becomes a reality. This the French have foreseen, and have been already acting in anticipation of it by annexing territory among the islands, and securing coaling stations, so that they may have a centre to attract the future trade of the Pacific, and thus acquire for themselves the lion's share. They are already very strong in Tahiti, where everything is French. When M. Lesseps has pierced his second isthmus this will be on the high road from Europe to Australia, and the trade with the Pacific Isles will then become quite a different matter from what it is at present. Miss Gordon Cumming arrived at Papeete, the capital of Tahiti, about a week after Queen Pomare's death, and had afterwards the good luck to accompany the new Monarch and the French Admiral, in a grand ceremonial round of his territory, where she saw the natives en fête, of which she gives a very good account. The sacred drink, called "kava" in Tahiti, and "yangona" in Fiji (the presentation of it to our young sailor Princes formed an illustration in this Paper lately), is often alluded to by Miss Gordon Cumming. In her former book its preparation is described; the process is not known to most people, or it is doubtful if they would venture on tasting. The "yangona" has to be chewed by young women, whose comrades sing wild melodies and clap their hands. The root is afterwards put into water, and then the fluid strained, which is the sacred drink. Dr. Macgregor had six ounces of the root chewed in the usual manner, and on weighing it afterwards, found its weight had increased almost threefold by the process. This statement requires no comment. The whole book is not only interesting and instructive, but, at the same time, most delightful reading.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH'S VISIT TO THE SHETLAND ISLES.
FROM PHOTOGRAPHS BY MESSRS. G. W. WILSON AND CO., ABERDEEN.—SEE PAGE 89.

1. Lerwick, from Fort Charlotte.
5. Fittful Head.

2. Bressay Lighthouse.
6. Muness Castle, Unst.

3. The Holm 'of Noes.
7. Scalloway Castle.

4. Fishermen's huts, Stennis.
8. Sumburgh Head.

NEW MUNICIPAL BUILDINGS, INVERNESS, OPENED BY THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.—SEE PAGE 90.

THE SAILOR PRINCES IN JAPAN: THE FLYING SQUADRON PASSING THROUGH THE NARROWS OF THE INLAND SEA.—SEE PAGE 90.

OBITUARY.

SIR W. R. HOLMES.

Sir William Richard Holmes, of the Manor House, Kilrea, county Londonderry, died at Yewhurst, Belvedere, Kent, on the 19th inst. He was born Feb. 21, 1821, the son of Mr. William Henry Holmes, of Kilrea, by Harriet Margaret, his wife, daughter of Mr. Richard Brant, of Westhill, Wands-worth. Entering the diplomatic service, he was successively Acting Vice-Consul at Samsoon, in the Black Sea, in 1846, and Vice-Consul at Batoum. Subsequently he held appointments at Diarbekir, again at Samsoon, and at Monastir. In 1860 he was appointed Consul for Bosnia, and he was twice—in 1861 and again in 1875—British Delegate to the European Commission for the Pacification of the Herzegovina. He was knighted in 1877. Sir William married, in 1847, Adela Louisa, daughter of Mr. P. P. Zohrab, of Malta.

We have also to record the deaths of—

Mr. Daniel Puseley, better known by his nom de plume of "Frank Foster," last week, in his sixty-eighth year.

Lieutenant-Colonel John Messiter, formerly commanding the 28th Foot, on the 13th inst., at Woodton Lodge, Highweek, aged eighty-four.

Mr. William Miller, aged eighty-six, at Sheffield. He was an honorary member of the Scottish Academy, and was largely employed at the engraving of Turner's pictures.

Mr. William Caruthers Little, M.P. for the county of Simcoe, third son of the late Mr. John Little, of Pitchcombe House, Gloucestershire, on the 31st ult., at Allandale, near Barrie, Canada, aged sixty-one.

General Charles Grant, C.B., late of the Bengal Horse Artillery, at Cheltenham. He entered the Army in 1819, and served in the Burmese war of 1825-6, the campaign in Afghanistan in 1839-40, the Gwalior campaign of 1843, and the Punjab campaigns of 1845-6 and 1849.

Mr. Henry Child, for many years solicitor to the Incorporated Society of Licensed Victuallers, and to several benevolent institutions. Mr. Child, who was in his eightieth year, was admitted as a solicitor in 1837, and shortly afterwards began business in partnership with the late Alderman Wise, who was Lord Mayor in 1858.

The Rev. Michael Gibbs, Vicar of Christ Church, Newgate-street, and Treasurer and Prebendary of St. Paul's Cathedral, on the 19th inst. He was the eldest surviving son of the late Alderman Michael Gibbs, Lord Mayor of London 1844-5, and filled many public offices in connection with Church work in the City. Since the revival of Convocation he has been elected their Proctor by the clergy of the Archdeaconry of London.

Mr. John Linnell, the eminent artist, at his residence at Redhill, at a very advanced age. He was born in 1792, and exhibited at the Royal Academy so far back as 1807, obtaining a medal in that year for drawing from life; and two years later the fifty guineas prize, at the British Institution, for landscape. He was also noted as a portrait-painter. His portrait will be given in our next Number.

Lieutenant-Colonel Charles Wollaston, late 8th Bengal Light Cavalry, and Superintendent in the East India Company's Stud Department, on the 13th inst., at Bury St. Edmunds, aged seventy-five. He was a younger brother of the late Major Frederick Wollaston, of Shenton Hall, Staffordshire, and a descendant of the very ancient family of Wollaston, of Perton, traceable back to the time of King Edward III.

Captain Green (the last surviving military officer present at Lord Nelson's funeral), at Buckden, on the 5th inst., aged ninety-four. He entered the Army, in the 21st Fusiliers, in 1804, served in Sicily, and was with the army of occupation of Paris. In 1832 he was appointed Gentleman Usher to William IV., and was continued, since 1837, in the household of her Majesty. It is curious that he died in the very same room and bed in which he was born.

Mr. James Wyatt, of Bryn Gwynant, in the county of Carnarvon, J.P. and D.L., F.G.S., on the 16th inst., in his eighty-seventh year. He was a younger son of Mr. Benjamin Wyatt, of Lime Grove, Bangor, North Wales, by Sarah, his wife (married 110 years ago), daughter of Mr. William Forde, of Burton, in the county of Stafford, and was married, Sept. 11, 1821, to Anne Jane, second daughter of Mr. John Ainsworth, of Preston, by whom he leaves four sons and three daughters. Of the former, the eldest is Lieut.-Col. J. H. Wyatt, C.B.

Mr. Harry John Burrow, on the 21st inst., at Blomfield-road, Maida-vale, at the age of thirty-five. In him decorative art has lost one of its ablest practitioners. In every thing pertaining to mediæval armour he was a recognised judge, and possessed himself a collection, limited in extent, but very choice in quality. Mr. Burrow, among other subjects, designed the east window of Kilmarnock Church, the "Piers Plowman" of Clebury Mortimer Church. Among his works, also, were the reredos in opaque glass at Berkhamsted, and the pictures on its walls. The Townhall of Plymouth, Stonehouse, Gloucestershire, and the cathedral at Bristol, are also beholden to him for the more artistic portions of their decorations.

Last year the number of emigrants leaving Great Britain for Canada was 34,249, an increase of more than 5000 over that of the preceding year.

The subscriptions to the fund which is being raised with the object of erecting a memorial, at Reading, to the officers and men of the 66th (Berkshire) Regiment who fell in the Afghan campaign have reached the sum of £1000.

As was expected, the arrivals of live stock and fresh meat at Liverpool last week from the United States and Canada showed a very large increase in comparison with the preceding week, particularly in fresh meat, which was the largest arrival for some weeks past; there being 119 cattle, 710 sheep, 8987 quarters of beef, 1800 carcasses of mutton, and 102 hogs.

SUBSCRIPTION TO THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

AT HOME.

Twelve months (including Christmas Number), £1 9s. 3d.
Six months, 14s. Christmas Half-Year, 16s. 3d.
Three months, 7s. Christmas Quarter, 8s. 3d.

Copies will be supplied direct from the Office to any part of the United Kingdom and the Channel Islands, for any period, at the rate of 6d. for each Number, paid in advance.

ABROAD.

The yearly subscription abroad is 36s. 4d. (on thin paper, 32s.), with the following exceptions:—

To Aden, Borneo, Ceylon, India, Java, Labuan, Mozambique Penang, Philippine Islands, Sarawak, Singapore, and Zanzibar, 41s. (thin paper, 34s.)
To Madagascar (except St. Mary), 45s. (on thin paper, 38s. 4d.)

Subscribers are specially advised to order the thick paper edition, the appearance of the engravings in the thin paper copies being greatly injured by the print at the back showing through.

Newspapers for foreign parts must be posted within eight days of the date of publication, irrespective of the departure of the mails.

Subscriptions must be paid in advance, direct to the Publishing Office, 198, Strand, in English money; by cheque crossed the Union Bank of London; or by Post-Office Order, payable at the East Strand Post Office, to George C. Leighton, of 198, Strand, London.

CHESS.

CROQ (Durham).—We require the full name and address of a correspondent before examining his contributions. Your problem shall be examined if you will comply with that rule.

T F S H.—If Black play 1. K takes Kt in reply to 1. B to E 3rd White continues with 2. B to Kt 2nd (ch), and 3. Q takes Kt. Mate.

W H C (Poplar).—Thanks. Can you not arrange to furnish us with reports of your club matches during the week in which they are played?

C B C (Bath).—Correct, as usual. We are glad to hear from you again. Many thanks for your kind wishes.

Alpha.—You are right in your surmise, and the author proposes to embody the conception in another form.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEMS No. 1973 and 1974 received from Va, U.S.
CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1976 received from G S Wood, John Perkins, W H Greenbrook, Ethen, H J Grant, Captain Paul Storr and Count Herbert Nieberg, J Estlin, and F W Humphries.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1977 received from Vander Haeghen (Brussels), E G Butler, C S Wood, T A Cottman, E J Winter Wood, C R O Q (Durham), Emmie, C B Carlon, B C M S, John Perkins, Harry Bristow, and Emile Frau.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1978 received from H B Cant, Penelope, Vander Haeghen (Brussels), Bosworth, A Young (Holland), James Dobson, E J Winter Wood, J F Macdonald, C S Wood, R H Brooks, J A Green, C Warburton, G Seymour, M O'Halloran, D W Kell, H Lucas, Harry Springthorpe, H Reeve, A Wignore, G S O'Neil, W Hillier, E Casella (Paris), T H Holdron, B Lowndes, L Sharrowood, E Sharrowood, R Gray, A W Scrutton, A Harper, C W Wilson, F Ferris, H H Noyes, G W Law, L L Greenaway, L Wyman, W Dewae, L Falcon (Antwerp), R Jessop, Joseph Ainsworth, R T Kemp, B R Wood, W J Rudman, Ben Nevis, G Frobbrooke, Otto Fulder (Ghent), H Blacklock, Jupiter Junior, R Twiddell, H K Awdry, E J London, Alpha, John Perkins, E J Lines, Sudbury (Suffolk), Norman Rumblelow, H A L S, Holstein, Shadforth, Emmie, Charles A Muller, Dr F St, J N N, J Hall, M O Heywood, Harry Bristow, J W W, Smutch, Sirius, and J J N.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1977.

WHITE.
1. R to Q R sq
2. Mates accordingly.

BLACK.
Any move

PROBLEM No. 1980.
By E. N. FRANKENSTEIN.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

THE LATE MR. BODEN.

The death of Mr. Boden has cast a gloom over metropolitan chess circles, in which, from his gracious manners and unfailing good humour, the deceased gentleman was universally esteemed. We should, last week, have appended to our notice of Mr. Boden's career a specimen of his style of play, but the brief interval between his death and the preparation of this column for the press deprived us of the opportunity. In selecting the game which follows, we have had more regard for the brilliancy of combination which characterised his attack than for the more solid qualities of patience and fertile resource he displayed in defence. Although second player in this game, it will be seen how quickly the Master wrests the attack from the adversary, and conducts the game to a brilliant termination. Mr. Boden's adversary on this occasion was Herr Schulder.

(Philidor's Defence.)

WHITE (Herr S.)	BLACK (Mr. Boden).	WHITE (Herr S.)	BLACK (Mr. Boden).
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	9. P to K B 4th	B to Q 2nd
2. Kt to K B 3rd	P to Q 3rd	10. B to K 3rd	Castles
3. P to Q B 3rd	P to K B 4th	11. Kt to Q 2nd	R to K sq
4. B to B 4th	Kt to K B 3rd	12. Q to B 3rd	B to K B 4th
5. P to Q 4th	P takes K P	13. Castles (Q R)	P to Q 4th
6. P takes K P	P takes Kt	14. B takes Q P	Q takes P (ch)
7. P takes Kt	Q takes P	15. P takes Q	B to R 6th.
8. P takes P	Kt to Q B 3rd		Mate.

When a young man, Mr. Boden gave much attention to the composition of problems, and in later life often expressed the opinion that intelligent study of them is helpful to young players in exercising their powers of combination. His compositions, of which very few have been published, have all the characteristics of the style in vogue before the advent of Kling and Beyer. They have a closer affinity to actual play than is usually found in the problems of the present day, and are consequently less subtle and profound alike in conception and construction. Mr. Boden's first published problem appeared in this column on July 3, 1847, and, as it conveys a very useful practical lesson, and is probably new to many of our readers, we reproduce it here:—

White: K at Q B 3rd; Q at K B 2nd. (Two pieces.)
Black: K at K R 7th; P at K Kt 7th. (Two pieces.)
White to play, and mate in three moves.

THE LATE MR. BURDEN.

A brief paragraph in our last Issue announced the death of Mr. Francis Burden, a gentleman who held a conspicuous place in London chess circles for many years. It is a curious as well as melancholy coincidence that Mr. Burden died on the same day that ended the career of his intimate friend, Boden. Mr. Burden was born in Belfast in 1829, and was educated to the profession of a civil engineer. In that capacity he visited Venezuela, some fifteen years ago, and there contracted a disease of the lungs, from which he never permanently recovered. Although not in the first rank of chess-players, Mr. Burden was always a dangerous adversary for any "first-rate," and his contests with Andersen, Buckle, Barnes, Boden, Wormald—all, alas! passed masters of chess—in the good old days of the "Divan in the Strand," are remarkable examples of brilliant play. Mr. Burden had a singularly many-sided mind. He was an excellent scholar, chemist, and mathematician, and was reckoned among the best whist-players of the "Junior Portland." He was also above amateur force in billiards, and wrote on all these subjects with force and precision. For some years past Mr. Burden's delicate health obliged him to withdraw from the practice of the arts in which he was so accomplished, and from the society of his many friends in London. For these facts we are indebted to Mr. Charles Mossop.

A match between the Alexandra and Shaftesbury clubs was played at Poplar on the 11th inst.; eight a side, and it resulted in a draw.

The Chessplayers' Chronicle of last week contained a proposal from Herr Steinits to play Herren Zukertort and Hoffer in consultation, a match of eleven games, yielding the allies the odds of two. The boldness of the challenge is somewhat qualified by an offer to take the same odds, if the recipients of this defiance think fit to give them. Whatever way such a match may be arranged, its result cannot fail to edify the chess world.

A third edition of Mr. Cook's "Synopsis of the Openings" has just been published by Mr. Morgan, 23, Great Queen-street. The addition of new variations in the open games and a more extended notice of what are called irregular openings, has called for a considerable enlargement of the original work, which has now grown into a goodly volume of 140 pages. We have not space here to refer to the openings in detail, but we can confidently recommend this little book to all students of chess desirous of becoming acquainted with the latest discoveries in the theory of the game.

La Vie Moderne, a new Parisian illustrated journal, commenced a series of chess articles on the 21st inst., under the direction of one of the ablest chess analysts of the present day, M. Rosenthal. The column will be devoted to problems, games, and news of the chess world, and the support of many Continental experts has already been secured in aid of the new enterprise. M. Rosenthal opens the campaign with two games amply, but judiciously, annotated, and a fine problem by M. Kondeik, of Prague. Among the items of news, we note that another tourney is being arranged at the Café de la Régence, for a prize of one hundred francs, offered by the proprietors of that establishment.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Aug. 6, 1879), together with a codicil (dated Oct. 11, 1879), of Colonel Joicey, M.P., D.L., late of Newton Hall, near Stocksfield-on-Tyne, in the county of Northumberland, member of Parliament for North Durham, was proved in the principal registry on Jan. 17 inst. by James Joicey, Esq., of Orchard House, Gateshead, the nephew of the deceased, and Charles Henry Ewen, of Blyth, in the county of Northumberland, engineer, the executors therein named; the personal effects, after deducting sums comprised in various settlements, being sworn under £678,900. The testator appoints the said James Joicey and Charles Henry Ewen, executors and trustees, and also appoints them and his wife, Rosandra Joicey, during her widowhood, guardians of his infant children. After confirming the settlements made in favour of his late brother James Joicey, and upon his wife in contemplation of and subsequent to his marriage, the testator bequeaths to his wife such annual sum as, together with the income under the two settlements already made upon her, shall amount to the annual sum of £5000 during her widowhood, and in the event of her second marriage to the sum of £1000. The testator bequeaths to his wife an immediate legacy of £2000, and all trinkets, jewels, ornaments of the person and paraphernalia worn or used by her during his lifetime, together with the housekeeping stores and provisions about the mansion house of Newton Hall. Testator devises his mansion house, grounds, and park of Newton Hall, with the offices and appurtenances, to his trustees, to the use of his wife during her widowhood. He also bequeaths to his wife during her widowhood the use and enjoyment of all his furniture, plate, china, glass, books, linen, prints, pictures, and other articles of domestic use and enjoyment at Newton Hall during her widowhood, and afterwards directs certain portions thereof to be held as heirlooms with his Newton Hall estate. Testator bequeaths to his sister Jane Joicey an annuity of £300, and to his sister Mrs. Humble an annuity of £200. He recites that his late brother and himself, having made certain settlements upon or for the benefit of the children of their sister Ann Humble, and of the children of their brother, James Joicey, he makes no further provision for them by his will. Testator devises all his real estate to trustees upon trust, after the death or second marriage of his wife, as to his Newton Hall estate, his Stelling Hall estate, and his other real estates in Northumberland, on the north side of the river Tyne, to the use of his eldest daughter and her issue male, with remainders to and amongst his three other daughters. To each of his three other daughters testator bequeaths the sum of £50,000 upon trust for herself and her children, with limitations amongst them; and, subject thereto, he bequeaths all the residue of his real and personal estate upon the trusts in his will declared in favour of his four daughters and their issue. By his codicil testator bequeaths to each of his trustees, so long as they shall hold the office and discharge the duties, the annual sum of £100.

The will and codicil (both dated June 28, 1881) of Mr. James Lake, J.P., late of Newlands Teynham, Kent, who died on Oct. 15 last, were proved on the 12th inst. by Robert Lake, Richard Knight, and Benjamin Greene Lake, the executors, the value of the personal estate amounting to over £50,000. The testator bequeaths £1000 to the Kent and Canterbury Hospital, Canterbury; £5000 upon trust for each of his nieces, Mrs. Elizabeth Grayling and Mrs. Hinton; and legacies and annuities to nephews, nieces, indoor and outdoor servants, and others. Chekes Court estate he devises upon trust for his nephew William Lake for life, then for his wife for life, and on the death of the survivor for his children, except his son William, already provided for by his grandfather. His executor Mr. Robert Lake is to have the option of purchasing the Newlands estate at one fourth less than the value to be fixed by valuation. As to the residue of his property, real and personal, he leaves one third to certain of the descendants of his late sister Mrs. Prentiss, one third to the children of his late sister Mrs. Denne, and one third (less £100) to the children of his sister Mrs. Robert Lake. The deceased was one of the first directors of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway.

The will (dated Sept. 16, 1879) of Mr. William Reynolds Anstice, late of Ironbridge, Salop, ironmaster, who died on July 28 last, was proved on the 16th ult. by John Arthur Anstice and Richard Edmund Anstice, the nephews, the executors, the value of the personal estate exceeding £44,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife, Mrs. Helen Anstice, £1000, with power to appoint to herself any further sum up to £1500, and his wines, jewellery, horses and carriages; the residue of his property is to be held upon trust for his wife for life; at her death annuities are given to his wife's sister, and to an old servant, and legacies to his sister, nephews, and nieces. The ultimate residue he gives to his four nephews, Robert Henry Anstice, John Arthur Anstice, Richard Edmund Anstice, and William Anstice.

The will (dated Dec. 3, 1878), with two codicils (dated June 18 and Oct. 29, 1881), of Mr. John Bird, late of Holly Lodge, Brook-green, Hammersmith, who died on Nov. 3 last, was proved on the 20th ult. by Mrs. Ellen Mary Bird, the widow, Thomas Lawrence Read, and Arthur Bird, the executors, the personal estate exceeding £30,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife £500 and all his furniture and household effects, and a complimentary legacy to his executor, Mr. Read. A large number of freehold and leasehold houses are distributed specifically among his sons and daughters. The residue of his real and personal property is to be held upon trust for his wife for life, and then for his sons, as she shall appoint.

The will (dated Oct. 8, 1878), with a codicil (dated Oct. 13, 1881), of Mr. Edward Cushee, late of Verandah Cottage, No. 294, Holloway-road, who died on Oct. 23 last, was proved on the 19th ult. by William Hollingsworth, William Hollingsworth, jun., Ambrose James Dixon, and John Layton, the executors, the personal estate amounting to a little more than £12,500. The testator bequeaths £1000 Consols to the Great Northern Hospital; £1000 Consols to the Drinking Fountain Association for the purpose of erecting five drinking fountains and five troughs in the parish of Islington; £500 Consols each to the Master Boot and Shoe Makers' Provident Benevolent Institution, the Shipwrecked Fishermen and Mariners' Royal Benevolent Institution, the Metropolitan Benefit Societies' Asylum, Balls-pond, the Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, City-road, the Aged Pilgrims' Society Asylum, Hornsey-lane, the Alexandra Orphanage, Hornsey-lane, the London Hospital, Whitechapel, and the Industrial Home and Boys' School, Copenhagen-street; and £300 like stock to the North London Nursing Association, Camden-road.

The will (dated Nov. 3, 1881) of Mr. James Henry Deakin, J.P., late of No. 3, Queensberry-place, South Kensington, barrister-at-law, who died on Nov. 8 last, at Werrington Park, Cornwall, was proved on the 28th ult. by John Deakin and Edward Deakin, the brothers, and Samuel Goodwin, the executors, the personal estate being over £6000. The testator leaves £100 to his wife, Mrs. Jane Deakin, and the residue of his estate, real and personal, upon trust for her for life, and then for all his children. The deceased was, from July, 1874, to February, 1877, M.P. for Launceston, in the Conservative interest.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS
have gained the HIGHEST AWARDS at all the recent INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITIONS, including the Two Gold Medals for Uprights and Grands, Melbourne, 1881; the First Prize, Queensland, 1880; the Two First Special Prizes, Sydney, 1880; the Legion of Honour, Paris, 1878, &c.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS' PIANOS
for SALE, HIRE, and on the THREE YEARS' SYSTEM.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
The principal of the previous honours gained by the BRINSMEAD PIANOS are:—
THE DIPLOMA OF HONOUR and GOLD MEDAL, South Africa, 1877.
THE GRAND MEDAL OF HONOUR and DIPLOMA OF MERIT, Philadelphia, 1876.
THE DIPLOMA OF HONOUR, Paris 1874, and the HONORARY MEMBERSHIP OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF FRANCE.
THE GOLD MEDAL, Paris, 1870.
THE DIPLOMA OF EXTRAORDINARY MERIT, Netherlands International Exhibition, 1883.
THE MEDAL OF HONOUR, Paris, 1867.
THE PRIZE MEDAL, London, 1862, &c.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
SOSTENENTE PIANOS,
for Extreme Climates,
With the Perfect Check Repeater Action,
Patented 1862, 1863, 1871, 1876, and 1881, throughout Europe and America.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Paris, Nov. 4, 1878.
"I have attentively examined the beautiful pianos of Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons that are exhibited at the Paris International Exhibition of 1878. I consider them to be exceptional in the case with which gradations of sound can be produced, from the softest to the most powerful tones. These excellent pianos merit the approbation of all artists, as the tone is full as well as sustained, and the touch is of perfect evenness throughout its entire range, answering to very requirement of the pianist."
"Ch. Gounod."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Paris, Sept. 8, 1878.
"We, the undersigned, certify that, after having seen and most conscientiously examined the English Pianos at the Universal Exhibition of 1878, we find that the piano belongs to the Grand Pianos of the house of Brinsmead."
"NICHOLAS RUSSWYCK,
"D. MASSE,
"Chevaliers d'Ordre de KONTSEI, Court Musicians to the Emperor of Germany."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"I have pleasure in expressing my opinion that the Paris Exhibition Model Grand Pianos of Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons are unsurpassed. The tone is deliciously sweet, sustained, and extraordinarily powerful; the touch responds to the faintest and to the most trying strains on it, and the workmanship is simply perfect."
"W. Kuss."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Illustrated London News."
"The principle of the Brinsmead firm is to give the best piano of its kind the best of materials, the best of care, the best of taste, and the best of finish, and this is why the manufacture in Kentish Town sends down to Wigmore-street as many as one hundred perfect pianos, sustained in tone, elastic in touch, with equal and responsive touch, and, in fact, as near as possible to that ideal that all musicians must require. A thing of beauty that is a joy for ever."
"Daily Chronicle."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"In tone the instrument is exceedingly rich and sweet, and in touch the very perfection of lightness. Messrs. Brinsmead may certainly be congratulated upon their success."
"Morning Advertiser."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"The Legion of Honour. In addition to the other distinctions awarded to Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons at the Paris Exhibition of 1878, the founder of the firm has been created Chevalier of the Legion of Honour."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Daily News."
"A new Pianoforte, recently manufactured by Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons, claims notice, not only on account of its beauty and richness of tone, but especially for some ingenious mechanical novelties, the most important being the addition of a third pedal, by means of which the sound of any note or notes may be almost indefinitely prolonged at the will of the player. Thus bass notes may be sustained after being struck by the left hand, which may then be taken away, and, with the right hand, may execute the most brilliant staccato passages, thus giving almost the effect of four hands. The patent 'check-repeater action,' a speciality of Messrs. Brinsmead, enables the performer to command with ease the most rapid reiteration of the same note; the facility of the key movement in general being such that glissando passages can be executed with such perfect ease as to render them practicable with the lightest touch. The volume of tone is intensified by a peculiar construction of the sounding-board, another improvement being the system of bracing, by which the vibrations are increased and rendered sympathetic. The Pianoforte is capable of all degrees of delicacy and power, its massive structure rendering it less liable to get out of tune than usual; and the instrument is altogether calculated to extend the reputation of its makers."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PIANOS
may be obtained of all the principal Musicians.
Prices from 37 guineas to 350 guineas.
18, 20, WIGMORE-STREET, LONDON, W.,
and
THE "BRINSMEAD WORKS,"
GRAFTON-ROAD, KENTISH TOWN, N.W.
ILLUSTRATED LISTS FREE.
EVERY PIANO GUARANTEED FOR FIVE YEARS.

PETER ROBINSON'S
COURT and GENERAL MOURNING
WAREHOUSE,
REGENT-STREET.
FREE OF CHARGE.—MOURNING.
Upon receipt of letter or telegram,
Goods will be forwarded, free of extra charge, for selection, to any part of England (with Dressmaker, if desired); or Patterns will be sent, with Book of Illustrations, by first post.
THE COURT and GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE,
25 to 27, REGENT-STREET, LONDON.
The Largest Mourning Warehouse in Europe.

JANUARY, 1892.
STOCK-TAKING SALE.
GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICE
of Goods in all Departments.
For ONE MONTH only.

FURTHER REDUCTIONS.
THE WHOLE STOCK OF
MR. BARKER,
of the Westbourne-grove
Mourning Warehouse,
IS NOW ON SALE,
at less than HALF PRICE,
AT PETER ROBINSON'S
MOURNING WAREHOUSE,
Regent-street.
Catalogues of the Sale free.

EVENING, DINNER, and BALL DRESSES.
A Magnificent Collection
of Handsome Evening Dresses,
all considerably Reduced in Price
during the Sale.
Black Satin Trimmed Lace, 3½ guineas.
Black Spanish Net Trimmed Satin, 2½ guineas.
Brussels Net, at 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 4s. 6d.
Non-Crushing Tulle, 4s.
Cream and Ivory Llama and Nuns' Cloth Trimmed Lace,
3s. 6d. and 3s. 9d.
Striped Grosgrain, 18s. 9d.
All with ample Materials for Bodices.
Sketches free.
PETER ROBINSON, MOURNING WAREHOUSE,
REGENT-STREET, LONDON.

LATEST from "LE FOLLET."
"Of all annoyances, as connected with 'la toilette,' none is greater than the purchase of some material apparently the 'very thing' required, the subsequent finding that 'appearances are deceptive,' and money, time, and trouble have all been wasted in the acquirement of an article whose beauty was transient, and durability nil.
Since our first recommendation of the
'LOUIS' VELVETEEN,
every purchaser has reiterated the praise we bestowed.
Many makers would have contented themselves with having thus gained public favour; but the great competition in Velveteens, and the praiseworthy determination not to be surpassed, have led the manufacturer of the
'LOUIS' VELVETEEN
to be constantly seeking improvements, which have resulted in the production of the
GENUINE WOVEN FAST PILE, WITH
'GENOA FACE.'
The strictest examiner may try every test of touch and sight without discovering these are other than the Genoa velvets they so closely resemble; while the peculiar arrangements resulting in the 'fast woven pile' enable them to stand interminable and rough wear, that would ruin real velvets at four times the price."
N.B.—Every yard of the genuine bears the name
"LOUIS."

NICHOLSON'S
ANNUAL WINTER
CLEARANCE SALE
OF LADIES' WEARING APPAREL and DRAPERY
of every description is now proceeding, and will be continued until Feb. 1, 1892.
GOODS IN ALL DEPARTMENTS ARE GREATLY
REDUCED IN PRICE.
A considerable saving may be effected by selections from the Stock as now reduced.
DETAILED CATALOGUES GRATIS ON APPLICATION,
OR SENT POST-FREE
50 to 53, ST. PAUL'S-CHURCHYARD.

SHETLAND SHAWLS.—The Marvel, two yards square, White, 1s. 10d.; Black, Grey, or Cardinal, 2s. The Zephyr, richly tinted, White, 3s. 3d.; Black or Cardinal, 3s. 6d., post-free.—ROBINSON and CLEAVER, Belfast.
CAMBRIC POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS.
REAL IRISH CAMBRIC.—ALL PURE FLAX.
Children's .. 2s. 6d. per doz. Hemstitched.
Ladies' .. 3s. 3d. .. Ladies' .. 4s. 9d. per doz.
Gent's .. 4s. 10d. .. Gent's .. 5s. 4d.
"The Cambrics of Robinson and Cleaver have a world-wide fame."—The Queen's Samples and Price-List free.
ROBINSON & CLEAVER, Manufacturers to the Queen, Belfast.

SHIRTS.—FORD'S EUREKA DRESS.
A large stock now ready; ten different sizes, to wear with separate collars, or with collars attached, and with one or three stud-holes in front; all specially prepared for evening wear. 7s. 6d. to 9s. 6d. each.—R. FORD and CO., 41, Poultry, London.
IMPROVED SPECTACLES.—Mr. HENRY LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, PERSONALLY adapts his Improved Spectacles at his residence, 3, Endeavour-gate, Euston-sq., daily, Ten till Four (Saturdays excepted). Testimonials from Sir Julius Benedict, John Lowe, Esq., M.P., J.P., Lynn, Physician to H.R.H. Prince of Wales; Ven. Archdeacon Palmer, Clifton; Lieut.-General Macmillan, Brentwood; Rev. Mother Abbess, S. Mary's Abbey, Hendon; Rev. Joseph Hargreaves, Uxbridge, &c.; and hundreds of others, in Mr. Laurance's Pamphlet, "Spectacles, their Use and Abuse," post-free.

FREE TO EVERYBODY.
FREE TO EVERYBODY.
FREE TO EVERYBODY.
FREE TO EVERYBODY.
read by everybody. Valuable Hints to guide persons wishing to promote growth of Hair, whether in producing Whiskers and Moustaches, curing Baldness, or arresting the falling of weak hair. See an illustrated tract, entitled "CULTIVATION OF HAIR," by JOHN LATREILLE, 20, Finchley-road, Waltham, Surrey, who will send it by post, free of charge, to all persons forwarding names and addresses.

THE PERFECTION OF PREPARED COCOA.
TAYLOR BROTHERS'
"MARAVILLA" COCOA.
Sold in tin-lined Packets only, by all Grocers.

TAYLOR BROTHERS call the attention of consumers to the high sustaining and nutritive powers possessed by MARAVILLA COCOA and MARAVILLA COCOA ESSENCE. These articles being prepared with great judgment and skill from the choicest growths of the Trinidad and South American estates, compare advantageously with the productions offered by other houses, and a trial is strongly recommended before a preference is finally given to any other description.

TAYLOR BROTHERS, MARAVILLA, HOMOPATHIC, ROCK, FLAKE, and PEARL COCOA MANUFACTURERS, Brick-lane and Wentworth-street Steam Mills, Spitalfields, London.

"A PURE COCOA OF THE CONSISTENCY OF TEA."

TAYLOR BROTHERS'
"MARAVILLA" COCOA ESSENCE.
Sold in Tins and tin-lined Packets only, by all Grocers.

SCHWEITZER'S COCOATINA.
Anti-Dyspeptic Cocoa or Chocolate Powder.
Guaranteed Pure Soluble Cocoa, with excess of Fat extracted. Four times the strength of Cocoa "Thickener," and Weakens with Arrowroot, Starch, &c.
The faculty pronounce it the most nutritious, perfectly digestible Beverage for "BREAKFAST, LUNCHEON, or SUPPER." Keeps in all climates. Requires no cooking. A teaspoonful to Breakfast Cup, costing less than a halfpenny. Samples gratis. In Air-Tight Tins, at 1s. 6d., 2s., &c., by Chemists and Grocers. H. SCHWEITZER and CO., 10, Adam-street, London, W.O.

FRY'S FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.
"A most delicious and valuable article."—Standard.
PURE COCOA ONLY.
FRY'S COCOA EXTRACT.
"Strictly pure."—W. W. STODDART, F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol. FIFTEEN PRIZE MEDALS.

CHOCOLAT MENIER.
Awarded the GRAND DIPLOMA OF HONOUR.

CHOCOLAT MENIER, in ½ lb. and ¼ lb. Packets.
For BREAKFAST and SUPPER.

CHOCOLAT MENIER.—Awarded Twenty PRIZE MEDALS.
Consumption annually exceeds 18,000,000 lbs.

CHOCOLAT MENIER.
Paris, London, New York.
Sold Everywhere.

THE ESSEX FLOUR AND GRAIN COMPANY, Liverpool-road, London, N., supply the best goods only. Flour: Whites for Pastry, per 56 lb., 10s.; House-holds, for Bread making, 9s. 4d.; Wheat Meal for Brown Bread, 8s. 4d.; Best Scotch Oatmeal for Porridge, per 14 lb., 3s.; American Hominy, 2s. 8d.; Barley, Buck Wheat, Maize, and Mixed Corn for Poultry, per bushel, 5s.; Mashing, 2s.; Bran, 1s.; Pearl Split Peas, per peck, 3s.; Split Egyptian Lentils, 3s.; Meat Biscuits, per 14 lb., 2s. 6d.; Barley Meal, per 48 lb., 5s.; Lentil Flour, per 14 lb., 4s.; per 14 lb., 6s. All other kinds of Grain and Seeds. Price-List on application. Special quotations for large orders. P.O.O. and Cheques payable to George Young.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR
IS A WORLD-WIDE NECESSARY.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR
FOR THE NURSERY.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR
FOR THE FAMILY TABLE.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR
FOR THE SICK ROOM.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR
HAS A WORLD-WIDE REPUTATION.

BORWICK'S BAKING POWDER.
for Bread, Cakes, Pies, and Puddings.
BORWICK'S BAKING POWDER.
Four Gold Medals. 600,000 Packages Sold Weekly.

GENUINE DUBLIN WHISKY.
THE MOST WHOLESOME OF ALL SPIRITS.
DUBLIN WHISKY, Distilled by Messrs. JOHN JAMESON and SON, GEORGE ROE and CO., WILLIAM JAMESON and CO., and JOHN POWER and SON, can be obtained in Wood by wholesale merchants and dealers, direct from their respective distilleries.

CHAS. CODD'S ORANGE CHAMPAGNE
Is made simply from oranges. It is a light and wholesome tonic, and being free from chemicals as well as spirit, it is the purest and best of the non-alcoholic drinks. Price, in London, in large champagne bottles, 7s. per dozen; in small, 4s. Bottles charged 2s., and same allowed when returned.—C. Codd and Co., 79, Copenhagen-street, London. Sold by all Grocers, Chemists, and Wine Merchants.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR.
If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath.
Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world: it thoroughly cleanses partially decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalcules," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly delicious to the taste and as harmless as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.
SUBSTANTIAL ARTISTIC FURNITURE
(Registered).
OETZMANN and CO.,
HAMPSTEAD-ROAD,
NEAR TOTTENHAM-COURT-ROAD.
CARPETS.—OETZMANN and CO.
FLOOR-CLOTHS, LINOLEUMS,
DINING-ROOM FURNITURE,
DRAWING-ROOM FURNITURE,
BED-ROOM FURNITURE.
BEDSTEADS, BEDDING,
DRAPERY, LINENS, &c.
FURNISHING IRONMONGERY,
ELECTRO-PLATE and CUTLERY,
KITCHEN REQUISITES,
CHINA, GLASS.—OETZMANN and CO.
PICTURES, BRONZES, &c.
CLOCKS, LAMPS, &c.
PIANOS.—OETZMANN and CO.
ARTISTIC PAPERHANGINGS,
PAINTING, DECORATING, &c.,
GAS-FITTINGS, &c.

HOUSES TO BE LET OR SOLD.
REMOVALS by ROAD, RAIL, or SEA.
POSTAL ORDER DEPARTMENT.
SHIPPING DEPARTMENT.
DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE,
THE BEST FURNISHING GUIDE
EXTANT,
GRATIS and POST-FREE,
OETZMANN and CO.,
NOS. 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79,
OETZMANN and CO.,
HAMPSTEAD-ROAD, LONDON.

D'ALMAINE'S PIANOS HALF PRICE.
In consequence of a change of partnership, the whole of this splendid stock, perfected with all the improvements of the day, by this long-standing firm of 100 years' reputation, and, in order to effect a speedy sale, the easiest terms arranged, with seven years' warranty. Trichord Cottages from hire, or taken in exchange, £10 to £12.
Class 0, £14 | Class 2, £20 | Class 4, £26 | Class 6, £35
Class 1, £17 | Class 3, £23 | Class 5, £30 | Class 7, £40
American Organs from £5.
91, Finsbury-pavement, Moorgate.

PIANOFORTES for HIRE or for SALE, from 25 guineas upwards.—JOHN BROADWOOD and SONS, 33, Great Pulteney-street, Golden-square, W. Manufacturing, 45, Horseferry-road, Westminster.

£20 SCHOOL-ROOM PIANO
(Co-operative price for cash). Seven octaves—strong, sound, and substantial. Adapted for hard practice. Carefully packed free, and sent to any part. Drawings gratis.
THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker-street.

£35.—There is nothing in London—nor, in fact, in all England—to be compared to the elegantly carved DRAWING-ROOM TRICHORD COTTAGE PIANOFORTE, with Cabriole Truss Legs, which is sold for £35 by THOMAS OETZMANN and CO., 27, Baker-street, Portman-sq.

MUSICAL BOX DÉPÔTS, 22, Ludgate-hill, and 66, Cheapside.—Most extensive variety in London. Large sizes, ordinary make, four air, £2 2s.; six, £2 12s.; and eight air, £3 3s. Ditto, by Nicole Frère, £1 per air; superb instruments, from £4 to £280. Choicest Music and newest accompaniments.—Catalogues of Prices and Prices gratis on application to WALES and McCULLOCH, as above.

BUTLER'S MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.
Violins, Concertinas, Harmoniums, Pianos, Flutes, Clarinettes, Flageolles, Guitars, Banjos, Accordions, Fiddles, Cornets, Drums, and Band Instruments. Largest Assortment in the Kingdom at G. BUTLER'S, 29, Haymarket, London. Illustrated Catalogue, 50 pages, post-free.

THE SEWELL'S KEYLESS WATCHES,
Prize Medals, London, Paris, and Philadelphia. Damp and Dust-proof, 18-carat cases, adjusted and compensated for all climates. £10 10s., £14 14s., and £25; Ladies', £7 7s., £10 10s., and £14 14s.; in silver cases, for Ladies or Gentlemen, £5 5s., £6 6s., and £8 8s. Forwarded on receipt of remittance.—J. Sewell, 30, Cornhill, London; and 61, South Castle-street, Liverpool. Illustrated Catalogue free.

WALKER'S CRYSTAL CASE WATCHES are superseding all others. Price Mails—London, 1892; Paris, 1887. Silver Watches, from £14s.; Gold, from £25s. Price-List sent free.—77, Cornhill; 230, Regent-street; and 75, Strand.

ELKINGTON and CO.
ELECTRO PLATE.
SILVER PLATE.
CLOCKS and BRONZES.

ELKINGTON and CO.
TESTIMONIAL PLATE.
CUTLERY, &c.
Illustrated Catalogues post-free.
ELKINGTON and CO., 22, Regent-st.; or 52, Moorgate-st., City.

GARDNER'S DINNER and TABLE GLASS SERVICES. Free, graceful, and original designs, of unequalled value. Dinner Services, from 21s. Table Glass Services, of the best Crystal, for twelve persons, complete, 65s. Cash discount, 15 per cent. Coloured and Photographic Sheets and Illustrated Glass Catalogues post-free.
453 and 454, West Strand, Charing-cross.

D. HULETT.—GASOLIERS in CRYSTAL GLASS and ORMOLU or BRONZE. Medieval Fittings. A large Stock always on View. Every article marked with plain figures.—Manufactory, 55 and 56, High Holborn.

JEWEL ROBBERIES PREVENTED.
J. TANN'S RELIANCE SAFES have never failed to resist the attempts of the most determined burglars. Fire-Resisting Safes, 55 lbs. Lists free.—11, Newgate-street, E.C.

ENVIRONS OF COLOMBO.—SEE PAGE 90.

1. Field Dressing. 2. Lifting Wounded. 3. Carrying Wounded. 4. Stretcher Drill. 5. Lifting Stretchers. 6. Inspecting Wounded. 7. Presenting Certificates.

VOLUNTEER AMBULANCE DRILL AT GUILDHALL.—SEE PAGE 90.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.

No. 2231.—VOL. LXXX.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1882.

WITH TWO SUPPLEMENTS ^{SIXPENCE.}
By Post, 6d.

1. Dissolving Views: The Mayor's Portrait.

2. Unusual occupants of the Mayor's chair.

3. "Well, my dear, what's your name?"

4. Spectators of the Dance.

SKETCHES AT THE MAYOR'S JUVENILE BALL AT THE MANCHESTER TOWNHALL.—SEE PAGE 102.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

"They've got 'em on!"—the boxing-gloves, the fencers' masks, the quarter-staves, the rapiers, all ready for "the carte and the tierce, and the reason demonstrative." This is "writ figurative," as Artemus Ward would have said. I really mean that in the February number of Temple Bar (a magazine for which I have an enduring fondness: seeing that it is one of my own children) there is a furious polemos going on between Miss Frances Power Cobbe, Lady Shelley, and the anonymous writer of a very clever article on the late Mr. E. J. Trelawny, which appeared in a recent number of "the Bar." The questions at issue are Lord Byron's club foot, and the ashes of Shelley's heart. The Byron business is, as Miss Cobbe very aptly says, a "horrid one;" so, for the details of the story I must refer you to the current issue of T.B. As regards the poet of the "Revolt of Islam," Lady Shelley writes (in the third person, and with the disdainful dignity of the Prophet Mahomet addressing a blackbeetle) to stigmatise as "an atrocious falsehood" some statement made about Shelley's heart.

Mem.: The writer of the impugned article on Mr. Trelawny sums up his reply to her Ladyship's complaint with a general observation that people who live in glass houses should not throw stones. The gentleman is, colloquially, a little behind the age. The most modern version of the proverb is (I think I have pointed this out before) "that Photographers oughtn't to shy bricks."

Why on earth cannot people leave poor Byron's foot and Shelley's heart alone? In this most unseemly controversy Mr. E. J. Trelawny is branded as a shameless teller of fibs; and the names of Mrs. Shelley, Mrs. Williams, Leigh Hunt, and the late Mr. George Finlay, author of the "History of Modern Greece," are all dragged in, à tort et à travers. Does it matter, at this time of day, whether the Bard of Childe Harold was a centipede or a cul-de-jatte? Whether he was a Briareus or a twin brother of Miss Biffin? Who troubles himself now about Pope's stays and Scarron's hump, and Heine's paralysis, and Rogers's tête de mort?

But with Miss Frances Power Cobbe I would have one little word, and I would pluck one very small crow. What does the lady mean by saying that Byron saw through "the sham patriotism and mercenary schemes of his Greek allies"? The Greek leaders with whom Lord Byron came in contact at Missolonghi squabbled and wrangled among themselves a good deal; and Byron did his best to reconcile their jealousies and cross-purposes. But to taunt these gallant men with being sham patriots and mercenary schemers is wickedly and cruelly unjust. They were all fighting with bowstrings round their necks. Does Miss Cobbe mean to imply that they were only pretending to war with the Turks for the purpose of swindling an English nobleman and embezzling the proceeds of the Greek Loan? That would have been sham patriotism and mercenary scheming with a vengeance. Hear what Macaulay says of the Greeks of 'twenty-four:—

All the vices which oppression generates, the abject vices which it generates in those who submit to it, the ferocious vices which it generates in those who struggle against it, had deformed the character of that miserable race. The valour which had won the great battle of human civilisation, which had saved Europe, which had subjugated Asia, lingered only among pirates and robbers. . . . On a sudden this degraded people had risen on their oppressors. Discouraged or betrayed by the surrounding potentates, they had found in themselves something of that which might well supply the place of all foreign assistance, something of the energy of their fathers.—"Critical and Historical Essays," p. 146.

A capital omicron disastrously dropped out of the name of Dante in the genitive case, in that little paragraph about Musurus Pasha's translation of the "Inferno" into Greek verse. In another "Echo," the world-famed Brevoort House at New York became the "Brevoort" House. Ladies and gentlemen—Hellenic scholars at Lake Memphremagog, American readers at Kalamazoo—it was all in consequence of the Fog. All dwellers in Central London must be shuddering, now, at the remembrance of the Egyptian darkness which overspread the streets between six and seven p.m. on Wednesday; which entered the houses and blurred the sheen of the gas; dimmed your spectacles, and incited you to cough and sneeze while you were correcting your proofs. I am parcel blind, at the best of times, and generally, when I am reading for press, mistake an r for a v, and a p for a q: but on this occasion the compositors and readers had promised to do their very best for me. If a blunder crept in, it was myself and the Fog, and not they, who were to blame.

I noted the other day, in that most interesting and most melancholy book, "The Correspondence and Table Talk of Benjamin Robert Haydon," the following:

X—made his fortune by those two children in L—Cathedral. One day, calling on him, I was shown into his work-room, and on a table I saw a design for those very children by Stothard. I could swear to it. . . . A friend of mine was at a lock-up house to be bail for another. While he was there in walked Stothard, arrested by his coal merchant for a bill of £34. He was on his way to the Academy as Visitor when this happened. My friend went up to him and said, "I know you: what can I do?" and got Stothard out in time to attend to his duties. X—was then drinking champagne at luncheon, had employment for life, and will leave a large fortune at his death—all in consequence of Stothard's genius; while the possessor of the powers by which X—rises is arrested by a coal merchant, and escapes into the Academy as librarian to eke out a living.

Some allowance must be made for the normally embittered feelings of the unjustly neglected and disappointed Haydon (we should have had no Schools of Design in England but for his persistent and continuously snubbed efforts); but the story of the arrest of Stothard at the suit of a coal merchant is plain matter of fact. Stothard lived to be nearly eighty years of age. He was a painter of genius and capacity; as a book-illustrator he was astonishingly prolific, and the engravings from his drawings "run into thousands." Those engravings are fetching very large prices, just now.

Turn from this somewhat dismal picture to the magnificent panorama of the British Royal Academician as he is, published by the British and Foreign Artists' Association and by Messrs. Chapman and Hall, and of which work the three first sections are now before me. They comprise exhaustive biographies of Sir Frederick Leighton, P.R.A., Mr. John Everett Millais, R.A., and Mr. Hubert Herkomer, A.R.A. Other biographies are to follow of Mr. G. F. Watts, Sir John Gilbert, Mr. Alma Tadema, Mr. E. Burne Jones, Mr. J. C. Hook; and, among foreign masters, of MM. Meissonnier, Gérôme, Israels, Menzel, Makart, Gallait, Baudry, and Piloty. The work is edited by M. F. G. Dumas, the well-known editor of the Illustrated Catalogue of the Paris Salon.

But it is not only sumptuous paper and print, splendid etchings after the works of the three painters named, and fac-similes of original drawings by them, that surprise me. I am much more astounded by the elaborate wood engravings representing the exterior and the interior of the palaces—they are nothing less—in which the British Royal Academician as he is, condescends to dwell. Sir Frederick Leighton seems to inhabit a mansion partaking in its architecture and decoration in about equal proportions of the characteristics of the Alhambra at Granada and the Alcazar at Seville, with just a savour of the Farnesina at Rome and the House of Pansa at Pompeii. The palace occupied by Mr. Millais is a mélange of the Pompeian, the Renaissance, and the Early English styles; while Mr. Hubert Herkomer, to judge from the wood-cut, lives in a Gothic Schloss, grand enough for Rudolph of Hapsburg. Well, Raffaello kept the state of a prince, and twenty gentlemen rode in the train of Rubens. Stothard and Wilson, Barry and Morland, Hilton and Harlow were born in the Middle Period, when painters were nearly as poor as authors.

A writer in some Tory publication has been accusing Mr. Gladstone of "coining" the compound word "blood-guiltiness." Of course a clergyman was immediately to the front with a letter to the papers pointing out that "Deliver me from blood-guiltiness" occurs in the Fifty-First Psalm. But here comes the curious part of the matter. There is only one citation of "blood-guiltiness" in the Bible. In Shakespeare "blood-guiltiness" makes no appearance; but "blood-guiltiness" does occur in Spenser, in the nineteenth stanza of the seventh canto of "The Faerie Queene":—

"Me list not," said the Elfin Knight, "I leave
Thing offered till I know it well be gott;
Ne wote I but thou didst these goods bereave
From rightful owner by unrighteous lott,
Or that blood-guiltiness or guile them blott."

I am not a collector of old Bibles. But it might be worth the while of those who are so fortunate as to possess English translations anterior to the Authorised Version (which was not published until 1611, thirteen years after the death of Spenser) to make inquiry after "blood-guiltiness." It must be remembered that the Authorised Version of the Old Testament was rendered directly from the Hebrew, whereas most of the older translations were mainly taken from the Latin Vulgate.

The beautiful Mrs. Langtry is not the only actress who in that which was practically a first professional appearance (for the "Stoops to Conquer" matinée, in aid of the Royal General Theatrical Fund, was only a coup d'essai so far as Mrs. Langtry was concerned) has charmed a London audience by going through the military exercise on the stage. In the year 1750 the famous Amazon Hannah Snell, who had served the King both by sea and land, and had more than once been severely wounded in action, was persuaded to try her fortune as a public performer. She had a handsome person and a good voice, and she obtained an engagement at the Royalty Theatre in Wellclose-square, where she appeared in the character of Bill Bobstay, a sailor. She also represented Firelock, a soldier; and in the last-named character "went through the manual and platoon exercise in a most masterly and perfect manner."

But the heroic Hannah did not long continue to cultivate the Thespian art. In consideration of the gallantry which she had exhibited at the siege of Pondicherry, a comfortable pension was settled on her by the Government, and she gracefully retired into private life. I am sorry (for the sake of the æsthetic and the romantic) to add that the English Joan of Arc opened a public-house by the sign of "The Female Warrior," at Wapping, and that she eventually married a respectable carpenter.

That estimable section of the Anglican clergy the Curates have formed an Alliance, the object of which is to agitate for fixity of tenure and an amelioration of the diocesan status of the unbefitted clergy. To put the matter more plainly, there some five thousand curates, assisting rectors and vicars in parochial work and receiving for the same salaries ranging between one hundred and one hundred and fifty pounds per annum. Then there are about five thousand more curates "unattached"; but a very large proportion of these, I should say, must be assistant masters in schools. The "attached" curates plead that they are liable to dismissal at the capricious will of their employers, and that they ought, in justice, to be irremovable, and to be paid not directly by the incumbent but out of a diocesan fund. The Alliance held a very numerous meeting in Clerkenwell parish vestry-room on Friday week, and a few days afterwards the Times gave the Alliance a leading article, in which a liberal allowance of buckets of cold water was administered to the "ecclesiastical hirelings," as Jeremy Collier bitterly complains that the curates of his time were called.

The term "Curate" has been strangely perverted from its original meaning. At first Curate signified any ecclesiastic having a care of souls; and "curate" was, indeed, a convertible word with "parson." The Clown in "Twelfth Night" (act iv. sc. 2), who pretends to be "Sir Topas the Curate," broadly asserts that he is "Master Parson." As regards the estimable Curates of the Alliance, I am afraid that they will have to wait a long time before they attain fixity of tenure and improved diocesan status.

Musical criticism is no attribute of mine; still I may be permitted to hint that the author of the libretto of "Moro, the Painter of Antwerp," the opera by the late Michael William Balfe, just produced for the first time in England at Her Majesty's Theatre, under the auspices of Mr. Carl Rosa, has done a signal service to the cause of biography. Art critics and historians have for many generations made desperate efforts to discover something definite about the life of Antonio Moro, known in this country as Sir Anthony More. He came over with Philip of Spain, and was knighted by Queen Mary Fire-the-Faggot. Antonio Moro's superb work is patent to all connoisseurs in art; but the man himself has hitherto been a mystery. Nearly all that was known about him was to the effect that he was born at Utrecht, in Holland, and that he was a pupil of Jan van Schoonvel, and, like his master, a citizen of the world. He worked in Flanders, Italy, Spain, Portugal, and England, and died at Antwerp. One of the encyclopædias says that he was known as "the Chevalier de Moor," from the number of decorations conferred upon him by foreign sovereigns.

I have only mentioned this most mysterious Moro for the reason that his Imaginary Biography presented in Balfe's opera gives me the opportunity of saying a word about the most graceful, the most melodious, and, to a great extent, the most ungratefully treated of modern English composers. As regards fortune, nearly all the composers of merit during the last generation were the neediest of men. While Rossini and Donizetti were making fortunes in Italy, and Auber, Adolphe Adam, and Halévy were gathering riches in France, Sir Henry Bishop, Balfe, Vincent Wallace, Crouch, Edward Loder, George Linley, and many more whom I could name, in England, just lived from hand to mouth. The author of the delightful "Mountain Sylph" reverted to his normal calling as a music-master. The author of the "Village Coquette" and inventor of a system which has done wonders to popularise part-singing in England found a tardy recognition of his worth by being appointed, some ten years since, Musical Inspector for the United Kingdom by the Committee of Council on Education. For the rest the State did nothing whatever—stay, late in life Henry Bishop was knighted: an honour which to one in his position was in harmony with the supposititious case put by Oliver Goldsmith (after Tom Brown) of presenting a pair of ruffles to a person who had no shirt.

Balfe, it is true, died in dignified competence; but I want to know why the bust, or, at least, the medallion portrait of the gifted Irishman, is not to be seen in the cloisters of Westminster Abbey? It should be in the Abbey itself; but, as an instalment of justice, the Cloisters might serve. When a distinguished architect dies, there is rarely any demur to the proposal not only to give him a monument but to inter his remains in Westminster Abbey. I will not go so far as a very eminent painter, a friend of mine, who vehemently denies to architects the right of sepulture in the National Wall-hall, on the ground that not once in five hundred years does an architect originate anything; but continues, from century to century, to copy what his predecessors have done before him; but I maintain that Michael William Balfe was distinctly an original and creative genius, and that his memory is entitled to the highest honours that could be paid to it by the State.

Mem.: One fine morning in the summer of 1866 I walked, in the rear of the Italian army, into the city of Rovigo, in the Dominio Veneto, the Austrian garrison having just previously walked out from the other extremity of the town. The citizens of enfranchised Rovigo forthwith went stark staring mad with joy; the windows were imbandierate; everybody embraced everybody; the wildest excesses in the way of lemonade and three-furling cigars were indulged in at the cafés, and a grand gala performance was hastily organised at the opera-house, which had been closed for I know not how many years, during the hateful domination of the Tedeschi.

The performance itself was not of a very superior class. I forget the name of the opera; but, if I remember aright, the Prima Donna assoluta was at least fifty, and had no voice to speak of; the basso profondo was as hoarse as a raven; and the tenor had a wooden leg. But the Opera-House at Rovigo is a very handsome theatre, and, illuminated a giorno, and crowded with people dressed in their Sunday best, it looked splendid. I was in the pit, and, standing up, as the entire company sang Garibaldi's Hymn, I noticed that the front of the grand tier of boxes was decorated with a series of oval medallions bearing the names of famous composers. I spelt them all out—Handel, Mozart, Gluck, Rossini, Bellini, Verdi, Weber, Mendelssohn, Auber, Donizetti, Meyerbeer, Cherubini, Flotow, Balfe—ah! the poor man was alive then; but no such honour had been paid him in his own country.

Are our American cousins really in danger, owing to the abnormal mildness (as yet, my friends, as yet), of an Ice Famine next summer? The latest reports of the ice harvest are slightly more reassuring than those which last came to hand. A New York Herald reporter has recently "interviewed" an extensive dealer in the frigid commodity, and has been assured that, from the State of Maine, at least, the supply of ice will be unlimited. On Bartlett Lake, which is on the line of the Portland and Rochester Railroad, the ice is stated to be ten inches thick. On the other hand, the Kennebec river is only "shelled over," and not fit for "cutting." It is probable, in any case, that the apprehended scarcity of an article which the Americans could easily but utterly refuse to go without will lead to extensive "cornering" on the part of the ice companies, and that the price of ice will be largely enhanced. There is not the slightest reason why the American people should gulp down about three quarters of a pint of iced-water apiece before breakfast all the year round; but they will do it, and "they all do it;" and there is no use in endeavouring to dissuade them from the deleterious practice.

G. A. S.

OBJECTS OF INTEREST AT THE RYDE ART TREASURES EXHIBITION.

SEE PAGE 102.

1. Gold Enamelled Ewer.

2. and 4. Flaxman Vases and old Wedgwood.

3. Homeric Vase, old Wedgwood.

5. Gold tankard, repoussé, Centaurs fighting.

1. Case of objects from Windsor Castle.
6. Buddha preaching, wooden gilt statue.

2. Chinese bronze figure, Padma-Pani.
8. Sword of Charles I.

3. Indian bronze figure, Buddha in contemplation.
7. Tunisian pistol, coral and silver mounted.

4. Very ancient Vase from Summer Palace, Pekin.
5. Japanese bronze, Fukurokijin, God of Longevity.

1. Sèvres china, Rose du Barri cup and saucer.
4. Rose du Barri cup and saucer, "gros bleu."
7. Elephant goad, iron and gold damascened.

2. Rose du Barri scent box and cover.
5. Rose du Barri ecuelle, cover and stand.
8. Vase of black clay from Cutch

3. Rose du Barri ecuelle, cover and stand, bleu du Roi.
6. Bronze trophy, Japanese.
9. Vase inlaid with silver.
10. Fig-leaf salver, Sealkote.

PEOPLE I HAVE MET.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT ARTFUL VICAR."

MY MAIDEN AUNT.

I had often heard tell of my aunt Wiggins, but I was about eight years old before I was permitted to admire that lively, amiable person in the flesh and bones. I say bones because when she first hugged me I thought her slightly angular. She was then past thirty-five, and several years older than my mother, though she was a spinster, and seemed by all accounts likely to remain so, to her unfeigned regret. Her Christian name was Charlotte, but as our good aunt still hoped to catch a husband, she used for social purposes a name more euphonious than the one by which she had been baptised, and called herself, on her cards, Miss Pulcheria Wiggins.

This was not the only little piece of affectation that revealed the human nature overlying her excellent qualities, for the good soul wore shoes and stays which pinched her, and thereby made her nose red—to obviate which inconvenience she made a free use of pearl powder and cosmetics. Her style of dressing was always juvenile, and her features frequently assumed the girlish giggle of innocence. She generally spoke to gentlemen with her eyes cast down, and reddened if they looked at her. Then she pretended to be exceedingly timid, and squealed if she saw a mouse, a frog, or a cockroach. She declared that she would die at once from fright if a spider presumed to crawl on any part of her person.

Now boys are keen detectors of affectation; and one day while Aunt Sally was seated alone, as she thought, in the garden, I saw her stoop and curiously pick up a stag-beetle, which, having examined with all the interest of an expert entomologist, she allowed to roam on the palm of her hand, showing all the while not the slightest sign of fear. From that day, and for a long time afterwards, I set down my aunt as a humbug; and I grieve to say that I took to playing pranks by way of making her insincerity manifest to other observers besides myself. Thus, when old Colonel Brockdown took to paying a shy kind of court to her, he being, as I knew, an admirer of the soft graces in woman, I used to regale this warrior with startling accounts of how my brave aunt had once tackled a large rat alone in her bedroom, and had finally whisked him out by the tail from a hole in which he had taken refuge, and handed him over to the justice of the domestic cat, together with even more remarkable examples of her prowess. These unblushing fibs must have produced some commotion in the Colonel; for I can never forget how he stared whilst I related them to him with the grave volubility of boyhood. However, they must have convinced him that my Aunt Wiggins was not to be trusted with; and when one hot summer afternoon he was coyly reproached by my aunt for being "a gay deceiver," he turned very red, and offered her his hand, heart, &c., on the spot.

"Oh, Colonel Brockdown, you surely can't be in earnest!" exclaimed poor Aunt Sally, becoming almost violet in her turn.

"Pon my soul, Pulcheria, never more earnest in my life, my dear," stuttered the Colonel. And he gallantly took her hand.

"And you are really not trifling with me? Do you know how old I am?" faltered Aunt Sally, raising her eyes to his.

"Pon my soul, Pulcheria, never more earnest in my life, my dear," stuttered the Colonel. And he gallantly took her hand.

this time; for it was not in her nature to be untruthful at such a critical juncture of her life.

"If you were ninety, my dear, you would still be to me what you are—that is, the dearest creature living," vowed the Colonel, upon whom the story of the rat sternly punished for trespass had evidently produced a forcible impression; and he raised my Aunt Sally's fingers to his lips.

So the pair were engaged; but the marriage did not come off somehow, though for what reason I never exactly knew—I have suspected that Aunt Sally discovered in her admirer some signs of advancing decrepitude which bade fair to reduce her duties as a wife to those of a sick-room attendant; and under the circumstances it may have occurred to her that the gallant Colonel had not been exactly in his right mind when he made his proposal. Anyhow, the fulfilling of the engagement was adjourned without there being actually a break-off, and in the meantime Colonel Brockdown died suddenly, and was buried under a beautiful tomb, upon which Aunt Wiggins laid a wreath of violets, emblems of constancy. Being a shrewd lady, however, and not yet despairing of getting settled for life, she gave up wearing her engagement-ring, and removed the Colonel's portrait from the locket round her neck, thus proclaiming to the world that she was still open to eligible offers.

I am unable to say whether any more came. Whilst Aunt Wiggins was staying with us at Brighton, where we then resided, she seemed to me to spend a good deal of her time in amusements and much of her money in dress. She was for ever trying on some new thing, and wore costumes which I used to hear amply discussed and sometimes admired by the lady visitors who came to call on my mother. Towards my brother and me Aunt Sally was always kind, in a patronising way. She took us to Mutton's, the confectioner's, that we might fill ourselves with tarts at odd moments not always well-timed; and she gave us nice presents on our birthdays. Now and then she administered small "tips;" and she was always ready to say a word in our behalf when we pleaded for a half-holiday. But all this she did without much cordiality, and as though from a mere sense of duty; perhaps because she was conscious that we regarded her in a ridiculous light, for the reasons above indicated. Our little sister Maggie was the only one of the family whom Aunt Sally really petted; and at one time she did so much to spoil this child by tricking her out in finery and encouraging her to bubble nonsense that Maggie became objectionable to us from giving herself airs. We called her a "little sneak," too, because she used to go telling tales to our aunt about all our boyish delinquencies, and, in particular, about the way in which we used to mimic her—Auntie—as regards her mincing gait and simpering modes of speech. It ought to have struck me then—as it does now—that it was a magnanimous thing in the character of Aunt Sally that, although she listened to Maggie's tales, she never took advantage of them to get us punished. Once, and once only, was I made to feel the effects of a sudden outburst of Aunt Sally's long pent-up wrath. Having a talent for caricature, I had drawn a portrait of this long-suffering relative, with a nose of abnormal length, which I coloured a deep vermilion. Aunt Sally found the drawing, tore it up, and treated me immediately to half a dozen such hearty slaps on the face that I sat down roaring and holding my swollen cheeks for a whole hour afterwards. I may remark incidentally that my talent as a caricaturist somewhat declined after this.

Aunt Sally had come on her first visit to us to spend a fortnight at Brighton, and she remained three months. We saw her again in the following year, and then once more, before the time of the great transformation which suddenly occurred in her when I was about ten.

A heavy calamity had fallen on our family. Never mind what it was, for the theme is a painful one to write about; but Aunt Sally, who had hitherto come to our house as a guest, now arrived as a comforter. On a cold, cheerless, winter day she alighted at our door dressed all in black; and what a change there was in her! I could scarcely realise it. All her juvenility of look, all her affectation of manner were gone. Her hair was streaked with grey; her attire was that of an elderly lady, and her voice had the quiet tone of sense and gentle firmness. No more did my brother and I feel inclined to laugh at Aunt Sally. She took, in a manner, the control of our household, for our mother had fallen ill, and during several weeks she acted as our governess. My brother and I submitted to her rule very easily when we found how judicious it was; but not so little Maggie, who by no means appreciated the change that had come over her aunt. Maggie wanted to be spoiled, and would not learn lessons. Mere kindness would not do for her now after the sweet food of indulgence with which she had been regaled before; and poor Aunt Sally had a difficult task in taming the little rebel. But she did succeed at length; and when the day came for the breaking up of our little family, consequent on my brother and myself being sent to school, I know we all felt the better and the happier for the weeks that our aunt had spent amongst us.

Aunt Sally continued to be our Providence during all the period of my boyhood. She did not live under our roof; but her house in London—whither we had removed from Brighton—was not far from ours, and I always saw her during my holidays. She had quite taken up with the ways of old ladyhood by the time she was forty. Her cozy house contained a pet cat, a pug, a sleek butler, and some rosy housemaids. The tables in the drawing-room and dining-room were always adorned with fresh-cut flowers, and in winter a delicious soft warmth pervaded every chamber and all the passages. Seated in her luxurious boudoir, with a pile of the newest books on a table beside her, my aunt used to spend one half of her leisure time in reading and the other half in making tapestry. She was one of the dearest workers I have ever seen; but though her fingers moved so busily, her tongue always spoke now in slow thoughtful accents. She had a very sweet smile, the sweeter from its having become so rare. Her habitual expression was serene, but grave—very grave at times. She had embraced some new tenets, both religious and social, and had become both a fervent Ritualist and a warm advocate for the reform of sundry social abuses connected with women, children, and four-footed animals. A home for lost dogs which was instituted at Clapham bore her name; she endowed a whole ward in a hospital; and chartered a steamer for the conveyance of a thousand once-drowned but now repentant chambermaids to Newfoundland. But a still wider exercise of her benevolence was seen when she supplied a mutinous Vicar with the means of defying his Bishop, and stoutly supported that ecclesiastic in three disastrous lawsuits, which resulted in his being eventually inhibited.

I happened to be taking afternoon tea with my aunt on the day when this Vicar—Mr. Phebble—by name—came to announce the decree which the House of Lords had thundered against him. I was an Oxonian then, and could see at a glance that "the combative Phebble," as we used to call him at college, stood evidently in much greater fear of my aunt than he did of his Bishop. "What are we to do now, Miss Wiggins?" he asked, with some trepidation in his voice and fearful respect in his demeanour.

"Do, Mr. Phebble?" echoed my aunt, fixing her calm, grave eyes on him. "Why, we must help you to set up a new church of your own."

"But I should be in schism, Miss Wiggins."

"Schism from error, Mr. Phebble. If ten thousand pounds can assist you they shall be forthcoming."

"Ten thousand is a large sum," faltered the jaded Vicar, who looked now like a limp fish wriggling on a golden hook.

"No sum is too large for the assertion of truth, Mr. Phebble," answered my aunt, slightly knitting her brows; and to my deep disgust I presently saw her write out a cheque, which she described as a first instalment.

From all this it will be seen that my Aunt Sally had money. I had reason to know it, for she paid all my expenses at Oxford, and gave me a very liberal allowance of pocket-money besides—subject, however, to the condition that I did not get into debt. At the end of every term, when I waited upon her to pay my respects, she used to clasp one of my hands in hers, and, looking me earnestly in the face, say—"You owe nothing, Harry?"

"Nothing, aunt," I used to reply.

"You are a good boy, then. Never incur debts, for they would make you the slave of other men and debase your nature." After which little sermon the kind-hearted lady would slip into my hand an envelope containing a draught more than ample to cover all my next term's expenses.

I naturally entertained much gratitude and respect for my aunt, nor were my feelings lessened by the expectation that I was to become her heir. She had told me this in express terms, and had bidden me choose a career, according to my taste, in the full reliance that she would furnish whatever sums were necessary to start me fairly and keep me floating. Unfortunately, Aunt Sally's splendid largesses towards the lost dogs, the penitent chambermaids, and the mutinous Mr. Phebble ended by straitening her resources, so that, as I subsequently discovered, she took to speculation chiefly for my sake. One fine day, some honest South American State, whose scrip she had been tempted to buy, turned bankrupt, and the shock of this ruin gave my poor aunt a death-blow. I was hastily summoned to her bedside, and found her crying, in her last moments, from grief and remorse. She actually thought it binding upon her to beg my pardon!

"Oh, my poor boy!" she wailed. "How have I lured you! Can you ever forgive me?"

"Forgive you for what, Auntie—for having been my benefactress?"

"I doubt whether I have been your benefactress, Harry," she said, shaking her head. "I ought not to have beguiled you with false hopes. What can I leave you now?"

"You will leave me your example to follow—the example of your great goodness, Auntie. And I shall be rich indeed if I can become as good as you." This was all I could say; but it cheered her, and she pressed my hand.

I felt then, and I have felt ever since, that my Aunt had done more for me than if she had bequeathed to me all the bank-notes which she had distributed between Mr. Phebble, the chambermaids, and those worthy lost dogs, who I am sure mourned for her in their own way when she died.

THE MAYOR OF MANCHESTER'S JUVENILE BALL.

Mr. Alderman Baker, now in his second year of office as Mayor of Manchester, has repeated the successful entertainment of a Children's Ball, given in the noble Townhall of that city. We present a few Sketches, by Mr. T. N. Storer, illustrating the scenes at this pleasant gathering of happy young people, which was on Friday evening, the 20th inst. As was remarked last year upon a similar occasion, the Townhall is well suited to such a purpose. The large room, when not crowded, is well adapted for dancing, while the richly furnished state apartments afford all other accommodation needed. The guests numbered between five hundred and six hundred, most of whom reached the hall about six o'clock. As they arrived they were shown to the banqueting-room, where tea was served. They passed to the large room, where, at half-past six, they were formally presented to the Mayor and Mayoress. Dancing began immediately afterwards, to the music of Mr. J. L. Goodwin's band, Mr. W. Webster officiating as master of the ceremonies. The programme was as follows:—Quadrille, "La Fille du Tambour Major;" Valse, "Chantilly;" Polka, "Pyramiden;" Lancers, "Pirates of Penzance;" Schottische, "Highland;" "La Tempête;" Quadrille, "H.M.S. Pinafore;" Valse, "Con Amore;" Scotch Reel, "Highland;" Lancers, "Silver Wedding;" Schottische, "Highland;" Valse, "Telephonic;" Quadrille, "Cloches de Corneville;" Polka, "Tric-Trac;" "Sir Roger de Coverley." The dancers, generally, formed sets for the first quadrille of themselves; and where the services of Mr. Webster were needed, he had a very easy task. The first introductions over, the children entered very heartily into the dancing, which they appeared to enjoy thoroughly. It was understood that the guests should be between ten and fifteen years of age, but neither limit had been strictly observed. There seemed, however, to be fewer children below ten than at the former balls. The dresses of the girls showed the improvements which have of late years been introduced into the attire of children of the female sex. Both in the shape and the combination of colours, they were generally of a very tasteful and pleasing character. White and the lighter colours largely predominated; and these formed a very agreeable contrast to the sober black or dark brown worn by the boys. Besides the dances, there was much to interest the children. In the Council Chamber Mr. W. B. Wood, Urmoston, gave several times during the evening a magic lantern exhibition, which, as may be supposed, always secured a good audience. Some pictures of the history of Dick Whittington were very well received, but the guests showed a marked preference for comic scenes, at which they laughed with great heartiness. The Mayor's Parlour was occupied by Whatman's Royal Eagle Marionettes, supplied by Mr. Whaite, of the German Fair, which also proved highly popular. One of the scenes was laid in front of the Mayor's private residence, Old Trafford, a picture of which upon canvas had been specially prepared. The antics of the wheel balancer, the Indian juggler, the great contortionist, and Old Mother Shipton, were followed by the children with very keen interest. There was no lack of refreshments for the children, nor was there any disinclination on the part of the guests to avail themselves of the good things spread before them. The dance programmes, printed by Messrs. Blacklock and Co., were of artistic design and workmanship. Carriages were ordered for a quarter before eleven. A number of grown-up ladies and gentlemen had been invited by the Mayor to witness the proceedings. The Greek Archbishop of Corfu, who is on a visit to Manchester, was present with his suite; and the costume of that Eastern Church prelate was conspicuously observed among the figures at the Juvenile Ball. The local newspapers, describing this entertainment, give full lists of the names of the children invited.

THE MANCHESTER CALICO BALL.

The British calico-printers, represented by an Executive Committee of gentlemen connected with many leading firms in and around Manchester, have successfully carried out the scheme of a unique entertainment, to show the artistic value of their particular industry. A grand public ball, at which it was the rule that all the ladies' costumes should be of British printed calico, took place at the Manchester Townhall, on Wednesday week. Twelve hundred tickets were sold to eager purchasers, the profits of which went to the Warehousemen and Clerks' Orphan Schools. The arrangements made by the Executive Committee, of which Mr. Henry Heap was chairman, Mr. W. T. Hesketh hon. treasurer, and Mr. F. Nicholson hon. secretary, seem to have been judicious and convenient. The dancing was, of course, in the large hall, while the reception-room and the Mayor's parlour were used for a promenade, and supper was provided in the Mayor's banqueting-room; there were also several buffets for refreshments in the corridors. A concert was given in the Mayor's parlour, in the intervals of dancing. We take from the Manchester Guardian the following comments upon this interesting display of local taste and gaiety:—

"The ball was a ball with a purpose, the purpose being that of showing 'the variety and perfection to which the important art of calico-printing has arrived,' and on the whole it was certainly attained. Great progress has been made in the art of finishing as well as in that of printing, since good Mrs. Peel did the first Lancashire calendering for her husband with a flat iron, and her little daughter Annie brought in the sprig of parsley from the 'garden of herbs' attached to the little cottage outside Blackburn, to make one of the earliest Lancashire patterns. The great effort of the calico-printer now is to produce designs which cannot be rivalled by the loom. Stripes and similar stiff designs may be woven, but delicate shading and elaborate botanical patterns, naturally or conventionally treated, though they may to some extent be produced by the Jacquard loom, are quite beyond the ordinary weaver's appliances; and the printer has an obvious advantage over even the Jacquard loom, in regard to the delicate blending of colours, and, in fact, the imitation of nature herself. In this respect there is still a wide field before the calico-printer, and one in which he is likely, from the nature of things, to attain an excellence which cannot be rivalled in its peculiar effects by the results of any other process. Some very charming imitations of natural flowers were exhibited last night. Poppies, ox-eyed daisies, bachelors' buttons, forget-me-nots, lilies of the valley, violets, and such familiar friends, were reproduced with remarkable fidelity, particularly in the cretonne dresses worn; indeed, one lady, whose skirt seemed to constitute a kind of dado arrangement, seemed literally to be moving in a wildly luxuriant flower-garden. But there is still much to be done in this direction. Among the most remarkable of the dresses worn last night were those satteen cloths with a gloss and softness to the eye resembling that of the most beautiful—and at the same time most costly—of all textile materials, and with delicately printed or embossed patterns. It was difficult to believe at first that these were not actually brocaded textures. Others there were which rivalled in delicacy of shade and shimmer the costly moiré antique so largely worn by our great-grandmothers. The designs were, as a rule, small and delicate; but, now and then, a bolder and larger one was seen; and if any lady wanted to be 'aesthetic' in calico, there was not the slightest difficulty in being so. The ball-room was as pretty a sight, as various and delicate in colour, as it could have been if every lady present had disdained anything less sumptuous than silk and satin. Indeed, the variety of colour was actually greater, all sorts of harmonious browns and russets and pale yellows being added to the tones of cream colour, pale pink, and blue which make up the scheme of colour in an ordinary ball-room. The variety of colour and design was indeed enormous. Many of the great printing firms had printed new patterns specially for the occasion; but even without this the variety of admirable designs now in existence is well calculated to astonish anyone not well acquainted with the trade."

THE RYDE ART-TREASURES EXHIBITION.

It was a happy thought of the managers of the Ryde School of Science and Art to pay off their debt by bringing together, on loan, the beautiful and curious objects contained in this delightful exhibition. The committee met with a prompt and generous response to their appeal. Pictures and works of art of great value were speedily collected. Her Majesty the Queen sent a case of interesting objects from Windsor Castle. Among the contributors are Lord Tweedmouth, Sir Richard Wallace, Bart., General Sir Samuel Browne, General Abbott, Baron Ferdinand de Rothschild, Mr. A. de Rothschild, Mr. F. Davis, Mr. E. Emanuel, and many of the neighbouring gentry of Hampshire and the Isle of Wight.

The gallery of paintings alone is worthy a journey from London to see. Lord Tweedmouth has sent his two exquisite Gainsboroughs, "The Timber-Wagon" and "A Wooded Landscape;" the latter is tender and deep, with a glowing evening colour. Mr. Henley Grose-Smith, of Harley-street, contributes a grand Vandyke, which is a group of portraits of Charles I., Queen Henrietta Maria, and their two eldest children. Mr. F. Davis, of Apley Rise, Ryde, lends a powerful Hogarth, "A Conversation at Wanstead House," an early picture, painted for Lord Chesterfield. The faces in this are all portraits; it is one of the few pictures of Hogarth's that have never been engraved. Another picture, "Arthur Atherley in his Eton Montem Dress," by Sir Thomas Lawrence, is surprising as a powerful work. The pictures by Dutch artists, and those by Reynolds, Lely, Romney, and Morland, would attract notice in any gallery. In water-colours, we would call attention to the works of an artist too seldom seen—W. Cook, of Plymouth, who died just as he was maturing into an enchanting landscape and seascapist painter. He is represented here in small but exquisite studies. David Cox, Prout, Copley Fielding, and E. W. Cooke, R.A., are favourably represented.

The body of the great hall contains treasures of such variety that we cannot enumerate them. There are cases of miniatures, of Wedgwood ware, of Sèvres porcelain, Worcester, Chelsea, and Dresden china; others of goldsmiths' work, Indian damascened and brass wares; ornaments in silver, ivory, and boxwood; embroidery, arms, Oriental bronzes, Indian and Japanese, and enamels. These form a thoroughly educational art-museum. It may give an idea of the intrinsic value of many of these loans, to state that the committee have felt it right to insure some of these cases against fire at £10,000 each.

One of the most interesting cases is that containing a collection of forty-three miniatures, by Richard Cosway, R.A., the property of Mr. E. Joseph. They include those of "the beautiful Duchess of Devonshire," of the Princess Charlotte, of Mrs. Robinson ("Perdita"), of Elizabeth Farren, Countess of Derby, and many others. Cosway painted in a refined, lucid, fascinating style, leading us to regret the loss of an art which photography has nearly destroyed.

The three vases shown in the top of our page of Illustrations are of blue, white, green and white Wedgwood ware. The designs were supplied by Flaxman. The Homeric vase in the centre is the largest and finest in existence. The two smaller vases represent "Wine" and "Water." "Wine" is a satyr holding the horns of a ram's head, with festoons of vine-leaves; and "Water" is a merman, with a dolphin's head and festoons of lily-leaves. No. 1 is a gold enamelled ewer and dish, known as the Briot model. It was made by Charles Duron, of Paris, who gave ten years of his life to this masterpiece; it cost 150,000fr., or £6000. It is lent by Mr. C. Davis, of Pall-mall. No. 5 is a large silver-gilt tankard repoussé, of centaurs fighting (old German, seventeenth century), lent by Mr. H. L. Bischoffsheim.

In the centre of the page is shown the case of objects lent by her Majesty. The picture is by Henry Warren, "The Star in the East," from Osborne. Beneath are a flint gun and pistols (Tunisian), mounted in silver and corals, the favourite war-club of Thakombau, ex-King of Fiji, two statuettes by Boehm, a plaque of Sèvres ware, and the sword of Charles I., left at Weston, the seat of Sir Richard Halford, on the night before the battle of Naseby. The bronzes, Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, and 6, shown at the bottom of the page, are lent by Mr. Emanuel, of Portsea. Mr. Emanuel also exhibits, in another case, portrait medallions of Duncan, Keppel, Queen Anne, Franklin, and a Napoleonic series of great beauty. The end of the hall is artistically adorned with Beauvais tapestries and ebony cabinets from India and Germany; one from Goa belonged to Vasco de Gama; with a very curious old triptych, Flemish (fourteenth century), lent by Mr. Charles Salter, a Koran stand, an Egyptian drum, the two State swords of the King of Ashantee, from Coomassie, and the Afghan and other Oriental arms lent by Sir Henry Daly. In front of the platform is a case of old Sèvres china, lent by Mr. F. Davis. No. 7 is an iron and gold damascened elephant-goat, lent by Sir Henry Daly, who also sends the vase and ewer, in porous black clay, from Kutch, Western India, showing a most curious and difficult art of pottery, inlaid with silver wire. Behind is a beautiful semi-stand, with fig-leaves of Sealkote work.

In conclusion, we must add that the exhibition has been chiefly promoted by Mr. Barrow, Mayor of Ryde; Mr. F. Davis, of Apley Rise; and most efficiently by the honorary secretary of the Ryde School of Art, Mr. R. J. Cornwell Jones, who has been the heart and soul of this most successful exhibition.

MUSIC.

THE CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

"Moro, or the Painter of Antwerp," was produced at Her Majesty's Theatre on Saturday evening, having been postponed from the previous Wednesday. The work was composed in 1856, some fourteen years before Balfe's death, and when he was in the plenitude of his powers. "Pittore e Duca" (its original title) was brought out at Trieste in the year just specified, during the Carnival there, and had remained in manuscript until its production here on Saturday. The Italian libretto is by Signor Piave, the English version having been skilfully adapted by Mr. W. A. Barrett. The plot is of a romantic kind, the scene being laid in the Netherlands when under the sway of Spain and the government of the tyrannical Duke of Alva. The character of the Painter is also historical, being that of Antonio Moro, pictures by whom are in several European galleries as well as our own, he having been employed by the English Court, and knighted as Sir Antony More. The prominent events of the drama are: the mutual love of Moro and Olivia Campana, a young lady of noble family whom he has rescued from drowning, her union with Count Aramburga—a member of the Council—having been enforced as a means of averting punishment from her father in consequence of his having offended the Spanish authorities by favouring the independence of the Netherlands; Olivia's retreat to a convent, and her supposed death; the condemnation of the whole community—in which she takes refuge—for alleged conspiracy against the State; the commission given by the Duke to Moro to paint the portrait of one of the Nuns whose beauty has captivated the former—the disclosure of her features leading to the painter's recognition of the supposed deceased Olivia; the jealousy and rage of the Duke and the artist, a mortal encounter being prevented by the sudden arrival of Ambassadors bearing authority for the recall of Alva, whose fall, and the death of the husband of Olivia, clear the way for the union of the latter and the Painter, who is summoned on a professional visit to the Court of England.

The opera is preceded by a martial orchestral prelude, which leads to the opening chorus of the prologue, in which introductory portion of the opera occurs an effective quartet for Olivia, Moro, the Duke, and Orsini; the most noticeable pieces in the first act being a pleasing romance, "Is it, then, in vain?" for Moro; a bright chorus of students; an effective aria for Olivia, "As by the river straying;" and a spirited finale, including a melodious duet for Olivia and the Duke ("In misfortune and in sorrow"). In act ii. we have some of the best music of the opera, particularly the aria, "Farewell, ye thoughts of joy," for Moro (encored); the romance, "Bold Knight," for the Duke (encored); the smoothly-written chorus of Judges; and a well-sustained finale, comprising important solo passages for Olivia and Moro, and culminating in a brilliant choral and orchestral climax. The third act opens with a bright chorus of sailors, preceded by an animated orchestral prelude. Some very pleasing and tuneful ballet music follows, and the chorus of sailors is resumed, the effect of the whole being very spirited. Of the pieces for solo voices in this division of the work are: a well-written duet for the two lovers ("Sweetly the sunny past")—which was greatly applauded; a recitative and air for Olivia (which was omitted on account of Madame Valleria being under the influence of a cold); a well-contrasted trio for the three principal characters, in which are some bright solo passages for Olivia; and a brief finale with effective bravura phrases for the same character.

The music throughout is in the light Italian style, and is distinguished by that fluent melodiousness which was characteristic of Balfe's best period; and the opera stands in agreeable contrast to his latest works, in which he essayed a grandiose style that was opposed to the natural tendency of his genius. Several of the pieces above specified will doubtless become popular, and there is little question that many full audiences will be attracted to hear "Moro."

The performance was generally excellent. Madame Valleria, although suffering from a cold, sang and acted as Olivia with much power, and with genuine success; great praise being due to her appearance, under such disadvantage, in her desire not to cause a second postponement of the production of the opera. Mr. B. McGuckin, as Moro, has enhanced his position both by his singing and acting, in which latter respect he displayed marked improvement. Mr. L. Crotty as the Duke sang excellently; and, had he put a little more energy and dignity into his acting, he would have left nothing to desire. The cast was efficiently completed by Miss G. Warwick as Ines (the Superior of the Convent), Mr. D. Thomas as Vargas (the Duke's Secretary), and Mr. H. D'Eville as Orsini (the Italian Ambassador). The orchestral and choral performance was highly satisfactory, and the scenery, costumes, and ballet arrangements were excellent. Mr. Carl Rosa conducted.

During last week, Mr. B. Davies met with a very favourable reception in his first appearance—as Thaddeus—in Balfe's "Bohemian Girl." Of this promising young tenor we shall no doubt soon have occasion to speak again.

Miss La Rue—whose two successful appearances we have already recorded—scarcely maintained the good impression then made, by her performance, on Thursday week, in the title-character of "Carmen," the part being as yet too arduous for so young and inexperienced—albeit meritorious—an artist. Miss Gaylord's Michaela was, as heretofore, a special feature in the performance referred to, other features of which call for no specific mention. Repetitions of operas previously given were announced for this week; the second representation of "Moro" having been promised for Thursday.

Messrs. Jones and Barber announce that they have made arrangements with Mr. Carl Rosa for a performance at the Alexandra Palace this (Saturday) evening of Balfe's "Bohemian Girl" by the artists of Her Majesty's Theatre.

Madame Norman-Néruda made her first appearance this season at the popular concert of Saturday afternoon, when the accomplished violinist played with her well-known skill and refinement Rust's sonata in D minor and the leading parts of Mendelssohn's quintet in B flat and Beethoven's serenade trio in D. Miss Emma Barnett played, with great success, Beethoven's pianoforte solo sonata in D major (from op. 10); and Miss C. Elliott rendered some vocal pieces with much refinement. At the concert of Monday evening Madame Néruda was again the leading violinist, her solo performances having been in a prelude, romance, and scherzo by Franz Ries (for violin with pianoforte accompaniment). These pieces (given for the first time here) were well received, the scherzo having been encored. Miss Spencer Jones was the vocalist, and Miss A. Zimmermann the solo pianist.

Mr. E. H. Thorne (pianist) gave the first of two concerts (at the Royal Academy of Music) on Monday evening, with a varied programme of vocal and instrumental pieces.

Mr. H. Holmes (the eminent violinist) began a new series of his "Musical Evenings" at the Royal Academy of Music on Wednesday, the quartet party being completed by Mr. A. Gibson (second violin), Mr. A. Burnett (viola), and Mr. E. Howell (violinello), Madame Haas being the solo pianist. The dates of the remaining concerts are March 1, 8, 15, and 29.

The artists at the Ballad Concert, St. James's Hall, on Wednesday, were Madame Sherrington, Miss Mary Davies, Madame Antoinette Sterling and Miss Damian, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Sautley, Mr. Maybrick and Mr. Oswald; the South London Choral Association, under the direction of Mr. L. C. Venables; Mr. Sidney Naylor conducting.

Mr. D'Arcy Ferris gave the ballad concert at the Royal Victoria Hall, Waterloo-road, on Thursday last; that of Thursday next (Irish ballads) will be given by Mr. Clement Hoey, the Prince and Princess of Wales honouring it with their presence. The fifth concert of the Sacred Harmonic Society's fiftieth season took place yesterday (Friday) evening, when the programme consisted of Gounod's "Messe Solennelle," Beethoven's "Mount of Olives," and Handel's coronation anthem, "Zadok the Priest."

Mr. Frederick Burgess's annual benefit at St. James's Hall on Tuesday was a great success. The concert of vocal and instrumental music with which the proceedings began was of more than ordinary attraction; the ranks of the minstrels being strengthened for the occasion by several other musicians of approved skill. In the miscellaneous entertainment which followed the concert Miss Farren and Messrs. J. Ryder, T. Swinbourne, H. Paulton, Lionel Brough, H. Wulsham, and other popular artists took part, contributing songs, recitations, and readings with excellent effect.

Mr. Sims Reeves's second concert of operatic, national, and miscellaneous music will take place at St. James's Hall, next Tuesday evening; on which occasion he will give a selection from Macfarren's "Robin Hood." He will be most ably supported.

The Philharmonic Society is to open its seventieth season next Thursday evening.

The most glowing accounts reach us from Cincinnati and St. Louis of the American successes of Madame Adeline Patti. In operatic selections, and especially in "The Messiah," at the first-named place, her splendid performances have been greeted with enthusiasm by crowded audiences.

Sir Michael Costa was seized with a paralytic fit on Sunday afternoon, but was somewhat better on Tuesday morning.

Sir Edmund Beckett on Tuesday presided at a general court of the governors of King's College, at which a resolution was passed sanctioning the provisions of a bill which is to be introduced into Parliament for amending the constitution of the College.

Mr. Justice Kay on Saturday last described as "a shocking state of things" the swallowing up of an estate in costs. An action was instituted in a case of Meyrick v. James, in 1874, for the administration of the estate of a person who died in 1846. There was a sum of £709 in Consols, another sum of £136 on deposit, and another sum of £8. The only debt against the estate was a sum of £49. The money in Court, the above sum of £853, was not sufficient to pay the costs of the proceedings, which have been going on since 1874. His Lordship directed that there should be a very careful taxation of costs, and refused to give liberty to apply in chambers, but ordered that any application should be made in Court, as he wished the Court to keep its hands over the money until he saw what the costs were.

SUBSCRIPTION TO THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

AT HOME.

Twelve months (including Christmas Number), 21 9s. 3d.
Six months, 14s. Christmas Half-Year, 15s. 3d.
Three months, 7s. Christmas Quarter, 8s. 3d.

Copies will be supplied direct from the Office to any part of the United Kingdom and the Channel Islands, for any period, at the rate of 6d. for each Number, paid in advance.

ABROAD.

The yearly subscription abroad is 36s. 4d. (on thin paper, 32s.), with the following exceptions:—

To Aden, Borneo, Ceylon, India, Java, Labuan, Mozambique Penang, Philippine Islands, Sarawak, Singapore, and Zanzibar, 41s. (thin paper, 34s.)
To Madagascar (except St. Mary), 45s. (on thin paper, 36s. 4d.)

Subscribers are specially advised to order the thick paper edition, the appearance of the engravings in the thin paper copies being greatly injured by the print at the back showing through.

Newspapers for foreign parts must be posted within eight days of the date of publication, irrespective of the departure of the mails.

Subscriptions must be paid in advance, direct to the Publishing Office, 138, Strand, in English money; by cheque crossed the Union Bank of London; or by Post-Office Order, payable at the East Strand Post Office, to George C. Leighton, of 138, Strand, London.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Tuesday, Jan. 31.

"Have we a Ministry to-night?" asks Madame de Léry in Musset's "Caprice." "Strange kind of ins, your Ministries. One goes in and goes out without quite knowing why. It is a procession of puppets." As everybody anticipated, M. Gambetta fell last Thursday; but he fell gallantly, face to the enemy, who applauded his bearing, and so much did he seem to have the best of the situation that the Chamber which defeated him is ashamed of its exploit. In all probability the present Chamber will not last long, and a dissolution may be expected, perhaps, at no distant date. At present we have a new Ministry, consisting of M. de Freycinet, President of the Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs; M. Léon Say, Finance; M. Jules Ferry, Public Instruction; General Billot, War; M. Jauréguiberry, Marine; M. Goblet, Interior; M. Humbert, Justice; M. Vayro, Public Works; M. Cocheret, Posts and Telegraphs; M. Tirard, Commerce; M. de Mahy, Agriculture.

The Ministry of Art has been suppressed once more, and the department annexed to the Ministry of Public Instruction. The new Ministry is, in fact, the "Grand Ministry" without the head, the triumvirate—Say, de Freycinet, Ferry—having mainly contributed to constitute the "grandeur" of the combination of M. Gambetta that was so much talked about two months ago. Naturally, no sooner had the new Cabinet been formed than people have begun to predict its fall and to call it names. The fact of its comprising six senators has won for it the name of "Ministère du Sénat." As for its policy, it will be:—No revision; indefinite adjournment of the conversion of Rentes; abandonment of the scheme for the State purchase of the railways; and the conclusion of the treaties of commerce in course of negotiation.

After all, the fall of one Ministry and the creation of another has not been the topic that has been most eagerly discussed during the feverish week that has just passed. The great event has been the drawing of the Algerian lottery, and next to that in interest has been the crash on the Bourse. After all, the drawing of the lottery was equivalent to a crash—the crash of the Bank of Hope! How many dreams have been built on the hypothetical possession of the grand prize of 500,000fr. And out of five millions of tickets only one drew the prize! But, happily, hope is inexhaustible. Those who have lost in this lottery have two more in prospect—the lottery of Tours, to be drawn in February, and the lottery of the "Orphelinat des Arts," to be drawn in May. What a blessed country France is! Toujours de l'espérance! The ex-Queen Isabella, faithful to the habits of her country, always takes a ticket in every lottery, saying, "You must never shut the door against fortune," especially, one might add, when it costs only twenty sous to leave the door open.

But what a strange week it has been! What a succession of events that even the most cynical cannot conceive without at the same time realising more or less the strange dramas or comedies that lurk behind. The very cries of the boulevard yesterday, for instance, were half tragic, half comic. "Demandez la liste officielle de la loterie Algérienne!" piped out one hawker.—"Just out! The sudden death of poor Léon Gambetta!"—"Le Soir! The latest news! Arrest of M. Bontoux!"—"La France! La France! the new Cabinet! Suspension of payments by the Union Générale! Demandez la France!"—"Cours de la Bourse et de la Banque!"—and the scraps of conversation that one caught on the lips of the passers! . . . "Yes, it appears that when she heard the news, Madame Bontoux had an attack of hot fever and tried to throw herself out of the window . . ."

"Saint Victor! Ah! Mon cher, all his pictures were not worth 5000fr., and they sold for more than 80,000fr. It is absurd! These grand sales at the Hôtel Dronot . . ." "What is all this illumination for? Century of Auber . . ."

"Before six months we shall see Marie Heilbron on the stage again. It appears that her husband, la Panouse, is cleaned out. Oh! M. le Vicomte was in the Union Générale, up to his eyes . . ." "Poor Gil Pères! What an excellent comedian he was! Ah! those were the glorious days of the Palais-Royal. When is the funeral? . . . Wednesday morning, at the private asylum at Vanves . . ." "Zola! Zola! no, he is done for. His Pot-Bouille is absurd . . . dull, stupid, untrue. Que voulez-vous? A man who has never lived, never seen any kind of life . . . and then he goes and buries himself at Méden, a wretched village of 300 inhabitants, and professes to study Parisian society from nature! Farceur!" . . .

"A terrible liquidation! How are we going to get our margins?" . . . A Babel of disaster, scandal, bad news, disappointment, despair! It is true that the famous Union Générale has suspended payment. It is true that the monthly settling day will be terrible, and that the speculative market has received a blow from which it will not easily recover. At Lyons, where the speculation has been universal, the disaster will be much greater than it is at Paris. Nevertheless, the public credit remains unimpaired, and the accession to office of M. Léon Say has been the signal for a rise in Rentes and of a good tendency on solid stocks.

As I mentioned above, the new Cabinet intends to hasten the conclusion of the new commercial treaties. Yesterday the Chamber of Deputies by an imposing majority voted the continuance of the existing treaties till May 15; and to-day the bill was passed in the Senate. The Chamber has voted a grant of 6,000,000fr. for the expenses of the expeditionary force in Tunis during this month and March. M. de Freycinet has explained the political programme of his Cabinet. Peace at home and abroad will be, he says, the basis of its policy. The new laws respecting the press and the right of public meeting will be applied in a liberal sense. The revision of the Constitution will be postponed until the expiration of the present Legislature. The powers of the Justices of the Peace will be enlarged, and the number of tribunals diminished. Compulsory service in the army will be reduced to three years. With regard to Public Instruction the Ministry will continue the work already begun. The Cabinet has no intention of converting the Rente, or purchasing the railways, or of issuing new Rentes. Nothing will be neglected in order to arrive at a definitive solution of the question of the Customs tariff.

Last Sunday M. Jules Grévy entered upon the fourth year of his presidency of the Republic. In France three years is a long time, particularly under the régime of the Republic, which M. Naguet once defined with terrible naïveté as le provisoire perpétuel.

T. C.

On Monday morning last the premières danseuses and ladies of the ballet engaged at Covent Garden Theatre presented Mr. Henri Devienne, the ballet master, with a handsome set of diamond studs as a token of their esteem.

Sir Harlinge Giffard, Q.C.; M.P., gave on Monday his opening address as president of the Birmingham Law Students Society. The proceedings took place at the Grand Hotel, and were attended by a number of barristers and the leading members of the legal profession in the district.

SKETCHES AT THE CALICO PRINTERS' BALL AT THE MANCHESTER TOWNHALL.—SEE PAGE 102.

SKETCHES FROM "OURS," AT THE HAYMARKET THEATRE.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

The Extra Supplement.

THE LATE MR. JOHN LINNELL.

By the death of John Linnell, at the advanced age of eighty-nine, one of the most interesting figures in the history of English art during the present century has passed away. When the whole story of John Linnell's career comes to be written it will be found to be an artist biography very unusually instructive and remarkable—we had almost said romantic. Much of the early part of that long life was spent in comparative poverty. The always indefatigable artist thought himself "passing rich" on £100 a year. His works of that time had no obvious affinity with, and generally differed wholly in subject from, those by which he is known to the present generation. Yet during the last forty years fame and fortune came unsought; and probably no other English artist has amassed more wealth from his pencil during his lifetime. The difference, however, between the earlier and later works of Linnell is, after all, only that which we find in the case of every artist that has risen sooner or later to eminence. Only by careful, close, and conscientious record of the facts of Nature can the basis of knowledge be laid upon which "style" can legitimately form itself, and from which imagination can safely take wing.

John Linnell commenced his professional life, at the early age of thirteen, as a student of the Royal Academy; and, under John Varley, one of his fellow-students, and to whom he owed much, being William Mulready. He first exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1807—two small landscapes. Thenceforward he exhibited at the society in Spring-gardens, at the British Institution, and at the Royal Academy—at the last almost annually during the past half-century. Throughout the earlier part of his career, however, his works were chiefly miniature portraits on ivory, or cabinet portraits in oil. Among these were portraits of several of the principal artists of his day and of other celebrities—including Malthus, Empson, Whateley, Carlyle, Sir Robert Peel, and Lord Lansdowne. Several of these were engraved by the artist himself. These portraits were remarkable for fidelity to character—definite in modelling, highly elaborated, and not wanting in richness of colouring, but seemed to give no earnest of the subsequent development of the painter's style in landscape. Nor did the landscapes even, which were occasionally exhibited during all this period, afford—in their comparatively sober treatment—a clear indication of what their successors would be. It will be for the artist's biographers to trace the various influences that from about 1847 may account more or less for the grandiose character, the gorgeous colouring, the grand indicative style, and the occasional religious sentiment that distinguished the landscapes of the next twenty years—declining, it must be said, into conventional mannerism, and self-repetition in the works of his latest years. Mr Linnell was intimate with Blake; he possessed a large collection of his designs, and the religious, mystical fervour of that poet-painter may have incited the choice of such "motifs" as those of the "Eve of the Deluge," "The Disobedient Prophet," and other works of imaginative conception. In 1851, Linnell took up his residence on the southern slope of Redhill, and anyone who (like the writer) has visited the artist in the picturesque retreat where he so long dwelt in virtual seclusion will know that the valleys and hills, the woodland and weald, and the rich ochreous sand and marl of the immediately surrounding district, furnished the material of all his future works. Here, in this retirement, with highly strung mind, well-furnished memory, and mature command of technical means, Linnell communed with Nature in some of her loveliest aspects; and, while never actually—or at least consciously—unfaithful to her outward appearances, gave to his interpretations of her a strong tinge of his own personality—the stamp of genius, in short; and which imparted to his works a character distinct from the mass of contemporary landscapes, that only present a literal transcript or topographic copy of a scene. Soon Linnell's landscapes were sought for with avidity, and at every fresh appearance of them at the Academy or at auctions they realised prices which at length reached to thousands of pounds each. The master—for such he was—has had his followers; the late Samuel Palmer, who married one of his daughters, manifestly drew his inspiration from him; and his sons, who settled about him in neighbouring studios at Redhill, form almost a school. All three sons reproduce the manner of the father—the eldest, James Linnell, very closely. The second son, William, has a degree of individuality, and from time to time has exhibited important works fine in conception and very powerful in colour. It is of interest for artists to know that John Linnell painted with a medium in which copal or amber varnish of his own making was the leading constituent.

Various incorrect explanations have been given of Linnell having never become a member of the Academy. The facts are these: for a number of years Linnell conformed to the objectionable rule (since dispensed with) which compelled candidates for election to enter their names as such. At length, however, thinking himself unjustly passed over, he ceased to enter his name. In course of time, after the regulation had been set aside, the Academy came to think that so eminent a painter should be in its ranks, and an offer, virtually official, to ensure his election, was made to him; but Linnell, with characteristic independence, declined the too-late proffered honour. Mr. Linnell held, in a pamphlet he published, entitled "The Royal Academy a National Institution," that the Royal Academy did not perform the functions that would justify the designation of the latter part of that title.

The Portrait, engraved for our Extra Supplement, is from a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry.

"OURS" AT THE HAYMARKET.

The column of writing by G. A. S., entitled "The Play-houses," in our last week's paper, was entirely devoted to an appreciative account of the revival of Mr. Robertson's comedy, in which Mrs. Langtry's performance, as Blanche Haye, was pronounced to be not less than "charming." Our principal illustration represents the scene of her tender parting from Angus M'Alister, the gallant lover, who is about to set off with his regiment for the Crimean war, and whose part is well sustained by Mr. H. B. Conway. The other Sketches will be recognised by those who have seen the play, and who remember Mr. Bancroft's figure as Hugh Chalcot, Mrs. Bancroft as Mary Netley, and the rest of the dramatis persone on the Haymarket stage.

James Rix, of Richmond, and George Bubeat, of Hammer-smith, who are regarded as rising young scullers, contested on the Thames Championship Course from Putney to Mortlake, for £50 a side, on Wednesday afternoon. After a good race, Bubeat won easily by three lengths, his time for the full distance being 24 min. 34 sec., only 6 sec. in advance of his opponent.

THE COURT.

Court life in the Isle of Wight has been unmarked the last week by any important incident, and each day has been passed in the ordinary routine of out-of-door pleasures, and some few guests joining the Royal dinner circle, among which have been the Empress Eugénie, Lady Abercromby, Earl and Countess Granville, Madame de Arcos, the Duc de Bassano, Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Sir Henry Ponsonby, Viscount and Viscountess Gort, the Rev. Canon Prothero, Sir John and Lady Cowell, Captain Bigge, the Hon. Lady Biddulph and Miss Biddulph, and Lieutenant-Colonel White (Gordon Highlanders), who was the same day presented to the Queen at Osborne, on his return from India. Earl Granville and the Judge-Advocate-General have had audiences of her Majesty. The Court attended Divine service on Sunday at Whippingham church, the Rev. Canon Prothero and the Rev. H. White, of the Savoy Chapel, officiating. The Empress Eugénie has, as usual, joined the Queen and Princess Beatrice in their walks and drives. West Cowes, Newport, and Ryde have been visited by the Royal party.

The Hon. Ethel Cadogan has succeeded the Hon. Victoria Baillie as Maid of Honour in Waiting.

The Special Mission appointed to invest the King of Saxony with the Order of the Garter left town on Thursday for that purpose.

The first Drawingroom of the season will be held by her Majesty on the 17th inst. at Buckingham Palace; and the second on March 1, the latter being a Collar Day. Levées will be held by the Prince of Wales at St. James's Palace, on behalf of the Queen, on the 23rd inst. and on March 9.

Another of her Majesty's old servants has passed away—Mrs. Jane Sly, who was head nurse to the eldest four Royal children, who died last Saturday at Kew Palace, aged seventy.

The Earl of Northbrook has, by command of the Queen, addressed a letter to Mrs. Brownrigg expressing her Majesty's deep sympathy and condolence with her in the loss she has sustained by the death of her husband, the late Captain C. J. Brownrigg, R.N.

Her Majesty sent a telegram to the Great Northern officials expressive of her sympathy with the sufferers in the recent collision at Hornsey, and desiring information with regard to the condition of those who were seriously injured.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales's visit to the East Riding, which closed last Saturday, was highly successful with the guns of the party, who shot some part of the time over Lord Londesborough's preserves, he being one of Mr. Sykes's guests. The chase, owing to the fog, was less satisfactory, although the meet of the Holderness hounds was the largest known by the hunt, some thousands of persons being present. His Royal Highness planted a tree in commemoration of his visit to Brantinghamthorpe. The Prince, with the Duke of Cambridge, who had also passed the week with Mr. Christopher Sykes, came to town on leaving his host. The Prince dined with his brother-in-law, the Prince of Denmark, on Sunday. His Royal Highness returned to Sandringham on Tuesday. The Princess and her daughters were at Sandringham church on Sunday, the Rector officiating.

The Prince and Princess have consented to be present at the Irish Ballad Concert on the 9th inst., given by Mr. Clement Hoey at the Royal Victoria Hall, Waterloo-road.

Five o'clock is the hour named for the dinner to which the Savage Club have invited the Prince on the 11th inst., in order that members with engagements at the theatres may be enabled to attend.

His Royal Highness has appointed March 29 for the festival dinner of the Victoria Hospital for Children, at which he will preside, at Willis's Rooms.

It has been officially intimated that the Prince will visit Great Yarmouth for the purpose of reviewing the Norfolk Artillery Militia in the last week of May. It is expected he will also open the new municipal buildings.

Princes Albert Victor and George of Wales had an enthusiastic reception on Thursday week when they landed at Colombo from the Bacchante. Their Royal Highnesses were received by Sir James Longden, Governor of Ceylon, at whose residence they stayed. The Princes were to visit Kandy last Saturday; and on Monday there was to be a procession to the elephants' kral. Newara Eliya was next to be visited, where an elk-hunt was to be had, in which the Princes were to take part. The Mediterranean Squadron will rendezvous at Athens next April, preparatory to joining the Bacchante, it being expected that it will escort Lord Charles Scott's corvette to the various Mediterranean ports to be visited by the Royal Middle.

The despatch-boat Lively was detained a day last week off the Shetlands through stress of weather. The Duke of Edinburgh went on shore at the island of Bressay, and visited the Marquis of Londonderry's farm, where he bought two Shetland ponies. On the departure of the Lively she passed Fair Isle during the night, therefore it was impossible for his Royal Highness to land personally and present binocular glasses to Mr. Tulloch for gallantry in saving life; and it was arranged they should be forwarded from Lerwick. The Duke arrived in the Clyde from Stornoway on Sunday night, the Lively taking up her position alongside the Clyde guard-ship Warrior and the Russian turret-ship Peter the Great, at Greenock anchorage. Owing to the lateness of his arrival, the usual Admiral's salute was given the next day. His Royal Highness afterwards inspected the naval reserves on board the Warrior, and visited the Peter the Great; the captains of the respective ships luncheon with the Royal Admiral on board his boat. The Duke then inspected the training-ship Cumberland in the Gareloch; and subsequently left for Douglas, Isle of Man, where he arrived on Tuesday. His Royal Highness was received on his arrival by the Lieutenant-Governor and a distinguished party, who breakfasted on board the Lively. The Duke afterwards went to Castletown, and to Port St. Mary, where he laid the foundation-stone of a sailors' shelter. Port Erin was next visited, after which he returned to Douglas by special train, thence going to Peel. At each place he received a cordial welcome and addresses were presented. Douglas was illuminated. The Duke dined at the Government House, and a ball was given in the evening. Official notice having been received at Kingstown, Dublin, that the Duke would arrive there yesterday, great preparations have been made for his reception.

Princess Louise of Lorne has expressed her intention to be present at the concert to be given on the 9th inst. at the Grosvenor Hall, Buckingham Palace-road, by the Wandering Minstrels' Amateur Orchestral Society in aid of the funds of the West-End Hospital for Diseases of the Nervous System.

ENTERTAINMENTS.

The Warwickshire Hunt ball last week was a signal success, nearly 700 guests assembling at the Shirehall, Warwick, for the occasion. The meets of the North Warwickshire at Stoneleigh and of the Warwickshire at Gayton were, as usual after the hunt ball, both largely attended. The V.W.H. ball, at Cirencester, passed with éclat, nearly 300 members of the leading families of the district assembling. The first annual ball of the O.B.H., at Great Marlow, was also well attended.

Lady Crossley gave a ball at Somerleyton Hall, Norfolk, a few days ago, an attractive feature of which was the illumination of the unique winter garden. A fancy-dress ball took place at Ryde last week for a charitable purpose, the company numbering 300.

Some well-sustained amateur theatricals were performed at Claudon Park last week; the Earl and Countess of Onslow entertaining a large house party. The second representation was wound up with a dance.

An amateur vocal and instrumental concert was given at Ragley Hall, the Marquis of Hertford's home, last Saturday, for the benefit of the Girls' Friendly Society, in which the Marchioness of Hertford and her daughters take great interest. The Marchioness presided at the pianoforte; and among those who gave their services vocally were Lady Florence Duncombe, Miss Wakefield, the Hon. G. Spencer Lyttleton, and Mr. Lionel Benson, and the Alcester Club; the instrumentalists including Lady Georgina Drummond-Moray and Miss Stephenson.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

The Rev. Charles Leslie Alexander, Vicar of Stewkley, Bucks, and the Hon. Emily Caroline Fremantle, fourth daughter of Lord Cottesloe, were married on Thursday week at St. Peter's Church, Eaton-square. The bride, who was given away by her venerable father, wore a dress of cream satin brocade, trimmed with Brussels lace, and, over a wreath of natural orange-blossoms, a veil of Irish lace fastened to her hair by a diamond arrow. She also wore a necklace of old Indian gold coins. The nine bridesmaids were attired alike in costumes of cardinal cashmere and watered silk, with sashes and small bonnets to match. Each wore a pearl daisy pin and carried a prayer-book with photographs, the gifts of the bridegroom. The bridegroom's brother, Major-General Alexander, was best man. The marriage ceremony was performed by the Dean of Ripon, uncle of the bride, assisted by her brother, the Hon. and Rev. W. H. Fremantle, Rector of St. Mary's, Bryanston-square. Lord Cottesloe entertained the wedding party at breakfast at his house in Eaton-place; after which the newly-married couple left for Rhianva, Captain Verney, R.N., and Mrs. Verney's residence in the Isle of Anglesen. The bride's travelling-dress was of dark blue velvet and cashmere, with bonnet to match, and black velvet cloak, trimmed with fur, and muff to correspond.

The marriage of Mr. Louis Ponsonby and Miss Popham, of Littlecote, will take place at St. Mark's Church, North Audley-street, on the 9th inst.

The Hon. Evelyn Palk, daughter of Lord and Lady Haldon, and Mr. Ernest Gambier-Parry, son of Mr. Gambier-Parry, of Highnam Court, Gloucestershire, are engaged to be married.

THE CHURCH.

PREFEMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Duffield, Henry George; Chaplain of Newgate Prison.
Frizzell, B. Fraser Fraser; Vicar of Millbrook.
Hall, Joseph; Rector of Melcombe Horsey, Dorset.
Horlock, Darrill, Curate of Hambleden, Bucks; Mission-Priest of the town of Yale, diocese of New Westminster, British Columbia.
Jennings, James K.; Vicar of Candicote.
Murray, F. R., Rector of Heart's Content, Newfoundland; Rector of St. Luke's Cathedral, Halifax, Nova Scotia.
Ravenhill, Henry Everett, Vicar of Buckland, Newton; Rural Dean of Whitechurch, Third Portion.
Ross-Lewin, Henry Hastings, Curate of Lighthorne, near Warwick; Curate of St. Cuthbert's, Benfieldside.
Wanstall, Walter; Vicar of St. Peter's-at-Gowts, Lincoln.—Guardian.

On Tuesday afternoon the Bishop of Salisbury presided at the annual meeting of the Church Diocesan Building Society, when it was reported that £30,000 had been expended in restoring and repairing places of worship.

Lady Charlotte Howard has given £5000 for the restoration of Whiston church, an ancient edifice of which her brother, the late Hon. and Rev. Canon Howard, was Rector for over twenty years.

The Grocers' Company have made a grant of £250 to aid the East London Church Fund in supplying East London with additional clergy and lay-workers; and the Merchant Taylors' Company have voted 100 guineas to the same object.

The foundation-stone for the new Anglican Church of St. Luke, at Davos Platz, Switzerland, was laid on the 25th ult. The ceremony was performed by Mr. F. Ashley, M.P., and it was witnessed by a large gathering of the English colony.

Two well-dressed young men, Henry Pollard and Robert Dolman, were charged before the borough magistrates at Brighton on Monday with creating a disturbance at the Church of the Annunciation, a Ritualistic place of worship. They were both sent to jail for a month.

The Bishop of Ely has received from a benefactor, who desires to remain unknown, £1000, to be held in trust, the dividends to be applied to the providing lectures in the Ely Theological College upon the subject of "The Ancient Liturgies of the Catholic Church." The lectures are enjoined to be delivered annually by the Principal, or by such other person as the Principal may from time to time appoint.

A handsome Mission-house and Workmen's Club, erected upon a site given by Mr. R. Foster, in the parish of West Hackney, was opened on Monday. There was a large gathering of poor and of those interested in the matter; and the meeting was addressed by the Bishop of Bedford, the Dean of Carlisle, Mr. Foster, Miss Ellice Hopkins, and the Rector (the Rev. C. J. Robinson).

At the morning service on Sunday in St. Bride's, Fleet-street, the Lord Mayor attended in state, and the Aldermen and members of Common Council for the ward were present. At the conclusion of the service an appeal was made on behalf of the parochial national schools, the preacher being the Rev. John Richardson, M.A., honorary Canon of Rochester and Vicar of Camden church, Camberwell. In the evening a similar appeal was made by the Rev. Charles Marshall, M.A., Rector of St. Bride's.

A handsome pulpit has been erected in St. Hilda's Church, South Shields. A brass plate let into the stone bears the following inscription:—"In memory of William Anderson, Esq., J.P., who died at Brent House, March 9, A.D. 1881, aged eighty-seven years. He was a Justice of the Peace for the county of Durham for forty years, and chairman of the Board of Guardians for the South Shields Union for twenty years. Dedicated by his sisters." The design of the pulpit is by Mr. J. H. Morton, under whose direction the church was restored two years ago.

The amount raised last year in Ireland for the relief of the poor, including the seed rate, was £1,159,470, giving an increase on the previous year of £44,030. The number of persons relieved was 580,740, showing an increase over 1880 of 30,866, the largest number being in the province of Leinster, and the smallest in Connaught.

THE LATE MR. JOHN LINNELL, ARTIST.

THE COMING SESSION.

The opening of Parliament on Tuesday next will be disappointing to the grand dames of Society and the general public of the metropolis. The reading of the Queen's Speech by the Lord Chancellor, resplendently arrayed in hat and robes of state though Lord Selborne will be, can hardly be held forth as a sufficient inducement to noble ladies to brave the chill air of February in any large numbers, and to gather in the House of Lords as numerous as they do when her Majesty in person inaugurates the Session. And the driving up of noble Lords and hon. members in unpretentious broughams and modest cabs will scarcely be as attractive outside the Palace of Westminster as the procession of the Royal carriages, with glimpses of the genial features of the Queen and the Prince and Princess of Wales invariably prove to the populace.

Legislators who cherish pageantry and state ceremonial have one consolation left them even in these humdrum days of Royal Commissions. It may safely be surmised that military tailors are assiduously finishing the uniforms of the Earl of Fingall and Lord Wenlock, of the Hon. Edward Marjoribanks, and Mr. Firth, who, with a laudable desire to emulate Solomon in all his glory, will attire themselves in these costumes on Tuesday, in order to discharge in time-honoured fashion the graceful duties of the movers and seconders of the loyal Address in reply to the Queen's Speech. Whilst their Lordships, however, may fairly count upon accomplishing their tasks in the Upper House in time to seek a not over-late dinner, there is rue in store for Mr. Marjoribanks and Mr. Firth in the Lower Chamber. It having been repeated that Mr. Bradlaugh would seize the earliest opportunity to take the seat for which he was re-elected by Northampton, an Opposition whip has been issued requesting Conservative members to be in their places to support Sir Stafford Northcote when he moves that the unorthodox disturber of their peace be not permitted to take the oath. Which motion will be met by the Government, it is reported, by "the previous question." Till this vexed question is settled for the night, Mr. Marjoribanks and Mr. Firth, it is to be feared, will be kept sitting on thorns.

Sir Henry Brand (who has found Captain Gosset, the gallant Serjeant-at-Arms, equal to all the varied and novel emergencies that have arisen in the House during the past few years) had on Tuesday some timely words to say bearing on the other rock ahead—Obstruction. Not unnaturally, the Speaker held in highest favour the new rules he himself, in conjunction with Sir Erskine May, was suddenly called upon to frame last Session. Addressing his constituents at Cottenham, this most urbane of Speakers inclined to the acceptance of those Sessional rules as standing regulations for the conduct of public business. Nor did he seem to shrink from the adoption of the closure; but plainly suggested that it was for the House to settle what additional powers it would be prepared to grant him. Sir Charles Dilke and Mr. Firth the same evening attended the Chelsea Vestry-Hall; but not before an organised band of mischievous "roughs" had "run amuck," and been dispersed by the police, could Sir Charles find a hearing for a comprehensive and most able defence of the home and foreign policy of the Government. This lucid review of a vast field of politics was characterised by all Sir Charles Dilke's masterly grasp of facts and figures, and soundness of argument; and was in every way a remarkable speech. As for Mr. Firth, he returned to his old love, and dwelt upon the charms of metropolitan municipal reform. A rural gathering of a smaller nature approved the Conservative utterances of Mr. G. Cubitt and Mr. St. John Brodrick on Tuesday at Walton-on-Thames; and various other members of the same party have this week condemned the Ministry of Mr. Gladstone in sweeping terms.

Mr. W. H. Smith on Monday exemplified in the liveliest fashion the physical effects of his recent yachting cruise by making Exeter Hall ring again on Monday night with his vigorous denunciation of the Administration and all its works. Next to this speech in force and animation ranks the address which Mr. Joseph Cowen delivered on Saturday night to his constituents in Newcastle-on-Tyne, and in which the hon. member did not spare the rod upon the backs of the Government for their Irish policy. But, happily, Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues have broad backs, and clear consciences.

The Prime Minister himself on Tuesday, in replying to an influential deputation which waited upon him with regard to local taxation, acquitted himself well of the familiar Ministerial duty of saying nothing without giving offence. But the deputation did not hesitate to cry for "new taxes," if they should be necessary to relieve the burden of local rates.

The leadership of the Irish Home-Rule party whilst Mr. Parnell remains in Kilmainham is as yet unsettled. But Mr. Sexton has issued a circular calling the irreconcilable Irish members together at Palace-chambers, Westminster, on Monday next.

The Glasgow Herald having achieved the hundredth year of its publication, the event was celebrated by a dinner in St. Andrew's Hall, Glasgow, yesterday week. Mr. James H. Stoddart, editor and one of the proprietors of the paper, presided; and the company included all the most prominent gentlemen in Glasgow and the west of Scotland. The toast of the Glasgow Herald was proposed by Mr. George Anderson, M.P., who drew a graphic picture of the changes which had taken place in journalistic literature since the Herald was founded, and who paid a high compliment to the ability and enterprise with which the paper is conducted. Mr. Stoddart has been presented with his portrait, painted at the cost of members of the staff of the paper and numerous friends in Scotland.

Shortly after ten o'clock last Saturday night a train of empty coal-trucks was on its way from Poplar to Brent, on the North London Railway. At a short distance from Old Ford-road station the draw-bar of one of the trucks suddenly gave way, and the truck breaking its couplings was with others thrown in splinters over both the up and down lines. Within a few seconds a passenger-train from Broad-street to Poplar ran into the wreck, the engine was thrown off the rails, and five passengers in the train were killed.—The inquest on the persons who were killed in the collision at Hornsey station on Wednesday week evening was held last Saturday, when the jury expressed an opinion in their verdict that Johnson, the driver of the Barnet train, had been guilty of neglect of duty, and that the servants of the company at Hornsey ought to have protected the previous train by means of fog-signals.—Two inquiries were held on Monday respecting the North London Railway accident—one by Sir John Humphries, the other by Colonel Yolland, on the part of the Board of Trade. The only explanation given of the detachment of the empty waggons was the breaking of the draw-bar, which Colonel Yolland remarked had several points of weakness, through not being continuous and solid throughout. The Coroner's jury found a verdict of accidental death, recommending that all draw-bars should be periodically inspected.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

SPAIN.

The representatives of the holders of the Consolidated Interior Bonds had an audience of the King on Monday, at which his Majesty expressed his satisfaction with the arrangement for the conversion of the debt concluded between them and Señor Camacho, the Minister of Finance.

HOLLAND.

The First Chamber on the 26th ult. adopted the Budget of the Ministry for Foreign Affairs. At Saturday's sitting of the Second Chamber, the Treaty of Commerce with France was rejected by 46 votes to 32.

BELGIUM.

The Chamber of Representatives has adopted, by 86 votes to 10, the whole of the bill sanctioning the Treaty of Commerce concluded with France.

GERMANY.

The Crown Prince and Crown Princess on the 25th ult. celebrated the twenty-fourth anniversary of their wedding by a dinner en famille at the palace. From their Royal and Imperial relatives their Imperial Highnesses received numerous congratulations, both personal and by telegraph.

More than 3000 persons attended the grand subscription ball in the Opera House, Berlin, recently, and the total proceeds of the festivity, which will be distributed among various charities, amount to 28,926 marks.

Herr Richter's amendment to the German Imperial Budget has been accepted by the Federal Council; but the deputy was told on Monday by Herr Bötticher that the Federal Government considered his motion an unjustifiable deviation from previous practice. Herr von Bötticher read an Imperial message closing the Reichstag. The President thereupon closed the Session, proposing, before he left the chair, three cheers for the Emperor.

The Government has abandoned the idea of holding an exhibition at Berlin in 1885, regarding that date as premature.

The Lower House of the Prussian Diet on Monday proceeded to the first reading of the Budget for 1882-3. Herr Bitter, the Minister of Finance, announced that by the new Imperial Budget the Prussian estimates originally submitted to the House are modified in so far that the matriculatory contribution of Prussia is reduced by 5,839,433 marks, and that the projected loan of 4,966,700 marks can be withdrawn.

M. Falk, recently Prussian Minister of Education, the author of the text of the May Laws, has been appointed President of the Supreme Court of Westphalia.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

In the sitting of the Hungarian Lower House of the Diet the Budget was, on the 25th ult., read the first time, the House agreeing by 234 to 161 to discuss the separate clauses.

Further fighting is reported from the Herzegovina, but it appears to have been of minor importance. No losses are reported on the side of the Austrian troops. The insurgents are showing great activity, and are doing their utmost to secure the command of good strategic points. Foca is threatened; and bands of insurgents attempted to march on Konjica, but were driven off by the troops.

The Delegations have met, and are considering a Bill for an extraordinary war credit of 8,000,000 florins. The Foreign Minister, however, has made it distinctly understood that probably more will be required.

In the Austrian Delegation on Tuesday, Count Kalnoky assured the members of the thoroughly friendly disposition of Russia towards Austria. The Princes of Servia and Montenegro were also well disposed in the Herzegovinian business, but the attitude of the populations was less pleasing. Indeed, Austria would appear to be prepared for a considerable extension of the insurrection.

RUSSIA.

The Grand Duchess Marie Paulowna, wife of the Grand Duke Vladimir, was safely delivered of a daughter last Sunday morning. The infant has received the name of Hélène.

GREECE.

The King of the Hellenes opened the Chamber of Deputies at Athens on Monday. His Majesty expressed his gratitude to the Great Powers for the settlement they had made with Turkey, and said that although there were still some difficulties existing he believed they would shortly be removed. The foreign relations of Greece were friendly, but the expenses which had been incurred had seriously disturbed the equilibrium of the Budget, to remedy which means would be proposed. The Times correspondent says that the reception of the King's Address was "absolutely unsympathetic." The silence was unbroken at his entry and at his departure, and the public in the streets was equally cold. So decided an expression of public disfavour was never before seen since King George's accession. The opposition majority has risen by new accessions to about thirty.

A ball was given on the 26th ult. at the British Legation. The King and Queen and the whole Court, the members of the Diplomatic Body, and over 300 persons were present.

AMERICA.

The President of the United States has presented to the Senate a further instalment of the Diplomatic Correspondence concerning the affairs of Chili and Peru, and a long summary of these documents is telegraphed from Washington. President Arthur recognises Chili and Peru as independent Powers, to whom he has neither right nor inclination to dictate. The book also contains some despatches that have passed between England and the United States concerning the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty. Concerning the former, the Standard New York correspondent says they indicate a complete change of policy in a pacific direction on the part of the United States. The New York press is very severe upon Mr. Blaine for his policy towards Chili. Mr. Blaine has made a long explanation in vindication of the course he pursued towards Chili and Peru. Chili, it is announced, has accepted the good offices of the United States in arranging its dispute with Peru. It will, however, have nothing to say to Señor Calderon, and demands the cession of the Tarapaca district, a war indemnity of 20,000,000 dols., and the cession of Arica if that is not paid within sixteen years. If these terms are refused Chili will decline any further friendly intervention.

In the Senate on Monday the bill for re-establishing the Court of Commissioners on the Alabama claims, and providing for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award, was reported from the Judiciary Committee. It recommends the payment of the losses inflicted by the exculpatory cruisers.

The trial of Guiteau came to a sudden termination on the 25th ult., when, after the counsel for the prosecution had concluded his speech, Judge Cox proceeded with the summing up, which occupied only an hour and a half. The jury retired, but within an hour returned into court, and said they found the prisoner guilty. The verdict was received with expressions of approval in the court. The prisoner shouted as he left the dock, "God will avenge this outrage," and stated that he believed that on appeal the decision would be reversed.

Several lives have been lost and much damage done to property by a fire which occurred on Tuesday in a large building in Park-row and Nassau and Beckman streets.

The death is announced of the Rev. Henry Bellows, of New York, the well-known Unitarian Minister.

CANADA.

At the instance of the Marquis of Lorne, the initiatory steps have been taken for the establishment of an academy of eminent literary and scientific men in Canada, after the plan of the Assembly of the Immortals in France. The proposed body is to be composed of six sections, representing English and French letters, history and archaeology, and the mathematical, physical, geological, and biological sciences. It is probable that there will be ten or twelve members in each section. Dr. Dawson is spoken of as the first President.

INDIA.

Mr. Durand, Mr. Grant, Mr. F. R. Cockerell, Colonel Tweedie, Colonel Black, Mahommed Afzal Khan, and several native officials have been appointed Companions of the Order of the Star of India.

Cholera having broken out among the immense number of pilgrims now assembled at Allahabad, the Government has ordered them to disperse.

In view of the critical state of affairs in Basutoland, the Cape Town Parliament will meet on March 17.

Gil Perez, the popular French actor, formerly of the Palais Royal, died on Monday in a lunatic asylum, in which he has been confined two years.

Mr. Edgar Vincent, Coldstream Guards, has accepted the post of British and Dutch representative on the new Council of Administration at Constantinople.

After four days' debate the Servian Skuptschina on Monday adopted the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne by 99 votes against 50.

Many lives were lost by the bursting of a reservoir at Calais on Monday, eight of the victims being children at the school which was flooded.

The Français states that the Isle of Herm, off Guernsey, leased last year to the Trappists, who found the climate unsuited to their system of agriculture, has been bought by French Carthusians for £6500.

In one of the houses at Pompeii not yet entirely excavated has been found a mosaic fountain the decorations of which are far superior to any of the kind yet found. On the roof of the fountain is a representation of the sea, with Aphrodite issuing from her shell. The goddess holds the arm of a half-submerged Cupid, and other Cupids are visible here and there in the water. Below this group is a Cupid embracing a dolphin, preceded by a nereid, who spreads out her mantle in the form of an arch over his head. On the left two women are seen on the shore—one standing resting her chin on her left hand, the other seated on the ground and holding up her right hand in an attitude of admiration. Both are in profile. On the right, a woman stands on the shore, and in the centre of the picture another female figure kneels beside a box and gazes at the sea, her back being turned to the spectator.

BENEVOLENT OBJECTS.

The annual general meeting of the News-vendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution will be held at the office, 28, Martin's-lane, Cannon-street, City, next Tuesday evening—William Stevens, Esq., of the Family Herald, in the chair.

The annual dinner of the friends and supporters of the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools for Orphans and Necessitous Children will take place at the Cannon-street Hotel on Wednesday, Feb. 15; the chair being taken by Lord Hartington, M.P.

An amateur vocal and instrumental concert was given at Ragley Hall, the Marquis of Hertford's home, near Leicester, last Saturday, for the benefit of the Girls' Friendly Society, in which the Marchioness of Hertford and her daughters take great interest. It was a great success.

The annual banquet in aid of the funds of the French Hospital will be held to-day (Saturday), under the immediate patronage of his Excellency the French Ambassador, who will take the chair, and of other noblemen and gentlemen who feel an interest in this institution, including the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, and Under-Sheriffs of London and Middlesex.

At a meeting on Monday of the Cardiff Infirmary governors it was reported that the contract for the erection of a new infirmary, at a cost of £22,720, by Messrs. Clarke, Burton, and Co., Cardiff, had been accepted. The building is to be completed within twelve months. Among the subscribers to the fund are Lord Tredegar and Mr. Ware, each 1000 guineas.

A fancy costume ball will be held on Monday, Feb. 20, at the Royal Albert Hall, Kensington, on behalf of the Bolinbroke House Pay Hospital, Wandsworth-common. Bolinbroke House is a "Home in Sickness" for those who need hospital treatment and nursing, and are willing to pay for these advantages in accordance with their means in preference to receiving free treatment at a charitable institution; and it is to help to clear a debt of £1300 due to the trustee that this ball is organised.

The Goldsmiths' Company have again presented the Royal Academy of Music with £50, the third donation this company has given to the Academy. The Goldsmiths' Company have also sent £50 to the Rev. A. R. Carter, M.A., Rector of Wapping, in aid of the funds of the Church Restoration Committee of his parish. The Merchant Tailors' Company have given £5 5s. to the funds of the Church of England Home for Waifs and Strays. The Mercers' Company have voted ten guineas and the Gunmakers' Company five guineas for Mrs. Hilton's crèche and branches in Stepney-causeway. Mr. J. B. Capel has forwarded £10 to the Mansion House poor-box.

The annual meeting of the governors of the Ventnor Consumption Hospital was held on Monday at the offices, 34, Craven-street, Strand, Lord Lamington in the chair. The report of the board of management stated that the number of in-patients treated during the past year was 555, the majority of whom had greatly improved, many being enabled on their return to their homes to resume their usual occupations; the majority come from London. The receipts had amounted to £7342, and the expenditure to £7351. The institution is situated in the most sheltered spot in England—viz., the Undercliff of the Isle of Wight, and every patient has a separate bed-room, facing the south and overlooking the sea.

A public holiday was held at Paisley on Monday, to celebrate the opening of the new Townhall buildings, presented to the town by Messrs. Clark, of the Anchor Threadworks, Paisley, as a memorial of their brother, George A. Clark, who died at Newark, New Jersey, nine years ago. The buildings, a magnificent structure, are estimated to cost nearly £100,000, and contain a handsome clock with chimera. The Provost, magistrates, council, and other public bodies and trades marched in procession in honour of the event.

THE SAILOR PRINCES AT A PICNIC AT THE TEMPLE OF TEN THOUSAND ROCKS, AMOY.—SEE PAGE 110.

THE OPIUM TRAFFIC: CHINESE SELLING OPIUM.—SEE PAGE 110.

1. Triumphal Arch, near railway station. 2. Jeypore state elephant-carriage. 3. View from the Ambair Chowk, looking East. 4. Triumphal Arch in the Manuck Chowk, looking West.

VISIT OF THE VICEROY OF INDIA TO JEYPORE.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

OUR SAILOR PRINCES IN CHINA.

We have to thank a correspondent residing at Kulangsoo, Amoy, for an illustration of the visit of Prince Albert Victor and Prince George, sons of the Prince and Princess of Wales, to the "Temple of Ten Thousand Rocks," Bang-seng-ghiam, so called from the multitude of granite boulders amidst which it is built, two miles inland on the island of Amoy. The commercial port of Amoy, on the coast of the province of Fuh-Kien, is in a sheltered bay which contains this island, of a circular shape, about ten miles wide; the island partly consisting of rugged hills, which leave space for a large city and its suburbs, on the western side, and for villages and cultivated fields to the north. It has a population of 350,000 Chinese, densely crowded together; while the cemeteries and graves of the dead cover the neighbouring hills and ravines. Kulangsoo, where most of the European merchants live, is a smaller island, separated from that of Amoy by a channel half a mile wide; and the mainland is two miles distant, forming an inner harbour close to the city. The upper part of the town, with the fortified citadel, standing upon the hill above, is divided by a wall from the more populous western quarter adjacent to the inner strait and estuary, where there is much trade and bustle. The ridge of hills, crested with huge "tors" and peaks of granite, and strewn with boulders of various sizes, rises in some places to the height of 500 ft. or 600 ft. Several granite blocks in the suburbs of the city have been carved into colossal statues, or cut with antique inscriptions, and the grave-stones and sepulchral monuments are beyond numbering. On Thursday, Dec. 15, the British Detached Squadron, consisting of H.M.S. Inconstant, flagship of Admiral the Earl of Clanwilliam, H.M.S. Bacchante, with the two Princes on board as midshipmen, H.M.S. Carysfort, and H.M.S. Tourmaline, arrived at this port. The next day was wet, preventing a cricket-match that had been arranged between the officers of the squadron and the Amoy cricket club. But Saturday proved fine, and the members of the Amoy Club invited their naval visitors to a picnic at the Temple of Ten Thousand Rocks. About fifty officers, including the two Princes of Wales and Prince Louis of Battenberg, accepted this entertainment. Tiffin, or luncheon as we should call it, was served in the Temple to a company of nearly one hundred and twenty, amongst whom were most of the ladies residing at Amoy. Two photographs of the scene were taken by Mr. G. A. Corder, of the Chinese revenue cruiser, Fei-hoo; and our illustration is copied from one of these, showing the Princes standing in the foreground. On their return from the hills, their Royal Highnesses mounted ponies in training on the Amoy racecourse, and rode down to the shore, before they re-embarked on board their ship in the outer harbour. The squadron left Amoy next morning, and proceeded to Hong-Kong.

We published, last week, an illustration of the squadron passing through the Inland Sea of Japan; and we also gave a view of Colombo, in Ceylon, where H.M.S. Bacchante, with the Sailor Princes on board, has already arrived on her voyage home.

CHINESE SELLING OPIUM.

The habit of smoking opium has prevailed for ages past among the nations of Eastern Asia. It is a mistake to suppose that it was first introduced into China by the British Government of India sending thither for sale the superior kind of opium produced in Bengal. Opium-growing for home consumption had certainly been practised, on a very extensive scale, in Szechuen, Yunnan, Honan, Queichoo, and other western provinces, during centuries of past Chinese history; and Consul Baber estimates that the poppy cultivation is not less than a third part of the whole agriculture in the great province of Yunnan. The use of Indian opium, which bears a high price, is confined to the eastern cities and to the richer classes, including mandarins and officials, though formally disapproved by the Imperial Government. It has much the same relation to popular Chinese opium-smoking as the costly luxury of fine Havana cigars, in England, has to the general use of tobacco, which is found to be a cheap indulgence, though non-smokers believe it does nobody any good. On the other hand, while persons excessively addicted to opium are likely to fall into a wretched condition of debility and mental imbecility, it does not seem to make them furious madmen, like the drunkards of alcoholic liquor in our own happy country. Gin, brandy, rum, and whisky—to say nothing against beer—are far more demoralising, in the sense of inciting to acts of crime, than the seductive vapour of that famous narcotic, which the Chinese are so ready to buy and to sell. The unaccustomed traveller, not only in Chinese towns, where its manufacture and sale meet no prohibition, but in other countries with Chinese immigrants among the population, may well be shocked at the miserably degraded aspect of ordinary customers frequenting the lowest class of opium-shops. It is probable that a Chinese philosopher, such as the author of Goldsmith's imaginary letters in "The Citizen of the World," if he were led to visit some of the London gin-shops at night, would form a strong opinion of the immorality of all dealings, whether at the tipping bar, or in the jug-and-bottle department, in the way of stimulating drink. The fact is, that the very worst specimens of the population, debased by other vices, are naturally inclined to seek whatever means of intoxication they can most easily procure. They are to be seen, unhappily, among the Chinese and others, wherever opium is sold by retail, as is shown in our illustration, looking more helplessly and hopelessly enervated than the European victims of intemperance, but not nearly so dangerous to the safety and peace of their neighbours. It should, however, be particularly observed, that there is a great difference between opium-smoking, which Sir George Birdwood declares is scarcely pernicious, and the chewing of opium. A memorandum by Mr. Aitchison, Chief Commissioner of British Burmah, dated last May, was accompanied with official reports showing the great evils caused by the sale of a preparation called "Koon-bone," which was supplied to boys of twelve or fourteen years, at one or two pice the packet. This stuff consists of sliced betel-leaf steeped in a decoction of opium, to be chewed; and there can be no doubt of its deleterious effect, more especially upon youth. The Indian Government lost no time in acting upon the information they received, putting the retail trade in Burmah under severe restrictions, raising the price of opium, and reducing the number of licensed shops from sixty-eight to twenty-seven. We should be sorry to see the common use of the drug, in any shape, extended to the Western nations.

No more charming Valentines need be desired than those issued by Messrs. S. Hildesheimer and Co., the well-known fine-art publishers, of London, Manchester, and New York. These love-missives are of great variety, and all marked by good taste. The same praise can justly be given to the Easter Cards and Birthday Cards published by this firm. Some mounted and fringed ones are especially elegant.

THE VICEROY OF INDIA AT JEYPORE.

The city of Jeypore, in Rajpootana, 140 miles west of Agra and south-west of Delhi, is the capital of a Native State, which is mildly ruled by its Maharajah, subject to the British Imperial protectorate. The Marquis of Ripon, Viceroy of India, visited Jeypore on Nov. 16, and was next day joined by the Marchioness of Ripon, from Agra; his Excellency stayed till noon of the 18th, and performed the ceremony of distributing prizes at the Maharajah's College. On his arrival by railway at Jeypore, the Viceroy was received at the station by the Maharajah; with whom were nine of the principal Sirdars, Colonel Bannerman, the Resident, Brigadier-General Carnegie, Commanding at Nusseerabad, Major Jacob, Executive Engineer, and Dr. Hendley, Residency Surgeon. The Viceregal party were driven in the Maharajah's state carriages through the city, and thence to the Residency. A guard of honour was in attendance, furnished by the Deoli Irregular Force. The road was lined by sowars and sepoys of that force, by the Maharajah's soldiers, and the mounted retainers of the various Thakurs and Chiefs of the States. The sight was picturesque and impressive. The city looked its best; the people thronged to witness the procession of carriages, two abreast, through the broad streets; and the liberal display of flags, bannets, and mottoes of welcome on the triumphal arches and the public buildings gave colour and life to the display. The city streets were lined by troops, and several hundred hags performed a wild sword dance in front of the cortege. Sixty-two state elephants, in trappings of gold and silver, brought up the rear of the procession, which, entering by the Sanganair Gate, traversed the chief streets and came out by the Ajmere Gate. Great enthusiasm was shown as the Viceregal carriages passed. Next day the Maharajah paid a formal visit to his Excellency. He was received with a salute of nineteen guns and a guard of honour furnished by the Deoli Irregular Force. The interview was a very short one. The Viceroy expressed himself highly pleased with his reception, and admired the general appearance of the city, with all its modern improvements. The chief Sirdars were presented to his Excellency, and after attar and pan had been distributed, his Highness took his leave under a second salute. In the afternoon the return visit was paid, the Viceroy being received in the handsome hall of audience in the palace. His Highness gave a dinner at the palace in the evening, and the city was illuminated.

Our illustrations are from photographs taken by Mr. J. Green, photographic artist, of Jeypore.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.

The election of Bodley's Librarian, so long delayed, takes place to-day (Saturday).

The Marquis of Bute has contributed £10,000 towards the proposed university college for South Wales, on the condition that it shall be located in Cardiff.

Mr. Frederic Harrison gave a lecture on Monday evening before a large audience at the London Institution on the Real Value of Mechanical Invention to Civilisation.

On Tuesday the prize medals and certificates awarded at the exhibition of woollen manufactures and allied industries at the Crystal Palace were distributed by the Lord Mayor.

A proclamation in Tuesday night's Dublin Gazette dissolves the Queen's University, Ireland, in favour of the Royal Irish University, which is now in a position to confer Degrees.

Recently the York Certified Industrial Boys' School has been enlarged by the erection of new buildings, and on Tuesday afternoon the Archbishop of York, the president, gave an address at the opening ceremony.

The Lord Lieutenant held a Levée at Dublin Castle on Tuesday. Mr. Lawson, M.P., Lord Mayor, went in state, accompanied by the civic officers, and escorted by mounted police.

Captain Knapp Barrow, eminent for his services on the Gold Coast, who was the bearer of the Gold Axe from the King of Ashantee to the Queen, was entertained at a banquet, given at the Empire Club, previous to his departure for West Africa as Colonial Secretary. Lord Brasenore presided.

The members of the Civil Service Rifle Volunteers Amateur Dramatic Society gave a dramatic performance on Thursday evening at St. George's Hall—the pieces being Mr. Palgrave Simpson's comedy-drama "Alone" and Mr. T. J. Williams's farce "My Turn Next."

It is announced that the Avenue Theatre, at the bottom of Northumberland-avenue, is nearly finished, and will open during the first week in March, with a revival of the opera comique "Madame Favart," which had so successful a run at the Strand Theatre two or three years ago.

On Wednesday angling for salmon began on the Tweed, and on Thursday the principal English rivers were open for salmon-fishing. The Tay opens on the 5th inst., but the majority of Scotch rivers remain closed until the 11th, while net fishing on the Tweed is not open until the 15th.

The 2nd Battalion Gordon Highlanders (better known as the 92nd) landed on Monday at Portsmouth, after service in Afghanistan and at the Cape, and received a most cordial recognition of their gallant achievements abroad. They were inspected by Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, who bade the Highlanders a hearty welcome back, and were afterwards marched to Portsea Barracks.

Mr. Mundella, M.P., distributed at Sheffield on Monday night the Lancastrian prizes won by the scholars in the local elementary schools. He said that, although education was so constantly with him, it grew more absorbing day by day. After all, he was the most fortunate Minister in the Government, for his department was non-political. No man, whatever his politics, could object to the extension of education to every child in the land.

A crowded and most influential meeting of sympathisers with the oppressed Jews who, by reason of their residence in Russian territory, have been subjected to so much persecution, was held on Wednesday afternoon in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor. Resolutions in conformity with the purpose of the meeting were moved and seconded by Lord Shaftesbury, the Bishop of London, Cardinal Manning, and Canon Farrar, and unanimously carried.

A deplorable murder of a little girl, who had been missed for over a month from her home in Pimlico, has been a common theme of conversation this week. The father of Georgina Moore, the child in question, attended at Yalding on Tuesday, and identified a body taken from the River Medway on Monday as that of his daughter, who disappeared so mysteriously from her home at Pimlico on Dec. 20. Inspector Marshall, the same day, took into custody at Yalding a woman, named Esther Pay, who had been a neighbour of the Moores. She had in her possession a bag containing a copy of the Penny Illustrated Paper with a portrait of Georgina Moore. She was charged at Westminster on Wednesday with causing the death of the poor girl, and remanded.

The new buildings of Wycliff Hall, Oxford, were formally opened on Tuesday, when a meeting was held in the library, at which Mr. Deacon, treasurer of the Theological Schools of Oxford and Cambridge, said that towards the total of £60,000 required they had received £40,000. It was also stated that an anonymous donor had promised £5000 in addition.

The list of those students at Cambridge who have achieved positions in the mathematical tripos was announced yesterday week in the Senate House. The Senior Wrangler is Mr. R. A. Herman, of Trinity College; the two following names in the list being those of Mr. J. S. Yeo, of St. John's, and Mr. S. Loney, of Sidney Sussex College. Miss Burstall, of Girton College, gained a position equal to No. 31 in the tripos; while Miss Julian and Miss Lester, of the same college, passed the examinations so well that they are credited with rank corresponding to the head of the list of Junior Optimes. Miss Oldaker, of Newnham College, passed informally the examination for the Mathematical Tripos, and her place was equal to the third in the list of Junior Optimes.

Mr. Millais, R.A., has concluded negotiations for the extensive shootings and salmon-fishings of Murthly Castle, in Perthshire, along with a beautiful residence in the castle policies, now known as Dalpowie House, formerly by the prettier name of Glen-Binnam. Sir Douglas and Lady Stewart, who have resided at Dalpowie while the castle was occupied by Mrs. Graham, have taken up their residence at Murthly Castle; and, as Sir Douglas does not care for sport, he has handed over his shootings to Mr. Millais, with Dalpowie House. Mr. Millais also gets the salmon-fishings in the Tay belonging to Murthly; and very good they are, comprising about three miles of the river, a great part of it on both sides, giving fishing six days in the week.

Lord Derby presided on Monday over the annual meeting of the Manchester and Northern Counties Royal Botanical and Horticultural Society, held in the Manchester Townhall. In moving the adoption of the report, his Lordship said that the Exhibition held in Manchester in August last was generally admitted to be one of equal merit and importance to any that had been held out of London, or perhaps even in London. The only adverse influence was that of the weather. The number of visitors during the year was nearly 100,000, and they had given away about £2600 in prizes. Looking at the undertaking from the merely utilitarian point of view, he had no doubt that it had a great deal more than repaid any expenditure it had caused. In a place like Manchester, and in a county like Lancashire, such a society acted as a humanising agency, with which they could not afford to dispense.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEB. 11, 1882.

SUNDAY, FEB. 5.
Septuagesima.	Westminster Abbey, 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. Rev. Canon T. N. Rowell.
Morning Lessons: Gen. i. and ii. 1-4; Rev. xxi. 1-9. Evening Lessons: Gen. ii. 4 or Job xxxviii.; Rev. xxi. 9-xxii. 6.	St. James's, noon probably Rev. Francis (Garden, the Sub-Dean).
St. Paul's Cathedral, 10.30 a.m.; Rev. W. H. Milman; 3.15 p.m., Bishop Hensington; 7 p.m., Rev. R. W. deacon Atkinson.	Whitehall, 11 a.m. and 3 p.m., Rev. V. H. Stanton.
	Savoy, 11.30 a.m., Rev. Henry White, the Chaplain; 7 p.m., Rev. R. W. Thompson, Assistant-Chaplain.
MONDAY, FEB. 6.
West London Hospital, anniversary, noon.	British Architects' Institute, 8 p.m. (Mr. J. Boulton on Uniformity in Building, &c.).
Royal Institution, general monthly meeting, 5 p.m.	Medical Society, 8.30 p.m. (Lectures on the History of the Medical Profession by Dr. H. R. Bell).
London Institution, 5 p.m. (Mr. Grant Allen on an English Weed).	Society of Arts, Cantor Lecture, 8 p.m. (Captain Abney on Recent Advances in Photography).
Musical Association, 5 p.m. (Rev. Sir F. A. G. Ouseley on Theoretical Treatises of the 17th and 18th Centuries).	Society of Engineers, 7.30 p.m. (Address of the President, Mr. James Church).
Victoria Institute, 8 p.m.
TUESDAY, FEB. 7.
Meeting of Parliament.	Zoological Society, 8.30 p.m.
Christian Knowledge Society, 2 p.m.	Biblical Archaeology Society, 8.30 p.m. (Rev. W. Houghton on the Birds of Assyrian Monuments).
Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Professor McKendrick on the Mechanism of the Senses).	Gresham Lectures, 6 p.m. (Dean Burdon on Divinity) (four days).
Anthropological Institute, 8 p.m.	Society of Arts, 8 p.m. (Mr. E. H. Hall on the Trade Capacities of Newfoundland).
Civil Engineers' Institution, 8 p.m. (Dr. Paget Higgs on the Candle Power of the Electric Light).
Pathological Society, 8.30 p.m.
WEDNESDAY, FEB. 8.
Half-Quarter Day.	Sanitary Institute, 7.45 p.m.
Society of Arts, 8 p.m. (Colonel Maitland on the Manufacture of Ordnance).	Graphic Society, 8 p.m.
Literary Fund, 3 p.m.	Richmond Hospital, dinner, Star and Garter Hotel (the Duke of Cambridge in the chair).
Cancer Hospital, annual meeting, 4 p.m.	Albert Hall Choral Society, 8 p.m. (Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater").
Geological Society, 8 p.m.	East of England Dug Show, Colchester (two days).
Hunterian Society, anniversary and oration, 7.30 p.m.	Amateur Mechanical Society, 6 p.m.
Microscopical Society, anniversary, 8 p.m.
THURSDAY, FEB. 9.
Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Mr. H. N. Mosley on Corals).	Mathematical Society, 8 p.m.
London Institution, 7 p.m. (Mr. John Perry on Spinning Tops).	Philharmonic Society, 8 p.m.
Royal Society, 4.30 p.m.	Inventors' Institute, 8 p.m.
Society of Antiquaries, 8.30 p.m.	Telegraph Engineers' Society, 8 p.m. (Mr. H. F. Joel on the Pilsen Arc Electric Light).
FRIDAY, FEB. 10.
Marriage of the Queen, 1840.	Architectural Association, 6.30 p.m. (Mr. E. J. Taver on the History of Architecture).
United Service Institution, 3 p.m. (Mr. W. Topley on Geology).	Hunterian Society, dinner.
Royal Institution, 8 p.m. (Professor Frankland on the Climate of Town and Country, 9 p.m.).	New Shakespeare Society, 8 p.m. (papers by Rev. M. Wyllie-Mayor and Dr. F. Landmann).
Astronomical Society, anniversary, 8 p.m.	Quekett Microscopical Club, 8 p.m.
Clinical Society, 8.30 p.m.
SATURDAY, FEB. 11.
Moon's last quarter, 8.34 a.m.	Assault-at-Arms, Albert Hall (in aid of the Cambridge Asylum for Soldiers' Widows, the Prince and Princess of Wales to be present, 2.30 p.m.).

THE WEATHER.

RESULTS OF METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS AT THE KEW OBSERVATORY OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY.
Lat. 51° 28' N.; Long. 0° 18' 47" W. Height above Sea, 34 feet.

DAY.	DAILY MEANS OF					THERMOM.		WIND.
	Barometer Corrected.	Temperature of the Air.	Dew Point.	Relative Humidity.	Amount of Cloud.	Maximum, read at 10 a.m.	Minimum, read at 10 p.m.	General Direction.	Movement in 24 hours, read at 10 a.m. next morning.
Jan. 22	30.561	36.9	34.5	92	9	41.9	31.8	WSW.	20 0.000
23	30.563	33.6	31.9	94	8	40.5	27.6	SSW.	43 0.000
24	30.688	33.8	30.5	89	8	42.1	25.0	SSW.	41 0.000
25	30.677	29.6	27.0	93	11	36.0	23.1	SSW. ESE.	25 0.000
26	30.495	33.1	29.5	89	10	35.2	30.8	ESE. SSW.	123 0.010
27	30.318	42.2	40.2	93	7	47.1	34.5	ESE. S.W.	188 0.000
28	30.269	47.9	43.5	55	10	51.5	42.6	SSW.	426 0.005

The following are the readings of the meteorological instruments for the above days, in order, at ten o'clock a.m.:

Barometer (in inches) corrected	30.614	30.517	30.710	30.724	30.728	30.781
Temperature of Air	33.6	33.9	33.8	33.4	33.2	33.0
Temperature of Evaporation	31.7	31.8	31.8	31.4	31.2	31.0
Direction of Wind	WSW.	SSW.	SSW.	SSW.	S.	SSW.

NEW MUSIC.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW DANCE MUSIC.

Nearest and Dearest Waltz ..	D'Albert.
Patience Waltz and Quadrille ..	D'Albert.
Patience Lancers and Polka ..	D'Albert.
Olivette Waltz and Quadrille ..	D'Albert.
Olivette Lancers and Polka ..	D'Albert.
Drink, Popsy, Drink, Polka ..	D'Albert.
Venetia Waltz ..	Caroline Lowthian.
Je l'Aime Valse ..	Caroline Lowthian.
Mother Hubbard Polka ..	Caroline Lowthian.
The Dado Polka ..	A. Beck.

Price 2s. each net.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW SONGS.

The Jovial Beggar ..	Mrs. Arthur Goodale.
Sung by Mr. Barrington Foot.
Ad (Evermore) ..	A. H. Behrend.
Sung by Mr. F. King.
Deep and True ..	Berthold Toura.
Sung by Mr. Oswald.
What shall I say? ..	Tully.
(Notes of the West) ..	Caroline Lowthian.
Shepherd's Song ..	Alice Horton.
The Reason Why ..	F. Cowen.
In youth's season ..	Gounod.
My Beloved ..	Piniatti.
In the twilight of our love ..	A. Sullivan.
(Drawing-room version of "Silver" d is the raven hair, from "Patience.")
Two's the best of company ..	Miss A. M. Wakefield.
When the heart is far away ..	Miss A. M. Wakefield.

Price 2s. each net.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S NEW PIANOFORTE

Janotha ..	Moment Musical ..	2s. 6d. net.
Janotha ..	Yvonne ..	2s. 6d. net.
Janotha ..	Gavotte ..	2s. 6d. net.
Lord Dupplin ..	Gavotte ..	2s. 6d. net.
Jules de Sival ..	Handelian Dance ..	2s. 6d. net.
Cotford Dick ..	Echoes of the Hill (Fantasia on Whyte-Melville's Hunting Song) ..	2s. 6d. net.
Smallwood ..	Allegretto a la Rigodon ..	1s. 6d. net.

WHYTE-MELVILLE'S HUNTING SONGS.

A BIRD ONE TO FOLLOW, A BAD ONE TO BEAT.	E. B. TERRY. 2s. net.
THE GOOD GREY MARE.	THEO. MARZIALS. 2s. net.
THE GALLOPING SQUIRE.	E. B. TERRY. 2s. net.
THE CLIPPER THAT STANDS IN THE STALL AT THE TOP.	J. L. HATTON. 2s. net.
DRINK, POPPY, DRINK.	2s. net.

CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street; and 15, Poultry.

ECHOES OF THE HUNT. A Transcription

for the Pianoforte of Whyte-Melville's Hunting Songs, "Drink, Poppy, Drink," "The Clipper that stands in the Stall at the Top," and "The Galloping Squire." By COTSFORD DICK. Price 2s. net.

CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street; and 15, Poultry.

PATIENCE. An Aesthetic Opera. By

W. S. GILBERT and ARTHUR SULLIVAN. Now being performed at the Savoy Theatre with enormous success. Libretto .. 1s. Vocal Score .. 5s. Pianoforte Solo .. 3s.

All the following sent post-free for half price.

PIANOFORTE ARRANGEMENTS.

Boyton Smith's Fantasia ..	4 0
Ditto, Duet ..	5 0
Mune's Fantasia ..	4 0
Smallwood's Easy Fantasia, 1, 2, 3 ..	3 0
Fred. Godfrey's Grand Selection. (As played by all the Military Bands) ..	4 0
Ditto, as a Duet ..	5 0

CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street; and 15, Poultry, E.C.

MRS. L. MONCRIEFF'S NEW SONGS.

"T'WAS ONLY A YEAR AGO, LOVE. A CREOLE LOVE SONG. THOUGHTS AT DUSK." Price 2s. each net.

CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street, W.; and 15, Poultry, E.C.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM OF HIRE OF PIANOFORTES.

HARMONIUMS, and AMERICAN ORGANS, by which the instrument becomes the property of the hiree at the end of the third year, provided each quarter's hire shall have been regularly paid in advance. Pianofortes, from 2s. 6d. Harmoniums, from £1 6s.; and American Organs, from £1 10s. a quarter.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S PIANINOS, from

20 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S YACHT PIANINOS,

with folding keyboards, from 30 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S IRON-FRAMED

COTTAGE PIANOFORTES for Ocean Steamers and Extreme Climates, from 35 to 65 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S Early English

PIANOFORTES, artistically designed Ebony Cases, from 45 guineas.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S Iron Double

Overstrung PIANOFORTES. Check Actions, &c., from 60 guineas.

CHICKERING PIANOFORTES, from

120 guineas, with American discount.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S ALEXANDRE

HARMONIUMS, for Church, Schools, or Drawing-rooms, from 6 to 150 guineas; or, on the Three-Years' System, from 24 6s. per quarter.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S IMPROVED

AMERICAN ORGANS, containing Pipes with Reeds. Manufactured by Clough and Warren, Detroit, U.S.A. A large variety on view, from 18 to 250 guineas. Price-Lists on application to CHAPPELL and CO.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S PET ORGAN,

Seven Stops, including Sub-bass and Octave Coupler. Elegant Carved Walnut Case. 15 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S Favourite

ORGAN. Five octaves, ten stops, four sets of reeds, two knee swell, elegant carved Canadian walnut case, price 25 guineas. With thirteen stops, octave coupler, and two knee pedals, 30 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S NEW STYLE

VICTORIA CASE. Twelve stops, five sets of reeds, sub-bass and Octave Coupler. 37 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S CENTENNIAL

GRAND ORGAN, 15 Stops, 9 Sets of Reeds, and Combination Tubes, 40 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S PIPE and REED

ORGAN, Style 119. Organ Pipe Front, handsomely diapered, seventeen stops, thirteen sets of reeds. 135 guineas.

CLOUGH and WARREN'S GRAND

ORGAN MODEL. Two clavers, two and a half octave of pedals, twenty-three stops, seventeen sets of reeds, elegant diapered pipes, solid walnut case. 225 guineas. The most perfect American organ manufactured. Illustrated List free.

INSTRUMENTS by ALL MAKERS may be

HIRED or PURCHASED on the Three-Years' System. CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

City Branch, 15, Poultry, E.C.

A LARGE DISCOUNT TO PURCHASERS

FOR CASH. CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street. City Branch, 15, Poultry, E.C.

NEW MUSIC.

BOOSEY and CO.'S NEW SONGS.

FATHER O'FLYNN. Sung by Santley.

GIPSY JOHN. By F. CLAY. Sung by

Santley.

THE OLD BARGE. By BEHREND.

THE OLD BARGE. Sung by Madame

Patey, Madame Fassett, and Miss Damian.

LEAVING YET LOVING. By MARZIALS.

THE MILLER AND THE MAID. By

MARZIALS. Sung by Miss Mary Davies.

WHISPERS. By S. ADAMS. Sung by Edward Lloyd.

THE LITTLE HERO. By S. ADAMS.

Sung by Maybrick.

THE LONG AVENUE. By MOLLOY.

Sung by Antoinette Sterling.

GREAT GRANDMOTHER. By MOLLOY.

Sung by Madame Sherrington.

MY DARLING OF OLD. By DIEHL.

MY DARLING OF OLD. Sung by Mr.

Frank Boyle and Mr. Hedford Hollins.

2s. each net.—Boosey and Co., 255, Regent-street.

CAVALIER SONGS. By C. VILLIERS

STANFORD. Words by Robert Browning.

1. MARCHING ALONG.

2. KING CHARLES.

3. BOUT, SADDLE, TO HORSE AND AWAY.

Price 2s. each net.—Boosey and Co., 255, Regent-street.

MRS. MONCRIEFF'S NEW SONGS.

MY HEART IS LIKE A SINGING BIRD.

O SWALLOW, SWALLOW!

Price 2s. each net.—Boosey and Co., 255, Regent-street.

OLD IRISH MELODIES. Arranged by

C. VILLIERS STANFORD. The Words by Alfred P.

Graves. Sung with the greatest success at the Ballad Concerts.

Price 2s. each net.

THE FOGGY DEW. Sung by Mr. Edward Lloyd.

FATHER O'FLYNN. Sung by Mr. Santley.

A SAILOR LAD. Sung by Miss Mary Davies.

T'WAS PRETTY TO BE IN BALLINDERBY. Sung by Mrs.

Hutchinson.

MAUD V. WHITE'S NEW SONGS.

TO ALTHEA FROM PRISON. Sung by Mr. Santley.

OPHELIA'S SONG. Sung by Miss Santley, s. each.

Boosey and Co., 255, Regent-street.

ZAVERTAL. ROCOCO. MUSICAL

SKETCH A LA GAVOTTE, for Pianoforte. Price

1s. 6d. net.—Boosey and Co., 255, Regent-street.

THE ROYAL VOCAL BOOKS.

A complete Encyclopedia of Vocal Music.

Songs of England. (2 vols.) ..

Songs of Scotland. ..

Songs of Ireland. ..

Songs of Wales. ..

Songs of France. ..

Songs of Eastern Europe. ..

The above volumes contain one thousand popular ballads.

Beethoven's Songs. ..

Mendelssohn's Songs. ..

Schumann's Songs. ..

Handel's Oratorio Songs. ..

Handel's Opera Songs (Italian Soprano and Contralto and English Words). ..

Modern Ballads. ..

Sacred Songs. ..

Humorous Songs. ..

Choice Duets for Ladies. ..

Price 5s. each, paper; 7s. 6d., cloth, gilt edges.

THE ROYAL OPERATIC ALBUMS. Containing celebrated songs, with Italian and English Words. In the original keys.

Prima Donna's Album. ..

Tenor Album. ..

Contralto Album. ..

Boosey and Co., 255, Regent-street.

NEW NUMBERS OF THE CHORALIST.

Price 1d. each. (Brief, Prize Madrigal, Motet, Bridal Chorus, &c.) ..

Philip; The Joy Beggars, Montgomery; The Little Drummer,

Kappay; Love me little, love me long, Montgomery.

Boosey and Co., 255, Regent-street.

SIXPENNY CHORAL BOOKS. Edited

by the Rev. C. S. BERE.

A GARLAND OF SONGS. (48 pieces.) ..

THE CHILDREN'S CHORAL BOOK. (44 pieces.) ..

THE GOLDEN HARVEST. (12 easy Part-Songs.) ..

THE CHILDREN'S VOCAL HANDBOOK. (Instructions in Part-Singing.) ..

Boosey and Co., 255, Regent-street.

NEW CANTATAS FOR AMATEURS.

HAMILTON TIGHE, by GEORGE FOX; the words from

"Ingold's Legends," with solos for Soprano and Bass occupying twenty minutes in performance. THE SONG OF THE MONTHS, cantata for mixed voices, by FRANCIS HOWELL, in 11 numbers, with solos, 2s. 6d. A 2nd Edition of THE ROSE MAIDEN, Cantata, by F. H. COWEN, 2s. 6d.

Boosey and Co., 255, Regent-street.

SPOHR'S VIOLIN SCHOOL. Edited by

HENR. HOLMES. With numerous Notes and an

Appendix by the Editor.—Boosey and Co., 255, Regent-street.

BOOSEY and CO.'S SHILLING EXERCISE

BOOK, containing 72 Progressive Exercises and Studies for

Pianoforte, by Hera, Czerny, Bertini, Diabelli, Koller, Maxinghi,

Hummel, and Clementi.—Boosey and Co., 255, Regent-street.

THE CHORAL UNION, containing 40

FAVOURITE PART-SONGS, for Soprano, Contralto,

Tenor, and Bass. Price 6d. each, complete; or, in Score, price 3s. 6d.—Boosey and Co., 255, Regent-street.

THE PARISH ANTHEM-BOOK, containing 50 celebrated ANTHEMS; in Numbers, price

1d. each; or, one volume, 3s. 6d.; cloth, gilt edges, 5s. Specimen

Anthem for one stamp.—Boosey and Co., 255, Regent-street.

BOOSEY'S SHILLING ALBUMS for

PIANOFORTE, in the "Musical Cabinet."

212. BOOSEY'S MARCH ALBUM. (36 Marches.) ..

205. 210. 215. RUBINSTEIN'S THREE ALBUMS. (20 pieces.) ..

208. RUBINSTEIN'S SIX STUDIES. ..

207. RUBINSTEIN'S SIX PRELUDES. ..

214. ROBERT SCHUMANN'S ALBUMBLATT. (20 pieces.) ..

216. ROBERT SCHUMANN'S ALBUM. (13 pieces.) ..

204. BRAHMS'S PIANOFORTE ALBUM. (4 pieces.) ..

190. FIELD'S NOCTURNE ALBUM. (10 Nocturnes.) ..

114. BEETHOVEN'S WALTZ ALBUM. (45 Waltzes.) ..

117. CHOPIN'S WALTZES, complete. ..

115. CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS, complete. ..

171. CHOPIN'S NOCTURNES, complete. ..

20. STEPHEN HELLER'S TWELVE SHORT PIECES. ..

85. HELLER'S PROMENADES D'UNE SOLITAIRE. ..

101. HELLER'S PETIT ALBUM. (10 pieces.) ..

100. SCHUMANN'S KINDERSCENEN. &c. ..

113. SCHUMANN'S FIRST ALBUM FOR YOUTH. ..

130. SCHUMANN'S SECOND ALBUM FOR YOUTH. ..

100. SCHUMANN'S THIRD ALBUM FOR YOUTH. (Ball-scenes.) ..

23. OVERTURES (1st book), including Figaro, Fra Diavolo,

Crown Diamonds, William Tell, Freischütz, Zampa.

211. OVERTURES (2nd book), including Maometto, Oberon,

Gazza Ladra, Euryanthe.

Boosey and Co., 255, Regent-street.

RICHARD WAGNER'S FLYING

DUTCHMAN, with German and English Words (as sung by the Carl Rosa Company), price 3s. 6d. LOHENGELIN, with English, German, and Italian Words, price 3s. 6d. Both in cloth, gilt edges, 5s. each. Also, LOHENGELIN and TANNHAUSER, complete for Piano, 2s. each. BOOSEY and CO.'S Edition must be ordered.

NEW MUSIC.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS' LIST OF NEW

AND POPULAR MUSIC.

JACK'S SWEETHEART. Song from "The Girl he Left Behind Him." Mezzo-Soprano or Baritone.

"I've got my pockets full of gold. I'll quit the sea," he cried; "No more I'll roam, but stay at home, and Poll shall be my bride!"

Words by Delacour Danbigny; Music by MAX. SCHROETER.

A WAYSIDE POSY. Song.

Soprano, Mezzo-Soprano, or Baritone. Price 2s. net.

"They strolled across the field one sunny morn in June, When poppies peep'd among the corn, and all things seem'd Loud buzzing were the bees, but 'love,' they say, 'is blind,' And deaf, I think, as well, for they heard nothing of the kind."

Words and Music by MICHAEL WATSON.

TOLD IN THE TWILIGHT. Song.

Contralto or Mezzo-Soprano. Price 2s. net.

I look back to childhood's summer, and a picture comes to me, Of an open lattic'd window looking out across the sea; When a mother's arm was round me, and with voice so sweet Told me tales of childhood's dreamland in the twilight long ago.

Words by F. E. Weatherly; Music by J. L. MOLLOY.

UNDER THE LAMPLIGHT. Song.

Contralto or Mezzo-Soprano. Price 2s.

Under the lamplight, out in the snow, A girl sang in accents so plaintive and low, As weary without, while within they rejoice, She told her sad story with tears in her voice.

Words and Music by LOUISA GRAY.

THE JESTER'S FOLLY. Song. Soprano,

Mezzo-Soprano, or Baritone. Price 2s. net.

He had told himself out with his jesting, At the Palace that festive day, And now in the noontide was resting As the maidens passed down by the way.

Words by Mary Mark Lemon; Music by FLORENCE PASCAL.

FAITHFUL FOR EVERMORE. A

BALLAD. Price 2s. net. M.S.

Do you remember the wild, weird music Sung by the waves on the shore? Do I, faithful for evermore?"

Verse by Mary Mark Lemon; Music by SUCHET CHAMPION.

CLAUDE DUVAL. Comic Opera.

STEPHENS and SOLOMON. First date of publication,

Feb. 10. List of arrangements will follow.

THE CHILD'S LETTER TO HEAVEN.

Words by Frank W. Green; Music by W. C. LEVEY.

A most effective song for both drawing-room and concert-hall. Price 2s. net.

RECENT DISCOVERY OF ROYAL MUMMIES AND OTHER EGYPTIAN ANTIQUITIES.

LITTLE CHEST OF PAPYRUS, WITH WIG OF PRINCESS, TWENTY-FIRST DYNASTY.

CHEST OF PAPYRUS LEAVES, WITH OFFERINGS OF EMBALMED LEG OF MUTTON AND CALF'S HEAD.

The recent discovery at Thebes in Upper Egypt has of late been so fully and so frequently discussed in various publications, that it is unnecessary to do more than recapitulate the heads of the story in our present columns. The leading facts are briefly these:—

For the last ten years or more it had been suspected that the Theban Arabs (whose main occupation is tomb-pillage and mummy-snatching) had found a Royal sepulchre. Objects of great rarity and antiquity were being brought to Europe every season by travellers who had purchased them from native dealers living on the spot; and many of these objects were historically traceable to certain Royal dynasties which made Thebes their capital city. Some of the travellers were also dealers, and resold their purchases to the British Museum and the Louvre. At length suspicion became certainty. An English tourist, passing through Paris, presented Professor Maspero with some photographs from a superb papyrus, which he had then lately bought at Thebes from an Arab named Abd-er-ranoul. This papyrus proved to be the Ritual, or funeral sacred book, written for Pinotem I., third Priest-King of the XXIst Dynasty. Evidently, then, the tomb of this Sovereign had been discovered and pillaged. In January, 1881, the late lamented Mariette Pasha died at Cairo, and was succeeded by Professor Maspero, the present Conservator of Antiquities to H.H. the Khedive. Professor Maspero at once resolved to get to the bottom of the Theban mystery; and, with that object chiefly in view, proceeded last April to Upper Egypt upon his first official trip of inspection. Arriving at Luxor—a modern village which occupies part of the site of ancient Thebes—he straightway arrested the said Abd-er-ranoul. Threats, bribery, persuasion were, however, tried in vain, and Abd-er-ranoul was consigned to the district prison at Kenah, the chief town of the province. Here for two months he maintained an obstinate silence. In the meanwhile, his presence being required in Paris, Professor Maspero offered a reward of £500 for the discovery of the secret, and returned to Europe. Scarcely had he embarked, when one Mohammed, the elder brother of Abd-er-ranoul, went privately before the Governor of Kenah; offered to betray the secret; and claimed the reward. The Governor (Daoud Pasha) telegraphed immediately to Cairo; and Herr Emil Brugsch, Keeper of the Boolak Museum (whom Professor Maspero had deputed to act for him in any case of emergency) was forthwith despatched to Thebes. Here he was conducted to a lonely spot in the most desolate and unfrequented part of the great Necropolis, which extends for between three and four miles along the western bank of the Nile. Hidden behind an angle of limestone cliff, and masked by a huge fragment of fallen rock, he beheld the entrance to a perpendicular shaft descending to a depth of twelve metres. At the bottom of this shaft opened a gallery seventy-four metres in length, leading to a sepulchral vault, measuring seven metres by four. In this gallery and vault were found some thirty-six mummies, including more than twenty kings and queens, besides princes, princesses, and high priests; to say nothing of an immense store of sacred vessels, funeral statuettes, alabaster vases, and precious objects in glass, bronze, acacia-wood, &c. In a word, the treasure thus strangely brought to light consisted of some 6000 items, not the least valuable of which were four Royal papyri. Professor Maspero, in his Official Report, warmly eulogises the energy with which Herr Emil Brugsch, by the aid of 500 native labourers, exhumed, packed, shipped, and brought to Cairo the whole contents of this now famous hiding-place.

The following, abridged from Professor Maspero's various reports, is a list of the principal Royal mummies and mummy cases, chronologically tabulated and classed under the heads of their various dynasties. In some instances the mummy reposes in its original mummy-case, and sometimes in two or three mummy cases, the whole inclosed in an enormous outer sarcophagus. In others, only the mummy-case is left, the mummy having been destroyed or abstracted. Further, some mummies are found in mummy-cases not their own, or in mummy-cases which have been altered and usurped for their use in ancient times. The presence of a mummy-case, even though empty, is held, however, to indicate the former presence of its original occupant, whose name therefore appears in its proper place in the list:—

XVIIth DYNASTY.—(Approximate Date) B.C. 1750 to B.C. 1703.—King Rusekenen-Taaken, Queen Ansera.

XVIIIth DYNASTY.—(Approximate Date) B.C. 1703 to B.C. 1462.—King Ahmes Ra-neb-pehti, Queen Ahmes Nofretari, Queen Aah-hotep, Queen Merit-Amen, Queen Hontimoo-hoo, Prince Se Anien, Princess Set-Amen, King Amen-

(Continued on page 116.)

KING AMEN-HOTEP I., EIGHTEENTH DYNASTY.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

MECHANISM OF THE SENSES.

Professor McKendrick, in his second lecture, given on Tuesday, Jan. 24, proceeded to consider the relation existing between the stimulus and the impression on any sensory organ, and the action of various kinds of stimuli. Thus, mere contact or oscillations of the touching body, or of the body touched, may cause the sense of touch. Vibrations of some medium in contact with the sense organ may excite it, as in the cases of sound and light, or there may be chemical changes occurring in the immediate neighbourhood of the sense organ; as in taste and smell, and in vague sensory impressions obtained from internal bodily organs. The Professor explained how difficult it is to study the effect of impressions on the sense organ, apart from changes in the nerve-centres, and stated that the study of the action of light on the eye, removed from the body, was the only way in which this had been attempted. He then commented on some circumstances affecting sensory impressions. In the first place, no sense organ can at any time be regarded as being in a state of absolute rest. When an impression is made on it the effect will depend on the sensitivity of the organ at the time, on the extent of surface of the organ affected, and on the time during which the stimulus acts. Again, if the stimulus be of the nature of a vibrating wavelike movement, the effect will be influenced by the number of impulses in a unit of time, on the amplitude of the waves, and on their form. The relation between the stimulus and the sensation was next discussed. The stimulus may be too weak to cause any effect, or so powerful as to incapacitate us from distinguishing between it and other stimuli; and experiment has shown that there is with each sense a minimum difference between noticeable impressions. Sensory impressions are referred to the external world partly as the result of hereditary acquirements of the sense-organs and brain, and partly as the result of education. These organs may be supposed already to have reached their highest point of development; but the evolution of still more complex internal sense-organs may still be going on. The Professor then described the anatomical arrangements, physical causes, and physiological peculiarities of the sense of taste, and especially illustrated the so-called "taste bodies" found in the tongue.

CORALS.

Professor H. N. Moseley, F.R.S., began his second lecture, on Thursday, Jan. 26, with a description of the modes of multiplication of Zoantharian corals by budding, noticing especially the processes occurring in Blastothochus nutrix and Fungia, and demonstrating the resemblance in the mode of production of young corals as buds in the taller germs to the well-known Strobila formation of jelly-fishes. The principal varieties of form amongst Zoantharian corals were then passed in review; simple corals being first considered and illustrated by a series of figures selected from those dredged by H.M.S. Challenger from the deep sea. It was shown, by many examples, how closely the young coral, when first developed, conforms to the ancestral shape, however much the adult, which grows out of it, may eventually differ from it in form. It was pointed out that this fact is in accordance with the law laid down by Mr. Darwin (holding good with all organisms) of the reversion of the young to the ancestral type. The formation of compound Zoantharian coral masses, each the result of successive buds produced from a single simple young coral and its derivatives, was then explained, and various forms of compound coral were exhibited and described. Reference was then made to the palæozoic coral. The so-called Rugosa group the Professor regards as a very unnatural one, a heterogeneous assemblage of organisms not nearly related, and to be broken up by the light of future research. Examples supporting this opinion were commented on; and, finally, an account was given of black coral.

THE MUSEUM AND LIBRARIES OF ALEXANDRIA.

Mr. Reginald Stuart Poole, of the British Museum, Cor. Mem. Inst. France, began his discourse at the evening meeting on Friday, Jan. 27, by stating that his object was to show the connection between the ancient Egyptian and Alexandrian educational institutions, and expressed his gratitude for the invaluable aid of a great French Egyptologist, M. Reville. The sources of information are chiefly old hieratic papyri, some of which are actually exercise-books of students, and they tell us of colleges attached to temples in various towns. When Plato and others visited Egypt, Heliopolis was most famous. The subjects taught were religion, law, moral philosophy, mathematics, especially geometry and astronomy, medicine and language. There were also primary schools for all classes. Libraries were attached to the temples, and there was a Royal library existing at a.c. 2500. The Alexandrian foundations were due to the wisdom with which the first three Ptolemies carried out the large-minded policy of Alexander the Great. They were meant to benefit the mixed population, Egyptian, Greek, and Hebrew. The Museum was a sacred building in the palace, where learned men were maintained by the State to prosecute research. Law and religion were excluded in order to avoid controversy. A botanical garden and a menagerie were added. Besides the similarity of scheme, and the evident succession of Alexandria to Heliopolis, a strong point of contact was the old method, as seen in the mathematical processes of the second Heron. To the first library, originally Greek only, translations were added, and the temple of Serapis received surplus books. The first library was burnt, when Julius Caesar captured Alexandria. The second, enriched by Antony with the Pergamene collection, is said to have been burnt at the Arab conquest, when it disappeared. The effect of the Alexandrian foundations was very great. The intelligence of the East and West here met, and it is due to this that the Old Testament was translated into Greek. The Alexandrian University was restored by an Arab Prince, the caliph El Mutawekkil, two centuries after the conquest; and the great University of Cairo was founded by a Greek officer of the Fatimite caliph in 960. It includes all the faculties except medicine, which is considered unsuited to public education. Of 5000 students 2500 were educated and maintained free of all cost to themselves. The professors, who now receive moderate rations from the State, make a modest income by outside teaching and copying MSS.

BEETHOVEN'S MUSICAL EDUCATION.

Professor Pauer, in beginning his second lecture on Saturday last, Jan. 28, remarked that Beethoven's genius was later in development than that of Mozart and others. He then commented on the character of his early teachers and their influence on his work, and gave biographical sketches of the irregular Pfeiffers and the conscientious Neefe, at Bonn, where he received his first appointments. At Vienna, he received a year's lessons from Haydn, with whose easiness he was much dissatisfied. When his master went to London he studied for a time under Johann Schenck, and next under Georg Albrechtsberger, whose teaching was most effective in rendering his pupil's style more clear, pure, concise, and polyphonic by strict adherence to fundamental laws. Beethoven also derived benefit from Salieri and Schuppanzigh.

All these complained of Beethoven's obstinacy, occasioned by his disdaining to be fettered by artificial laws, and by the gradual development of an independent style, for which he stands unrivalled. He maintained that whatever is agreeable in music is lawful. His compositions, especially in slow movements, are eloquent and emotional; in allegro passages fascinating and brilliant, and his style frequently attains to grave solemnity. The illustrations comprised "Variations on Dressler's March in C Minor," composed when Beethoven was eleven years old, which are characterised by childlike simplicity and vivacity; twenty-four Variations on "Vieni amore," on which critical remarks were made, pointing out the consummate beauty of many passages; the Rondo in C major, and a charming Fantasia.

NEW BOOKS.

Architecture appears to be the subject which has been studied for what is called the "padding" of the novel entitled A Laodicean: by Thomas Hardy (Sampson Low and Co.), according to the author's invariable plan, if his novels have been read to any purpose, of mingling with the story proper a sort of lecture in the semi-professional strain. Though the chief place, however, be assigned to architecture, the author has evidently looked up his photography, his telegraphy, and his theology also as secondary auxiliaries; and he has, presumably, read a few pages of some treatise upon horse-breaking, to say nothing of "Baily's Magazine" or whatever other publication might be expected to contain memoirs of the celebrated "Jack Mytton" and similar worthies who have in bygone times brought ruin upon themselves by extravagance of all descriptions, especially upon the turf. For the novel bears a second title, "The Castle of the De Stancys;" and the living head of the De Stancy family at the date of the story is a broken-down Baronet, whose career is described as having been very similar to that of the said "Jack Mytton" in many respects, though Mr. Mytton died in the King's Bench. The castle and estates of the De Stancys were purchased by a kind of George Stevenson or Stephenson, whichever be the right spelling, who dies and leaves an only child, Paula, the heiress of all his vast real and personal property. She is as lovely as she is rich, nay lovelier; and more piquant and lovable than lovely. She is extremely independent, in her ideas as well as in her fortune, and she indulges in various expensive whims, such as having her own private telegraph and rebuilding the old tumble-down castle of the De Stancys. Hence she requires an architect; and as the story opens with a description of a good-looking, clever young gentleman, who belongs to the profession of Pugin, Barry, and Street, and who is "discovered sketching," as the phraseology of the stage has it, in the neighbourhood of the castle, here are the hero and heroine made to hand. The scene in which the hero first catches sight of the heroine is represented with a certain amount of the author's incomparable humour. Paula is, or ought to be, according to her late excellent father's wishes, which she had no mother to interfere with, a Dissenter of the deepest dye; and the hero is an accidental witness of her behaviour when she comes down to the chapel with the intention of edifying the congregation, including "for one day only" the hero, by going through the ceremony of immersion at her age of a little more than discretion. But at sight of the cold, dark, sullen water, she recoils, like the schoolboy who refuses to take the bidden "header," is deaf to remonstrance, seeks refuge in the vestry, and hears herself "preached at," through the door ajar, as a lukewarm backslider, as, in fact, "the Laodicean." She is not cast in the heroic mould, by any means; she is constantly betraying a somewhat snobbish sense of being deficient in "blue" blood, and the last words she is made to utter in the novel express the wish that her husband were a De Stancy. But she probably spoke with an arch look and in a peculiar tone, which took away the sting of the apparent reproach. The novel, on the whole, though very amusing and pleasant in parts, is not among the best specimens of the author's powers; there is less originality, save in detail and in diction, less substance, less force, less finish than his readers are accustomed to expect. This is merely mentioned as a fact; nobody can be surprised if even Homer sometimes nods; and everybody should be thankful for the good in the absence of the best. An author is sometimes hurried in his composition by circumstances beyond his control, or, good faith, finds it convenient, and small blame to him, to put forth only a portion of his strength.

Æsthetic gossip is not very lively reading as a general rule, and it is doubtful whether Belcaro: by Vernon Lee (W. Satchell and Co.), a fantastically entitled volume of "essays on sundry æsthetic questions," will delight the heart so much as tax the patience of the ordinary reader. With the select and extraordinary reader the author's minute, subtle, fine-spun, fanciful, almost interminable criticisms and speculations, however wordy and diffuse they may be, and no matter how trivial the subjects to which they refer, will probably find great favour. The beginning of writing is evidently with the author as the pouring out of water, to judge from the many pages he takes to explain the reason for the title he has chosen; and his imagination is apparently so prolific that he must exercise considerable self-control to bring himself to a full stop. At the same time it is instructive sometimes, and by no means disagreeable, to follow him in his most desultory disquisitions, though plain people may consider that there was no occasion to spend so much time and space in reasoning out the question why a great sculptor would omit from his group two figures which he could not artistically introduce, and which, if he did introduce them, would represent beings having the attribute of invisibility and dealing out a destruction the more terrible in consequence of that attribute. However, such a point is one which æsthetic persons will discuss with satisfaction from the morn to the dewy eve of a summer's day; and the same remark will apply to the long dissertation concerning the difference between the Cherubino of Mozart and of Beaumarchais; the æsthetic mind will be much exercised thereby, the practical mind will wonder what there was to make such a racket about, simply because Mozart could not help etherealising a "jackanapes."

Scholars and students will no doubt form a high appreciation of Theocritus, Bion, and Moschus: rendered into English prose by A. Lang, M.A. (Macmillan and Co.); the former for its excellence as a piece of literary work, the latter for its value as a "crib." Unfortunately for the "cribbers," the three idyllic poets are not so much read as they deserve to be in schools, nor "set" so much as they deserve to be in examinations at the Universities. The translations are all in prose, with the exception of three; and those three, well versified, must be put down to the credit of Mr. Ernest Myers, Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford, to whom the volume is dedicated. The most interesting, and not the least valuable, portion of the book consists of an introductory essay on "Theocritus and his Age"—that is to say, the age in which he lived, and not at which he died.

NIAGARA IN WINTER.

To many tourists, now that the Atlantic passage can be made almost in a week, Niagara has become tolerably familiar. But it is Niagara in the warm and leafy days of summer that they know. Few of us have either the time or the inclination to visit America when, all over Canada and a vast portion of the States, the land is enchaind for months together in the frosts and snows of Winter. Yet there is much that is delightful in the long Canadian winter. There are few snowstorms during January, February, and March. The fall of snow takes place in the beginning of the winter. Early in January the great blue-black clouds that have been hurling the soft white flakes right and left of them all through December, exhausted with their incessant labour, roll back into realms of Night, leaving behind them skies blue as those of Greece and Italy. And with the snow-clouds retire also the winds which ushered in the winter; for, directly the birth of a new year sends the mercury down to zero, the air becomes delightfully clear and still—through which comes the merry jingle of sleigh-bells, like an echo from the buoyant hearts of the people, whose spirits rise in proportion as the mercury falls.

Set in a fretwork of ice and snow, the whole country is now highly picturesque—roads, fields, snake-fences, charred tree-stumps, forests, towns; but the purity of the scene becomes somewhat monotonous. At the Falls of Niagara, however, where Winter concentrates all his magic arts to form one stupendous mass of glittering splendour, the icy scene never palls on one; for here the silent peacefulness of snow and ice is relieved by the restless tumult of waters that laugh to scorn the intensest frost.

It will be remembered that the river Niagara is one of the boundary lines between the Great Republic and Canada, and that it is midway in its thirty miles rush from Lake Erie to Lake Ontario that the Niagara river takes its mighty plunge right and left of Goat Island: to the right, by tumbling over the straight line of precipice which here lies in its path, forming the American Fall; to the left, by sweeping round in the magnificent curve known as the Horseshoe. It will also be borne in mind that at the Falls the river turns off abruptly at a right angle with the American cataract; the outer corner of the angle being rounded off in the horseshoe fashion that has won for the Canadian waterfall its distinctive appellation.

The aspect of Niagara in winter is continually changing, or rather goes on intensifying in sublimity, until it reaches its culminating point of grandeur in February or March, when the snow that has kept on accumulating and the ice that has kept on thickening begin at length to yield to the rays of the sun. Let us try and picture Niagara in some of its winter stages. First, when encompassed by the snowstorms of December. We are on the Canadian side. Immediately in front of us is the American Fall, a great unbroken sheet of falling water 600 ft. wide and nearly 200 deep. Also facing us, but more to the right, are Goat Island and the tiny islets known as the Three Sisters, which, together with the pretty little bridges connecting them, are covered, like everything else which is stationary, with the all-pervading snow. Still more to the right of us, and requiring us to face round somewhat, is the great glittering curve of the Horseshoe or Canadian Fall, 1800 ft. across. Two hundred feet beneath us, and away to the left until lost by another curve, stretches the broad deep stream, whose surface, before the frost sets in, is still and smooth, like a great sheet of green glass—so still and smooth, we can hardly believe our eyes that it is indeed the same water that comes from those seething cauldrons beneath the two mighty cataracts we are gazing upon. But the river is deep, and underneath all that seeming tranquillity the waters are boiling and raging so furiously that they are unable to rise to the surface until two miles lower down, near the Gossamer Suspension Bridge, where they come up with unabated fury to form the celebrated Whirlpool Rapids.

When the snowstorms are over, and the sky has resumed its clear serenity of softest blue, Niagara is indeed a beautiful spectacle. Wherever there is no water the snow lies thick and deep—on the high precipitous river-banks, which in summer are covered with dense vegetation—on the trees lining the white roadways above—on the pine-clad island which stands in proud defiance, on the brink of destruction, between the two waterfalls—on the frozen river down below. Except for the never-ceasing roar, which seems strangely at variance with the quiet snow, there is exquisite harmony between the glittering purity all around and the smooth unruffled bosom of the stream where it glides with quivering swell over the fateful brink. Here, at the edge of the precipice, just where the river takes its fearful plunge, as it shelves over into the yawning abyss below, the water is as smooth and green as was the surface of the river down beneath before the frost set in—betraying, however, the mad fury of the stream in its upper courses among the Rapids, by the streaks of smooth white foam that intermingle with the green. The tremendous suction calms for a moment the river's rage; but only for one moment while gliding over the precipices, for as it dashes headlong into the awful gorge it sends forth a roar that can be heard twenty miles off; and rising from unknown depths, like incense to the guardian Naiad of the place, is the everlasting cloud of spray.

It is this ceaseless shower of spray that gives to Niagara the most charming of its wintry aspects—the spray freezing wherever it alights, on the numberless trees of the islands and river-banks, on the icicles rapidly forming everywhere, and on the ice-cones which gradually emerge from beneath the cataracts. Both waterfalls are set in a framework of dripping ice, some of the glittering pendants, as the winter advances, reaching more than a hundred feet in length. At the outside corners of the Falls there is less volume of water than in the central parts, and the rush of water is less impetuous; therefore on the outskirts icicles soon appear, increasing in size and number as the wintry weeks and months roll on. Besides adding to the dripping pendants around the Falls themselves, the spray, as we have said, alights on the neighbouring trees: instantly freezing as it besprinkles every branch and twig, the effect produced is very beautiful. The Ice Grove, a little wood on the Canadian side, is a glittering mass of diamonds, the exquisite loveliness of which is heightened when powdered by some fresh snow—for, though the great bulk of the snow comes down in the beginning of the winter, there are occasional slight snowfalls when the mercury rises. The view of the Falls by moonlight in the depth of winter is something indescribably beautiful. In the full glare of daylight, when the sunbeams are playing upon the myriads of sparkling crystals, the scene is almost too dazzling. But when Dian sheds her softer, tenderer lustre upon the icy vision, words are powerless to convey an idea of its bewitching loveliness.

We have not space to describe the scene beneath the Falls, where, behind the great green curtains of water, the combination of water, ice, and weird but "æsthetic" colours, is enchanting as any fairyland—nor the ice bridges over the river—nor the cascade known as the Bridal Veil, an offshoot of the American cataract—nor, indeed, any of the numberless minor splendours that make Niagara one grandly bewildering whole.

OBITUARY.

SIR ROBERT CHRISTISON, BART.

Sir Robert Christian, Bart., of Moray-place, Edinburgh, M.D., D.C.L. (Oxon), LL.D. (Edinburgh), Senior Physician to the Queen in Scotland, died in Edinburgh, on the 27th ult., in his eighty-fifth year. He was born July 18, 1797, the third son of Alexander Christison, Professor of Humanity in Edinburgh University, by Margaret, his wife, daughter of Mr. Robert Johnston, a merchant and banker in that city. He received his education at the Edinburgh University, and also in London and Paris. From 1822 to 1832 he was Professor of Medical Jurisprudence in his University, and from 1832 to 1877 Professor of Materia Medica. He was twice President of the Royal College of Physicians, Edinburgh, and was president of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, 1868 to 1873. In 1866 the University of Oxford gave him the degree of D.C.L., and the University of Edinburgh that of LL.D. in 1871; and in the last-named year, her Majesty conferred on him the dignity of a Baronet, in recognition of his high professional position and the services he had rendered to medical science. In 1880, he was elected Lord Rector of the University of Edinburgh. Sir Robert married, Nov. 5, 1827, Henrietta Sophia, daughter of Mr. David Brown, of Greenknowe, county Stirling, and leaves three sons. The eldest, his successor, now Sir Alexander Christison, Bart., M.D., Deputy Surgeon-General H.M. Bengal Army, was in active service during the Burmese War, and in the Indian Mutiny. He was born Aug. 26, 1828; married, June 22, 1854, Jemima Ann, daughter of Mr. James Cowley Brown, Bengal Civil Service, and has issue. The Edinburgh Magistrates, presided over by the Lord Provost, ordered a public funeral for this eminent physician.

MR. STEUART, OF DALGUISE.

Mr. John Steuart, of Dalguise, county Perth, J.P. and D.L., whose death occurred at Wynberg, South Africa, on Dec. 29, was the representative of the old Scottish family of Steuart of Dalguise, being descended from a second son of Steuart of Armtullie, John Steuart, to whom George, Bishop of Dunkeld, granted the lands of Dalguise in 1543. Mr. Steuart, the subject of this notice, was born Aug. 7, 1799, the elder son of Mr. Charles Steuart, of Dalguise, by Amelia-Anne-Sophia, his wife, daughter of Laurence Oliphant, of Gask. In 1828 he went out to the Cape of Good Hope, and was appointed in the following year High Sheriff of the Colony; and in 1848 became Master of the Supreme Court, retiring five years since. He married, April 6, 1829, the Hon. Janet Oliphant Murray, eldest daughter of Alexander, eighth Lord Elibank, and was left a widower (with daughters) in 1871.

We have also to record the deaths of—

Professor T. Cliffe Leslie, who for twenty-five years filled the chair of Political Economy in Queen's College, Belfast.

Mr. Richard Brinsley Knowles, the only surviving son of Sheridan Knowles, suddenly, on the 28th ult., at his residence, North Bank, Regent's Park, aged sixty-two.

Philotha Margaret, Lady Brodie, widow of Sir Benjamin Collins Brodie, of Brockham Warren, Betchworth, Surrey, on the 27th ult., very suddenly.

Mr. J. J. Hill, the well-known artist, on the 26th ult., at his residence in London, from an attack of bronchitis. Mr. Hill was born in 1810, in Broad-street, Birmingham.

Sir William Henry Drake, K.C.B., late Director of Supplies and Transport at the War Office, suddenly, on the 28th ult., at his residence in Clanciarde-gardens, in his seventieth year.

Mr. Robert Laurie, Clarenceux King-of-Arms, a very old member of the Herald's College, having held office therein for nearly half a century, recently, at his residence, Wentworth House, Richmond, Surrey.

Mr. George St. Vincent Thomas Nelson Murray, of Shrivernham, Berkshire, J.P. for that county and for Sussex, on the 20th ult., at Chandos-street, aged seventy-eight. He was only son of Admiral Sir George Murray, K.C.B.

Mr. John Berney Petre, of Westwick House, Norwich, J.P. and D.L. for Norfolk, on the 9th ult., aged seventy-six. He was only son of Colonel J. Petre, of Westwick, by Katharine, his wife, daughter of Harbord, first Lord Suffield; and was married to Caroline Susan, second daughter of the Right Hon. J. A. Stewart Mackenzie.

Captain D'Arcy, V.C., who distinguished himself in the Zulu war, serving at the battles of Kambula, Ulundi, and the Hlobane Hill. Colonel Buller, V.C., received that decoration for saving the life of Captain D'Arcy, and the latter for his daring in endeavouring to save the life of a trooper. Captain D'Arcy's body was found some months after his mysterious disappearance.

Major-General Charles Hopkins Byers, late of the Bengal Staff Corps, at the age of fifty-nine. General Byers, who, it will be remembered, suffered such a terrible loss by the drowning of his wife and three daughters at Hyères in July last, died at the same place on the 26th ult. of inflammation of the lungs. He entered the service of the Honourable East India Company in June, 1842.

The Rev. Canon Charles Walsham, M.A., Vicar of Sculcoates, near Hull, at the Vicarage, aged forty-four. He was the youngest son of Sir John James Walsham, first Baronet, by Sarah Frances, his wife, second daughter of Mr. Matthew Bell, of Woollington House, Northumberland, and was brother to the present Baronet. Having filled several curacies, Canon Walsham became Rector of Sculcoates in 1866, and he wrote several treatises on religious subjects. He married, in 1867, Mary Caroline, youngest daughter of Dr. Henry Newmarch.

Mr. George Macilwain, one of the oldest Fellows of the Royal College of Surgeons of England. Born in 1797, his long life reached back to the time of Earle, Cline, Sir Astley Cooper, Abernethy, Lawrence, and other celebrated surgeons of the early part of the present century. He studied at St. Bartholomew's Hospital under Mr. Abernethy, and was admitted a member of the College of Surgeons in 1818. The deceased, among other works which he wrote, was the author of "Memoirs of John Abernethy, F.R.S., with a View of his Lectures, Writings, and Character" (two volumes, 1853). Mr. Macilwain, who had retired from practice, resided for many years in the Court-yard, Albany. He died at Matching.

An Industrial Exhibition on a large scale, under the patronage of the Duke of Albany, the Duke of Cambridge, and the Duke and Duchess of Teck, is to be held at Kingston-on-Thames in May next.

Dr. B. W. Richardson presided last Saturday at a preliminary public meeting held at the rooms of the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, to consider a reform of the methods of slaughtering animals required for food. It was resolved that a society should be formed to secure, amongst other objects, public slaughter-houses and efficient daily inspection.

CHESS.

W.B. (Stratford).—We are very desirous of gratifying you, and shall endeavour to publish one of your compositions at an early date.

C.S.W. (Nottingham).—Please to keep in mind that this column is prepared for the press a week before the date of publication.

C.B.C. (Bath).—Your problem shall be examined; but a four-move problem solved by four checks does not promise well.

ESQUIMAUX (Hill-street).—We are unable to inform you of the terms of subscription to the St. George's Club.

F.F.B. (Bath).—We are greatly obliged for the problem and the paper accompanying your letter. The other question has been answered through the post.

C.E.W.L. (Louth).—Please see the note to Problem No. 1979 below. The solution of No. 1977 was published last week.

Fitzing (Preston).—We are too pleased to see you reluctant to attempt capping your couplet. Our last issue should have distinguished your doubts about No. 1977.

J.P. (Bedford).—Very acceptable. Thanks.

A.S. (Vienna).—The position described on your diagram (amended by postal card) is an impossible one. How could a Bishop get on K R sq with the K R P at K 2nd?

ALPHA.—It was never likely that a challenge couched in such terms would be accepted & you will be amused by the note to No. 1979, below.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEMS 1972, 1973, 1974, and 1975 received from John H. Handley, of Halifax, N.S.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1977 received from W.J. Eggleston, John Tucker, Pierce Jones, Count Hubert Neberg, E.L.G. C.S. Wood, and Cant.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1978 received from H. Hampton, Pierce Jones, B.H.G. (Sunderbury), Gyp, Langhilly, Isaac, A.W.W. Goulter, C.S. Wood, and H. Wilson.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1979 received from H.B. M.O'Halloran, G.W. Law, A. Harper, G.S. Oldfield, R. Jessop, H. Blacklock, R.T. Weddell, M. Tipping, Shadforth, E. Casella (Paris), Ben Nevill, I. Sharawood, Ernest Sharawood, H.R. Awdry, F. Ferri, H. Lucas, S. Lowndes, C.W. Milson, R.L. Southwell, H. Hampton, Vander Haghen (Brussels), Otto Fulder (Ghent), W. Hillier, L. Falcon (Antwerp), S. Bullen, Harry Springthorpe, T.H. Holdren, J.G. Antee, A.W. Scrutton, H. Reeve, Langhilly, Pierce Jones, E.J. Winter Wood, James Dobson, Alpha, Cant., Penelope, W. Biddle, Cryptotype, Sudbury (Suffolk), W.G. Back, A.M. Porter, G. Seymour, L. Wyman, An Old Hand, D.W. Kell, and Jupiter Junior.

NOTE.—We regret to say that there is a flaw in this problem which escaped the observation of all the examiners; but we are greatly consoled for our part of the error by the evidence of the skill and intelligence of our solvers; the oversight has been the means of bringing under our notice. Some of the gentlemen whose names appear in the foregoing list, have followed in our wake, but the majority have not only detected the flaw, but have also discovered the author's intention, and suggested the simplest remedy. It is to place a Black Pawn on Black's K 5th.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1978.

- WHITE. BLACK.
1. Q to R 3rd. B to K 6th.
 2. Kt to K 5th. Any move.
 3. Mates accordingly.

*The variations arising on Black's moves should present no difficulty to the student.

PROBLEM No. 1981.

By J. W. ABBOTT.

BLACK.

WHITE.
White to play, and mate in three moves.

The following fine game was played recently between Mr. A. MARRIOTT, of Nottingham, and another AMATEUR.
(Danish Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. W.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)	WHITE (Mr. W.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	21. B takes P (ch)	Kt takes B
2. P to Q 4th	P takes P	22. Q takes Kt (ch)	R to B 2nd
3. P to Q R 3rd	P takes P	23. Q takes Kt (ch)	R to B 2nd
4. B to Q B 4th	Kt to Q B 3rd	24. K R to Kt sq	K takes P
The authorities are agreed that the other Kt should be brought to K B 3rd at this juncture.		25. P to R 6th	P to Kt 3rd
5. Kt to B 3rd	P to Q 3rd	26. B to B 2nd	Q R to B sq
6. Kt takes P	B to K 2nd	27. K R to Kt sq	Q to B 6th
7. B to K 3rd	Kt to B 3rd	28. Q to Q 3rd	Kt to B 5th
8. Q to K 2nd	Castles	29. P to R 3rd	Q to K 3rd
9. Castles (Q R)	Q to K sq	30. P takes Kt	Q to R 7th
Anticipating and preventing 10. P to K 5th.		31. Q R to B sq	Q to R 8th (ch)
10. P to K R 3rd	B to K 3rd	32. B to Kt sq	P to K 5th
11. Kt to Q 5th	B takes Kt	33. R takes P (ch)	Q takes P (ch)
12. P takes B	Kt to K 4th	34. Q to B 2nd	B takes P
13. Kt takes Kt	P takes Kt	35. K to K sq	Q to B 8th (ch)
14. P to K Kt 4th	Kt to R 5th	36. Q takes Q	P to B 7th (dis. ch)
15. P to Kt 5th	Kt to Q 2nd	37. K to K 2nd	P takes B (a Queen)
16. P to R 4th	Kt to Kt 3rd	38. Q takes Q	R to Q 7th (ch)
17. B to Kt 3rd	Q to Q 2nd	39. K to K sq	R to Q 7th (dis. ch)
18. P to R 5th	P to Q B 4th	40. K to Q sq	R to B 8th.
19. P to Q 6th	B takes Q P		Mate.
20. P to Kt 6th

If he had played 20. B takes Q P, as he probably intended when he advanced his Q P, Black would have answered with 20. R to Q B sq.

White's attack by the advance of these Pawns has not been formidable, and it now speedily collapses. If, instead of the move in the 21st, he had played 21. B takes Kt, the reply is 21. P takes Kt; if 21. B takes P, then follows—

21. Q takes Kt
22. B to B 5th
23. B takes Kt
24. Q takes Kt
25. P to R 6th
26. B takes P

A match between the North London and South Hampstead Clubs was played on the 24th ult., and resulted in the first-named association winning all the games.

A problem tourney, inaugurated some time ago by the Jamaica Family Journal, has just been brought to a conclusion by the decision of the judge, Mr. F. C. Collins, of London. The first prize has been awarded to Mr. V. Ariano, of Kingston, Jamaica, and the second to Miss F. F. Beecher, of Plymouth, a lady whose clever problems have graced this column on several occasions. We have pleasure in quoting Miss Beecher's problem from the Family Journal:—

White: K at Q B 4th; Q at Q R 7th; R's at Q R 4th and Q sq; B's at Q R 3rd and K 6th; Kts at Q 4th and K B 4th; Pawn at K R 6th. (Nine pieces.)
Black: K at K 4th; Kts at Q R 7th and Q Kt 5th; Pawns at Q R 3rd and Q 6th. (Five pieces.)

The gentlemen who "do" the society gossip are now directing their attention to the gentle game of chess. One night last week the Evening News had the following:—"Chess is an admirable game," cried an enthusiast; "it teaches you caution." "And 'caution' should teach you chess," was the rejoinder.

Mr. Max Judd, of St. Louis, has accepted a challenge from Mr. Eugene Delmar, of Brooklyn, to play a match at chess for a stake of 1000 dols. a side, five or seven games up, draws not counting. In compliance with the desire of Mr. Judd that the match should be played on neutral ground, Mr. Delmar names Pittsburgh, and proposes that hostilities should be commenced on June 19 next. Mr. Judd, we believe, would prefer an immediate appeal to arms; but, as both sides are desirous of settling the vexed question of either's skill, the match will in all probability be played under the conditions we have stated.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated May 18, 1881) of the Right Hon. Sir Robert Lush, one of the Lords Justices of her Majesty's Court of Appeal, late of No. 60, Avenue-road, Regent's Park, who died on Dec. 27 last, was proved on the 26th ult. by Charles Montague Lush and Percy John Frederick Lush, the sons, and Miss Florence Jane Lush, the daughter, the executors, the value of the personal estate being over £27,800. The testator gives considerable legacies to sons and daughters, the widow of his late son Samuel Clarence, and to the two children of his late son Robert Christopher; complimentary legacies to his brother-in-law, Mr. Woollacot, and to Dr. Landels; his law library between his sons Herbert William and Charles Montague; his theological library to his son Percy John Frederick; and his household furniture and effects, horses and carriages, to his daughter, Florence Jane. The residue of his property he leaves to his said daughter.

The will (dated May 11, 1867), with three codicils (dated July 1, 1871, and May 13, 1876), of Mr. Thomas Rose Auldjo, late of No. 1, Rutland-gate, and of "Neufchâtel," Torquay, who died on Oct. 23 last, was proved on the 6th ult. by Mrs. Wilhelmina Georgina Auldjo, the widow, and John Rose Auldjo, the nephew, the acting executors, the value of the personal estate amounting to over £68,000. The testator leaves certain stock and his jewellery to his wife; £100 to his brother Henry, to purchase some token in remembrance of him; his third share in some property at Hilden, Kent, to his said nephew; and the residue of his real and personal estate upon trust for his wife for life, and then for his brother John Auldjo.

The will (dated Feb. 13, 1880), with two codicils (dated Sept. 2, 1880, and Jan. 25, 1881), of Mr. William Singleton Birch, late of "The Coppice," Queniborough, Leicestershire, who died on Sept. 16 last, was proved on the 18th ult. by Thomas Henry Birch, George Gray, and John Pemberton, the executors, the value of the personal estate exceeding £61,500. The testator leaves annuities to his executors, Mr. Gray and Mr. Pemberton, and to his old servant Ann Roberts; and the residue of his real and personal estate upon trust for his children, William Arthur, Thomas Henry, and Elizabeth Emily.

The will (dated Jan. 11, 1876) of Mrs. Jane Draeger, late of No. 8, Claremont-square, Pentonville, who died on Dec. 6 last, was proved on the 3rd ult. by George Frederick Draeger and Miss Caroline Jane Berguer, the executors, the personal estate exceeding in value £40,000. The testatrix appoints certain stocks and shares in which she had a life interest under her late husband's will, and bequeaths £5000 between George Frederick Draeger, Frederick George Draeger, and Arthur Draeger. She also bequeaths £500 to the Infant Orphan Asylum, Wanstead; £100 to the Society for the relief of Shipwrecked Seamen; 19 guineas each to the National Benevolent Institution and the Merchant Seamen's Institution; and some other legacies and annuities. The residue of her property is to be held upon trust for her god-daughter and friend, Miss Berguer, for life; at her death £4000 stock is given to Ada Berguer; one half of the ultimate residue between Henry John Berguer and his children, except Ada; and the other half is to go as Miss Berguer shall appoint.

The will (dated Jan. 28, 1876) of the Rev. Thomas Henry Steel, formerly of The Grove, Harrow-on-the-Hill, for nearly forty years one of the Masters of Harrow School, but late of No. 28, Norham-gardens, Oxford, who died on Dec. 6 last, was proved on the 9th ult. by Henry Nettleship, Charles Godfrey Steel, the son, and Richard Melville Beachcroft, the executors, the personal estate being over £31,000. The testator leaves to his wife £1000, his plate and pictures, and such of his furniture as she may require; to his cousin, Miss Catherine Steel, an annuity of £120; and the residue of his property upon trust for his wife for life; at her death £1000 each is given to his son Henry William, and his unmarried daughters, and the ultimate residue is to be divided between all his children, except his son Herbert Greenwood, who has already received his share.

The will (dated March 11, 1861) of Mrs. Anne Janson, formerly of Rushmore, Suffolk, but late of Calverley-terrace, Tunbridge Wells, who died on Nov. 7 last, was proved on the 4th ult. by Richard Janson, the son, the sole executor, to whom she gives, devises, and bequeaths all her estate and effects, both real and personal. The personal estate is valued at over £28,000.

The will (dated Jan. 23, 1880), with a codicil (dated May 13, 1881), of Mr. Joshua Williams, Q.C., late of Lincoln's Inn, and of Queenborough-terrace, Bayswater, who died on Oct. 25 last, was proved on Dec. 21 last by Thomas Cyprian Williams, the son, and Martin Ware, the executors, the value of the personal estate being nearly £19,000. The testator, after special bequests to his wife, children, sisters, nephew, clerk, servants, and others, gives the residue of his real and personal estate to his four sons, Joshua Strange, George Phipps, Pownoll Toker, and Thomas Cyprian.

The will (dated June 20, 1873) of Vice-Admiral Edward Joseph Bird, formerly of Hastings, but late of Witham, Essex, who died on Dec. 3, 1881, was proved on Dec. 27 last by the Rev. William Walton Herringham, the nephew, and Henry Stilwell, the surviving executors, the personal estate being over £18,000. The testator, among other legacies, bequeaths the snuff-box presented to him by the King of Bavaria to his nephew, the Rev. W. W. Herringham; and the snuff-box presented to him by the King of Greece, and his two medals, to his nephew Frederick Godfrey Vincent Bird. The residue of his property he gives to the children of his brothers Godfrey Bird and John Jackson Bird.

The will (dated March 5, 1881) of Mr. William Lacon Childe, J.P., D.L., late of Kinlet Hall, Shropshire, who died on Oct. 28, 1881, was proved on Dec. 24 last by the Rev. Edward Baldwin Childe, the brother and sole executor, the personal estate exceeding in value £13,000. The testator leaves £500 each to his said brother and to Mrs. Ann Emily Harvey; and the residue of his real and personal estate to be settled on his nearest male relative. He expresses a desire that arrangements may be made for uniting the Kinlet and Millicope estates, and that whoever succeeds to them shall take the name of Childe. The deceased was formerly M.P. for Wenlock, and moved the address in reply to the King's speech so far back as February, 1823.

C. G. C.

The Topographical Society of London held their first annual meeting at Draper's Hall, Throgmorton-street, yesterday.

The Duke of Northumberland has accepted the presidency of the County Club which has been established in Guildford. Mr. Ramsden is chairman of the provisional committee.

Dr. D. J. Cunningham, Senior Demonstrator of Anatomy in the University of Edinburgh, has been elected to the joint Professorship of Practical Anatomy in the Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

Last week only four steamers arrived at Liverpool conveying fresh meat from the United States and Canada, and with regard to live stock there were none landed. There was a total of 4152 quarters of beef, 609 carcasses of mutton, 75 hogs hotep I., King Thothmes I.*

RECENT DISCOVERY OF ROYAL MUMMIES AND OTHER EGYPTIAN ANTIQUITIES.

King Thothmes II., King Thothmes III., Queen Sitka.

XIXTH DYNASTY.—(Approximate Date) B.C. 1462 to B.C. 1288.—King Ramesses I.,* King Seti I., King Ramesses II.

XXTH DYNASTY.—(Not represented.)

XXIst DYNASTY.—(Approximate Date) B.C. 1110 to B.C. (?). Queen Notem-Maut, King and High Priest Pinotem I., King Pinotem II., Prince and High Priest Masahirti, Queen Hathor Hout-Taui, Queen Makara, Queen Isi-em-kheb, Princess Nasi Khonsu, Prince Tat-f-Ankh, Nebsemi (a priest), Noi-Shounap, a priest.

(The asterisk indicates that the mummy is missing.)

Most of the above are now on view in the Eastern Hall of the Boolak Museum, where they are temporarily arranged, as shown in the plan at page 118.

Some few of the Royal mummies were found, however, to be in too dilapidated a state for exhibition. Among those not shown are Thothmes III., Pinotem I., and Pinotem II. Of the five thousand nine hundred and odd smaller objects, they are still, for the most part, in the store-houses attached to the museum. The building, meanwhile, is being considerably enlarged, in order suitably to accommodate this important accession of antiquities. The second Engraving at page 118 is a ground plan of the Boolak Museum. The line of division A to B marks the temporary barrier which shuts off the unfinished rooms; while all the objects that can possibly be brought together in the five outer halls are open to public view. When completed, the superficial area of the museum will be nearly doubled; and Professor Maspero hopes still further to enlarge the building next year by taking in a space eight metres in breadth on the northern side, as shown in the plan.

There can be no doubt that the vault in which these various mummies and funeral treasures were found was the family sepulchre of the Priest-Kings of the XXIst Dynasty. This Dynasty was founded by Her-Hor, High Priest of Amen of the Great Temple of Amen at Thebes, who, towards the close of the XXth Dynasty, at a time the throne of the last Ramessides was tottering to its foundations, either inherited the crown by right of descent, or seized it by force. According to some authorities, Queen Notem-Maut was a Princess of the Ramesses blood, and mother of Her-Hor; according to others, she was his wife. In any case, her name is always surrounded by the oval, or cartouche, which is the emblem of Royalty; whereas it was not till he had reigned more than five years that Her-Hor ventured to assume this distinction.

The close of the second Ramesside, or XXth Dynasty, was an epoch of great internal trouble and disorder. During the reigns of the last four or five rois faibles of that line, there had been little security for life and property in Thebes; and organised bands of robbers committed constant depredations in the more retired quarters of the Necropolis; attacking chiefly the tombs of great personages, and venturing even to break open the sepulchres of the Royal Dead. Hence it became the sacred duty of the reigning monarch to take every possible precaution to ensure the mummies of his predecessors against profanation and pillage.

We accordingly find that Her-Hor caused the sepulchres of his predecessors to be periodically visited by a service of regularly appointed Inspectors of Tombs, whose duty it was to report upon the condition of the Royal mummies; to repair their wrappings and mummy-cases when requisite; and, if necessary, to remove them from their own sepulchres into any others which might be deemed more secure. Several of these visits are recorded in the handwriting of the inspectors themselves upon the mummy-cases and bandages of five of the Pharaohs enumerated upon our list; and in most instances the entry is confirmed by the signatures of numerous witnesses. At one time the tomb of Queen Ansera, at another time the tomb of Seti I., at another time the tomb of one of the Amen-hoteps, would seem to have been selected as the chosen hiding-place of several Royal mummies, all of whom had been removed from their own original sepulchres by order of Her-Hor or his successors. The mummy of Ramesses II. (to whose memory, as the supposed Pharaoh of the oppression of the Hebrews, so strong an interest attaches) appears to have been removed more frequently, and to have suffered more vicissitudes of fortune than any of the others. That his sepulchre in the Valley of the Tombs of the Kings had been violated by robbers can scarcely be doubted, for his original mummy-cases were either destroyed or damaged beyond repair. The very beautiful coffin of carved sycamore wood in which his mummy now reposes, is a new one, made probably during the first years of the reign of Her-Hor, and distinctly appertaining to the style of that period. The coffin of Ramesses I. is empty, and much damaged. The coffin of Thothmes III. is greatly injured, and the mummy is broken in three pieces. The coffin of Queen Ansera is missing; Queen Ansera herself being found in a coffin originally made for a Lady Raai. The mummy of Thothmes I. is also missing. From these and other indications, it may be concluded that the sepulchres of these Sovereigns had been violated before the removal of their relics into the vault of the Her-Hor family. Nor must it be supposed that this conclusion is based upon mere con-

VASES USED FOR OFFERING LIBATIONS, BELONGING TO PRINCESS.

CHESTS BELONGING TO QUEEN MAKARA
AND HER DAUGHTER.

jecture. The ancient Egyptians were an essentially literary nation. They held the profession of the scribe in the highest honour; and to the successful man of letters the most responsible offices of the State were thrown open. Of their enormous literature, only a very small proportion has survived the wreck of ages; yet even that small proportion numbers many thousands of MSS. of all periods; some in the handwriting called hieratic, others in a later and more abbreviated script known as the demotic. These ancient and precious documents, of which the Louvre collection alone contains more than 5000, range over an immense variety of subjects, comprising religious, funeral, mythological, magical, medical, astronomical, geometrical, historical, and moral works; as well as hymns, prayers, tales, poems, aphorisms, private letters, legal draughts and abstracts, inventories, deeds of sale and contract, &c. Now, among the legal papyri preserved to this day, are two which actually relate to the tomb-robberies before mentioned; and one of these, called "The Abbott papyrus," is among the treasures of the British Museum. It was written in the reign of Ramesses IX., and it consists of seven pages of hieratic MS., the work of a legal scribe in attendance upon a commission of Tomb Inspectors appointed to inquire into certain depredations which had then lately been committed in the Necropolis of Thebes. The scribe (after duly recording the date, the name of the reigning Pharaoh, and the names of the Commissioners) goes on to make minutes of the proceedings, which extended over four days. Each Royal tomb which was visited, as well as the condition of the tomb and of its occupant, are entered in turn; and among these entries we find mentioned the tombs of two of the Pharaohs whose names appear in our present list—namely, King Rasekenen and King Amen-hotep I. Both came into the first day's round; and, in the words of the report, "were found intact." This was in the sixteenth year of the reign of Ramesses IX.; and "intact" they would seem to have remained throughout the reigns of the Xth, XIth, XIIth, and XIIIth Ramesside Pharaohs, with the last of whom the XXth Dynasty ended. Intact (each mummy in his own original mummy-case) they were consigned eventually to the tomb of the Her-Hor family; and intact they now lie, separated only by the mummies of Ahmes I. and his son, Prince Se-Amen, in the East Hall of the Boolak Museum.

Enough has been said to show why it had become necessary, in the reign of Her-Hor, to remove these Royal mummies from their own sepulchres. At the same time, it is evident that similar precautions were equally indispensable to the safety of the Priest-Kings themselves after death. In selecting, therefore, so obscure a spot as that lately discovered, and in so ingeniously masking the entrance to their vault, the descendants of Her-Hor were wisely providing for the repose of their own mortal remains. Not till near the end of the XXIst Dynasty, however, did they at last remove the mummies of their famous predecessors into the shelter of their own tomb. Professor Maspero believes this final measure to have been taken during the reign of King Menkheperre, the last Sovereign but one of the Her-Hor line. Menkheperre himself is not among those found in the vault; neither is his son and successor, Pinotem III. Having piously deposited all these revered and deified Pharaohs and other Royal personages in the last home of his own immediate ancestors, Menkheperre evidently closed the vault for ever, and was himself content to be buried elsewhere.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

AMEN-HOTEP I. (XVIIIth DYNASTY).—SER-KA-RA AMEN-HOTEP, second Pharaoh of the XVIIIth Dynasty, was a son of Ahmes I. and Queen Nofretari. According to the chronology of Mariette, which is based on that of Manetho, this Pharaoh ascended the throne about B.C. 1678. He was then a minor, and during the first years of his sovereignty was under the tutelage of his mother. With the exception of two somewhat unimportant campaigns, his reign, which lasted only thirteen years, was singularly barren of events. As before mentioned, a visit of inspection to his tomb is recorded in the Abbott papyrus, where it is described as being situate "at the north of the temple of Amen-hotep of the vineyard," the approach to it being by "a long corridor," and the sepulchral chamber measuring "120 cubits in depth." The mummy-case of this Pharaoh, as shown in our illustration, is quite uninjured. The ground-colour of the case is white, ornamented with one vertical band and three horizontal bands of hieroglyphs containing the ordinary religious invocation in the name of the deceased. The head of the effigy is painted yellow, the head-dress black, and the Royal asp upon the brow in various brilliant tints. A vulture with outspread wings, emblematic of the goddess Maut, is traced in ink upon the breast of the figure. The mummy wears a mask and head-dress of wood and stiffened linen, exactly resembling the face and head-dress of the effigy on the mummy-case. The eyes of this mask are of enamelled porcelain, and the face is evidently a portrait. The mummy measures 1 metre 65 centimetres long, and is swathed from head to foot in garlands of lotus-flowers, and wrappings of orange-coloured linen. A wasp, perfectly preserved, was found among these withered flowers, having been accidentally shut in when the coffin-lid was closed. Two hieratic inscriptions written on the mummy-case show the tomb of Amen-hotep to have been inspected and the wrappings of the mummy to have been renewed, in the sixth year of the reign of Pinotem II., and again in the sixteenth year of the Pontificate of his son Masahirti.

THOTHMES II. (XVIIIth DYNASTY).—AA-KHEPER-EN RA THOTHMES was eldest son of Thothmes I., grandson of Amen-hotep I., and fourth Pharaoh of the XVIIIth Dynasty. He is supposed to have been married to his sister, the famous Hatasu. He, at all events, reigned with her conjointly. The events of this period are very obscure; but we hear of military expeditions in the direction of Syria, as well as of a raid upon the negro tribes of Ethiopia. Thothmes II. died young, having occupied the throne but a few years. He was succeeded by Queen Hatasu, who erased his name from the monumental inscriptions, and apparently sought to obliterate his memory by every means in her power. The mummy-case of Thothmes II., though otherwise perfect, is broken at the foot. In style and workmanship, it closely resembles the mummy-case of Amen-hotep I. The ground colour is white, the face yellow, the head-dress black. The face is excellently modelled, and the expression is smiling and lifelike. The Royal asp upon the brow has been broken off, and only a small fragment of it remains. The hieroglyphed inscriptions are arranged in the same manner as upon the coffin of Amen-hotep I., and are all almost identical in substance. They consist of the ordinary prayers addressed on the part of the defunct King to Osiris, the god of the after-world, and to Anubis, the jackal-headed deity who presided over the rites of embalmment and sepulture. The four lesser gods, or genii, of the dead, Amset, Hapi, Tuatmut, and Kabhsenuf, are also invoked. A hieratic inscription traced upon the bandages of the mummy states that the tomb was visited in the sixth year of Pinotem I., and that the "sepulchral equipments" (i.e., the bandages, funeral wreaths, mummy-cases, &c.) of the deceased were duly repaired and renewed by the inspector, who was also superintendent of the Royal Treasury. The mummy is swathed in wrappings of white linen, and measures one metre seventy-seven centimetres in length.

NEBSENI (A PRIEST OF THE XXIst DYNASTY).—Between Thothmes II. and the priest Nebsemi—that is to say, between the XVIIIth Dynasty and the XXIst Dynasty—there extends a space of time equivalent to COFFIN AND MUMMY OF A GAZELLE.

RECENT DISCOVERY OF ROYAL MUMMIES AND OTHER EGYPTIAN ANTIQUITIES.

FUNERAL PAPYRUS OF QUEEN MAKARA, OF THE TWENTY-FIRST DYNASTY.

about 550, or 590 years, according as we accept the chronological scheme of Mariette or of Lepsius. Nebsepi was a priest and hierogrammate of noble birth and Theban family; his father's name being Phiri and his mother the Lady Tamosoo. He was father of Queen Hathor-Hont-taui, husband, apparently, to Queen Tentamen, and grandfather to King Pinotem II. The mummy-case of Nebsepi so closely reproduces the style and workmanship of the mummy-cases of the kings of the XVIIIth Dynasty, that it is almost difficult to believe that a coffin of that period has not been appropriated for his remains. The face of the mummy is uncovered, and wears an aspect of profound repose.

There is nothing repulsive in its appearance. The head appears to be covered with short curling hair. The lips are slightly parted, and the upper teeth are visible. The absence of the eyeball is indicated by the way in which the eyelids are sunken; and the nostrils are forcibly distended, in consequence of the method employed by the embalmers for the removal of the brain, which was effected by means of a hooked instrument passed up through the nose. The expression is, nevertheless, not unpleasing. The shrouds are of somewhat coarse texture; and a few withered flowers may be observed stuck through the bands which hold the wrappings together. Nebsepi was evidently yet young at the time of his decease.

QUEEN HATHOR HONT-TAUI (XXIst DYNASTY).—Queen Hathor Hont-taui, daughter of the preceding (Nebsepi) and of Queen Tentamen, was of Royal descent on the maternal side only. Her name became first known to science through her two funeral papyri (now in the Boolak Museum), which were bought at Suez in 1877 by the late Mariette Pasha. Those papyri had unquestionably been sold to some traveller in the first instance by the brothers Abd-er-ranoul, and came from the vault lately discovered. Our illustration represents the bandaged mummy of this Queen, and her mummy-case; the lid of the latter being removed, and the inside visible. The bottom of the mummy-case is adorned with a painted portrait

DEIR-EL-BAHARI, NEAR THEBES, SCENE OF THE RECENT DISCOVERY OF MUMMIES AND SEPULCHRAL RELICS.

FUNERAL PAPYRUS OF QUEEN MAKARA (XXIst DYNASTY). — The word "papyrus" has occurred somewhat frequently in the course of this article; and it may not be out

MUMMIES IN THE EASTERN HALL OF THE BOOLAK MUSEUM.

A HAMPER OF FOOD OFFERINGS; A WIG AND WIG-BOX; A MUMMIED GAZELLE.—The objects here classed together formed part of the funeral equipment of Queen Isi-cm-Kheb, and are therefore more conveniently treated under one head. Queen Isi-cm-Kheb was the last member of the Her-Hor line who was buried in the family vault, before that family vault was finally closed. In accordance with a custom which had prevailed in Egypt (with certain differences

The foregoing Illustrations are engraved from photographs executed by the proprietors of the Illustrated London News by Herr Emil Brugsch, keeper of the Museum of Egyptian Antiquities at Boolak.

AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

ART NOTES.

The Bank rate was on Monday raised to 6 per cent, after having remained steady at 5 per cent since Oct. 6, 1881.

SOAP.—For Hot Climates it is invaluable quickly curing prickly heat, and such disorders. Price 6d. and 1s., of JAMES LEWIS and SON 12, Old Bond-street, London.

RECENT DISCOVERY OF ROYAL MUMMIES AND OTHER EGYPTIAN ANTIQUITIES.

THE PRIEST NEBSENI.

KING THOTHMES II., EIGHTEENTH DYNASTY.

QUEEN HATHOR HONT-TAUT, TWENTY-FIRST DYNASTY.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.

No. 2232.—VOL. LXXX.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1882.

WITH TWO SUPPLEMENTS } SIXPENCE.
By Post, 6d.

"A Cabinet Council was held yesterday in Downing-street."—Daily Paper.

THE PARLIAMENTARY SEASON.—SEE PAGE 130.

MARRIAGES.

On the 6th inst., at St. Gabriel's, Warwick-square, by the Rev. George C. Berkeley, Vicar of Southminster, Essex, cousin of the bride, assisted by the Rev. L. Goldolphin Peter, brother of the bridegroom, Thurstan Collins Peter, of Redruth, Cornwall, to Emily Frances Berkeley, youngest daughter of the late Rowland Berkeley, formerly of Benefield Northamptonshire.

On Sept. 14, at York Factory, Hudson's Bay, by the Rev. George Smith Winter, Lieutenant, Percival W. Penfold Mathews, son of the late Captain Mathews, of Madeira, and Castle Cary, Somersetshire, England, Medical Officer Hon. Hudson's Bay Company, &c., to Mary, eldest daughter of the Ven. Archdeacon Kirby, late of the diocese of Moosonee. No cards.

On the 6th inst., at the Bavarian Chapel, Warwick-street, by the Rev. Edmund Egan, Thomas Heathcote Ouchterlony, Esq., Lieutenant-Colonel (Retired) Royal Artillery, and Deputy-Governor H.M. Prison, Dartmoor, son of the late Thomas Ouchterlony, Esq., of Fenchurch-street, London, to Mary, only daughter of J. Wilmot, Esq., late of Lincoln. Indian papers, please copy.

DEATHS.

On the 5th inst., at Taradale House, N.B., Mrs. Hope Mackenzie.

On the 5th inst., at 20, Marlborough Hill, St. John's Wood, Charles Yandle, Esq., in the 87th year of his age, Commissariat Officer at Waterloo, and late Chief Clerk to the Metropolitan Police. Friends will kindly accept this intimation only.

On the 26th ult., at Telford Lodge, Streatham-hill, S.W., William Henry Ryder, of 17, New Bond-street, W., in his 67th year.

* The charge for the insertion of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, is Five Shillings for each announcement.

THE WEATHER.

RESULTS OF METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS AT THE NEW OBSERVATORY OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY.

Lat. 51° 28' N.; Long. 0° 18' 47" W. Height above Sea, 34 feet.

DAY.	DAILY MEANS OF					THERMOM.		WIND.		General Direction.
	Barometer Corrected.	Temperature of the Air.	Dew Point.	Relative Humidity.	Amount of Cloud.	Maximum, read at 10 p.m.	Minimum, read at 10 a.m.	Force in Miles.	Direction.
Jan. 29	30.082	45.0	40.7	88	10	49.7	42.3	S. ESE.	246	0.155
30	30.343	41.9	37.2	85	10	43.3	36.2	WSW. V. ESE.	250	0.000
31	30.640	38.8	34.0	84	9	43.3	36.8	E. ESE.	371	0.000
Feb. 1	30.585	33.6	27.5	80	0	40.5	29.6	E.	155	0.000
2	30.525	32.4	31.8	98	10	38.9	25.5	E.	27	0.010
3	30.548	35.2	34.4	97	6	42.9	29.6	E.	35	0.000
4	30.450	32.0	31.0	97	10	40.5	26.9	E.	22	0.000

The following are the readings of the meteorological instruments for the above days, in order, at ten o'clock, a.m.:

Barometer (in inches), corrected	30.168	30.270	30.627	30.608	30.728	30.568	30.468
Temperature of Air	46.1°	42.2°	38.3°	34.3°	26.6°	37.2°	37.6°
Temperature of Evaporation	44.2°	40.5°	37.3°	33.0°	26.4°	37.0°	37.6°
Direction of Wind	E.	N.	E.	E.	E.	E.	E.

THE THEATRICAL SEASON at MONACO, 1882.

Two Troupes are engaged at the Theatre—one for Operetta and Vaudeville (the Troupe of the Bouffes Parisiens, Paris), the direction of which has been intrusted to Mr. Plunkett, Ancient Director of the Palais Royal.

The other, the Italian Opera Troupe, is conducted by M. Jules Cohen, of the Academy of Music.

The following is the Programme of the Representations:—

Saturday, Feb. 11, MIGNON, by Mesdames Van Zandt, Baldi, Schalchi; and Messrs. Nouvelli and Maurice Devries.

Tuesday, Feb. 14, MIGNON.

Thursday, Feb. 16, LA FAVORITA, by Messrs. Faure, Gayarré, Ugelli, and Madame Schalchi.

Saturday, Feb. 18, RIGOLETTO, by Mesdames Albani and Schalchi; Messrs. Maurel and Gayarré.

Tuesday, Feb. 21, RIGOLETTO, by Madame Albani (Marguerite), M. Gayarré (Faust), M. Faure (Siegfried), M. Maurel (Valentin), Madame Schalchi (Siebel), Madame Stuardi (Marthe).

Tuesday, Feb. 28, FAUST, by Madame Albani and Messrs. Faure and Gayarré.

Saturday, March 4, LUCIA, by Madame Albani and Messrs. Faure and Gayarré.

Tuesday, March 7, LUCIA.

Saturday, March 11, AMLETO, by Mesdames Albani, Schalchi, and Messrs. Faure and Nouvelli.

Tuesday, March 14, AMLETO, LUCIA, or FAUST.

The Opera of "Faust" will always be played with the extraordinary distribution of Maurel, Faure, and Madame Albani.

After March 15 a Series of Brilliant Concerts will terminate the season.

It will be the first appearance of M. Faure in the rôle of Ashton in "Lucia," and also for the first time that Mr. Maurel will sing Rigoletto.

These celebrated artists have never appeared together in any theatre.

PIGEON-SHOOTING, MONACO, 1882.

GRAND INTERNATIONAL MATCHES. All demands for information should be addressed to Mr. AD. BLONDIN, Monaco. Open to all upon a written introduction from a member of the Hurlingham Gun Club, London; the "Cercle des Patineurs," Paris; or the "Tir du Bois de la Cambre," Brussels.

Friday, Feb. 10, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, Feb. 13, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, Feb. 17, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, Feb. 20, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, Feb. 24, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, Feb. 27, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, March 3, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, March 6, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, March 10, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, March 13, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, March 17, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, March 20, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, March 24, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, March 27, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, March 31, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, April 3, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, April 7, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, April 10, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, April 14, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, April 17, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, April 21, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, April 24, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, April 28, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, May 1, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, May 5, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, May 8, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, May 12, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, May 15, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, May 19, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, May 22, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, May 26, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, May 29, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, June 2, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, June 5, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, June 9, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, June 12, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, June 16, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, June 19, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, June 23, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, June 26, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, June 30, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, July 3, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, July 7, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, July 10, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, July 14, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, July 17, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, July 21, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, July 24, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, July 28, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, August 1, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, August 4, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, August 7, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, August 11, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, August 14, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, August 18, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, August 21, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, August 25, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, August 28, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, September 1, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, September 4, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, September 8, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, September 11, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, September 15, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, September 18, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Friday, September 22, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

Monday, September 25, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 25 metres. Prize, 10 francs. To the second winner 5 francs. To the third winner 2 francs. To the fourth winner 1 franc.

SPECIAL CONCLUDING PERFORMANCES of the brilliantly successful Pantomime.

LITTLE BO-PEEP, Next Week, at the

COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE ROYAL, for the BENEFIT OF THE COMPANY.

For NOVELTIES, see SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT on page 125.

At 7.45, LITTLE BO-PEEP; preceded, at 7, by A MIRACULOUS CURE.

Box-office open daily from Ten till Five. Doors open at 6.30.

Morning Performances—Wednesday and Saturday, at Two.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—CARL ROSA OPERA

COMPANY. MONDAY, FEB. 13, production of Wagner's TANNHAUSER, with entirely new scenery, costumes, and properties. Tuesday, Feb. 14, GARMEN. Wednesday, Feb. 15, RAIL'S MURDER. Thursday, Feb. 16, only time of Sir Julius Benedict's LILY OF KILMURNEY. Friday, Feb. 17, TANNHAUSER. Saturday Morning, Feb. 18, at Two, MIGNON. Saturday Evening, Feb. 18, at Eight, Gounod's FAUST. Popular Prices. Box-office open daily from Ten till Five.

LYCEUM.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. Henry Irving.

Every Evening, at Half-past Eight, Albery's TWO ROSES—Mr. Digby Grant, Mr. Irving, Our Mr. Jenkins, Mr. David James; Messrs. Howe, Terrell, G. Alexander; Misses W. Emery, H. Mathews, Mrs. Pauncefort, Miss Ewell. At 7.30, THE CAPTAIN OF THE WATCH—Messrs. Terrell, Andrews, Carter; Misses Louisa Payne, H. Mathews. Box-office (Mr. Hurst) open Ten to Five. Seats booked by letter or telegram.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1882.

The third Session of what may be described as Mr. Gladstone's second Parliament was opened on Tuesday with a Royal Speech that is well adapted to allay the spirit of faction and remind our legislators that their country has stronger claims upon patriotic service than their party. It contains an array of projected reforms the passing of which entire would be a credit to Parliament. With, perhaps, the exception of the bill for establishing "in the English and Welsh counties the local self-government which has so long been enjoyed by the towns," and the measure "for the reform of the ancient and distinguished Corporation of London, and the extension of municipal government to the metropolis at large"—each of which constitutes a new departure and affects great vested interests—these proposals are neither novel nor likely to arouse keen discussion. Most of them, such as those relating to the amendment of the bankruptcy laws, the suppression of bribery at elections, the prevention of riparian floods, and the consolidation of the criminal code, are changes that have been, in the main, sanctioned in principle by Conservatives as well as Liberals. They have been deferred owing to the legislative block which the condition of Ireland and the obstructive action of extreme Irishmen have brought about. If we could shut our eyes to the experience of the past, a business Session, ending in the passing of a batch of useful measures, might be expected. But everyone fears to anticipate the fruits of the legislative harvest of August as compared with the abundant seed-sowing of February, and hesitates to believe that the Session of 1882 will be an exception to the comparatively barren Sessions that have preceded it.

The Queen's Speech necessarily embraces a prominent allusion to the present state of Ireland, though ingenuity seems to have been taxed to make it as colourless as possible. Facts, so far as they are known to the general public, bear out the statement that "justice has been administered with greater efficiency," and that lawlessness "shows, upon the whole, a diminished force," on the other side of St. George's Channel. There are, we are told, "manifest signs of improvement" to encourage the hope that the remedial legislation of last Session "will be rewarded with the happy results which are so much to be desired." These words are a challenge, which has already been taken up by the leader of the Opposition in the Lords, and will be fiercely denied by the Land League members. The Speech has also a brief reference to the material prospects of Great Britain. We were prepared for congratulations on the improvement of trade and the "better prospects" of agriculture, owing to a favourable season; but the hint that the revenue has not fully responded to these cheerful indications fore-shadows a less brilliant Budget than had been expected.

The foreign topics of the Speech are of course preceded by a reference to an event which concerns the domestic relations and happiness of the Queen and the Royal Family. Her Majesty formally signifies her approval of the marriage of her youngest son, the Duke of Albany, with Princess Helen of Waldeck and Pyrmont, and with some emphasis states that she has "every reason to believe that this will be a happy union." In a few days Prince Leopold will arrive from Germany with his affianced bride, who will doubtless receive a cordial welcome in the country which will be her future home. In due time Parliament will be invited to make adequate provision for Prince Leopold and his fiancée, and the popularity and the public services of his Royal Highness ought to ensure the ready acquiescence of the House of Commons in the proposal, which, in accordance with precedent, the Government will have to make. A Royal wedding at Windsor will be not the least brilliant and auspicious event of the forthcoming London season.

The paragraphs of the Address from the Throne that embrace foreign affairs are skillfully constructed. "Cordial harmony," it is stated, continues to mark her Majesty's relations "with all foreign Powers." A reference to the cession of Thessaly to Greece gives opportunity for a skilful eulogium on the honourable bearing of "all concerned" in that transaction; and the restoration of peace beyond the North-Western Frontier naturally suggests that undivided attention can now be given to the pacific development of the resources of our Eastern Empire, and "the further improvement of the condition of the people." The closing of the Transvaal difficulty by a convention which it is hoped will work successfully, is somewhat overcast by apprehensions arising from the "unsettled condition" of Basutoland. Two other topics of vital interest to this country are mentioned in the Royal Message with studied vagueness. By mutual agreement, the period for negotiating a Commercial Treaty with France has been extended for another month, and the hope is indulged that this arrangement will facilitate the conclusion of a treaty "favourable to extended intercourse between the two nations, to whose close amity I attach so great a value."

</

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

General Sir Garnet Wolseley, so the papers say, has "put his foot down" in opposition, for military reasons, to the Channel Tunnel scheme; and, Sir Garnet's experience and judgment being manifestly great, and his name a tower of strength, the disfavour in which he holds the project for the practical abolition of "the silver streak" should, and indeed must, have great weight when the Channel Tunnel enterprise comes to be seriously considered by the Government and the legislators. But, remembering how furiously railways were, in the beginning, denounced by the Quarterly Review, and how the Suez Canal scheme was vehemently opposed by the very journals which now complacently talk about our highway to India, I think that about the wisest course for the philosophically-minded observer to take is to bear in mind the Five Aphorisms of Hippocrates:—(1) Life is short; (2) Art is long; (3) The occasion fleeting; (4) Judgment difficult; (5) Experience fallacious. These aphorisms have not by any means been repeated ad nauseam. Those on the difficulty of judgment and the (often) fallaciousness of experience might be with advantage studied by the Tory gentleman who, in a scarcely sane article entitled "Judgment," in the St. James's Gazette, accuses Mr. Gladstone of being an "impostor."

The Channel Tunnel may not be made in our time, nor in our children's time; but this world has a confirmed habit of refusing to stand still; and the most surprising things may be done in it before the prophecy of Nostradamus be accomplished, or before this orb be split all to pieces by the playful tail of Mr. Proctor's comet. I came last November from Venice to Paris by way of Turin, Modane, the Mont Cenis Tunnel, Culoz, and Macon; and when I reached home I had the pleasure of reading in Temple Bar a very beautiful and tenderly-written love-tale, called "A Story of a Railway Journey," by Lady Lindsay, of Balcarres. The ground traversed by the lovers in the charming novelette was the ground I had just been over myself; and I confess that my dull and unimaginative spirit had not hitherto discovered any element of love in the episodes of a railway journey. That was left for Lady Lindsay to do.

But, long before her Ladyship was born, I remember when there were no railways in Italy at all; when there was no gas in Rome; when the Bible and Murray's Handbooks were impartially confiscated at the Pontifical Custom-house; and when Italy herself was contemptuously styled by statesmen of the Congress of Vienna and the Holy Alliance type "a geographical expression." A tunnel under Mont Cenis! A tunnel beneath the St. Gothard! A railway across the Brenner! What visionaries—what madmen would the men have been declared to be who ventured to moot such schemes when sages of such vast judgment and experience as Nesselrode and Metternich were dominant in Europe!

It is quarrelsome weather. Mr. Augustus Hare, having, as he conceived, a grievance against a firm of booksellers who went bankrupt, and whose representatives, according to his showing, had not been punctual in rendering an account of the sales of his delightful books published by them, writes to the Times "ventilating" his woes in a somewhat impetuous manner, and slightly inducing the inference that his own case may be regarded as a typical one as between author and publisher. This letter has stung the estimable Mr. John Murray to dire wrath; so he, too, writes from Albemarle-street to Printing House-square earnestly protesting "against Mr. Augustus Hare's sweeping condemnation of publishers in general, as though (so Johannes de Moravia puts it) we were not in the habit of rendering our accounts regularly or of paying our authors punctually." Further, to make things lively, the solicitors to the estate of the bankrupt publishers write to state that some of Mr. Hare's statements are at variance with the facts, and that, in order to vindicate the reputation of their clients, they intend to institute legal proceedings against Mr. Hare for libel. Surely in this there is a touch of the irony of Fate. Did not Mr. Augustus J. C. Hare produce, some ten years since, a fascinating volume entitled "Memorials of a Quiet Life"? And O! the unquiet of an action for libel! Did he not write five years since an equally pleasing book called "Walks in London"? Ah me! what a sad walk it is into Westminster Hall on the morning when you have a "case" coming on—and against you.

Re "Blood-guiltiness." "J. E. R." writes to me to say that he has copied from "Richardson's Dictionary" the following quotation from Edward Fairfax's "Godfrey of Boulogne," B. XII.

Oh! coward hand, afraid why shouldst thou see (Thou instrument of death, shame and despite),
Why shouldst thou fear with sharp and trenchant knife
To cut the thread of this blood-guiltie life?

But some liberties, it would appear, have been taken with Fairfax's text since the appearance of the first edition of his translation of "Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered; or Godfrey of Bulloign;" since, turning to my own copy, the Fourth Edition, which was not published until 1749, I find the last line of the stanza running thus—

To cut the Thread of this ignoble life!

Let us compare this with the original Italian of Torquato, himself—

Di questa vita rea troncar lo stame!

Now "vita rea" means a wicked, criminal, and guilty life; and "rea" is much more forcibly translated by "blood-guilt" than by "ignoble;" while "ignoble" in Italian is "ignobile." Lucrezia Borgia (Victor Hugo's Lucrezia I mean, not the genuine one) was a highly wicked, guilty, and criminal person; but not an ignoble one. In the libretto of Donizetti's opera of L. B. the curtain descends to a cry from the chorus of "Che rea donna!"

Mem.: In a "Book of the Hopper," as the boys who ran by the side of the carriage windows used to bawl, I once saw "Che rea donna" translated "what a real woman!"

Who tampered with the text of "Edward Fairfax, Gent," whose English version of the "Gerusalemme" was first published in 1600, and dedicated to Queen Elizabeth? E. Fairfax, Gent, knew what he was about in stanza LXXXIII. of the Twelfth Book:

But thither now run forth my guilty blood.

The tamperer with the text (at least, he has so tampered with it if the quotation from Richardson be accurate) has excised "blood-guilt." Why has he left "guilty blood" untouched?

Furthermore, "T. W. H." tells me that he finds in an old Bible "imprinted at London by Robert Barker, printer to the King's most Excellent Majesty, Anno Dom. 1608" three years before the publication of the Authorised Version), in the Fifty-first psalm, verse xiv., "Deliver me from blood"—not "blood-guiltiness." Finally, "E. I. B." (Hailsham) kindly informs me that he has referred to a "Breeches" Bible of 1606, and that the Geneva text of Psalm LI., v. 14, also runs "Deliver me from blood." But what does the Wickliffe, and what does the Coverdale version say?

"C. E. D." wishes to know the meaning of the expression "parcel-blind" which appeared in the "Echoes" last week. It means partly or partially blind. Some time ago, "C. E. D.," proceeds, he (or she?) ventured to declare, in the course of conversation, that there was such an expression as "parcel-blind"; whereupon he (or she?) was much laughed at, and was told that "there was no such expression, as it could mean nothing." Unfortunately I cannot find any dictionary authority for "parcel-blind." Worcester's Webster gives "parcel" (in the sense of partly or partially) in combination with an unseemly and all but obsolete word used by Shakespeare, and does not give "parcel-gilt," a thoroughly legitimate and decorous word, also used by Shakespeare (2 Henry IV., ii. 1), in frequent modern use, and which most people know to mean a goblet or other piece of silver plate partially gilt—usually on the inside. I have met with the expression "parcel-blind" somewhere in the course of reading—of that fact I am certain—but where, I cannot now remember.

With reference to the beautiful opera the "Mountain Sylph," which I incidentally mentioned last week, I am courteously informed that within recent years the gifted composer of the work in question, Mr. John Barnett, has wholly re-scored this most melodious of operas, supplying it with all the more modern resources of orchestration; and that, in addition, he has in his desk a finished but as yet unproduced opera called "Kathleen," written in his prime, and as vividly Irish in its musical character as the "Mountain Sylph" is Scottish. More than forty years must have passed since, with enchanted ears, I listened to "Farewell to the Mountain" and "This Magic-Wave Scarf." Vieux grognards of the Old Guard, would you not like to hear John Barnett's "Mountain Sylph" again? The good old English master is eighty years of age.

Mem.: The libretti of two of the most melodious of modern English operas were derived from the plots of foreign ballets. I say foreign, because I am not quite sure whether "La Sylphide," from which the "book" of "The Mountain Sylph" was obviously drawn, was by a Parisian or a Viennese author. Possibly the esteemed Mr. Charles Hervey, author of "The Theatres of Paris," may be able to set me right in this respect. But the libretto of Edward Loder's "Night Dancers" was borrowed from Théophile Gautier's ballet of "Giselle; ou les Willis."

On Monday evening last the thought entered the cracked head of a demented journeyman painter to clamber over the spiked railings surrounding the ugly and dilapidated monument to the memory of Queen Anne, opposite the west front of St. Paul's Cathedral, and with a hatchet and hammer violently to assault the marble countenance of the excellent Sovereign who would not make Swift a bishop, flattening the Royal nose to a level with the cheeks, slicing large flakes of stone off the Royal occiput, and actually lopping off one of the Royal ears. The poor crazy man—for it turned that he had already been in confinement as a lunatic—was captured, taken before the sitting Alderman, and relegated to an asylum for the insane.

It is to be hoped that some good may come out of the evil perpetrated by the frantic iconoclast of St. Paul's-churchyard. Bird's sculptured group representing Queen Anne looking down on four figures at the respective corners of the pedestal, and supposed to symbolise Europe, Asia, Africa, and America, has long been an eyesore to Wren's majestic basilica, and an architectural scandal to the entire metropolis. It is, besides, in a shameful and hopeless state of dilapidation. I earnestly hope that this "sooty and dingy" group will soon be pulled down by the authorities.

Bird was in great vogue in his day (1667-1731). He worked quickly, boldly, and cheaply, and was in much request for public works. According to Horace Walpole, the performance which first brought Bird into notice was his monument at Westminster to Dr. Busby, the terrible pedagogue (you remember that he whipped Sir Roger de Coverley's grandfather) who would not take off his hat when Charles II. visited Westminster School, lest, in the event of his having uncovered, the Westminster boys should be induced to believe that there was a Greater Man in England than Dr. Busby. The means by which Bird arrived at the knowledge of Busby's facial appearance were decidedly odd. The "Plagosus Orbilius" of Westminster School "had never permitted his picture to be drawn. The moment he was dead his friends had a cast in plaster taken from his face, and thence a drawing in crayons, from which White engraved his print, and Bird carved his image." A somewhat circumlocutory process.

Mem.: The biography of Bird is a very obscure one. Beyond Walpole's sneering notice in the "Anecdotes of Painting," I can find out scarcely anything respecting the rough-handed sculptor who, in addition to his Busby and his Queen Anne, was permitted to disfigure the pediment of the metropolitan basilica with a crowd of figures purporting to represent the Conversion of St. Paul. I tried to find out something about Bird in that almost inexhaustible mine of biographical and anecdotal wealth, the "Dictionnaire Universel: par une Société de Savans Français et Etrangers." Paris, 1810. No Francis Bird, sculptor, was there; only a Dr. William Bird, Chapel-master to Edward VI., and afterwards Organist to Queen Elizabeth. A most prolific musical composer, the "Dictionnaire Universel" says. Does Mr. Sutherland Edwards ken aught about him?

I do not, however, regret having spent a few hours in Bird-hunting; for I accidentally came across two anecdotes concerning John Churchill, the first Duke of Marlborough, hitherto unknown to me. To others they may be familiar; yet to many, I hope, they will be new. After the conclusion of the Peace of Utrecht, a French Marshal was complimenting Marlborough on his victories in Flanders. "Dear Sir," replied the modest hero, "you know what success in a campaign means. I made a hundred blunders; but you made a hundred and one." The other anecdote bears on the well-known parsimony of the victor of Blenheim. A beggar at Tunbridge Wells asks alms from the Earl of Peterborough, addressing him as "My Lord Duke." Lord Peterborough flings the mendicant a guinea, saying, "Hark ye, fellow! now you may be sure that I am not my Lord Duke of Marlborough."

I dined, on the First of February, deliberately and with malice aforethought, with the Master, Wardens, and Liverymen of the Worshipful Company of Merchant Taylors at their noble old Hall in Threadneedle-street. I went thither with a special eye towards the recommendations of the National Thrift Society, as formulated by Dr. Benjamin Richardson, to the effect that we are bound to eat and drink "thriftilly," by partaking only of the simplest diet, by not partaking of any rich sauces or made dishes, and by wholly abstaining from any fermented beverages. I was hungry; and own to having consumed a plateful of turtle, a slice of roast mutton, and four brussels sprouts. Likewise I ventured upon one glass of dry champagne and half a bottle of Apollinaris. This to some may seem comparatively moderate; but, according to Dr. Richardson's showing, I must have sinned grievously against "thriftness," first by eating that plateful of turtle, and next by drinking the glass of dry champagne. And surely plain pump water would have been "thrifter" than the Apollinaris.

It would be unpardonably rude to print the bill of fare of a private dinner to which you have been bidden; but I think that I may venture (for a special purpose) to recast the sumptuous menu of the Merchant Taylors' banquet. Here it is—

Importers of Turtle from Ascension and elsewhere,
Dealers in Lemons, Manufacturers of Cayenne Pepper,
Manufacturers of Milk Punch,
Fishmongers, Fishermen, Fish Sauce Makers, Shipbuilders, Fishing-
Net Makers, Sellers of Cucumbers, Potato Salesmen,
Mushroom Dealers, Poulterers, Diggers of Truffles, Buttermen,
Greengrocers, Butchers,
Cooks, Under-Cooks, Vegetable Makers, Confectioners, Foolish Fat
Scullions, Game Dealers,
Bakers, Cheesemongers, Fruiterers, Wine Merchants, Distillers,
Brewers,
Manufacturers of Aerated Waters, Florists, Purveyors of Plate and China,
Tea and Coffee Dealers, Gasworks, Waiters, A Toastmaster
THE POOR.

That which I have arranged in bill-of-fare fashion above refers simply to the Interests of the various trades and callings (I could have enumerated a hundred others had I the space) which are directly served, fostered, and benefited by what the ascetic philosopher is fond of calling "civic gormandising." Probably, three fourths of every grand banquet consist of superfluities and luxuries with which we could very well dispense. My dear Doctor, Shakespeare, who, in his way, was a very wise Physician indeed, has summed up the whole rationale of the "Thrifty living" question in less than two lines. Says the despairing Lear,

Allow not nature more than nature needs.
Man's life is cheap as beast's.

But civilised man does not wish to live as the beasts live. "Live like me," said stingy Sir John Cutler to the spendthrift. "If I lived like you," retorted the person admonished, "I should not care to live at all." Of course, it is both foolish and wicked to be wasteful, or, as the saying goes, "to burn the candle at both ends;" but it is precisely by the production, fabrication, and dealing in luxuries and superfluities that nations grow immensely rich; and a very large proportion of the wealth of the City of London is derived from her trade in articles which "thrifty" men should not want, and which, if they practise what they preach, they should never consume.

The Court of the Merchant Taylors have, fortunately, a great many more things to think of besides the graceful dispensation of their sumptuous hospitality; and I was enabled to bring away from the hall in Threadneedle-street something else besides the bill of fare. This something else was the Rules and Regulations of the Convalescent Home for Ladies, established, some ten years since, exclusively at the cost and charges of the Guild, at Bognor, in Sussex. The preamble tranquilly recites that "this Home is established by the Merchant Taylors' Company of the Fraternity of St. John Baptist, for God's glory, and for the benefit of their suffering fellow-creatures. It is intended for the wives, widows, or daughters of gentlemen; who, recovering from sickness, or suffering from the effects of overwork, require rest and sea air to restore them to health. The funds for the maintenance of this charity are entirely provided by the company; the ladies are gratuitously boarded and lodged during a specified time; free railway passes to and from Bognor are provided for them; and I believe that I am correct in saying that there is room in the home for more lady convalescents, and that the Clerk of the Company is ready to receive the names of properly recommended applicants.

G. A. S.

THE OPENING OF PARLIAMENT.

HON. E. C. MARJORIBANKS, M.P.
MOVER OF THE ADDRESS IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

LORD WENLOCK,
SECONDER OF THE ADDRESS IN THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

MR. J. F. B. FIRTH, M.P.
SECONDER OF THE ADDRESS IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The Address of both Houses of Parliament to the Queen, in reply to her Majesty's gracious Speech at the Opening of the Session last Tuesday, was moved, in the House of Lords, by the Earl of Fingall, and seconded by Lord Wenlock; in the House of Commons, it was moved by the Hon. E. C. Marjoribanks, and seconded by Mr. J. F. B. Firth.

The Earl of Fingall (who sits as Baron in the Peerage of the United Kingdom) is the Right Hon. Arthur James Plunkett, Baron Killeen, and Baron Fingall. His Lordship succeeded to the peerage last April. (We regret that the photograph of Lord Fingall reached us this week too late to be engraved for this publication.)

The third Baron Wenlock, the Right Hon. Sir Beilby Lawley, Bart., who succeeded his father, the late Lord Wenlock, in 1880, was born in May, 1849; he is nephew, on his mother's side, to the present Duke of Westminster. Lord Wenlock was educated at Eton, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He was returned M.P. for Chester at the general election of 1880, in opposition to Mr. Cecil Raikes, but was then unseated on petition, and was called to the Upper House by his father's death soon afterwards. His Lordship married, in 1872, Lady Constance Mary Lascelles, daughter of the Earl of Harewood. He is a magistrate and Deputy Lieutenant for the North and East Ridings of Yorkshire, a Captain of the Yorkshire Yeomanry Cavalry, and patron of five livings. His seat is at Escrick Park, Yorkshire.

The Hon. Edward Coutts Marjoribanks, M.P. for Berwickshire, is eldest son of Lord Tweedmouth, Sir Dudley Coutts Marjoribanks, Bart., who was M.P. for Berwick till the creation of the peerage. Mr. E. C. Marjoribanks was born in 1849, was educated at Harrow, and at Christ

OUT IN THE COLD.

Church, Oxford, and was called to the Bar, at the Inner Temple, in November, 1874. He married, in 1873, Lady Fanny Octavia Louisa Churchill, a daughter of the Duke of Marlborough, sister to the Marquis of Blandford and to Lord Randolph Churchill. He resides at Dunse Castle, Berwickshire, and is a magistrate for two counties in Scotland. He was elected for his own county in 1880, and is a decided Liberal, advocating the extension of the franchise in counties, the assimilation of land laws to those regarding personal property, and the abolition of the laws of "hypothec."

Mr. Joseph Firth Bottomley Firth, M.P. for Chelsea, is a native of Yorkshire, born in 1842. He took his degree of LL.B. at the London University in 1875, and was called to the Bar, at the Middle Temple, in June, 1866, and has practised on the North-Eastern Circuit. He married, in 1873, a daughter of Mr. George Tatham, who was Mayor of Leeds two years ago. Mr. Firth, being a member of the Society of Friends, has taken an active part in the advocacy of Church Disestablishment. But he has rendered much more useful public service by his efforts to promote the municipal reform of the Metropolis. He is author of a book entitled "Municipal London; or, London Government as it is, and London Government as it ought to be." He is, of course, in all respects a thorough Liberal Reformer; in favour of a complete equalisation of the suffrage, in town and country, all over the United Kingdom; of shortening the period of residence to qualify electors, and of providing a full and complete electoral register by the care of public officers in every city, borough, and shire. Mr. Firth was first elected for Chelsea in April, 1880, as the colleague of Sir Charles Dilke.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH IN THE ISLE OF MAN.
SEE NEXT PAGE.

PORT ST. MARY.

CASTLE RUSHEN.

PEEL CASTLE.

THE LIVELY ENTERING DOUGLAS HARBOUR.

THE SILENT MEMBER.

The Session which began last Tuesday bids fair to be a lively one. There was, at least, every promise of this in the ringing cheers with which the "considerable majority" (to quote the words of the Prime Minister himself) signalled the renewed exclusion of Mr. Bradlaugh. The junior member for Northampton is again "Out in the Cold," as indicated in the character sketch of Mr. Bradlaugh in the Lobby; and this fresh shutting-out of a troublesome personage will not decrease the interest taken in St. Stephen's by the large section of the public which finds gratification in listening to the debates and in gazing at the celebrities of either House. Perhaps the place that affords the most satisfactory glimpses of Ministers is Downing-street just before the hour appointed for a Cabinet Council. Taking your stand there, in front of Number 10, the plain little official residence of the illustrious Englishman who is at once Chancellor of the Exchequer and First Lord of the Treasury, you may, perchance, catch a glimpse of Mr. Gladstone himself leaving the House as unpretentiously as though he were the humblest subject of her Majesty; and will in all probability have an opportunity of noting the Marquis of Hartington's peculiarly long stride as he stalks stolidly up to the door, in company with his faithful dog Ponto; as well as of observing the debonair fashion in which Earl Granville, when not troubled by the gout, crosses the road from the Foreign Office. As a nimble Artist indicates on the front page, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain's style of walking up Downing-street is the most business-like; Sir William Harcourt might be a benevolent, middle-aged aesthete, were he but to assume a more ornate garb; Mr. Childers comports himself with the martial erectness proper to the chief of the War Office; Earl Spencer preserves his owl-in-an-ivy-bush appearance; and Lord Kimberley as worthily upholds the dignity of his office as the other Cabinet Ministers sketched do theirs.

Conspicuous though her Majesty was for her absence from the ceremony of opening Parliament, the scene inside and outside Palace-yard was almost as lively between one and two o'clock on Tuesday afternoon as it is when the Queen graciously deigns to attend in person. Unwelcome as the fact may be, Mr. Bradlaugh was undoubtedly the attraction, or the "Object of Interest," as the hon. member is dubbed in another of the pictorial pages. Inspector Denning, however (hale and hearty as ever was this ruddy-faced officer with the silver fringe of beard), had made adequate arrangements to control the large throngs of spectators both within and without the House. Inside the Lower House Sir Henry Brand held the usual informal levée; but the peculiar position of Mr. Bradlaugh kept him from joining the body of members who filed past the table to shake hands with the Speaker. The heterodox member for Northampton kept his seat under the Peers' Gallery till Sir William Knollys bravely summoned the Speaker to hear the Royal Address read. From his place in the centre of his fellow Royal Commissioners (Earl Sydney, Lord Kenmare, the Earl of Cork, and Lord Mounson), Lord Selborne, with the habitually clear articulation of a Lord Chancellor, read her Majesty's Speech to the large gathering of Peereesses present, with but few Peers, and the customary throng of hon. members at the bar:—

THE QUEEN'S SPEECH.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—

It is with much satisfaction that I again invite your advice and assistance in the conduct of public affairs.

I have given my approval to a marriage between my son Prince Leopold, Duke of Albany, and her Serene Highness Princess Helen of Waldeck and Pyrmont. I have every reason to believe that this will be a happy union.

I continue in relations of cordial harmony with all foreign Powers.

The treaty for the cession of Thessaly to the Greek Kingdom has now been executed in its main provisions. The transfer of sovereignty and of occupation was effected in a manner honourable to all concerned.

In concert with the President of the French Republic, I have given careful attention to the affairs of Egypt, where existing arrangements have imposed on me special obligations. I shall use my influence to maintain the rights already established, whether by the firmans of the Sultan or by various international engagements, in a spirit favourable to the good government of the country and the prudent development of its institutions.

I have pleasure in informing you that the restoration of peace beyond the North-Western Frontier, together with continued internal tranquillity, plentiful seasons, and increase of the revenue, has enabled my Government in India to resume works of public utility which had been suspended, and to devote its attention to measures for the further improvement of the condition of the people.

The convention with the Transvaal has been ratified by the Representative Assembly; and I have seen no reason to qualify my anticipations of its advantageous working.

I have, however, to regret that, although hostilities have not been renewed in Basutoland, the country still remains in an unsettled condition.

GENTLEMEN OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS,—

The Estimates for the service of the year are in an advanced stage of preparation, and will be promptly submitted to you.

MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,—

My communications with France on the subject of a new Commercial Treaty have not been closed. They will be prosecuted by me, as I have already acquainted you, with a desire to conclude a Treaty favourable to extended intercourse between the two nations, to whose close amity I attach so great a value.

The trade of the country, both domestic and foreign, has for some time been improving, and the mildness of the winter season has been eminently suited to farming operations. Better prospects are, I trust, thus opened for the classes immediately concerned in agriculture.

The public revenue, which is greatly, though not always at once, affected by the state of industry and commerce, has not yet exhibited an upward movement in proportion to their increased activity.

The condition of Ireland at this time, as compared with that which I described at the beginning of last year, shows signs of improvement, and encourages the hope that perseverance in the course you have pursued will be rewarded with the happy results which are so much to be desired.

Justice has been administered with greater efficacy; and the intimidation which has been employed to deter occupiers of land from fulfilling their obligations, and from availing themselves of the Act of last Session, shows upon the whole a diminished force.

My efforts, through the bounty of Providence, have been favoured by the abundance of the harvest in that portion of the United Kingdom.

In addition to a vigorous exertion of the provisions of the ordinary law, I have not hesitated, under the painful necessity of the case, to employ largely the exceptional powers intrusted to me for the protection of life and property by two Acts of the last Session.

You will be invited to deal with proposals for the establishment in the English and Welsh counties of Local Self-Government, which has so long been enjoyed by the towns; together with enlarged powers of administration, and with financial changes which will give you an opportunity of considering, both as to town and country, what may be the proper extent, and the most equitable and provident form, of contribution from Imperial taxes in relief of local charges.

These proposals, in so far as they are financial, will apply to the whole of Great Britain. It will be necessary to reserve the case of Ireland for a separate consideration.

In connection with the general subject of local administration, I have directed a measure to be prepared and submitted to you for the reform of the ancient and distinguished Corporation of London, and the extension of Municipal Government to the metropolis at large.

Bills will again be laid before you with which, during the last Session, notwithstanding the length of its duration and your unwearied labours, it was found impossible to proceed. I refer particularly to those concerning Bankruptcy, the repression of Corrupt Practices at Elections, and the Conservancy of Rivers and Prevention of Floods.

Measures will also be proposed to you with respect to a Criminal Code and to the Consolidation and Amendment of the Laws affecting Patents.

The interests of some portions of the United Kingdom have suffered peculiarly of late years from the extreme pressure of the public business on your time and strength; but I trust that during this Session you may be able to consider bills which will be presented to you in relation to the Law of Entail and to Educational Endowments in Scotland, and to improved means of Education in Wales.

I commend these and other subjects with confidence to your care; and it is my earnest prayer that your wisdom and energy may, under the blessing of God, prove equal to the varied and increasing needs of this extended empire.

The commencement of the evening sitting saw the usual serenity of an opening day seriously ruffled in the House of Commons. A group of new members, of whom Mr. James Lowther and Mr. Cecil Raikes were the most enthusiastically cheered by the Conservatives, took the oath directly after Mr. Winn had moved for the new writ for Westminster. Mr. Bradlaugh then advanced to the table with the view of taking the oath likewise; but, before the Clerk could administer it, Sir Stafford Northcote roused the enthusiasm of the Opposition by calmly moving a similar resolution to that which was carried last Session:—

That, having regard to the resolutions of this House of June 22, 1880, and of April 26, 1881, and to the reports and proceedings of the two Select Committees therein referred to, Mr. Bradlaugh be not permitted to go through the form of repeating the words of the oath prescribed by 29 Vic., c. 19, and 31 and 32 Vic., c. 72.

Mr. Bradlaugh having withdrawn behind the bar, the Home Secretary briefly moved the "previous question," in the unavoidable absence of the Prime Minister, his plea being that the House had no right to prevent a duly elected member from taking the oath, and that it was the province of a Court of Law alone to determine whether any obstacle existed. This was the gist of the Ministerial argument. As the debate progressed, and the House every moment grew fuller and fuller, until it became wellnigh unbearably overcrowded, the scene was remarkable. The Prince of Wales and the Duke of Teck in the Peers' Gallery, and the Princess of Wales with Princess Mary in the Ladies' Cage, were among the most interested auditors of Mr. Newdegate's magniloquent oration in defence of the Constitution and Mr. Bradlaugh's impassioned advocacy of his right to his seat. Standing on the floor of the House, within the line which indicates the bar, Mr. Bradlaugh offered to withdraw for some months if a promise were given that a measure rendering it optional to take the oath or make an affirmation would be introduced. Mr. Labouchere showed in vain how quickly such a measure could be passed. But Sir Stafford Northcote would not countenance the proposition. Mr. Gladstone, in a quiet, logical speech, was pointing out that hon. members were hardly capable judges in this delicate matter of conscience when a volley of noisy jeers interrupted him, and he dexterously alluded to them to strengthen his argument. But the Premier had the mortification to find the Ministry in a minority at the very outset of the Session. Amid the most exuberant cheering from the excited Opposition, the result of the division showed a majority of 58 in favour of Sir Stafford Northcote's resolution—286 ayes against 228 noes. Nothing daunted, Mr. Bradlaugh again walked up to the table, and respectfully repeated his claim. But, again at the instigation of the Leader of the Opposition, the junior member for Northampton was ordered to withdraw; and he discreetly did so—for the time being.

Mr. Gladstone directly afterwards heralded the Ministerial resolutions for regulating the business of the Commons. Now, it happened that on the very opening night, the Upper House set an admirable example of decorum and dispatch in procedure. The Earl of Fingall (in the uniform of the Royal Leinster Regiment) and Lord Wenlock (gay in the garb of the Yorkshire Hussars) having neatly discharged their duties of moving and seconding the Address, there were skillful but short passages of arms between the Marquis of Salisbury and Earl Granville (whose adroit answer the Prince and Princess of Wales arrived from the other House in time to hear), and other noble Lords; and the Address was agreed to in one sitting.

On the other hand, the debate on the Address was not begun till a late hour in the Commons. After the Bradlaugh episode, the reading of a letter by the Speaker announcing the stale news of the arrest of Mr. Parnell, Mr. Dillon, Mr. O'Kelly, and Mr. Sexton gave Mr. Dwyer Gray an opening to move for a Select Committee to inquire into the committal to prison of those hon. members. The Prime Minister proved there had been no breach of privilege; and Mr. O'Donnell, Mr. Sexton, Mr. P. J. Smyth, Mr. Leamy, Mr. Dawson, and Mr. Sullivan could not by their Hibernian eloquence keep the House from negating Mr. Gray's motion by 174 to 45. Not till then could Mr. Edward Marjoribanks and Mr. Firth loyally paraphrase the Queen's Speech, and give Sir Stafford Northcote grounds for renewing the debate on Wednesday, when it was again adjourned.

The ship Hereford, 1440 tons, Captain Gordon, chartered by Mr. Saul Samuel, C.M.G., Agent-General for New South Wales, sailed from Plymouth for Sydney on the 3rd inst., with 394 emigrants, under the supervision of Dr. C. E. Strutt, with Miss Jones in charge of the single women.

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH IN THE ISLE OF MAN.

On Tuesday week, his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, Admiral Superintendent of Naval Reserves, in the performance of his tour of official inspection, on his way from the Clyde to the Mersey, visited the Isle of Man, and stayed there till Wednesday morning. We have recently put before our readers, upon several occasions in the past twelvemonth, views of the most interesting scenes, natural objects, and historical monuments, in that small island of the Irish Sea, which proves yearly more attractive to visitors from England, and which is not difficult of access from Liverpool, Fleetwood, or Barrow on the Lancashire Coast. The places shown in our Illustrations this week are Douglas Bay, with the pleasant town of that name, the social capital and the Lieutenant-Governor's residence; Castletown, where the insular Legislature, the House of Keys, still holds its sessions, and where Castle Rushen, now the common prison, recalls the feudal rule of bygone ages; Port St. Mary, the rendezvous of the herring fishery, to protect which the first stone of a projected breakwater, the "Alfred Pier," was laid by his Royal Highness; and the picturesque ruins of Peel Castle, with those of the ancient Cathedral, on a rocky islet close to the harbour of Peel, on the western shore of the island. All these places were so lately described in this Journal, that it will only be needful to observe the manner in which the Prince was enabled to visit them last week, unfortunately with so little time to spare, having but a few hours at his disposal, that he could add but little to his former impressions, having been there before in July, 1863. The inhabitants of Douglas and Port St. Mary, who saw much of his Royal Highness, though not so much as they wished, and likewise those of Castletown and Peel, and the deputation from Ramsay next morning who waited upon him at Douglas, showed a cordial feeling of loyalty and public spirit in their manifestations of welcome to the Prince.

The arrival of the Admiralty despatch-boat Lively, with his Royal Highness on board, about ten o'clock on Tuesday morning, was greeted with the firing of a salute from the guns, as the steamer passed round the Battery Pier, and came to anchor between that and the Victoria Pier. The harbour-master went on board, and brought her into the harbour, where she was moored in "the Double Corner." A guard of honour, formed of the 1st Isle of Man Volunteers, the Rocket Brigade, the Life-Boat Crews, and the Fire Brigade, was drawn up on shore. The Lieutenant-Governor, Sir H. B. Loch, K.C.B., with the Right Rev. Dr. Rowley, Bishop of Sodor and Man, went on board the Lively and breakfasted with the Prince. Other island officials, Dermester Drinkwater (Judge), Major Goldie-Taubman, Speaker of the House of Keys, Mr. S. Harris, High Bailiff of Douglas, and Mr. W. A. Brearey, Chairman of the Town Commissioners, with members of the Reception Committee, were introduced to his Royal Highness. He received an address from the town, with one or two special presents; and then landed at eleven o'clock. Entering a carriage drawn by four greys, accompanied by the Lieutenant-Governor, the Bishop, and Captain Le Strange, R.N., commander of the Lively, his Royal Highness drove through the town, followed by three other carriages, with the local notables, and by the military and naval guard of honour. Along Parade-street, the Loch Promenade, Victoria-street, and Athol-street, there was a great display of flags and other decorations, with triumphal arches, and thousands of people cheered the Prince as he went past. Leaving Douglas, the two foremost carriages, with his Royal Highness and the chief official personages of the island, drove on to Castletown, within less than an hour's journey, on the south shore. Alighting there at the Court-House, the Prince received an address from the High Bailiff of Castletown, Mr. J. M. Jeffcott, and thence proceeded along the shore road to Port St. Mary. Here another address was presented, by Mr. Clucas, the Captain of Rushen, and the Rev. F. Tracy, the Vicar of the parish. At the spot where the new pier and breakwater is to be constructed, the Lieutenant-Governor, with the Receiver-General, Mr. Ridgway Harrison, and other Commissioners of the Harbour Board, invited his Royal Highness to lay the first stone. This ceremony was duly performed with a silver trowel, the Prince being assisted by Mr. C. R. Walker, resident engineer of the work. On the way back to Castletown, the whole party lunched with Mrs. Gawne, at Kenraugh. They returned from Castletown to Douglas by the railway, and immediately started by another line of railroad to Peel, across the island, getting there soon after four o'clock. At Peel, staying less than an hour, the Duke of Edinburgh received an address from a third local High Bailiff, Mr. R. J. Moore, on behalf of that division or "Sheading" of the island; then went over the ruins of Peel Castle, and finally inspected the Rocket Brigade. The Peelites, if the townspeople of Peel may be so called, gave him an enthusiastic welcome; they had put up triumphal arches, with Maux mottoes, and a variety of tasteful decorations; and they had six hundred school-children to sing "Rule Britannia" and "God Save the Queen." At Douglas, in the evening, there were splendid illuminations, which his Royal Highness failed to see. A dinner and a ball were given in honour of the Prince, by Sir H. B. Loch and Lady Loch, at Government House. Next morning, at ten o'clock, the High Bailiff of Ramsey, Mr. J. C. La Mothe, with the Ramsey Town Commissioners, brought an address to the Duke of Edinburgh, who regretted that he could not go to that place. The Lively, an hour afterwards, left the Isle of Man for the Mersey. Our Illustrations are from Sketches by our local artist, Mr. J. M. Nicholson, forwarded by the Reception Committee.

A correspondent sends to the Times from New York, Feb. 4, the following cable message:—"Sir Edward J. Reed, M.P., has bought another Florida railway, 174 miles in length. He now owns all the main Florida lines, extending over 500 miles."

A telegraphic despatch from Irkutsk has been received at the London office of the New York Herald giving further particulars concerning the missing boat's crew of the Arctic exploring-ship Jeannette. Records signed by Lieutenant de Long have been found, and these afford accounts of the great distress to which the shipwrecked men were reduced in their efforts to reach a native settlement. The Russian search parties were working energetically.

Mr. Raikes, Conservative, was on Thursday week returned for Preston. The votes recorded for him numbered 6045, against 4212 for Mr. Simpson, the Liberal working-man candidate.—Sir C. Russell, Bart., who has, in conjunction with Mr. W. H. Smith, represented Westminster since 1874, being too unwell to take his seat in the House of Commons at the opening of the Session, has applied for the Chiltern Hundreds. He has issued his valedictory address; and Lord Algeron Percy, second son of the Duke of Northumberland, the Conservative candidate for the vacancy, has explained his views on the leading political questions.—Mr. Gladstone has signed a warrant conferring the office of Steward of the Chiltern Hundreds on Mr. A. M. Sullivan.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

Nothing discouraged by the fog, a splendid audience assembled on Saturday night last at the Vaudeville Theatre to witness the revival, under the sole leaseholdship and management of Mr. Thomas Thorne, of the always delightful and, it may be added, always fresh and juvenile "School for Scandal." Why does this delightful comedy never pall upon us, even if we witness its performance by a troupe of strolling players in a barn, or by a troupe of amateurs in the concert-room of a remote watering-place? Why do its characters never seem old-fashioned nor its dialogue antiquated; although fashionable footmen no longer (it is to be hoped) endeavour to raise small sums "by way of annuity," and no purport nor significance attaches to the mention of the Irish Tontine? I fancy that one of the reasons why the "School for Scandal" has retained its popularity is that the world is, on the one hand, as much addicted as ever it was to hatred, envy, malice, and all uncharitableness—that is to say, to talking scandal—while, on the other hand, it admires, or professes to admire, as fervently as of yore, the qualities of integrity, generosity, and benevolence. We like to think that we have a Sir Peter Teazle, a Sir Oliver Surface, and a Maria among our friends, and a faithful Rowley among our dependents; while we are very certain that we know Lady Sneerwell perfectly; that we are members of the same club with Sir Benjamin Backbite; and that we are bidden to dine with Mrs. Candour the day after to-morrow. I never met a Tony Lumpkin in real life; but I have been intimately acquainted with at least half a dozen types of Joseph Surface.

The "School for Scandal" is a hundred and five years old, and Richard Brinsley Sheridan was only six-and-twenty years old when he wrote it. It must be remembered that the best comedies of Congreve were written before he was five-and-twenty, and that Mr. Dion Boucicault was a mere lad when he astonished the town with "London Assurance." The original plot of the "School for Scandal" differed widely from that of the existing play. The first sketch for the comedy was called "The Slanderers," and the scene was laid in the Pump Room at Bath. Sir Peter and Lady Teazle were subsequent introductions. Spatter, and not Snake, was the crawling wretch who got calumnious paragraphs inserted in the newspapers at the instance of Lady Sneerwell. Crabtree was "Sir Christopher Crab." Maria's lover was first called Clerimont, and then Florival; and of this scenario of the Second Act, discovered among Sheridan's MSS., the modern reader may make as much, or as little, as he can.

"All, Lady Sneerwell and Mrs. C., 3rd Lady S. and • • •, Em and Mrs. C. listening, 4th L. S. and Flor. Shows him into the room—bids him return the other way—L. S. and Emma: Emma and Florival—fits—maid—Emma fainting and sobbing:—"Death! don't expose me"—enter maid—will call out—all come on with cards and smelling-bottles."

What has become of the maid, the fits, the cards and the smelling-bottles? "All gonned afay mid de luger bier—afay in die ewigkrit," as Hans Breitmann sings. The Lady Teazle of the Second Sketch is a detestable coquette, and two of her taunts to her husband are positively revolting in their cynicism. "Then you wish me dead," says Sir Peter. "You know I do not," is the heartless reply; "for you have made no settlement on me." "I am but middle-aged," pleads poor Sir Peter. "There's the misfortune," answers Lady T.; "put yourself on, or back, twenty years, and, either way, I should like you the better." I fancy, moreover, that the original "Old Teazle," into whom the eccentric but chivalrous Sir Peter ultimately developed, was not what is commonly (and often unjustly) deemed a gentleman. From his name, he was possibly meant to be a cloth manufacturer. Lady Teazle, too, was improved from what Thomas Moore has called "an ill-bred young shrew, whose readiness to do wrong leaves the mind in little uncertainty as to her fate," into a lively and innocent though imprudent country girl, transplanted into the midst of all that can bewilder and endanger her, but with still enough of the purity of rural life about her heart to keep the blight of the world from settling on it permanently. Unfortunately, Miss Ada Cavendish reminded the observer on Saturday, in her clever rendering of the character originally sustained in 1777 by Mrs. Abington, more of "the ill-bred young shrew" than of "the lively and innocent, although imprudent, country girl." Miss Ada Cavendish was, in the earlier scenes of the play, altogether too noisy and physically demonstrative in her "skittishness." I will not charge her with lack of refinement, because it may be that the lady's conception of the character of Lady Teazle was that of a hoyden; and a capital hoyden she certainly was. The age was one when hoydens flourished; and it is possible that Miss Cavendish had been reading in good Dr. Doddridge's Memoirs that remarkable description of a game of romps, in which a tablecloth was spread on the stairs on which sat the ladies; the gentlemen beneath tugged at the ends of the tablecloth, and then they all tumbled over one another "till the gunpowder ran out of the heels of their boots." And was not the exemplary Mrs. Inchbald given in her youth to knocking runaway knooks in Covent-garden. In the almost tragic scene following her discovery behind the screen, Miss Ada Cavendish was entirely herself—quiet, dignified, pathetic, and forcible. It will be remembered that Garrick, writing to Sheridan four days after the production of the play, makes the objection that the characters on the stage, at the falling of the screen, stand too long before they speak. This is rather the objection of a stage manager, anxious for the "business" to run trippingly, than of an ordinary spectator. The audience enjoy the temporary paralysis—the "dumbfoundedness" of all the characters on the stage. The spectators are absorbed in wonder and perplexity as to what is to come next, and how this extraordinary imbroglio can possibly be cleared up; and astonished expectation is one of the chief elements of pleasure. The ordeal of standing mute and motionless so long is a very trying one for Miss Ada Cavendish; but she got through it victoriously.

The Sir Peter Teazle of Mr. William Farren is too well known and too thoroughly appreciated to need renewed comment, which could be only a re-echo of bygone and well-deserved plaudits. This excellent comedian was at his very best on Saturday; as was also Mr. Thomas Thorne in the subsidiary but by no means unimportant part of Crabtree. It can surely be no news to Mr. Henry Neville to be told that his Charles Surface is in its gallantry and vivacity a superb performance. Mr. Frank Archer as Joseph Surface was rather hard. Surely "Master Bliff," in "Tom Jones," from which prose epic Sheridan borrowed the characters of the two brothers, was an oilier and younger-looking hypocrite than the sententious personage represented by Mr. Archer. He looked so intensely respectable that both he and the audience must have had great difficulty in persuading themselves at last that Joseph Surface was a scoundrel. A stage hypocrite should at least be allowed to betray himself in an occasional "aside," be it only a gesture or a look; but Mr. Archer never let the ethical cat out of the bag. Mr. John Maclean's Sir Oliver Surface was all that it should have been; and Mr. Edward Lighton made Moses a really funny little Jew, and not a cross and offensive caricature.

Mr. Lin Rayne had uphill work with Sir Benjamin Backbite, for the reason that the "macaroni" in question is really an extinct type of character; but Mr. Lin Rayne threw intelligence and appreciativeness into the part, and was highly amusing. Mrs. Arthur Stirling was an excellent Mrs. Candour, while Miss Alma Murray was a graceful but slightly too melancholy Maria, and Mrs. G. Canninge a stately but somewhat affected Lady Sneerwell. The dresses were rich and tasteful, and were from the designs of Mr. Alfred Thompson, and the scenery was extremely elaborate, although too much encumbered by upholstery. One sees a great deal too much of the upholsterer and too little of the scene-painter on the modern stage. I hope that the revival of the "School for Scandal" at the Vaudeville will have a long and triumphantly prosperous run. Mr. Thomas Thorne has certainly done his best to deserve success.

This being the age of benefits, I am certain every theatre-goer who has been delighted with the remarkably beautiful and resplendent pantomime of "Little Bo-Peep" will agree with me that the hard-working and talented company of players in the Covent Garden spectacle richly merit the benefit the lessee has generously accorded them. I am glad to hear the concluding performances next week are to be for the benefit of the "Little Bo-Peep" company. My turn may come next.

G. A. S.

MUSIC.

The Sacred Harmonic Society's concert of yesterday (Friday) week comprised performances of Handel's Coronation Anthem, "Zadok the Priest," Gounod's "Messe Solennelle," and Beethoven's "Mount of Olives." This selection offered an interesting contrast between the grace and refinement of the French composer's music, the beauty and dramatic power of Beethoven's work, and the sublimity of Handel's anthem, the most celebrated of those which he composed for the coronation of George the Second. The solo vocalists on the occasion referred to were Miss A. Williams, Mr. Maas, and Mr. H. E. Thorndike; the two former artists having particularly distinguished themselves in the incidental passages of the mass; and in the seraph's song (Miss Williams) and the opening recitative and air (Mr. Maas) in Beethoven's sacred cantata. The chorus-singing was generally good, with the exception of two or three points in the mass, the music of which is much less familiar to the choristers than that of the other pieces in the programme. Much regret was felt at the cause of the absence of Sir Michael Costa, whose place, as conductor, was (as occasionally heretofore) ably supplied by M. Sainton. Although progressing favourably, Sir Michael will not be able to be present at the next concert, on Feb. 24, when Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, a new "Te Deum" by Mr. W. G. Cousins, and Mr. Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch" are to be performed.

The Carl Rosa opera company's recent performances at Her Majesty's Theatre have consisted of repetitions of works already noticed, the second representation of Balfe's "Moro" having been postponed from Thursday week to Monday last, when Miss Georgina Burns, replaced Madame Valleria as Olivia, owing to the indisposition of the latter.

The second of Mr. Sims Reeves's concerts of operatic, national, and miscellaneous music took place at St. James's Hall on Tuesday evening, when our great tenor sang the recitative and song, "The grasping, rasping Norman race," from Macfarren's "Robin Hood," and the nautical ballad, "Tom Bowling." Mr. Reeves was encored in the first song, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Santley, Mr. Abercrombie, Mr. F. B. Foote, and Mr. H. Pyatt also contributed to the selection from "Robin Hood;" and they and Miss Spenser Jones were the vocalists in the miscellaneous portion of the programme, which included the clever instrumental performances of the "Anemoic Union," directed by Mr. Lazarus. The third concert takes place next Friday evening.

Mr. John Boosey's "London Ballad Concerts" are still pursuing a successful career during this, their sixteenth, season. Last week's performances were of the usually attractive kind, including several new songs—"Sunshine and Rain" by Blumenthal; "Come to me, O ye Children," by Macinore; "The Old Barge," by Behrend; "Serenade" by A. Goring Thomas; and "My love is come" by Marziale; the singers having been, respectively, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Miss M. Davies, Miss Damian, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Oswald. These vocalists, Madame Sherrington, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Maybrick contributed other more familiar pieces, all having been warmly applauded and some encored. As usual, the good part-singing of the South London Choral Association was an agreeable feature of the evening. This week's concert offered attractions of a similar nature.

This week's Monday Popular Concert brought forward two movements composed by Mr. A. C. Mackenzie—a "larghetto" and "allegretto"—for pianoforte and violoncello. The composer, it will be remembered, produced a cantata entitled "The Bride," at the Worcester Festival in September last. This work, as we recorded at the time, was very successful, and leads to the expectation of some good results from the future of the composer. The pieces now referred to are well written for the respective instruments, the introductory movement having especially displayed Signor Piat's fine tone and cantabile style, and the other division, his remarkable executive skill in passages of display. The "Larghetto" is chiefly melodic and expressive, the "Allegretto" being playful and volatile. The pianoforte part was well sustained by Mlle. Krebs, who afterwards gave a remarkably fine rendering of Bach's chromatic fantasia and fugue, and, for the encore, a "Bourrée" by the same master. The concert included a repetition of three pieces—"Prelude," "Romance," and "Scherzo"—for violin (with pianoforte accompaniment), by Franz Ries. There is much character in each movement; the "Romance" being very melodious and expressive, and the "Scherzo" full of playful fancy. They were finely played by Madame Néruda, with Mr. Zerbin at the pianoforte. Mr. Oswald rendered the vocal pieces with much success.

The Royal Albert Hall Choral Society's concert of this week consisted of performances of Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" ("Lobgesang") and Rossini's "Stabat Mater;" works that have often been given in association, with a good effect of contrast between the opposite styles of the German and the Italian master.

Madame Isabella Power's concert took place at the Royal Academy of Music on Wednesday evening.

The Philharmonic Society entered on its seventieth season on Thursday evening, when an excellent programme included the speciality of Beethoven's gigantic choral symphony, the work written for the society in 1823. Mr. W. G. Cousins retains the office of conductor, which he has long efficiently fulfilled.

Mr. Percy Blandford's "oratorio and miscellaneous concert" was announced for yesterday (Friday) evening at St. James's Hall, with a list of eminent solo-singers, in co-operation with the concert-giver.

The "Lady Jenkinson Prize" at the Guildhall School of Music has been competed for by eighteen students, Miss Mary Ann Giffen having been the successful competitor.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

Paris, Tuesday, Feb. 7.

The catastrophe of the Union Générale still continues to be the chief topic of conversation here. What a fine subject for a novelist would be a thoroughly modern and artistically realistic treatment of this struggle of millions against millions, of this pitched battle between the Jews and the Gentiles, in which the spiritual and temporal powers of the Gentiles have suffered so cruelly; of this politico-fashionable financial company that began with the benediction of the Pope and ends amidst the curses of the faithful and of the unfaithful, amidst the united maledictions of Capoul, of the demi-monde, and of the Faubourg St. Germain! The chapter of accidents of which the crash has been the cause is long and curious indeed, and the number of martyrs is so great and some of their names so illustrious, that to have been a victim of M. Bontoux has almost become a title not so much to the sympathy as to the envy of ordinary mortals, who were either poor in purse or rich in prudence. The completion of the immense church of the Sacred Heart, that is being slowly built on the heights of Montmartre, by subscription of the faithful all over France, will be again retarded. All the reserve funds were deposited in the Union Générale. Singers and actors who had retired to enjoy the golden proceeds of cosmopolitan triumphs announce their intention of returning to the stage. Their millions have disappeared. Their houses have to be sold. Help! help! Strakosch, Vinentini, Mapleson, and all ye impresari! "I am open to the highest bid," says Mlle. Heilbron, with cynical frankness. "I want, above all things, to gain money. I shall do like Sarah Bernhardt, I shall sell myself, if needful, to one of those dealers in human flesh—marchands de viande humaine—who speculate in artists in the new world."

MM. Bontoux and Fédér are still in prison, and proceedings are about to be instituted against several, if not all, the directors. The latest news for the shareholders—sad news, in truth—is that the official assignee is going to call in the three quarters of the capital of the Union that has not been paid up, 375f. per share.

When the Union was founded, as I have said above, under the patronage of the Pope and Eugène Veuillot, one of the directors suggested that the motto of the company should be Honneur à Dieu. It has been observed that Adieu, honneur, would have been more suitable.

M. Gambetta has left Paris. The ex-Premier is now at Nice, and intends, it is said, to visit Italy. And yet, whatever journal one takes up, it is full of Gambetta. He is just as much the man of the day as ever. A newspaper, devoted to M. Gambetta, La Petite République Française, has published a sort of caricature—"Le Pensionnat Bourbon" or "Bourbon School," which is being much discussed. It represents the Chamber of Deputies as a lot of schoolboys trembling before M. Gambetta, and on the point of being flogged for having been disrespectful towards him. The declaration is prompt and severe, for the explanation of the last scene of the caricature is "the rustication of the school is expected every moment." M. Gambetta has, at least, the merit of frankness.

Nevertheless, the Freycinet Cabinet seems to have some months of life in it. Yesterday the Government was interpellated on the subject of the revision of the Constitution, and obtained a vote of confidence by 287 against 66.

You may talk about Fleet-street on the University Bont-race day! That is child's play compared with the sight that was presented by the Place de l'Opera during the five nights of the Slosson-Vignaux billiard-match at the Grand Hôtel last week. The crowd was immense; at times it must have numbered ten thousand people, rich and poor, noblemen and cab-drivers, cook-boys and milliners, bookmakers and shoe-blacks. And all eyes were fixed upon a transparency placed in front of a window on the third floor of the hotel. Behind the transparency was an electric light, and on it might be read the names Slosson-Vignaux, and beneath each name the score; and every five minutes the numbers were changed, and the crowd gazed and gazed for hours, and the circulation was interrupted, and the spectacle gave food for reflection. To think that all this excitement was caused by an international match between an American and a Frenchman! And that whether one or the other won was really a matter of perfect indifference to everybody except the players and their backers! To think, too, that the fact that the two adversaries really did shake hands after the match and drank champagne together has become a matter of public interest and discussion! To think, furthermore, that the French are reputedly the most spiritual people on the face of the earth!

This is the moment of the "Petits Salons," as they have been called, the picture exhibitions in the artistic clubs, which are, as it were, the general rehearsal of the grand annual Salon. There are now open exhibitions in the "Cercles" of the Place Vendôme and of the Rue Saint-Arnaud, and an exhibition of lady artists in the Cercle des Arts Libéraux. All these exhibitions contain a vast number of products of industrial art, saleable pictures that give proof of more or less technical ability, and that is all. Many famous names are to be seen on the frames; but, with rare exceptions, the pictures this year show that the artists have treated the "Petits Salons" somewhat unceremoniously.

People who may be interested in the singularly unsympathetic personality of M. Emile Zola will learn with pleasure that the shadow of the great prophet of naturalism, M. Paul Alexis, has published a volume entitled "Emile Zola, Notes d'un Ami," in which he has told everything that he knows about Zola, and he knows everything. M. Alexis, who, by-the-way, is very much of a laughing-stock in the literary world here, begins with Zola's great-grandfather, relates the story of Zola's childhood, his debut at Paris, his struggles, the history of his various novels, the history of Zola the critic, of Zola the dramatic author, of Zola the man, Zola's way of working, Zola's way of nibbling his pen, Zola's way of taking notes, the hour at which Zola's big dog takes a bath under his master's eye; and, finally, as if the measure of weariness were not full and overflowing, M. Paul Alexis presents us with one hundred pages of unpublished verses, not by himself, but by Emile Zola! Verses written when Zola was a schoolboy! And what verses! Why publish them? The reason is simple: Balzac published his youthful works. Zola must have his "Œuvres de Jeunesse" too.

T. C.

Our Portrait of Lord Wenlock is from a photograph by Mr. Silvester Parry, of Chester; that of the Hon. E. C. Marjoribanks, from one by Mr. A. Meihuish, Portman-square; and that of Mr. Firth, from one by Messrs. Lombardi and Co., Pall-mall East.

Earl Spencer on Thursday week received a deputation which asked for an enlargement of the powers of local authorities to deal more promptly with cases of cattle disease. The Lord President of the Council, in reply, said that a new circular was going out to the local authorities to facilitate the declaration of infected areas; but he could not, without fresh powers from Parliament, grant all that the deputation desired.

1. Pavilion of the Suratis and Natives of Bombay, at Rangoon.

3. Canton Chinese Pavilion.

2. Pavilion of the Chinese.

4. Burmese Ballet (Yeng Poay): Dancing-Girls of Twantay and Henyadah.

5. A Looker-on.

7. Le Hawk, a Chief of Arracan.

6. Karen Chiefs.

8. Burmese Dancing-Girls (Head-dresses).

SKETCHES AT RANGOON: VISIT OF THE VICEROY OF INDIA TO BRITISH BURMAH.—SEE PAGE 130.

1 and 2. Unwelcome Valentines.

3. "I wonder who this is from!"

4. Dr. Thwackem is remembered by his pupils.

5. Mr. Quiverful does not appreciate the joke.

6. Some of the fellows who got pretty Valentines.

VALENTINE'S DAY.—SEE PAGE 142.

Extra Supplement.

RUSSIAN CONVICTS AT THE YENISEI RIVER, IN SIBERIA.

Seventeen or eighteen thousand persons, two thirds of them convicts under sentence for a variety of criminal offences, the other third part being women and children permitted to accompany their convict relatives, are yearly sent to Siberia; they are usually conveyed from Russia down the Volga to the Caspian, thence to Perm, and over the Ural to the central convict dépôt at Tiumen, in Western Siberia. Here they are huddled into iron barges, which carry them down the Tura and the Irtysh to the Ob, and then up the last-named river to Tomsk, a distance of 3000 versts, in ten days; and it is to be feared that much suffering and disease may be caused by mismanagement in over-crowding these vessels. There is a precise description of one of them in a book which we lately reviewed, "Through Siberia," by the Rev. Henry Lansdell, who travelled across the whole breadth of that vast region, in 1878, on purpose to inspect the Russian prisons and establishments of penal servitude. He states that most of the convicts sent to Siberia, when they get to their destination, are allowed a certain degree of personal liberty, similar to the condition of our ticket-of-leave men, earning their livelihood by ordinary colonial occupations. The imaginary quick-silver mines, with their deadly fumes by which so many lives are supposed to have been extinguished, have no more real existence than the fabled poisonous shadow of the Upas tree. Convicts sentenced for various crimes to a term of hard-labour servitude, of which class there were, in one year, 2252, being one seventh of the whole number transported to Siberia, are employed in the gold-mines of Yeniseisk, Kansk, Irkutsk, Nijni Udinsk, and Kara, and about the sources of the Lena, the Amoor, and other rivers. There are silver-mines, also, and coal-mines. Mr. Lansdell, who is well acquainted with all the convict prison establishments of Great Britain and of Europe, did not find the system adopted in Siberia, on the whole, to be one of greater severity. The immense overland journey, mostly on foot, but marching and resting on alternate days, continued through the summer months, perhaps for a distance of several thousand miles, is a formidable ordeal to think of. It has been superseded, in some recent instances, by shipping the convicts in the Baltic or in the Black Sea, and sending them a long voyage round the Cape and Asia to Saghalien or the Amoor. Great indignation was excited against the Russian Government, in July, 1879, by a shocking story of the over-crowding of one of the convict-ships from Odessa, causing the death of two or three hundred unhappy prisoners. This tale proved to be utterly groundless, since the vessel arrived with all the people in good health. The alternative and more usual way of sending convicts to Siberia is here to be observed, as one incident of the long eastward journey, the crossing of the great river Yenisei, is shown in our present illustration. A convict party may consist of a hundred and fifty or two hundred men, with a small military escort. Such a party is represented in our engraving as waiting on the banks of the river Yenisei, for the "flying bridge" that is to carry them across. The traveller through Siberia will often have met the long straggling line of these unfortunates, dressed in a uniform suit of grey; and, as they drew near, may have heard the clanking of the iron chain, which many are compelled to wear under their clothes; a sound which, once heard, can never be forgot, and seems to haunt the memory. The stages on the road to exile are marked by special "étape stations," as they are called. These temporary prisons, which generally stand apart from the villages, seem to be all built after one pattern; they are long wooden structures with a row of small windows near the roof, and are invariably painted a hideous yellow colour.

A BURMESE ENTERTAINMENT FOR THE VICEROY OF INDIA.

His Excellency the Marquis of Ripon, Viceroy of India, accompanied by the Marchioness of Ripon, lately visited British Burmah, an outlying but very important portion of her Majesty's Indian Empire. A correspondent there writes to us: "British Burmah has now, for the third time since its establishment, received the visit of a Viceroy. Lord Dalhousie came here first, after the second Burmese war. Lord Mayo came here just ten years ago, shortly before he paid the ill-fated visit to the Andamans, in the course of which he was murdered. And now, Lord and Lady Ripon have been here, to see what this country is like. Mr. Bernard, the present Chief Commissioner, is a nephew of the late Lord Lawrence, and so one of a family of Indian Administrators. I send you materials for some illustrations of the entertainments provided upon the occasion of this Viceregal visit. The sketches and photographs are mostly connected with 'poons,' these being the great national amusement. There are three classes of poons; the 'Yein,' or posturing; the 'Zat,' or dramatic; and the 'Yote-Thay,' or marionette, in which dolls worked by strings carry on the performances of both the other kinds. The Burmese are passionately fond of these poons, and will watch them for hours. The performances mostly take place at night, the business of the evening commencing at about midnight and lasting till five in the morning. The performances before the Viceroy were given at hours more in accordance with English habits, and the performers were girls and widows of respectable family from the two districts of Twantay and Henyadah; one set of girls standing up, while the others were seated. They danced to the music of a band which, to European ears, is an orchestra of torture. A big circular instrument, inside which a man is seated, is the 'Sein'—it is a graduated scale of drums, which the performer strikes to all appearance promiscuously. The inner circle contains a similar scale of brass cymbals, and is called the 'Kyay-woin'; it is played in the same wholesale manner as the 'Sein.' Next in importance as a part of the orchestra, though ranking first as an instrument of torture, in the 'Ngai,' consisting of a rough clarinet, or wooden penny whistle, with a brass horn loosely attached to the end. Besides these instruments, there are a big drum and two sizes of cymbals. To the unaccustomed ear the music seems at first to have nothing in it but noise; gradually, however as you watch the posturing, you observe that there is a cadence in it to which the performers respond, and at times even a sort of tune. In the dramatic performance, the King of the Monkeys fought a broadsword combat with the King of the Manaters. The struggle for a while seemed doubtful, but our simian ancestor was set down in the programme to have the best of it in the long run."

We are indebted to Mr. H. Keene, of the Accountant-General's Office, Rangoon, for sketches of this entertainment, together with a series of photographs taken by Mr. P. Kier, photographer, of Rangoon.

The Marquis of Hartington will preside at the dinner of the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools on the 15th.

THE COURT.

Her Majesty entertained the Empress Eugénie and the ladies and gentlemen of her household at dinner previous to the departure of the Empress from Osborne Cottage; the other members of the dinner circle being the Duchess Dowager of Roxburghe, Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Sir Henry Ponsonby, Lieutenant-General Lord Charles Fitzroy, and Captain Bigge. The Hon. Lady and Miss Ponsonby and Mrs. Bigge, with the ladies and gentlemen in waiting, joined the Royal party in the drawing-room. The Queen went to Osborne Cottage on Saturday and took leave of the Empress on her departure for London. Princess Beatrice crossed to Portsmouth with the Empress in the Royal yacht Alberta, and afterwards returned to Osborne; Captain Bigge attending the Empress to town. Divine service was performed at Osborne on Sunday by the Rev. George Connor; her Majesty and Princess Beatrice being present. Earl Spencer arrived; and with Mr. Connor joined the Royal family at dinner. A Council was held by the Queen on Monday, at which were present the Lord President, the Lord Steward of the Household, and the Secretary of State for the Home Department. Sir John Holker, Judge of the Court of Appeal, was sworn in a member of the Privy Council, and took his seat at the board accordingly. Earl Spencer, Earl Sydney, and Sir William Vernon Harcourt had audiences of her Majesty. Among other guests who have recently been included in her Majesty's dinner parties are the Hon. Lady Biddulph, the Hon. Lady Ponsonby, and Mrs. Bigge; also Admiral Ryder and Captain Carter (commanding her Majesty's ship Hector, guard-ship at Cowes). The Right Hon. G. Shaw Lefevre had an audience of the Queen. Yesterday was the forty-second anniversary of her Majesty's marriage.

The Duchess Dowager of Roxburghe has succeeded Lady Abercromby as Lady in Waiting, and the Hon. Horatia Stopford arrived at Osborne. Lieutenant-Colonel Lord Edward Clinton has arrived as Groom in Waiting, and Lieutenant-General Lord Charles Fitzroy has succeeded Major-General Du Plat as Equerry in Waiting.

The Victoria and Albert is expected to leave about March 17, to convey her Majesty and Princess Beatrice to Cherbourg, en route for Switzerland, where they will pass a week or two; returning to England for Easter.

Madame Marie Roze-Mapleson has received from the Queen a handsome bracelet in testimony, as an accompanying letter from Sir Henry Ponsonby states, of the pleasure experienced by her Majesty at the singing of the accomplished artist at Osborne in December.

The Right Hon. Sir William Bramwell is created Baron Bramwell, of Hever, Kent; and General E. Stanton, her Majesty's Chargé-d'Affaires at Munich, is made a K.C.M.G.

The Rev. James John Hornby, D.D., Head Master of Eton College, is appointed Chaplain to her Majesty.

The Queen has recently caused a letter to be written to Lord Aberdare, as President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, asking whether it would not be possible for the society to take steps for the prevention of the practice of mutilating cattle in Ireland, and expressing the earnest desire of her Majesty to put a stop to such cruelties.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales, after hunting with the West Norfolk hounds at Houghton, the Marquis of Cholmondeley's seat, wound up his sport in the chase for this season at Sandringham by joining the meet of the West Norfolk at Dersingham, accompanied by the Princess. There was a large field; and, after some fair runs, in which their Royal Highnesses joined, they returned to Sandringham. The Prince and Princess, with their daughters, attended Divine service on Sunday at St. Mary Magdalene's Church, in the Park, the Rev. F. Hervey and the Rev. John Russell, Rector of Black Torrington, North Devon, officiating. On Monday the Royal family came to London for the early Parliamentary season. The Prince and Princess visited the Duchess of Cambridge at St. James's Palace shortly after their arrival at Marlborough House. The Duke of Edinburgh and the Duchess of Teck lunched with their Royal Highnesses on Tuesday. The Prince and Princess were present at the debates in the House of Lords and House of Commons in the evening.

The Princess has another nephew; the Queen of Greece having been confined of a son on the 1st inst.

A meeting has been summoned by the Prince in connection with the Royal College of Music for the 28th inst., at St. James's Palace. Invitations have been forwarded, by his desire, to many distinguished personages, as well as to the Mayors and other authorities in the chief places throughout the United Kingdom. The object of the meeting is to further the movement in question, which has the support of all the members of the Royal family.

The Prince has accepted the office of President of the Smithfield Club for 1883; also the Presidentship of the committee for procuring a portrait of the Duke of Devonshire, the Chancellor of the University of Cambridge.

The Hon. H. Tyrwhitt-Wilson succeeds Colonel Teesdale as Equerry in Waiting to the Prince, and Lady Emily Kingscote Miss Knollys as Lady in Waiting to the Princess.

After leaving the Isle of Man, the Duke of Edinburgh returned to Liverpool, where he inspected H.M.S. Defence, the guard-ship in the Mersey; and, subsequently landing from the Lively, his Royal Highness drove to the King's Dock, and inspected the Naval Reserves on H.M.S. Eagle. Want of time prevented the Duke inspecting the Royal Artillery Volunteers, he having to leave for Belfast, where he arrived early yesterday week in a dense fog, which caused the arrival of the Lively to be unobserved for some hours, her despatches from Carrickfergus being consequently delayed. The Duke during the day made an inspection of the Reserves stationed at Carrickfergus, and paid a visit to the Gibraltar training-ship, where he was received by Sir John Lemaigre, Inspector of Prisons and Industrial Schools, and the committee of the ship; after which he steamed off for Kingstown, arriving in the harbour early on Saturday morning. After examining the Belleisle, his Royal Highness came to London and joined the Duchess at Clarence House, St. James's. The Mayor of Pembroke has received an official intimation that the Duke and Duchess will visit that port on March 18, when her Royal Highness will launch the turret-ship Majestic.

It was intended that the Duchess of Connaught should be removed on Monday for change of air from Bagshot to Windsor Castle, but it was suddenly decided that the Duchess should leave Bagshot on Sunday. The Duke and Duchess, accompanied by Sir William Jenner, Dr. Playfair, and the Hon. Mrs. Alfred Egerton, accordingly left Bagshot Park early in the afternoon. Her Royal Highness is progressing favourably.

Prince Leopold, who has been detained at Arolsen through a sprained knee, is expected to cross from Calais with his bride-elect, Princess Helene, in a special steamer to Dover, instead of crossing from Flushing in the Victoria and Albert, owing to the uncertainty of the weather. On the marriage of his Royal Highness the committee of the Bachelors' Club, of which he is President, will present him with a complete silver toilet service of the Louis XVI. period.

The Duke of Cambridge entertained a party of gentlemen at dinner last Saturday, covers being laid for thirty; and presided on Wednesday evening at the Star and Garter Hotel, Richmond, at a public dinner in aid of the building fund of the Richmond Hospital. His Royal Highness, as Ranger of Hyde Park, has appointed Colonel Tyrwhitt, his Equerry, Deputy Ranger, in the place of the late Hon. James Macdonald.

The Duchess of Teck paid a visit yesterday week to the home of the Association of German Governesses, Wyndham-place, Bryanston-square, of which she is a patroness. Her Royal Highness, who was received by the vice-president of the association, Lady Suffield, made a general inspection of the institution. The Duke of Teck and the Duchess have dined with Viscount and Viscountess Lismore and with the Earl and Countess of Rosslyn. Her Royal Highness was present at the concert given by the Wandering Minstrels Amateur Orchestral Society on Thursday at the Grosvenor Hall, Buckingham Palace-road, in aid of the West-End Hospital for Diseases of the Nervous System, Welbeck-street. The Duchess has consented to distribute the prizes of the Queen's Westminster Rifles on the 25th inst. in Westminster Hall.

The Empress of Austria, who arrived for the hunting season in England last Saturday, was received at Dover by the Austrian Ambassador, who went on board the Maid of Kent on its arrival at the pier; as did also Captain Sir T. C. Bence, R.N., who conducted her Majesty to the special train awaiting her. Mr. Mortimer Harris and other representatives of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway were in attendance, with Mr. Neele, of the London and North-Western. The Empress lunched at the Lord Warden Hotel, and afterwards continued her journey, via Battersea, to Wrenbury, Cheshire, where Viscount Combermere received the Imperial visitor. On Monday her Majesty was in the field with Sir Watkin Wynne's hounds, having a good day; the meet being at Whitchurch.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

Mr. Charles Lindsay Scott, son of Mr. J. Lindsay Scott, of Mollance, Castle Douglas, Forfarshire, and Lady Agnes Tollemache, sister of the Earl of Dysart, were married at St. George's Church, Hanover-square, last Saturday. The bridesmaids were Lady Agatha Tollemache, the bride's sister; the Hon. Rhoda Tollemache, the Hon. Eva Hanbury-Tracy, Miss Janet Sinclair, and Miss Amy Tollemache, her cousins; Miss Constance Scott, sister of the bridegroom; and Miss Frances Wolesey. The marriage ceremony was performed by the Rev. Francis J. Holland, Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, assisted by the Rev. W. Sinclair, Westminster, cousin of the bride. The Earl of Dysart gave his sister away. The wedding breakfast was given at Lady Huntingtower's residence, Chesham-place, after which the bride and bridegroom left for Helmingham Hall, Lord Tollemache's seat near Ipswich.

A marriage is arranged between the Hon. Patrick Greville-Nugent, fourth son of Lord Greville, of Clonyn, and Ermenegarda, only daughter of the late Mr. Augustus Ogilvy, of Cove, Dumfriesshire, N.B.

ART NOTES.

Mr. Joseph Edgar Boehm, sculptor, was on Monday elected a Royal Academician.

The exhibition of the Glasgow Institute of the Fine Arts, Sauchiehall-street, was opened to the public on Tuesday.

Mr. Albert Grey, of Albert-street, Regent's Park-road, has availed himself of the æsthetic craze to publish a series of valentines for the coming festival.

An International Exhibition of Photographic Apparatus has been opened at the Rooms of the Society of Arts, John-street, Adelphi, and will remain open till the 25th inst.

A Fine-Art Exhibition, embracing objects appertaining to the different industries of the country, will be held at Bradford during the summer. It will be opened by the Prince and Princess of Wales.

Mr. Beresford Hope, M.P., presided at a meeting yesterday week at which a committee was formed to raise a statue or other sculptured memorial to the late Mr. G. E. Street in the Royal Courts of Justice.

Lord Wimborne (formerly Sir Ivor Guest) was, at a meeting in the Colston Hall, Bristol, yesterday week presented with his portrait painted by Millais, and valued at 1000 guineas, in remembrance of having twice contested the city on behalf of the Conservative party.

The Topographical Society of London held their first annual meeting yesterday week. They are issuing in seven sheets the View of London in about 1550, by Antony van den Wyngaerde, in the Sutherland Collection of Topographical Prints in the Bodleian Library.

The Langham-place Artists' Society gave its first conversation of the season on Saturday night last. The pictures principally consisted of works destined for the forthcoming exhibition of the Dudley Gallery. The musical element, always a marked feature of these gatherings, was more than usually excellent.

The fifth annual Dundee Fine-Art Exhibition closed on the 17th ult., after a most successful season. There were 997 paintings hung; also a number of works in sculpture, and a large collection of etchings and drawings in black and white—a new feature in Dundee. The sales amounted to £5407, an increase of £500 over those of the previous exhibition in 1880; and the sum drawn for admission, season tickets, &c., was £1222, an increase of £250 over the drawings of last year. Relatively to the population, the sales are the highest yet reached by any exhibition in Great Britain.

The Lord Chief Justice and Sir Stafford Northcote have written letters which were read at a large meeting at Exeter, on Monday, approving of the proposed extension of the Albert Memorial Museum at Exeter, a prominent feature of which is the establishment of an art gallery, to be exclusively devoted to the works of Devonshire artists. The extension will involve an expenditure of nearly ten thousand pounds. A satisfactory start was made on Monday. The Bishop and other gentlemen addressed the meeting, and a hope was expressed that the foundation-stone would soon be laid.

A Fine-Arts and Industrial Exhibition will be opened at the County Hall, Lewes, next Monday, by the Earl of Chichester, Lord Lieutenant of the county, the Mayor of Lewes (Mr. Wynn E. Baxter) presiding. Valuable collections of paintings, old china and porcelain, miniatures on ivory, and other articles of virtu will be contributed by the Speaker, the Rev. Sir George Shiffner, Bart., Lady Dorothy Nevill, Mr. J. G. Blencowe, Mr. W. Grantham, M.P., Mr. Louis Huth, Mr. Henry Willett, and others. The industrial exhibits will include specimens of local manufactures of pottery, ironwork, &c. The surplus funds will be used for the endowment of the Lewes School of Art.

The Smoke Abatement Exhibition at South Kensington will close next Tuesday, the 14th inst.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

ITALY.

The Chamber of Deputies on Saturday last adopted, by 286 votes to 133, a resolution approving of the principle of the scrutin de liste, thus giving an important victory to the Ministry of Signor Depretis, who had made the question a Cabinet one. The discussion on the bill was continued on Monday, the first clause of the bill being approved. During the morning sitting Signor Cardarelli called attention to the salt tax, and insisted on the absolute necessity of reducing the impost in order to place the article within the reach of the rural population.

GERMANY.

The Times correspondent at Berlin states that the Emperor, with the Empress, all the other members of the Royal family, and Prince and Princess Christian and the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, were present on Monday afternoon at the opening of the new city railway, and made the first tour through the town and round all the suburbs. Their Majesties were much pleased with all the arrangements, and expressed their satisfaction and thanks to all the engineers, architects, and others who have been connected with this great work. The railway was opened on Tuesday for public traffic.

The Emperor last week opened the Ethnological Museum at Berlin, containing the archaeological collection of Dr. Schliemann. The doctor has obtained a firman from the Sultan giving him exploring powers over the whole of the Troad.

The King of Saxony was on Tuesday invested with the Order of the Garter by the Special Mission sent from this country. The event was attended by a splendid ceremonial in the castle at Dresden, and a series of Court festivities were arranged in honour of the Embassy.

In the Lower House of the Prussian Diet on Tuesday Herr von Gossler, the Minister of Public Worship, presented the bill for the regulation of the relations between Church and State.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The Empress left Vienna on Thursday week for England. In the Hungarian Delegation yesterday week some sharp criticisms were passed upon the continued occupation by Austria of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Count Albert Apponyi recalled the state of affairs that used to prevail in Lombardy and Venice; and General Eber looked on the occupation as one phase of the dissolution of the Turkish Empire, which could not be arrested. Count Andrassy defended the Government policy. The bill authorising an extraordinary credit for meeting the expenses of the expedition against the insurgents in the south of the empire passed through its preliminary stages in the Hungarian Delegations last Saturday. The Delegations have been closed. In the Austrian the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and in the Hungarian M. de Szlavy, the Common Minister of Finance, expressed the thanks of the Government for the confidence and co-operation shown by the Delegations, and the Presidents made their parting addresses. Both referred to the readiness with which the Delegations had come forward to place the Government in a position to grapple with the insurrection speedily, and expressed the hope that by the means thus given order and peace in all parts of the monarchy would be soon restored.

GREECE.

The Queen gave birth to a son on the 1st inst. The Chamber held its first sitting yesterday week.

EGYPT.

A new Ministry has been formed. A deputation of the Chamber waited upon the Prime Minister, Cherif Pasha, on Thursday week, and formally requested him to sign their draught of the organic law. They were referred by Cherif Pasha to the Khedive, and accordingly proceeded to the palace. The Khedive deferred his reply, and while conferring with the English and French Consuls-General Cherif Pasha arrived, and tendered his resignation—given, it is stated, by the advice of the English and French Consuls-General.

Mahmoud Buroudi Pasha is the head of the new Ministry. He was nominated, at the request of the Khedive, by fifteen delegates of the Chamber, and was thereupon at once appointed by his Highness. The new Ministers on Sunday visited the Khedive and thanked him for their appointments. Six hundred officers of the army afterwards went to the palace and declared that, whilst they recognised the Suzerainty of the Sultan, they remained devoted to the Khedive and Egypt. The Chamber of Notables have affirmed their right to vote the Budget, and hold that this right is in no way opposed to the international obligations of the Government.

AMERICA.

A resolution passed by the Foreign Affairs Committee, and adopted by the House of Representatives, requests President Arthur to give notice to the British Government of the termination of provisions relating to the fisheries in the Washington Treaty.

Mr. Blaine writes defending his policy, as Secretary of State, in calling a congress of American Republics, and asserts that the despatch suggesting this step was approved by the late President Garfield, and was sent by direction of President Arthur himself.

In response to an influentially signed requisition, a large meeting of citizens of New York was held last week to raise a protest against the persecution of Russian Jews, and to express sympathy with the sufferers.

The assassin Guiteau was on Saturday last sentenced to be executed on June 30 next, the Court having previously overruled a motion for a new trial. It is stated that Mr. Scoville will now appeal to the full bench of the Washington Court for arrest of judgment, having until March 1 for the appeal.

INDIA.

The Government has resolved to appoint an Imperial Commission on education consisting of twenty-one members, representing different provinces of India and classes of the community.

The Budget is expected early in March. It seems certain (the Calcutta correspondent of the Times says) that Major Baring will announce a handsome surplus, and the abolition of the duties on grey piece-goods, as well as the retention, if not extension, of the license tax.

Mr. Murray Smith has been appointed Agent-General in London for the Government of Victoria.

The Australian Government has presented a handsome donation to the family of Herr Leichardt, the explorer.

Defalcations to the extent of seventy millions of roubles have recently been discovered in the returns of the Taganrog Custom House.

The compositors employed on several Madrid journals have struck for an increase of wages, and the papers in question are in consequence unable to appear.

During January the Cape Government Emigration Agent sent to Cape Colony 313 emigrants, as against 188 in the corresponding month of last year. They consisted of 234 artisans of various kinds and domestic servants, 55 agriculturists, and 21 recruits for the Cape Mounted Rifles.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

CROQ (Durham).—It should be obvious to you that we cannot devote time and labour to anonymous communications. The names are not required for publication. E G (Kentish Town).—Your local club meets at the "Institute," 37, Maiden-road, on the evenings of Wednesday and Saturday in each week, from 7.30 to 10.30. W G B (Beccles).—The solution of the late Mr. Boden's problem shall be published in due course. E T (Bath).—Always welcome. We hope the copy has come to your hands. F McC (Aberdeen).—Your problem is too simple. See note about No. 1877 below. ASTIRANT.—We regret that your inquiries were overlooked last week. (1.) Every lady who plays chess well becomes "celebrated" so soon as her skill becomes known. Among the best lady chessplayers of our time are Mrs. Gilbert, of Hartford, U.S.A., Miss Budge, and Miss Beecly. (2.) It is not possible, save as a branch of education, (3.) The "Chess Club Directory," published by Benrose and Sons, Paternoster-row, will afford you the desired information. D F (Castletown).—Your transcription of No. 1877 is correct, save in one important particular. You have substituted a Black Queen at Q R sq for the White one which appears on our diagram. W C F (Manningham).—We recognise the problem, but do not remember the author's name. W McC (Chichester).—Thanks; it shall be examined.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEMS No. 1875 and 1876 received from Va (U.S.); and of 1877 from Eothien.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1878 received from R J Goodbody, John Balfour, Great Bealings, A Gaillard, Eothien, W J Eggleston, and E L G.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1879 received from C Warburton, W C Ferrand, R J Goodbody, M C Heywood, Great Bealings, George Saint Junior, and H Warner.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1880 received from H B, H A, L S, F Ferris, R H Harris, Dr F E St James, Gyp, Shadforth, P G Parolow, Aaron Harper, N S Springthorpe, A M Porter, D W Kell, N Carter, L Falcon (Antwerp), G S Oldfield, H Lucas, G W Law, H Blacklock, A M Colborne, S Lowndes, Jupiter Junior, F Casella (Paris), W C Ferrand, C S Cox, A W Scrutton, S Bullen, I Wyman, H H Kemp, N H Muller, M Tipping, G Seymour, T H P Dudley, Norman Humbleton, Holstein, F J Winter Wood, A Freuton, Bosworth, Alpha, Sirlin, Cant, Penelope, Vander Maeghen (Brussels), E Louden, Emily Cadman, R Gray, C M Carlon (Bath), Blair Hamilton Cochrane, C Warburton, and H Warner.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF THE LATE MR. BODEN'S PROBLEM received from H A L B, Shadforth, E L G, L Sharwood, Ernest Sharwood, E Casella, C S Cox, A Wignmore, W Hillier, G Seymour, Plevna, A C (Staines), and W Dewar.

PROBLEM No. 1877.—We have received over fifty letters during the past week inquiring how White is to mate in this problem if Black, in reply to the key-move 1. R to Q R sq, play 1. R to K 2nd. The answer, of course, is 2. P to B 5th, becoming a Kt and checkingmate. One correspondent inquires, "How about 1. P takes Kt?" Well, 2. P takes R, mate!

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1879.

WHITE.
1. Kt to Q 2nd
2. R to Q 3rd
3. Mates accordingly.

BLACK.
P takes Kt.
Any move.

* As noted last week, a black Pawn should stand at K Kt 5th in the diagram of this problem.

PROBLEM No. 1882.

By GEORGE L. F. BERTHOLEN.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in two moves.

Played recently in Yorkshire, Mr. E. THOROLD giving the odds of Q Kt to another Amateur.

(Evans' Gambit.)—(Remove White's Q Kt from the board.)

WHITE (Mr. T.) BLACK (Amateur).
1. P to K 4th P to K 4th
2. Kt to K B 3rd Kt to Q B 3rd
3. B to B 4th B to B 4th
4. P to Q Kt 4th B takes P
5. P to Q B 3rd B to B 4th
6. Castles Kt to B 3rd
A very weak move, but one that is frequently adopted by inexperienced players. The correct reply to 6. Castles is 6. P to Q 3rd.
7. P to Q 4th P takes P
8. P takes P B to Kt 3rd
9. P to K 5th P to Q 4th
This does not need matters; but the alternative move, 9. Kt to Kt sq, 9. Kt to K 5th, and 9. Kt to Kt 5th, are no better.
10. Q takes R (ch) K takes Q
11. B to B 6th (ch) K to Kt sq
12. R to K 5th. Checkmate.

An amusing Skirmish, in which Mr. MASON, the celebrated American player, yields the odds of Q Kt to Mr. STIEBEL.

(Scotch Gambit.)—(Remove White's Q Kt from the board.)

WHITE (Mr. M.) BLACK (Mr. S.)
1. P to K 4th P to K 4th
2. Kt to K B 3rd Kt to Q B 3rd
3. B to B 4th Kt to B 3rd
4. P to Q 4th P takes P
5. P to K 5th
6. Castles is considered stronger in games played on even terms. The Two Knights' Defence is now converted into the Scotch Gambit.
7. B to Q Kt 5th P to Q 4th
8. Kt takes P B to K 5th
9. K takes Kt B to Q 2nd
10. Castles B to Q 4th
The preceding moves are all "book," but here the Handbuch recommends for the defence 9. B to K 2nd.
11. P to K B 3rd Kt to Kt 4th

A well-fought match was played on the 1st inst. between the Railway Clearing House and the North London clubs, with twenty-three players a side. The result was a victory for the Railway representatives, with a score of ten games to seven and six drawn.

On the Thursday evening of last week, Mr. Blackburne visited South Norwood and displayed his singular skill in the practice of chess sans voir, against eight members of the local chess club. Play commenced in the Public Hall soon after seven o'clock, the champion sitting on a raised platform and the opposing team at a long table in the centre of the room. The South Norwood club was represented by (1) Mr. Clarke, (2) Captain Beaumont, (3) Mr. Botteill, (4) Mr. Percival, (5) Mr. Keen, (6) Mr. Bishop, (7) Mr. Hillier, and (8) Mr. Herbert. Herr Zukertort acted as teller. The play proceeded without incident for three hours, when, at half-past ten, Mr. Keen resigned; but there was not another "resignation" until close upon midnight, when Messrs. Clarke, Percival, and Botteill struck their colours. Mr. Hill resigned, and Mr. Herbert was checkmated, in the order named; and soon afterwards Captain Beaumont accepted Mr. Blackburne's offer to "draw." The last man was Mr. Bishop, who, although he lost a piece in opening his defence to the Evans's Gambit, fought a stubborn battle with his diminished forces. Mr. Bishop's resignation brought the entertainment to a close. There was a large assemblage of spectators, who expressed the liveliest interest in the progress of the games and the fortunes of the players.

The return-match between the chessplayers of Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire was played at the Mechanics' Institute, Nottingham, on the 4th inst. Each county was represented by twenty-three champions, each to play two games with each, and drawn games to count half a point to each side. The play resulted in Nottingham winning 2½ and Derby 1½.

COMPANY-MONGERING IN FRANCE.

The financial crisis in Paris which has thrown its gloom over the past week is only part of a periodic repetition, in civilised countries, of speculative mania and misplaced confidence. If the scenes of the old Rue Quincampoix, when John Law's great "system" was in full vogue, have not been exactly repeated in Paris, it is only because habits, manners, and ways of doing business have changed. Instead of rushing into a little street and bidding against each other face to face, clients now go and sip their coffee or vanilla at restaurants; while their brokers and agents penetrate the Greek temple of Pluto, in the Place de la Bourse, and, through the Agents de Change, bid frantically for Unions Générales, Suez, Alpines, and such-like stocks, driven to a preposterous premium by "bailing" gamblers and by puffing newspapers, started expressly to promote the speculation and draw in the unsuspecting public.

It may interest our readers to know something of the ways and means by which some of the immense bubbles which are now bursting have been blown up to their vast dimensions, and what it is which French men of business dignity by the name of "finance." If it is supposed that such proceedings are impossible in Great Britain, we can only give a word of warning. In every country, despite public prosecutors, and criminal jurisprudence, and Companies Acts, there are always to be found persons bold enough to "exploit" society. The word "exploit" is French, but its meaning is very significant—"to make capital out of." If a man picks one's pockets, he makes capital out of one in the easiest and most obnoxious way. If he makes money by representing to one that a worthless gold-mine has a value of £100,000, or a useless concession is cheap at half a million, he is only picking one's pockets without using his fingers, and, by-the-way, it is done with the conscious assent of the victim. There are many ways of carrying out this latter mode of plunder; but the method of the ingenious M. Bontoux and his too numerous French and Continental compeers is deserving of study.

Let us suppose, then, that a M. Tel-tel appears on the scene, with some reputation in la haute finance, possibly some private means, at all events with some friends who can find a certain quantity of money for "preliminary expenses." They want to launch a few schemes. They have a concession for a Bank of Honduras, or a dock in New Caledonia, or a gas company in Jerusalem (Old), or an Abyssinian Railway, or a tobacco monopoly in Siam. No respectable group of bankers would take up these things and recommend them to the public; but from the advertising point of view they are first-rate. You can pile up the profits (on paper) as high as you please. No one knows anything about the facts, and so the statements will probably pass unchallenged. But who is to make the issues? A bank is required—a banque d'émission. Forthwith they set to work to make one. How? Oh! the easiest thing in the world—on paper. It is like Mrs. Glasse's receipt for hare soup. You first take a number of gentlemen with titles—noblemen, ex-ministers, ex-bank directors, and form a board of direction. Then you constitute and register a society with a capital of, say, 50 millions of francs nominal, of which 25 millions is to be the first "emission." The first half dozen exploiters—in fact, the "ring"—subscribe nominally for the whole of the capital, one fourth paid up, or, say on 500f. shares, 125f. In order to constitute the society in France this money must be paid up. It is paid up by the conspirators—paid up, that is, on paper. A Banque, which is in the swim, agrees to certify that it holds the quarter of 25 millions—i.e., 6,250,000f., about £250,000; or it is borrowed and paid in temporarily, until an emission can be made, and the shares can be passed off on the public. Now, if the names of the directors are good, the syndicate of exploiters can advertise the new Banque, take big premises, pay newspapers for favourable notices, and offer their shares, 125f. paid, at a premium of 50f. It is rumoured and advertised, and stated by "disinterested" financial editors that the Banque has secured a number of first-rate things. The public come in and take up the shares. They are dealt in on the Bourse. They are fictitiously run up to a premium. Gradually the syndicate passes them all off—say 50,000 shares at a premium of 50f.; well, that is a net profit of 2,500,000f. to the exploiters! All out of paper—very solid francs though to the gainers, and very solid to the unfortunate losers thereof. But the operation is not yet finished. The bubble must be blown out to the dimensions of a balloon. When the first shares are at a premium, it is announced that there is to be a second emission at a high premium, though not so high as that to which the first shares have attained. Thus, it becomes an object to the shareholders to get the new issue. Supposing the 125f. shares are now selling at 225, the new emission is made at 200 for 125 paid. Thus there is an apparent profit to be made of 25f. They are offered first to the holders of shares. The chance of getting the new shares inflates the price of the old. Very often the syndicate holds on to many of the old shares until after the second emission, secures old and new shares, and then sells out, having made on the two sets of shares 100, 200, or in some cases even 300 per cent! Then the Banque begins business—finds some mines in Hungary, buys them at five millions of francs, sells them again at ten millions to a new company formed for the purpose, "La Société des Mines de Hongrie, capital 25,000,000f." Another emission—more puffing, more inflation, more fools and idiots rushing in to buy engraved paper, and so the game goes on.

But we have not even yet got to the bottom of this iniquitous "system." We have said the Banque has bought the Hungarian mines at 5,000,000f. But, will you believe it? that is not the selling price from vendor to Banque. Between those, two different sets of cormorants have swept down and secured some booty. The vendor's real and honest price was 2,500,000f. He goes to an agent, the agent wants a commission, 10 per cent. He introduces it to a second agent, who undertakes to introduce the business to a friend, the director of the new Banque, which is "looking for business." All right—10 per cent more! They have added half a million of francs to the price. A director is approached.

"Will you introduce this to your Banque?"

"But, yes, certainly, mon ami, seeing it's you. What is then to be made out of it?"

"For you there is a commission of one million of francs—the price is five millions."

"Ah! yes—it is not much; but out of that, you know, one cannot pay the Gouverneur, le Marquis du Natti, M. de la Franche-Comté, and the others."

"Precisely; and therefore I have reserved another half-million for them."

"Bon, mon ami. I am to you. Leave the dossier. You shall hear from me after the meeting to-morrow."

We are not exaggerating. Such transactions as these have been taking place almost in hundreds in Paris and Vienna, in Brussels and Buda-Pesth, during the past year. "A commission" is, unhappily, the condition upon which directors of some of these flashy banking and finance companies agree to look into a business; and, having such commissions to earn, it is any wonder that the prime consideration with these "directors" becomes, not the real goodness and value of the business, but the chance of floating it off into the ocean of popular greed and credulity.

CRUTCHED-FRANCS.

SKETCHES FROM "MORO, THE PAINTER OF ANTWERP," AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—SEE PAGE 134.

THE GREEK CHURCH AT BAYSWATER.

The new church in Moscow-road Bayswater, dedicated to Agia Sophia (St. Sophia), and erected for the worship of the Greeks in London was consecrated last Sunday by his Grace Antonius Archdeacon of Corfu, assisted by the Rev. Archimandrite Dr. H. Myriantheus, and other clergy. The congregation, originally established in Finsbury-circus, removed about thirty years ago to a more suitable building in London-wall, City. Now, when the majority of the congregation live in the West-End, it has been found desirable to erect a church in that quarter. The edifice is in the Byzantine style, of an imposing character, and will accommodate upwards of 700 persons. Marble in slabs and in mosaic has been largely used in the finishing of the internal walls. The consecration began with the perambulation of the exterior of the church by the Archbishop and clergy, the intoning of prayers, and the knocking for admission at the closed doors of the church. The demand is made in the Greek tongue in the Scriptural words, "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and the King of Glory shall come in." The churchwarden inside replies, "Who is the King of Glory?" and on receiving the response, opens the door and admits the procession. The crowned Archbishop and the principal clergy wore highly ornate vestments, and three of them being of the monastic order, presented an imposing ecclesiastical group. In accordance with the rites of the church the altar was washed by the Archbishop and priests with fragrant wine; the walls of the edifice were symbolically cleansed, the choir meanwhile chanting the special service. The sanctification ritual concluded with the "Gloria in Excelsis." The Greek clergy present included the Rev. Constantine Stratouli, of Liverpool, a priest from Corfu acting as chaplain to the Archbishop, and Arch-priest Hatherly, of Bristol, the only Englishman in holy orders in the Greek Church.

The Rev. Canon Barry presided yesterday week at the annual distribution of prizes to students of the Royal Architectural Museum and School of Art, Tufton-street, Westminster.

THE GEORGE A. CLARK TOWNHALL, PAISLEY.

It is very unusual, in Great Britain, indeed almost unprecedented, that the name of an individual should be affixed to a Townhall; though in several instances, as in that of the William Brown Free Library at Liverpool, the memory of a munificent donor is preserved in the title of special institutions placed in charge of the Town Council. The prosperous and important Scottish burgh of Paisley, after nearly four centuries of municipal dignity, having received its privileges from King James IV. in 1488, has now been provided with a stately and commodious Townhall by the gift of one of her enterprising sons, the late Mr. George A. Clark, who had settled in the United States of America. His brothers remaining in Paisley, the late Mr. James Clark, of Ralston, Councillor John Clark, and Mr. Stewart Clark, of Kilnside, were still associated with him in business; and in November, 1873, Mr. James Clark was elected one of the Town Council, and started the project of building a Townhall. It had been proposed nine years before, and had been a subject of discussion in the Council in 1871, but they had demurred to the cost, which would have required a rate of twopenny in the pound for twenty years. Mr. George A. Clark died at Newark, New Jersey, on Feb. 13, 1874, and bequeathed, in addition to £1000 for the Infirmary and £1000 for a Ragged School, the sum of £20,000 to erect a Townhall in Paisley. His brother, Councillor James Clark, had already, by his exertions in a few months, procured local subscriptions for this purpose to the amount of £13,870. These were presently returned to the subscribers, including several of £1000 each from Messrs. John Polson, J. and P. Coats, and others; the Messrs. Clark thenceforth undertaking the sole charge of building the Townhall. A site was purchased, for £9000, fronting on the river Cart, adjacent to the Old Bridge, and extending on another side along Abbey-close. The building itself was to cost £20,000, and competitive plans were invited: the first prize was awarded to a local firm of architects, Messrs. Rennison and Scott; but the design of Mr. W. H. Lynn, architect, of Belfast, was finally preferred, though its execution would necessarily exceed the cost first intended. The first stone was laid, Oct. 22, 1879, by the aged mother of the Brothers Clark, surrounded by her sons, daughters, sons-in-law, and grandchildren, a ceremony of rare interest, not soon to be forgotten by those acquainted with the family and the town. This old lady, long widowed, died in her eighty-third year, May 5, 1880, and her second son, the eldest surviving, Mr. James Clark, died in August last year. Enough has been stated to explain and justify the designation of "The George A. Clark Townhall."

THE GEORGE A. CLARK TOWNHALL, PAISLEY.

CONSECRATION OF THE GREEK CHURCH OF AGIA SOPHIA, MOSCOW-ROAD, BAYSWATER, ON SUNDAY LAST.

The facts above stated, which form a remarkable chapter of local history, are gathered from the Paisley and Renfrewshire Gazette of last Saturday; but the proprietors, Messrs. J. and J. Cook, will publish a Memorial Volume, illustrated, to contain a full historical account. It is intimated that to the original gift of £20,000 from Mr. George A. Clark have been joined nearly equal contributions from his mother and from each of his four brothers, the youngest of whom, Mr. William Clark, has not yet been mentioned. In fact, the Townhall, with all expenditure belonging to it, has actually cost about six times as much as the first donor meant to give, and all from one respected private family. Such an example will confer a new significance upon the old Scottish proverb, "A Paisley man, ye ken." We have much pleasure in engraving an illustration of the fine building, which stands at the corner of Abbey-close and Smithills-street, one way facing the venerable Abbey, on the other side, with a high clock-tower and a ventilating-tower overlooking the small river Cart. It contains, on the ground floor, a public hall, 130 ft. long, and 60 ft. wide, a minor hall, a reading-room, all well lighted and decorated, cloak-rooms, retiring-rooms, and other convenient accessories; on the upper floor, committee-rooms, galleries, a promenade, a hall for pictures, and accommodation for musical performers. A grand concert organ, by Messrs. Bryceson and Ellis, of London, is placed in the hall; and Messrs. Gillett and Bland, of Croydon, furnish the great clock and bells, with chimes, in the tower.

The ceremonial opening of the new Townhall, on Monday week, is reported at length in the Paisley Gazette. The streets of the town were gaily decorated with flags and garlands. There was a procession of the various trades and guilds, with the civic authorities, from St. James's-street through the principal thoroughfares. The Provost, Mr. MacKean, with the Magistrates, Town Council, Sheriff, and burgh officials, attended in state; and Mr. John Clark delivered the building to the Corporation. Mr. W. Holmes, M.P., and Professor Dickson, of Glasgow University, to which also the late Mr. Clark made a noble benefaction, took part in these proceedings, or in the conversazione meeting that ended the day.

"MORO, THE PAINTER OF ANTWERP."

The English version of "Pittore e Duca," Balfe's Italian opera, composed in 1854, which has been placed on the stage of Her Majesty's Theatre by the Carl Rosa Company, was noticed last week by the critic and reporter of musical performances, in his own department of this Journal. A page of engraved sketches, presented to our readers this week, sets before them a few leading personages and incidents belonging to the dramatic plot, which is extremely romantic, and, to the best of our knowledge, wholly imaginary, though dealing with such real historical characters as the Duke of Alva (Alba, in Spanish), the tyrannical Governor of Flanders under Philip II., and the artist known afterwards in England as Sir Antonio More. The heroine of this operatic story, a young lady named Olivia, whose part is sustained by Madame Valleria, is supposed to have fled to a convent, and to have got up a false rumour of her own death, in order to escape from her forced marriage to Count Areberg; but she is captured by the Duke of Alva, who oppresses her with his detestable attentions. He summons Moro, the painter of Antwerp, to paint Olivia's portrait; and Moro, who happens to have been her most ardent lover some time before, recognises with delight her whom he had believed to be dead. Pleasing and pathetic melodies are interchanged at suitable opportunities by the vocalists on the stage, while acting these and the subsequent scenes, which have a slight degree of sentimental interest. The principal scene delineated among our illustrations is that in which Moro has drawn his sword against the Duke of Alva to defend Olivia from an attempted insult, and she endeavours to restrain her chivalrous lover from the combat, which, indeed, is presently stopped by the arrival of a Royal message depriving the wicked Duke of his much-abused power in Antwerp.

AGRICULTURAL MATTERS.

Mr. James Howard, M.P., on Monday presided at the annual meeting of the Farmers' Alliance, at which the report of the committee, congratulating the members on the satisfactory progress made by the organisation, was adopted.

The Warwickshire Chamber of Agriculture at its meeting last Saturday adopted a resolution to the effect that, in the present crisis of the agricultural interest, the most urgent call is for a provision of adequate security for tenants' unexhausted improvements.

The anniversary of two local agricultural societies was held at Nottingham last Saturday. Lord Belper thought better opportunities should be given to the landlords to spend their capital on their land. Earl Manvers said he did not find that his tenants effected improvements which would take a very long time to exhaust. He advocated a readjustment of local taxation.

At the rent audit held at Nostell Priory on the 2nd inst. Mr. Rowland Winn, M.P., again returned 25 per cent to the tenants on his Nostell estate.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.

The Eddystone new lighthouse was successfully lit for the first time yesterday week.

A free library was opened at Devonport on Monday by Sir John St. Aubyn, M.P.

Mr. G. M. Felton was on Tuesday elected chairman for the year of the City Commission of Sewers.

The State apartments of Windsor Castle will be closed on and after to-day (Saturday) until further orders.

Dr. W. Bowman has been elected hon. secretary, and Mr. Warren De La Rue manager, of the Royal Institution.

Mr. Jabez Church, the newly-elected President of the Society of Engineers, gave on Monday his opening address.

Mr. Charles L. Eastlake, the Keeper and Secretary of the National Gallery, has been elected a member of the governing body of Westminster School.

Mr. E. B. W. Nicholson, librarian of the London Institution, has been appointed Bodleian Librarian at Oxford University, in the place of Mr. Cox, who died last year.

An attempt has been made to injure Mr. Forster by inclosing an explosive powder in an envelope addressed to him at Dublin Castle. During the past year the Chief Secretary received four hundred threatening letters.

The closing of the Smoke Abatement Exhibition is fixed for Tuesday next, the 14th inst., and its usefulness will extend to the end. Within the last few days several interesting exhibits have been brought in, and are at work.

Mr. J. H. Balfour Browne has resigned the Registrarship to the Railway Commissioners, with the intention of devoting the whole of his time to his practice at the Parliamentary Bar and before the Railway Commissioners.

The Liverpool School Board have decided to serve a precept on the Corporation for £12,000, to meet the Board's requirements for the coming financial year. This is equal to nearly 3d. in the pound on the gross assessment of the borough.

At the meeting of the Metropolitan Asylums Board last Saturday, the smallpox returns showed that the number of patients under treatment were 496, being a decrease of 11 as compared with those of the previous fortnight.

A meeting will be held at the Mansion House, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, next Tuesday, the 14th inst., for the promotion of the objects of the Association for the Development of British Woollen Industries.

Last week 2775 births and 2023 deaths were registered in London. Allowing for increase of population, the births were 40 below, whereas the deaths exceeded by 77 the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years.

A meeting of the Victoria Institute took place on Monday evening, when a paper by Mr. Callard, F.G.S., "On Breaks in the Continuity of Mammalian Life in certain Geological Periods adverse to the Darwinian Hypothesis," was read. There was a discussion.

George Weston was charged at the Mansion House Police Court on Tuesday with damaging the statue of Queen Anne by striking it with a chopper and a hammer. When arrested he made some remarkable statements, and the presiding Alderman ordered his removal to a lunatic asylum.

At the Liverpool Assizes on Saturday Leah Hughes, the stepdaughter of a captain and shipowner of Bangor, North Wales, brought an action for breach of promise against John James Peemuller, a German of independent means. The jury awarded £100 damages.

At the February examination, on the subjects in which instruction has been given by the tutors of the Inner Temple, the Masters of the Bench have awarded pupil scholarships of 100 guineas each to the undermentioned students:—(Common Law, Mr. E. Brierley; Equity, Mr. E. W. Farnall; Real Property Law, Mr. A. L. Ellis.

The Smith's Prizes, given annually at Cambridge to two commencing Bachelors of Arts, the best proficient in mathematics and natural philosophy, have been adjudged as follows:—First prize, R. A. Herman, B.A., Trinity College, Senior Wrangler 1882; second prize, J. S. Yeo, B.A., St. John's College, Second Wrangler, 1882.

A preliminary meeting was held at Nottingham yesterday week, under the presidency of the Mayor, for the purpose of constituting the General and Reception Committee for the purposes of the Social Science Congress to be held in that town in the forthcoming autumn. The president of the Association, Mr. Hastings, M.P., attended and addressed the meeting on the work and objects of the association.

A dense fog pervaded great part of the metropolis last Friday and Saturday, causing great difficulty of locomotion on foot or by vehicle. Several accidents are reported, two of them fatal. The body of a young lady, who appears to have been a governess, was found in the Thames near Hampton Court, and it is believed she must have walked into the river in the fog. In the Surrey Docks a fireman was drowned.

Several hundred students of the Queen's College, Belfast, yesterday week took part in the "funeral" of the Queen's University of Ireland. This body now gives place to the Royal University, and the students parambulated the principal streets of Belfast, preceded by a coffin, on which lay the gowns of an M.A. and a B.A. A funeral oration was delivered at the "grave."

At a meeting held at the Royal United Service Institution on Thursday week—the Duke of Cambridge in the chair—resolutions were adopted in favour of establishing an Hospital and Accident Ambulance Service for the metropolis.—The Mercers' Company have forwarded twenty guineas in aid of the City classes of the St. John Ambulance Association. Since the commencement of the present winter session 2400 certificates have been awarded.

Yesterday week, on the occasion of the jubilee of Chambers's Journal, a deputation from the booksellers and publishers of Edinburgh waited on Dr. William Chambers at his residence, in Chester-street, Edinburgh, and presented him with an illuminated address. The address was signed by fifty-four booksellers and publishers. Later in the afternoon, Dr. Chambers received another deputation, consisting of his employees, who presented him with a congratulatory address.

Mrs. Nathaniel Montefiore on Saturday forwarded a cheque for £2000 to the Lord Mayor in aid of the fund being raised at the Mansion House for the relief of the distressed Jews in Russia. Mr. Nathaniel Montefiore at the same time forwarded a cheque for £1000 for the same object. The Court of Common Council have agreed to contribute £500 to the fund. The amount at present received is £35,000. After a sermon, preached on Sunday by Canon Fleming at St. Michael's, Chester-square, the sum of £189 was contributed.

At a meeting of the London School Board on the 2nd inst. Mrs. Surr was re-elected as a member of the Industrial Schools Committee, a position which she had resigned in consequence of the action of that body with regard to the St. Paul's School. A motion was discussed to suspend all further expenditure and other proceedings in reference to industrial schools until the result is made known of the promised Royal Commission to inquire into the whole existing industrial school system. The proposition was rejected.—A new board school was publicly opened on Monday at Flockton-street, Bermondsey-wall, by Mr. E. N. Buxton, Chairman of the London School Board. The schools have been erected to accommodate 1002 children, divided as follows—girls, 300; boys, 300; infants, 402. Southwark has board-school accommodation for 25,000 school places.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEB. 18.

SUNDAY, FEB. 12.
Sexagesima Sunday. Morning Lessons: Gen. iii.; Matt. xxiv. 1-29. Evening Lessons: Gen. vi. or viii.; Acts xxvii. 1-18. St. Paul's Cathedral, 10.30 a.m., Rev. Prebendary Chalmers; 3.15 p.m., Bishop Piers Claughton; 7 p.m. St. James's, noon, probably Hon. and Rev. A. Phipps.	Westminster Abbey, 10 a.m., Rev. F. S. Barry; 3 p.m., Rev. Canon T. N. Rowell. Whitehall, 11 a.m. and 3 p.m., Rev. Francis Paget. Savoy, 11.30 a.m., Rev. Henry White, the Chaplain; 7 p.m., Rev. Dr. Baker, Head Master of Merchant Taylors' School.
MONDAY, FEB. 13.
City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, general court, 1.30 p.m. London Institution, 6 p.m. (Mr. H. J. Byron on the Border Line between Fable and Comedy). Geographical Society, 8.30 p.m. (Sir Richard Temple—Geography of the Birthplace and Cradle of the Mahabharata Power of Western India).	Medical Society, 8.30 p.m. Saveyons' Institute, 8 p.m. (discussion on Fair Rent). Society of Arts, 8 p.m. (Captain Abney on Recent Advances in Photography). Academy of Music, ball for scholars-ships at Willis's Rooms.
TUESDAY, FEB. 14.
St. Valentine. Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Professor McKendrick on the Mechanism of the Senses). Civil Engineers' Institution, 8 p.m. (Mr. J. J. Coleman on Air Refrigerating Machinery). Colonial Institute, 8 p.m. (Lieut.-Col. T. H. Grant on the Progress of Canada, &c.).	Medical and Chirurgical Society, 8.30 p.m. Photographic Society, anniversary, 8 p.m. Association for Promotion of British Woollen Manufactures, meeting at the Mansion House. Gresham Lectures, 6 p.m. (Dean Cowie on Geometry) (four days).
WEDNESDAY, FEB. 15.
Bankers' Institute, 6 p.m. (Mr. M. D. Chalmers on Bills of Exchange Bill, 1881). Society of Arts, 8 p.m. (Mr. P. W. Haseluck on the Art of Turning). Meteorological Society, 7 p.m. Royal Society of Literature, 8 p.m. Dental Surgery Association, 8.30 p.m. British Archaeological Association, 8 p.m. (Dr. Phené on Recent Researches and Excavations in Scotland). Amateur Orchestral Society, St. Andrew's Hall, 9 p.m.	Warehousemen and Clerks' School, annual festival, Cannon-street Hotel (Lord Hartington in the chair). University College Hospital, festival, Lapham Hotel (the Duke of Cambridge in the chair). Deaf and Dumb Association, dinner, Freemasons' Tavern (the Duke of Connaught in the chair). District Council Society, 8 p.m. (Dr. C. R. Drysdale on Individual Liberty and Social Needs). Society of Analysts, 8 p.m.
THURSDAY, FEB. 16.
Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Dr. P. L. Schuler on the Geographical Distribution of Animals). London Institution, 7 p.m. (Professor H. E. Armstrong on the Economical Use of Coal Gas for Lighting and Heating). Royal Society (club, 6.30 p.m.). Chemical Society, 8 p.m. (papers by Messrs. W. H. Perkin, Flight, E. H. Rennie, J. C. Thoms, T. F. Lloyd, and P. Smith).	Linnean Society, 8 p.m. (Mr. A. S. Wilson on Potato Disease and the Theory of Fungoid Parasitism; Lieut. J. F. Cockburn on the Shells of Aden). Civil and Mechanical Engineers' Society, 7 p.m. (Mr. M. A. P. Urquhart on Water-fittings). Numismatic Society, 7 p.m. Royal Society, 4.30 p.m. Antiquaries' Society, 8.30 p.m. Bach Choir, St. James's Hall, 8 p.m.
FRIDAY, FEB. 17.
Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, 11.45 a.m. The Queen's Drawing-room, Buckingham Palace, 3 p.m. Royal Institution, 8 p.m. (Professor McKendrick on the Breathing of Fishes, &c.). Architectural Association, 7.30 p.m. (Mr. J. Slater on Physical Science in Relation to Architecture). United Service Institution, 3 p.m. (Colonel W. W. Knollys on the French Autumn Manœuvres of 1881).	Geological Society, anniversary, 1 p.m., dinner. Philological Society, 8 p.m. (Mr. C. B. Cayley on the Distribution of Accent in Greek; Mr. B. Dawson on the Aesthetics of Translation, illustrated from Different Versions of the Bible). Society of Arts, 8 p.m. (Mr. J. N. Maclean on the Depreciation of Silver as it affects India). Artillery Company Ball, the Prince and Princess of Wales to be present.
SATURDAY, FEB. 18.
New Moon, 2.50 a.m. Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Mr. Watkins Lloyd on the "Iliad" and "Odyssey").	Cadwilers' Benevolent Association, annual festival, Willis's Rooms (the Duke of Edinburgh in the chair).

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,

13, ST. JAMES'S-SQUARE, LONDON, S.W.
CITY BRANCH: MANSION HOUSE BUILDINGS, E.C.

Chairman: Rt. Hon. Sir JOHN ROBERT MOWBRAY, Bart., M.P., D.C.L.

ELEVENTH BONUS MEETING, 1882.

The Report presented at a Meeting held on Jan. 5 last, showed that on the rigorous basis of the Institute of Actuaries' His Table of Mortality, with 3 per cent interest and net premiums, The calculated liability was ... £1,970,019 To which further Reserves were added of ... 116,664

Making the Total Reserve ... 2,086,718

And the Assurance Fund being ... 2,433,397

The Net Surplus was ... £346,684

Of this sum, £345,000 was divided—an amount larger by £5,000 than any previously distributed, and producing the highest ratio of profit ever declared by the Society—viz., a CASH BONUS OF 32 PER CENT on the Premiums of the Five Years.

CLAIMS PAID IMMEDIATELY ON PROOF OF DEATH AND TITLE.

The next Division of Profits will be in January, 1887. New Policies effected before the end of June next will then rank for Five Full Years' Bonus, and so obtain one year's additional share of Profits.

The report above mentioned, a detailed account of the proceedings of the bonus meeting, the returns made to the Board of Trade, and every information, can be obtained at either of the Society's Offices, or from any of its Agents.

Geo. CUTLER, Actuary and Secretary.

B. NEWBATT, Assistant Actuary.

BRIGHTON.—EVERY SUNDAY.—A

Cheap First-Class Train from Victoria at 10.45 a.m., calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon. Day Return Tickets, 10s. A Pullman Drawing-room Car is run in the 10.45 a.m. Train from Victoria to Brighton, returning from Brighton by the 8.30 p.m. Train. Special Cheap fare from Victoria, including Pullman Car, 12s., available by these trains only.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM at

BRIGHTON.—EVERY SATURDAY. Cheap First-Class Train from Victoria at 10.45 and 11.30 a.m. and London Bridge at 9.30 a.m. and 12.0 noon, calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon.

Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea (including Admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavilion Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds), available to return by any Train the same day, except the Pullman Car Trains.

TICKETS and every information at the Brighton Company's West-End General Offices, 28, Regent-circus, Piccadilly, and 8, Grand Hotel-buildings, Trafalgar-square; also at Victoria and London Bridge Stations.

(By order) J. P. KNOTT, General Manager.

ASSURANCE AGAINST ACCIDENTS OF

ALL KINDS.—Assurance Against Railway Accidents Alone. Assurance Against Fatal Accidents at Sea. Assurance of Employers' Liability. Railway Passengers' Assurance Company. The Right Hon. Lord KINNAIRD, Chairman. £1,700,000 has been paid as compensation. Apply to the Clerks at the Railway Stations, the Local Agents, or 64, Cornhill, or 8, Grand Hotel-buildings, Charing-cross, London.—W. J. VIAN, Secretary.

SUN FIRE AND LIFE OFFICES,

Thames-street, E.C.; Charing-cross, S.W.; Oxford-street (corner of Vere-street), W. FIRE.—Established 1710. Home and Foreign Insurances at moderate rates. LIFE.—Established 1810. Specially low rates for young lives. Immediate settlement of claims.

WHAT IS YOUR CREST and WHAT

IS YOUR MOTTO? Send name and county to CULLETON'S Heraldic Office, Plain Sketch, 3s. 6d.; colours, 7s. The arms of man and wife blended. Crest engraved on seals, rings, books, and steel dies, 5s. 6d. Gold seal, with crest, 20s. Solid Gold Ring, 18-carat, Hall-marked with crest, 42s. Manual of Heraldry, 400 engravings, 3s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn-street (corner of St. Martin's-lane).

CULLETON'S GUINEA BOX of

STATIONERY contains a Ream of the very best Paper and 500 Envelopes, all stamped in the most elegant way with Crest and Motto, Monogram, or Address, and the engraving of Steel Die included. Sent to any part for P.O. order.—T. CULLETON, 25, Cranbourn-street (corner of St. Martin's-lane).

VISING CARDS by CULLETON.

Fifty best quality, 2s. 6d., post-free, including the Engraving of Copper-plate, Wedding Cards, 50 each, 50 Embossed Envelopes, with Maiden Name, 10s. 6d.—T. CULLETON, Seal Engraver, 25, Cranbourn-street, St. Martin's-lane, W.C.

SCRAPS for SCREENS and SCRAP

BOOKS, Coloured. Immense variety of Flowers, Figures, Birds, and Landscapes, from 1s. per sheet; one doz. assorted, 10s. 6d.—WILLIAM BARNARD, 119, Edgware-road, London.

OSLER'S SHOW-ROOMS,

100, OXFORD-STREET, W.

CHINA DINNER, DESSERT, TEA, and BREAKFAST SERVICES.

Glass Dinner and Dessert Services, Chandeliers and Wall Lights.

LAMPS, LUSTRES, VASES, FLOWER STANDS,

TABLE DECORATIONS.

CHINA, GLASS, AND PARIAN ORNAMENTS

OF ALL KINDS.

Sole Agents for the Venice and Murano Glass Company.

OSLER MANUFACTORY,

BIRMINGHAM.

Show-rooms:

100, OXFORD-STREET, W.

DR. WARD'S SEMI-BELTED CORSET

(Patent) braces in the figure of the wearer without causing internal injury. Unlike other belted corsets, the effect is wonderful. Suitable for slim and stout figures. Prices 21s., 30s., and 42s. per pair. N.B.—The sole right of manufacture has been secured at a considerable outlay, and the Corsets can only be obtained from WORTH & CO., 4, Hanover-street, London, W. Special terms for export.

NEW BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS.

TAPESTRY PAINTING, PRACTICAL
HINTS by a Tapestry Painter. See the LADIES' TREASURY for FEBRUARY, price 7d., by post, 8d., containing also ten pages of Designs and Needlework Engravings. Hints for Ladies' Flower Patterns, &c.
London: BARNES and SONS, 23, Old Bailey.

EMBROIDERY DESIGN for a CURTAIN or MANTLE BORDER, or for Chair or Cushion Strip (3 in. by 6 in.), beautifully printed in Colours, with an Outline Design for Transferring, in Green with Gold. The LADIES' TREASURY for FEBRUARY, price 1d.; by post, 2d.

PRIZE PUZZLES—Quarterly and Annual Prizes for the best Solutions. For Conditions see the LADIES' TREASURY for FEBRUARY, price 7d.; by post, 8d. Containing also Sixty pages of Amusing and Instructive Reading.
London: BARNES and SONS, 23, Old Bailey.

THE LADIES' TREASURY for JANUARY, with Presentation Plate, "Among the Roses." A further supply is now ready. Price 7d. Carefully packed on roller, post-free. 8d. This Part begins a New Volume, with New Serials. January and February, post-free for 1s. 6d.
London: BARNES and SONS, 23, Old Bailey.

THE LADIES' TREASURY—7d. Monthly.
Of all Booksellers and Bookstalls, or by post, 8d. "One of the best household magazines that is issued."—Wrexham Advertiser. "The most sterling of magazines devoted to literature and science."—Barnes and Sons, 23, Old Bailey, London.

THE LADIES' TREASURY—"The fashions for the month are finely illustrated and described. It is one of the best of the kind, and is well worth the price."—Inverclyde Times. "The illustrations, and especially the coloured fashion plate, are far above the average."—Waterford Citizen.

AMONG THE ROSES. A Coloured Picture presented with the LADIES' TREASURY for January. "One of the best of the kind, and is well worth the price."—Wrexham Advertiser. "We greatly admire the coloured plate. It is most artistically drawn, and represents a young lady embowered in wild roses."—Newry Telegraph. "A bright and happy picture."—Aberdeen Journal.

STEPPING-STONES TO MATRIMONY, with a Frontispiece Illustration. See the LADIES' TREASURY for January. "A beautiful frontispiece."—Huntly Express. "An engraving of considerable merit."—Aberdeen Journal. "A well-written article with a beautiful engraving."—Brighton Examiner. "Remarkably good."—Aberdeen Journal.

FOR TRUE LOVE'S SAKE. By the Author of "A Broken Reel." Is begun in the LADIES' TREASURY for January. "A delightful family tale."—Edinburgh Courier. "Charmingly written."—Kirkcubright Advertiser. "A new and attractive tale."—Brighton Examiner.

THE LADIES' TREASURY—A Household Magazine of Literature, Education, and Fashion. Sevenpence Monthly. "Combines a fine literary tone with the fullest information of the fashions of the day."—Fife-shire Advertiser.
London: BARNES and SONS, 23, Old Bailey, E.C.

FOURTH EDITION OF THE ARGOSY

now ready for JANUARY, containing the opening Chapters of MRS. RAYEN'S TEMPTATION;
A MYSTERY, by JOHNNY LUDLOW;
IN THE BLACK FOREST, by CHARLES W. WOOD;
and other Contributions.
FOURTH EDITION NOW READY.

THE ARGOSY for FEBRUARY
ALSO READY.

"The 'Argosy' for January, 1883, is literally laden with golden grains of wisdom."—Morning Post.
"Under the editorship of Mrs. Henry Wood, 'The Argosy' is entitled to rank with the best periodicals of the day. The demand for the public continues to increase."—Morning Post.
"From the opening chapters of Mrs. Haven's Temptation we learn it to be one of the best stories that have appeared in this delightful magazine."—Yarmouth Gazette.
"Mr. Char. W. Wood's 'In the Black Forest' is exceedingly interesting."—Figaro.
"As a descriptive writer Mr. Charles Wood has few equals—still fewer superiors."—Yarmouth Gazette.
"Mr. Charles Wood's charmingly-written and charmingly-illustrated sketches on the Black Forest. A capital number."—Sportman.
Simpson Monthly.
RICHARD BENTLEY and SONS, 5, New Burlington-street, London, W.

THE NEW TECHNICAL MONTHLY MAGAZINE.
HELP AND GUIDANCE FOR SELF-HELPERS.

Price 6d. Monthly.
AMATEUR WORK, ILLUSTRATED.
A New Practical Magazine of Constructive and Decorative Art and Manual Labour. Edited by the Author of "Every Man his Own Mechanic."
Among the Contents of Part III. will be found—
1. ELECTRO-PLATING at HOME. By G. Edwinton.
2. VIOLIN-MAKING. By Edward H. Allen.
3. HINTS on PLASTER-CASTING.
4. MODELLING in CLAY, and Introduction to the Art of Carving in Wood.
5. SOAP and ITS MANUFACTURE.
6. A CHEAP BAR-FRAME HIVE. By A. Watkins.
7. HOW to BUILD a SMALL ORGAN.
8. SUGGESTIONS for HOME-MADE FURNITURE.
9. PHOTOGRAPHY: its Principles and Practice.
10. BOOTS and SHOES: How to Make and Mend Them.
11. A THREE-LEGGED COUCH.
12. FILTERS: their Construction and Management.
13. HINTS for PAINTERS on CHINA.
14. WALL BRACKETS for CORNERS.
15. NOTES on NOVELTIES. By the Editor.
With PART III. is PRESENTED GRATIS a very valuable SUPPLEMENT, exhibiting DESIGNS for FURNITURE that may be MADE at HOME.
Specimen Copy of Part III., post-free, 7d.; Parts I., II., and III., post-free, 1s. 6d.
London: WARD, LOCK, and Co., Salisbury-square, E.C.

NOW READY.
In stiff coloured Wrapper, price 1s. 6d.; post-free, 1s. 10d.THE FIRST QUARTERLY PART OF THE FAMILY HERALD

containing the
THREE COMPLETE NOVELS, entitled
NELL'S STORY.
MR. CHRISTOPHER'S WARLS.
CAN LOSS BE GAIN?

"The 'Saturday Review' says of the 'Family Herald'—'Its novels and tales are quite as well written as the best circulating-library stories.'"
London: WILLIAM STEVENS, 421, Strand; and all Booksellers and News-vendors.

CHEAP EDITION OF MR. W. FAYARD'S NOVELS.

Price 2s.; cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.; postage, 4d.
DIANA'S DEFENDER. A NOVEL.
By Author of "Hunted to Death," &c.
London: J. and R. MAXWELL, 4, Shoe-lane, E.C.

CHEAP EDITION OF Miss HAY'S NOVELS.

Price 2s.; picture boards, 2s. 6d.; cloth gilt, uniform with "OM Myddleton's Money." FOR HER DEAR SAKES, BRENDA WYKE, &c.
London: J. and R. MAXWELL, Milton House, Shoe-lane, E.C.

WILL SHORTLY BE PUBLISHED.

DECORATIVE ART EMBROIDERY.

The Universal Guide to Decorative Art Embroidery, Churchwork, and Artistic Needlework; also to Knitting, Crochet, &c. Profusely Illustrated. Price One Shilling. To be had of all Booksellers and leading Repertories in the United Kingdom.—London: KENT and Co., Paternoster-row.

NEW BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS.

NEW AND POPULAR NOVELS.
Now ready, at all the Libraries, in 3 vols.,
GEHENNA; or, HAVENS OF UNREST.
By the Hon. LEWIS WINGFIELD.
THISTLEDOWN LODGE. By M. A. PAULL,
Author of "The Trouble of the Tower," &c.
THE QUESTION OF GAIN. By Mrs. CASHEL HOXY, Author of "A Golden Sorrow," &c.
STRANGE CHAPMAN. W. MARSHALL B.A.
THE SILVER LINK. By Mrs. HOUSTOUN.
Hurst and Blackett, Publishers, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

FAUCIT OF BALLYOL. A Novel. By HERMAN MERIVALE. 3 vols.
"Mr. Merivale's novel has one quality of success which is certainly not too common, freshness. The book is one which it is difficult to lay down when it has once been taken up, and which makes us hope for another from the same hand."—Saturday Review.
CHAPMAN and HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta-street, W.C.

NEW-YEAR'S GIFT-BOOK.
VICTORIA REGINA (A.D. 1881); and other Verse and Poems, Grave and Gay. By GEORGE GRAVENESE. Cloth, 4s.; cloth gilt, 5s.
HARRISON and Sons, Booksellers, 25, Pall-mall, London.

MYRA'S MID-MONTHLY JOURNAL.
Price 6d.; by post, 8d. (Published on the 15th of each Month.) The Novelties for FEBRUARY are:—
COLOURED FASHION-PLATE. and Personal Attention, Play-Sheet, the Cuisine, Needlework, Books and Authors, Music, Etiquette, Miscellaneous; Last News from Paris.
DIAGRAM SHEET. containing Patterns of (1) The Aquila Costume for a Girl of twelve; (2) Dress for a Lady of eighteen months; (3) The Whiskers Costume; (4) The Marcella Costume for a Little Girl of five.
CUT-OUT PAPER PAT-TERN of an Infant's Day-Dress.
THE SILKWORK'S GIFT. Sheet of Coloured Designs for Russian Embroidery.
LA MODE IN PARIS; Notes on Novelties.
MYRA'S ANSWERS, London Modes, Dress, Health.

MYRA'S MID-MONTHLY JOURNAL contains information upon all the newest Modes for Ladies and for Children, from infants to fourteen years of age. Price 6d.; by post, 8d.
GOSNOLD and SON, 39 and 40, Bedford-street, London, W.C.

PRACTICAL LESSONS IN PAINTING
ON CHINA, PORCELAIN, &c. By Madame la BARONNE DELAMARDELLE. From the French by Gustave A. Bouvier. Fifth Edition. Price, post-free, 1s. 6d.
London: LACROIX, BARR, and Co., 60, Regent-street, W.

Third Edition, price 1s., post-free.
THE New Electrolytic Treatment of Cancer and of Simple Tumours. By G. EDGELOW, M.D.
NELSON and Co., 23, Duke-street, Grosvenor-square, W.

JUST PUBLISHED, post-free, 2 stamps.
DYSPEPSIA and the SEVERER FORMS OF INDIGESTION. A small pamphlet on those distressing complaints and their complete cures. Published by the Author, RICHARD KING, Esq., St. Paul Surgeon R.N., 23, Warwick-st., Rugby.

By Dr. BARE MEADOWS, Physician to the National Institution for Diseases of the Skin. Ninth Edition, post-free, 3s. stamps.
ERUPTIONS, their Rational Treatment.
London: G. HILL, 124, Westminster Bridge-road.

New Edition, post-free, Six Stamps.
FIT S.—EPILEPSY, or FALLING SICKNESS; with ESSAYS on GIDDINESS, SENSATIONS, PAINTS, and HEADACHE. A Treatise explaining the Causes, Treatment, and Cure of these Diseases; with directions for Diet. By S. BERRY NIBLETT, Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians. Published by Mr. WILLIAMS, 10, Oxford-terrace, Hyde Park, London.

Fourth Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.
EPILEPSY (The Tonic Treatment of). By WALTER TYRRELL, M.R.C.S.
London: DAVID BOUQUET, 3, St. Martin's-place, W.C.

HOMOEOPATHIC TREATMENT, pp. 142, cloth, 1s., or 13 stamps.

DISEASES OF INFANTS AND CHILDREN. By Drs. WILLIAMSON and EPPS. Each disease described, and the remedy and dose plainly stated.

DISEASES OF WOMEN. Same Authors. 1s. 6d., or 13 stamps by post, secured.
London: JAMES EPPS and Co., 170, Piccadilly.

Now ready,
VOL. 79 ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

Elegantly Bound, cloth gilt, price 2s.
CASES, for binding above .. 2s. 6d.
PORTFOLIOS, to hold Six Months' Numbers .. 4s. 6d.
READING-CASES, for Single Number .. 2s. 6d.
196, Strand, W.C.

ERARDS' PIANOS.—Messrs. ERARD, of 18, Great Marlborough-street, London, and 13, Rue de Mail, Paris, Makers to her Majesty and the Prince and Princess of Wales, CAUTION the Public that Pianofortes are being sold by unscrupulous dealers, who are not of their manufacture. For information as to authenticity apply at 18, Great Marlborough-st., where new Pianos can be obtained from 50 guineas.

ERARDS' PIANOS.—COTTAGES, from 50 guineas.
OBLIQUES, from 85 guineas.
GRANDS, from 125 guineas.

VITREMANIE, superseding Diaphanie.
An easy and inexpensive method of decorating windows in churches, public buildings, and private houses, by which may be produced the rich colouring and beautiful designs equal in appearance to real stained glass. Handbook of Designs and full instructions, 1s. 6d. Boxes, comprising designs, &c., at 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 4s. 2s. Particulars post-free. Sole inventors, J. BARNARD and SON, 233, Oxford-street, London, W.

CHROMOPHOTOGRAPHY.

(KRAUS' PROCESS.)
The New Art (enabling any person without previous knowledge of either Painting or Drawing) to Colour Photographs on coloured glass, in imitation of China and Enamel Painting. Boxes containing every requisite, 2s. and 2s. 6d. Particulars post-free. Specimens shown on application at the Sole Agents, J. BARNARD and SON, 233, Oxford-street, London, W.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR.

If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 5s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath.

Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalcules," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of the most delicate and sweet herbs and plants; it is perfectly delicious to the taste, and as harmless as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

NUDA VERITAS.—GREY HAIR restored

by this valuable specific to its original shade, after which it grows the natural colour, not grey. Used as a dressing, it causes growth and arrests falling. The most harmless and effectual restorer extant. One trial will convince it has no equal. Price 10s. 6d., of all Chemists and Hairdressers. Testimonials free.—Agents, R. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

ROBARE'S AUREOLINE, or GOLDEN

HAIR WASH.—For producing the beautiful golden colour so much admired. Warranted perfectly harmless. Price 6s. 6d., and 10s. 6d., of all principal Perfumers and Chemists throughout the world.—Agents, R. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

PETER ROBINSON, OXFORD-STREET.

WINTER STOCK-TAKING SALE.

GREAT REDUCTION IN ALL DEPARTMENTS.

SILKS, VELVETS, SATINS, and BROCADES.
100 pieces Black Striped Velveteen .. per yard 2s. 6d.
200 pieces Rich Coloured Brocade Velveteen .. 4s. 6d.
100 pieces White Brocade Satin .. 6s. 6d.
50 pieces of All-Black Damask .. 2s. 11d.
50 pieces Silk Brocade .. 2s. 6d.
100 pieces Black Brocade Velveteen at a great reduction .. 2s. 6d.
200 pieces Rich Black Satin Brocade .. per yard 4s. 11d.
Black Satin Duchesse, per yard .. 5s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and 7s. 6d.
50 pieces Coloured Satin Duchesse .. per yard 2s. 11d.
Black Satins, from .. 1s. 9d.

DRESS MATERIALS.

Foulis, Cashmere, Drap d'Italie, Brocade Cashmere, Satin Stripes, Double Beige, &c., reduced to 6d., 8d., and 1s. per yard.
Fine Cashmere Merinos, Coloured and Black, at 1s. 6d. and 2s. per yard.
Very fine Cashmere, new shades, 2s. per yard.
Best Japanese Silks, in plain colours and with rich Satin Stripes, 1s. per yard.
200 pieces All-Wool Scotch Brough Serge, in Navy, Bronze, Dark Green, Brown, and Black, at 3d. per yard.
Rich Velvet Velveteens, very wide, in Black and all the new shades of colour, reduced to 2s. per yard.
Coloured Brocade Velveteens, reduced to 1s. per yard.
Aberdeen Winceys, the original make, very scarce, reduced to 9d. per yard.
All last season's best Percales, Brilliantas, Ginghamas, &c., reduced to 3d. and 4d. per yard.
180 pieces best Satins (Pompadour), last year's printing, reduced to 6d. per yard.

PETER ROBINSON, OXFORD-STREET.

SALE OF MANTLES, COSTUMES, &c., being

THE STOCK OF WESTROP and CO., 100, REGENT-STREET.

PURCHASED for Cash, and now SELLING at LESS than HALF PRICE.

PETER ROBINSON, Oxford-street, W.

JAY'S, REGENT-STREET.

A CATALOGUE.

IN CONSEQUENCE of numerous applications having been made to Messrs. JAY, for a Catalogue of their Weekly Sale of Superabundant Stock, Messrs. JAY have published a Descriptive Catalogue of their Mantles, Costumes, &c., with the late and present prices opposite each article.
The Catalogue will be forwarded gratis on application.

WEEKLY REDUCTIONS PRIOR TO STOCK-TAKING.

MESSRS. JAY beg to announce that in lieu of a "Sale," which generally results in the first owners securing the best bargains, they will up to the time of their Stock-taking adopt a plan of making WEEKLY REDUCTIONS of their surplus stock of all goods, which they are disposed to sell at a loss to themselves and to the advantage of their customers.

MOURNING.—Messrs. JAY'S experienced

DRESSMAKERS and MILLINERS travel to any part of the Kingdom, free of expense to purchasers. They take with them dress and millinery, besides patterns of materials, at 1s. per yard and upwards, all marked in plain figures, and at the same price as if purchased at the Warehouse in Regent-street. Reasonable estimates are also given for household mourning, at a great saving to large or small families. Funerals, at stated charges, conducted in London or Country.

THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, REGENT-STREET, W.

"LOUIS" VELVETEENS.

A large assortment of these CELEBRATED VELVETEENS in Black and all Spring Colours are on sale at CHARLES PARTON'S, 41 and 43, Buckingham Palace-road, S.W. Patterns free by post to any address.

"LOUIS" VELVETEENS.

SEAMAN, LITTLE, and CO., High-street, Kensington, supply these Celebrated VELVETEENS in Black and all Colours. Patterns sent post-free.

MADAME ELLIOT makes up DRESSES

stylishly and fits elegantly.
8, Great Portland-street, Oxford-street.

MADAME ELLIOT'S CORSETS.

Splendid Shape. French and English make, 5s. 6d., 6s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 8s. 6d., 9s. 6d., 10s. 6d., 11s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 13s. 6d., 14s. 6d., 15s. 6d., 16s. 6d., 17s. 6d., 18s. 6d., 19s. 6d., 20s. 6d., 21s. 6d., 22s. 6d., 23s. 6d., 24s. 6d., 25s. 6d., 26s. 6d., 27s. 6d., 28s. 6d., 29s. 6d., 30s. 6d., 31s. 6d., 32s. 6d., 33s. 6d., 34s. 6d., 35s. 6d., 36s. 6d., 37s. 6d., 38s. 6d., 39s. 6d., 40s. 6d., 41s. 6d., 42s. 6d., 43s. 6d., 44s. 6d., 45s. 6d., 46s. 6d., 47s. 6d., 48s. 6d., 49s. 6d., 50s. 6d., 51s. 6d., 52s. 6d., 53s. 6d., 54s. 6d., 55s. 6d., 56s. 6d., 57s. 6d., 58s. 6d., 59s. 6d., 60s. 6d., 61s. 6d., 62s. 6d., 63s. 6d., 64s. 6d., 65s. 6d., 66s. 6d., 67s. 6d., 68s. 6d., 69s. 6d., 70s. 6d., 71s. 6d., 72s. 6d., 73s. 6d., 74s. 6d., 75s. 6d., 76s. 6d., 77s. 6d., 78s. 6d., 79s. 6d., 80s. 6d., 81s. 6d., 82s. 6d., 83s. 6d., 84s. 6d., 85s. 6d., 86s. 6d., 87s. 6d., 88s. 6d., 89s. 6d., 90s. 6d., 91s. 6d., 92s. 6d., 93s. 6d., 94s. 6d., 95s. 6d., 96s. 6d., 97s. 6d., 98s. 6d., 99s. 6d., 100s. 6d.

PRATT'S WATER PAD TRUSSES are the MOST EFFECTUAL CURE FOR RUPTURES. PRATT'S ELASTIC STOCKINGS, for VARICOSE VEINS, &c.

J. F. PRATT, Surgical Mechanician to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, 43 (late 420), OXFORD-STREET, LONDON.

HAIR DYE.—ALEX. ROSS' is easy to use, produces light or dark colours to grey hair. 3s. 6d. Post 6d. stamps. Ross' Complexion Pills, 2s. 6d. 21, Lamb's Conduit-street, W.C., London.

LEWIS'S Contains Bromine and Iodine, the vital, refreshing, and health-giving principles of sea-water. A most valuable remedy for all eruptions of the skin, pimples, blotches, &c.

IODINE

Braces and invigorates enfeebled constitutions, gives a healthy glow to the skin, stimulates every organ of the human frame, and is a grand substitute for sea-bathing.

SOAP.—For Hot Climates it is invaluable, quickly curing prickly heat, and such disorders. Price 6d. and 1s., of JAMES LEWIS and SONS, 12, Old Bond-street, London.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE.

PULVERMACH'S "GALVANISM,"

NATURE'S CHIEF RESTORE OF IMPAIRED VITAL ENERGY.
In this Pamphlet the most reliable proofs are given of the vast and wonderful curative powers of Pulvermacher's Patent Galvanic Chain-Bands, Belts, &c., in Rheumatic, Nervous, and Functional Disorders. Sent post-free for three shillings on application to
J. L. PULVERMACH'S GALVANIC ESTABLISHMENT, 194, Regent-street, London, W.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

CLARKE'S WORLD-FAMED BLOOD MIXTURE is warranted to cleanse the Blood from all impurities, from whatever cause arising. For Scrofula, Scurvy, Skin and Blood Diseases, its effects are marvellous. In Bottles, 2s. 6d. each, and in cases, containing six times the quantity, 11s. each, of all Chemists. Sent to any address for 9s. or 12s. stamps, of the Proprietor, the Lincoln and Midland Counties' Drug Company (late F. J. Clarke), Lincoln.

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES

CURE COUGHS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS. Medical testimony states that no other medicine is so effective in the cure of these dangerous maladies. One lozenge gives ease. They contain no opium nor any violent drug. Sold by all Chemists, in Tins, 1s. 11d. and 2s. 6d.

LITTLE BO-PEEP,

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT-GARDEN.

THE BEST CHILDREN'S PANTOMIME.

LAST WEEK.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Lessee has generously granted Covent Garden Theatre for the whole of next week, for the benefit of the Company which has since Christmas performed with brilliant success Mr. William Young's Grand Pantomime, "Little Bo-Peep, Little Boy Blue, and the Little Old Woman that Lived in a Shoe." The concluding performances of "Little Bo-Peep" next week will be the brightest of the season—the charming Children's Scenes, the beautiful Floral Ballet (acknowledged to be M. Dewinne's greatest choreographic triumph) being supplemented by plenty of FUN and NOVELTY.

THE WONDERFUL GIRARD FAMILY will appear NEXT WEEK at Covent Garden Theatre in a New and Original PANTHETIC QUADRILLE, in which the Ladies of the Company will lustily take part.

PARLIAMENTARY FRANKS will be faithfully represented NEXT WEEK at Covent Garden in the specially Attractive Concluding Performances of "Little Bo-Peep."

GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA

writes of the Covent Garden Pantomime:—"Little Bo-Peep" is, in addition to its brilliant merits as a spectacle, essentially a children's pantomime. The army of "small infantry," who occupy the huge stage at intervals, seems even more multitudinous than the cognate Lilliputian muster at Drury Lane. It is as graceful as it is diverting, splendid, artistically arranged, and delectably successful."—Illustrated London News.

Boxes and Stalls for the Special Concluding Performance of "Little Bo-Peep" Next Week may be secured in advance at the Box-office of Covent Garden Theatre, open from Ten till Five.

COVENT-GARDEN THEATRE ROYAL.

Next Week's special Concluding Performances of the Grand Pantomime,—"AT 7.45, LITTLE BO-PEEP." Preceded, at Seven, by A MIRACULOUS CURE. Box-office open Daily from Ten till Five. Doors open at 6.30. Morning Performances, Wednesday and Saturday, at Two.

A TURKEY CARPET of the Finest

Quality, suitable for a room of any size, may be obtained from the Importers, A wholesale price for cash.—OBERLAND CARPET WAREHOUSE, corner of La Belle Sauvage-yard, Ludgate-hill.—TRELLOAR and SONS.

AN ENGLISH CARPET of any description may be obtained at the CARPET WAREHOUSE of TRELLOAR and SONS, Ludgate-hill.

LINOLEUM, well seasoned and special designs, to harmonise with any style of decoration. Manufactured and sold by TRELLOAR and SONS, Ludgate-hill.

EPPS'S

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operation of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the five properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which will save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

JAMES EPPS and CO., London.

Also, EPPS'S CHOCOLATE ESSENCE, for Afternoon Use.

CHUBB'S SAFES for JEWELS,

DEEDS, PLATE, BULLION, &c.

CHUBB'S LOCKS and LATCHES,

CHESTS, BOXES, &c.

CHUBB'S ILLUSTRATED PRICE-LISTS

POST-FREE.

CHUBB and SON, 128, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.; and 48, St. James's-street, London.

NEW MUSIC.

W. S. ROCKSTRO, Author of HISTORY

W. OF MUSIC, PRACTICAL HARMONY, and contributor of many highly commended Articles in "Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians," and Composer of the following recent Pianoforte Compositions. Each post-free for

The Banks of Allan Water. 4s.	Le Bœuf de Gand. 4s.
Voices from the Fell. 4s.	Le Vieille France. 4s.
half price in stamps.	A Wrath of Heather. 3 Nos., each 2s. 6d.
Middleton. 4s.
Bannockburn. 4s.

London: ROBERT COOKS and Co.

Post-free for 24 stamps.
Spring is ever garlands wreathing
Where thou art, where thou art;
And the modest violet, with the dew of morning wet,
Fragrance sweet for thee is breathing,
Pure young heart! pure young heart!
London: ROBERT COOKS and Co.

THE FAIRIE RING. Song. By A. H. BURNED. Poetry by Hugh Conway.
"The one which stepeth over a fairie ring and danceth all night with the fayes, and the cock crowes and the Elfin bird vanish, that seven years thereafter stand in what seemed a single night."

LONDON: ROBERT COOKS and Co.

BON SOIR ET BON JOUR.
Deux Esquisses pour Piano, par COTSFORD DICK.
Post-free for 18 stamps.
Very fresh and original in melody and effect.
London: ROBERT COOKS and Co.

ALL SHEET MUSIC promptly

MUSICAL BOX DÉPÔTS, 22, Ludgate-hill, and 6, Cheap-side.—Most extensive variety in London.
 Large sizes, ordinary make, four airs, £2 2s.; six, £2 12s.; and eight airs, £3 s. Ditto, by Nicole Frères, 21 per air; superb instruments, from £4 to £20. Choicest Music and newest

NICE, Cannes, Menton, Monte-Carlo, Ospedaletti, and San Remo.
TO VISITORS TO THE RIVIERA.
FOR SALE, in the above Winter Resorts, most BEAUTIFUL

SLEEPING-CARS on all Continental main lines. Apply for berths at the Agencies of the International Sleeping-Car Company, Paris, London, Madrid, Brussels, Cologne.

FIGARO says:—"The Patentees of these Pens are Guardian Angels of the Noble Army of Martyrs who live by 'The Pen.'"
 "They come as a boon and a blessing to men,
 The Pickwick, the Owl, and the Waverley Pen."
 Sold by all Stationers throughout the world. Sample Box,

A Powerful Apparatus for Transplanting
 Transplant ALL THE CHARITABLE Transplanting Well

SEARS, WELLES, HERRINGHILL. Price, complete, £2 7s., £3,
£3 10s. 6d. Exhibited at 142, Regent-street, London.

D. R. D E J O N G H'S

(KNIGHT OF THE ORDER OF LEOPOLD OF BELGIUM, KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOUR)

I G H T-D R O W N

C O D - L I V E R O I L.

THE PUREST. THE MOST EFFICACIOUS.
THE MOST PALATABLE. THE MOST DIGESTIBLE.
Proved by thirty years' medical experience to be

THE ONLY COD-LIVER OIL which produces the full curative effects in CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST.

THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, AND WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.
SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D.,

"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a thera- exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it is

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.
"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular

DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

Physician Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest.

COD-LIVER OIL introduced into medical practice by Dr. DE JONGH, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion, that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its be called pleasant. I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S., Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.

that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was from its uniformity of character, particu-

The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the table substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DEJONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too highly recommended."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled form. Half-Pints 2s. 6d. - Pints 4s. 6d.

SOLE CONSIGNEES,
ANSAR HARBORD and CO. 77 STRAND LONDON

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by GEORGE C. LEIGHTON, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1890.

Digitized by Google

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by GEORGE C. LEIGHTON, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, February 13, 1869.

THE OPENING OF PARLIAMENT.

SEE PAGE 126.

SKETCHES IN AND ABOUT THE HOUSE.

A CHINESE FESTIVAL SHOW.

The Chinese tradespeople and workpeople to be found in every mercantile port of the Eastern Archipelago, as well as those at home in China, are accustomed, where they are sufficiently numerous and rich enough, to keep up their national religious festivals and public entertainments. At Sourabaya, the eastern port of Java, where a naval correspondent of ours made the sketch we have engraved, the yearly celebration of an elaborate ritual performed for the repose of the spirits of departed parents and ancestors was attended with a great display in one of the streets of the Chinese quarter. Upon a lofty wooden stage erected for the occasion, surrounded by tall standards with flaunting banners of different colours, and with the grotesque figure of a dragon, suspended head downwards, to signify the reversal of the evil power which pursues the soul after death, the shrine of this pious worship had been carefully prepared. Several models of pagodas were placed there, for the habitation of their proper deities, and each side of the platform was adorned with huge revolving paper lanterns, each of which, painted with a variety of quaint emblematic shapes, and with the names and titles of the deceased, bore a memorial record of their personal merits, and those of their mourning kindred. Other pictures represented the state of future retribution for the wicked, and that of felicity for the favourites of Heaven. A priest, wide-robed and long-haired, standing on a raised board, with much oratorical gesticulation and with a powerful voice, chanted his litany of intercession for the eternal welfare of those gone into another world, commending them to the mercy of Yen Wang, the Chinese Pluto, with frequent offerings of food, and burnings of paper made up in the form of articles of clothing, houses, or furniture, or paper money and letters, as if for the service of the dead. Notwithstanding the solemnity of this proceeding, there was a good deal of feasting and merry-making among the crowd of spectators, who did not seem to take the mourning greatly to heart.

THE CITY ADDRESS TO MR. GLADSTONE.

The gold casket voted by the Court of Common Council to Mr. Gladstone, in which to place the illuminated address presented to the right hon. gentleman last October, has been completed by the Goldsmiths' and Silversmiths' Company, of Regent-street. The design, which is of pure classic character, with Tuscan columns at each end, is a trophy 10 inches in height by 12 in length, approached on each side by silver steps, with figures in gold at the four corners, representing Eloquence, Justice, Industry, and Law. In the front is a monumental tablet, bearing the crest, arms, and motto of the Premier, surrounded by a wreath of laurel, enamelled in proper colours, and accompanied by female figures intended for the City of London, Commerce, Ceres, and Ireland. The reverse side has in its centre, supported by the City dragons, the following inscription:—"To the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prime Minister of England, as a token of the estimation in which he is held by the citizens of London, and of their appreciation of his high character, rare genius, and varied gifts, so long devoted to the service of his country." The lid is decorated with shields in proper colours, in gold and enamel, with the arms of the City, Britannia and British Lion, the Royal Standard, the Union Jack, and the bust of Homer, Mr. Gladstone's favourite author. The ends bear emblematic references to the Premier's varied studies and accomplishments. Surmounting the whole is the Lamp of Learning, with the owl, the bird of wisdom, perched on the handle. Inside the casket, the lining is of blue satin; and the pedestal rests on supports of velvet in the same colour.

CASKET FOR THE CITY OF LONDON ADDRESS PRESENTED TO MR. GLADSTONE.

THE SAILOR PRINCES IN CEYLON.

Their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert Victor and Prince George, sons of the Prince of Wales, Midshipmen of H.M.S. Bacchante, left Ceylon at the beginning of this week on their homeward voyage. They had an opportunity of going up to Kandy, the old native capital of the island, which is the subject of our illustration. From Colombo to Kandy is a railway journey of seventy-five miles, ascending the inland mountain country through magnificent scenery, the line curving and winding round precipitous cliffs and hills covered with luxuriant tropical vegetation. A branch line runs to Gampola, the centre of the coffee plantations, beyond which lie the flowery vale of Pussilawa, the romantic glen of Ramboddie, the tea plantations, and Newera Ellia, a cool and grassy upland vale, situated beneath the Pedro-talla-galla range of mountains, the highest in Ceylon: this place is a favourite health resort of European residents. But the journey direct by railway to Kandy, which is accomplished in four hours, brings the traveller into the heart of the ancient native kingdom, which is a place of great historical interest, and of singular aspect. The situation of Kandy, a little city of ten thousand inhabitants, perched in a recess or basin of the mountain ranges, 1500 ft. above the sea, and surrounded by thickly wooded hills of a still greater height, with an artificial lake, or reservoir, just below the town, has a striking effect upon the visitor for the first time. Several monuments of architectural and antiquarian interest are here to be inspected, especially the Temple of Maligawa, or of the Dalada, where the Sacred Tooth of Buddha has been preserved during more than fifteen hundred years, after being brought hither from Dantapura, in Southern India. The Portuguese, indeed, when they were masters of Ceylon, pretended to have carried it away and ground it to powder, in order that the Catholic missionaries should disabuse the native mind of its superstitious veneration for this curious relic. But the Buddhist priests at Kandy still declare that the tooth in their possession, which is big enough to have belonged to a giant—it may not be a human tooth, after all—is the real original Buddha's tooth, as the footprint of Buddha, on Adam's Peak, is about five feet long and two feet broad. The Prince of Wales on his visit to Ceylon five years ago, was permitted to look at the famous tooth; and it will be remembered that our Special Artist, Mr. W. Simpson, gave us a sketch of the scene when this relic was exhibited in its silver shrine, in a chamber of carved ivory, with ceremonial homage to its sacred associations.

THE MAGAZINES.

The strength of the Cornhill, as frequently the case, lies rather in its miscellaneous contributions than in its serial fiction. "Damocles," so far as can be judged from its commencement, appears a story of the average Cornhill class, distinguished rather by ease of treatment and fluency of dialogue than by any absorbing interest. In "Love the Debt," which seems to have reached its dénouement, there is a spirited sketch of a popular Irish electioneering orator. The most remarkable for literary ability among the miscellaneous papers is an essay on Senancour, better known from the title of his principal work as Obermann, the sentimental French pessimist whom Mr. Arnold, guided by Sainte-Beuve, discovered and introduced to the English public several years ago. Senancour is interesting as a really genuine instance of a type commonly marred by affectation, but his reveries are more commended by style than substance. "Let Nobody Pass" is an amusing story; and there is abundance of entertainment in the retrospect of celebrated Senior Wranglers; and in the curious instances of eccentric baptismal appellatives which form the staple of the article on "Personal Nomenclature."

Macmillan, unlike the Cornhill, depends principally upon its serial story. In the present instalment of "Fortune's Fool," Mr. Hawthorne shows an increased tendency to the fantastic; but the writing is admirable, and there is nothing of that attempt to make himself a mystic against the grain, into which the pardonable emulation of his father has frequently misled him. The contribution next in point of interest is Dr. Lyon Playfair's account, derived from personal observation, of the manner in which American industry is shackled by the prohibitory tariff. The dearth of labour is another impediment to the competition which, from the ingenuity of their artisans and the excellence of their goods, the United States might otherwise maintain with us in the markets of the world. There is little else of much interest in the number, except a careful but rather too sternly judicial review of Mr. Rossetti's poems by Mr. J. A. Symonds.

Blackwood is considerably under its usual mark. There is great power of analysis in Lady Martin's observations on the character of Juliet, which are, further, an interesting revelation of the acquaintance with the subtleties of a dramatic conception which may be gained by the endeavour to impersonate it. "The Fixed Period" continues to be humorous; and "Pentock" is a pretty, healthy, country story, truthful to human and inanimate nature. The rest of the number is insignificant.

The Fortnightly is fairly interesting throughout, but contains no article of especial note. Sir Alfred Lyall directs attention to the singular system of State apotheosis in China, by which the national Pantheon is made almost a branch of the Civil Service. Mr. Carnegie's report of United States opinion respecting England is worth noting for the sound sense it really contains, with a smile at the fidelity with which Mr. Carnegie's interlocutor reflects Mr. Carnegie's own views. Mr. Niven's tribute to Garrison is just in the main, although the writer is greatly mistaken if he imagines that the Abolitionist party could have effected emancipation by their unaided efforts. Lord Coleridge and Dr. Carpenter's discussion on vivisection leaves us in doubt how far the one party is prepared to go in permitting the practice, or the other in suppressing it. Some of Lord Coleridge's expressions almost seem to indicate that he would prohibit it altogether; but we can hardly suppose this to be his meaning when we consider how soon he may himself be called upon to preside at a trial where a most important part of the testimony will be derived from experiments upon animals.

Lord Sherbrooke's eccentric and sophistical argument for the clôture in the House of Commons, and Lord Dunsany's demonstration of the military peril of the Channel Tunnel, and the liability to compulsory military service it would impose upon the people of this country, are the most important contributions to a good number of the Nineteenth Century, and have already attracted sufficient attention from the press. Mr. Barclay expounds the grievances of the farmers, Mr. Karl Blind draws up a long indictment of Prince Bismarck, and Mr. Storrs Turner presents himself in the uncommon and creditable character of a philanthropist not only anxious for the abolition of the opium trade, but willing that England and not India should pay for it. M. Reinach's defence of M. Gambetta's recent proceedings rests upon the assumption that a revision of the Constitution is really desired by the majority of the French people. If so, M. Gambetta will soon be in power again; meanwhile, M. Reinach's application of the term "miscreants" to the jurymen who refused to whitewash M. Roustan suggests that he may be too much blinded by passion to discern the signs of the times.

The Contemporary is in general abstruse and didactic. The Duke of Argyll's paper on agricultural depression seems to hint that landlords may find it to their advantage to comply with some of their tenants' demands and indemnify themselves by a more strictly commercial method of doing business with them. "The Crisis in Serbia" described by O. K. is ecclesiastical, and the article is chiefly important as an indication of the animosity of Pan Slavistic Russians towards Austria. Mr. Mulhall's "Rise of the Middle Class," is a great example of the eloquence of statistics, mostly tending to establish the enormous strides made during the last generation even by poor and backward countries. Thus there are twice as many landed proprietors in Spain as there were in 1840, and the exportation of grain from Russia has increased sevenfold since the emancipation of the serfs. The proportion of well-to-do people to the rest of the community is, speaking roughly, in England one third, in France one fifth, in Germany one twelfth, in Italy one twentieth, in Russia one hundredth. Mr. W. S. Lilly powerfully contrasts the virulence of religious scepticism in France with its candour and moderation in England.

Mr. Julian Hawthorne's "Dust," in the Gentleman's Magazine, though slightly written in comparison with his other serial, nevertheless improves. The first chapter of the present instalment, a story complete in itself, is particularly good. Mrs. G. C. Davies's picture of a Norfolk broad, and Mr. Walford's sketch of the eccentric Rev. Sir Henry Bate Dudley, are very entertaining readings.

Harper is, as usual, full of admirably and copiously illustrated papers, among the most interesting of which are notices of the present political leaders of France, with capital portraits; and a sketch of Mr. Irving as he appears in private life. The Mexican Republic and the city of Philadelphia are also the vehicles of much excellent wood engraving, while the letterpress also has a substantial value. "Witch Hazel" is a striking story. The Century is even more varied, with Longfellow's fine poem, "Hermes Trismegistus," the late Dean Stanley's slight but interesting notice of F. W. Robertson, the novels of Mrs. Burnett and Mr. Howells, and Mrs. Mitchell's excellent survey of the Phidian age of sculpture. The Atlantic Monthly, excellent throughout, is especially noticeable for Mr. Lodge's fine article on Daniel Webster; Mr. Lathrop's "Echo of Passion," a story with many indications of deep thinking and descriptive power; and the continuation of the Northern Investigator's "Studies in the South." The writer is decidedly of opinion that there is no probability of the negro races dying out.

The principal feature in Belgravia is "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," by the authors of "Ready-Money Mortiboy," very properly designated by the writers "an impossible novel," but one with which it is impossible to help being amused. Mrs. Alexander's "Admiral's Ward" is also a work of merit, and the drama which "Ouida" contributes in apparent emulation of George Sand, however ill-adapted for the stage, shows real power. Temple Bar has little worthy of remark besides its serial tales and a biography of Prince Potemkin. The late Grenville-Murray's "Five Years in a Convent," in Time, deals with a well-worn subject, which is nevertheless so handled as to enlist the interest and sympathy of the reader in no ordinary degree. Mr. Scudamore's views on the progress of French influence in Syria are worth noting. The St. James's Magazine, considerably improved of late, has good serial fictions by Mr. Francillon and the Swedish novelist, Marie Schway, and an impartial examination of Mr. Ruskin's doctrines in political economy, by F. Watt. London Society is particularly good this month, with the continuation of "The Senior Partner;" excellent stories from Stifter, by Helen and Alice Zimmern; and a summary of the life and work of F. W. Robertson. "Modern and Greek Sense of Form," in the Burlington, is a suggestive paper, propounding the dictum that "No woman in uncomfortable boots can possibly be beautiful." The Manchester Quarterly, if slightly amateurish, still speaks well for the literary culture of the cotton metropolis. "A Summer Day at Concord," "Gipsy Folk Tales," "The Prometheus of Æschylus and Shelley," and "The Idealism of Berkeley" are all papers of considerable mark, and the number is accompanied by a pair of charming illustrations. The Antiquary and the Bibliographer are full of entertainment, the paper on St. Valentine's Day in the former, and that on the original edition of Dr. Paris's "Philosophy in Sport" in the latter, more particularly so. The most important contribution to the Theatre is a "symposium"—rather Thracian—on the plagiarism imputed to Mr. Pinero. Hibernia is remarkable for the curious original version of Father Prout's Cornhill ode, now printed for the first time. Chambers's Journal has a still better claim to notice in the publication of its jubilee number on occasion of the completion of the fiftieth year of its existence, appropriately celebrated by the veteran founder—"Reminiscences of a long and busy life"—a thoroughly delightful piece of autobiography. The Monthly Packet is, as ever, admirably adapted to its circle of readers, and the Boys' Illustrated News appeals to a wider circle with equal success.

Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin begin this month a new serial, the Life and Works of St. Paul, by Dr. Farrar. Among the numerous periodicals issued by this firm are—The Magazine of Art, Popular Edition of Picturesque Europe, the Family Magazine, Universal History, Gleanings from Popular Authors, Picturesque America, British Ballads, Old and New London, Old and New Edinburgh, Science for All, Familiar Wild Flowers, and Royal Shakspeare.

Other magazines and serial publications received are—giving first place to the ladies—Ladies' Gazette of Fashion, Le Follet, La Saison, Le Monde Elegant, World of Fashion, Myra's Journal, Myra's Mid-Monthly, Weldon's Ladies' Journal and Household Journal, and Dictionary of Needlework; Art and Letters, St. Nicholas, Irish Monthly, Universal Instructor, Month, Home, Science Gossip, Argosy, Good Words, Leisure Hour, Burlington, and Churchman's Shilling Magazine; and monthly parts of All the Year Round, Household Words, Daisy Family Story Paper, Knowledge, Our Darlings, Sunday at Home, Sunday Magazine, Day of Rest, Boy's Own Paper, and Girl's Own Paper.

A meeting of friends of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution was held on the 2nd inst. at its house, John-street, Adelphi—Sir Edward Perrott, Bart., in the chair. A silver medal was voted to Major Scott, chairman of the Dover branch of the institution, for gallantly volunteering to take the vacant place of one of the regular crew of the Dover life-boat, and assisting to save five of the crew of the barque Chin Chin, of Jersey, which was wrecked off the South Foreland, during a strong wind and a very heavy sea on Dec. 9. The second service clasp of the institution was voted to Mr. Robert Wilds, coxswain of the North Deal life-boat, in acknowledgment of his continued gallant services in that boat in saving life from shipwreck. Rewards amounting to £111 were granted to the crews of different life-boats of the institution for services rendered during the past month.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

MECHANISM OF THE SENSES—TASTE AND SMELL.

Professor McKendrick's third lecture, given on Tuesday, Jan. 31, began with remarks on the physical conditions of taste. All substances capable of creating taste are soluble in the fluid of the mouth, and insoluble colloidal bodies are tasteless. To produce taste the soluble matters must act on the papillae of the tongue. No definite action can be discovered between the chemical condition of bodies and their taste. The sensation of taste, excited by electrical stimulation, is certainly due to electrolytic products. The sense of taste is frequently affected by disease. The base of the tongue is most sensitive to bitters, and the tip to sweets. The extreme delicacy of this sense is proved by the exceeding minuteness of the particles which it detects. Ennemoser has shown by experiments that the perceptive power is increased at a much more rapid rate than the strength of the solution. The sense of smell was next considered, a description being given of the anatomical arrangements and the olfactory region in the upper part of the nostrils. The nature of odorous substances was then discussed, and their possible mode of action. Matter capable of exciting smell must be extremely subdivided, or be a gas or vapour. This was illustrated by striking experiments, the object of which was to show the possibility of particles of dust wetted with odorous vapours mechanically irritating the terminal organs of smell. The Professor alluded to Dr. Tyndall's experiments showing the power which odorous vapours possess of absorbing radiant heat. Professor McKendrick also demonstrated how aqueous vapour in the air increases the intensity of odours, to which is due the delicious perfume of flowers after a shower. To excite smell odorous vapours must be inhaled, mere contact with the membrane being insufficient. To keep up the sensation the action must be repeated, and even then the sense soon becomes blunted to an odour. After noticing the remarkable peculiarities of the sense in fishes, he briefly alluded to "after sensations of smell," in some persons very vivid, and finally considered the connection of taste and smell in the appreciation of flavours.

CORALS.

Professor H. N. Moseley, F.R.S., in his third lecture, given on Thursday, the 2nd inst., commented on the peculiarities of the structure of the Alcyonaria, Ambellula, Sarcophyton, and White Coral. He then described the anatomy, eggs, and development of the young of Red and Pink Coral. The Organ Coral, so named from its formation as pipes, and its fossil allies were next considered. This was followed by remarks on the peculiarities of the two groups of the Hydrocorallinae, the Milleporidae, and Stylasteridae, the structure of the former being compared with that of the Hydra ectinaria; and, finally, the speculations regarding their reproduction were explained. The whole lecture was illustrated by a series of beautiful magnified photographs, projected on the screen by electric light.

ACTION OF GASES AND VAPOURS UPON RADIANT HEAT.

Professor Tyndall gave the discourse at the evening meeting on Friday, the 3rd inst. He began by referring to the atomic theory propounded by ancient philosophers, especially Epicurus and Lucretius, and now generally received. They held that all existing things are composed of immeasurably minute solid indestructible atoms. Molecules are groups of atoms; thus, two atoms of oxygen and one of carbon constitute a molecule of carbonic acid, and two atoms of hydrogen and one of oxygen form a molecule of water. These molecules are free in the condition of gas and vapour, and constrained in the liquid state. Radiant heat is identical with light in regard to its transmission through the atmosphere. In 1859 Dr. Tyndall experimented upon free molecules, and found different kinds to possess different degrees of power in absorbing radiant heat. Nitrogen and hydrogen, when united as ammonia, though transparent to light, stopped one thousand times the amount of heat. Compounds of gases varied in this respect. Magnus, and some other philosophers, denied this power, and asserted that the results were due to the condensation of the vapours into liquids on the sides of the tubes and plates of rock-salt employed in the experiments. To this action Dr. Tyndall agreed, but denied its extent, which he verified by many experiments, fully demonstrating the action of the free molecules in absorbing heat. His results were set forth in diagrams. When the molecules were compressed into half the space, the amount of action was still the same; it corresponded to the number of the molecules, remaining constant during the whole of the changes. The absorption of heat by vapours in successive impulses has been shown to produce sound, and thus testify to its power of absorbing heat. Simple gases absorbing little heat are silent; but the introduction of a little aqueous vapour into the tube produces a loud sound. References were made to the experiments of Mr. Patrick Wilson, which proved the greater absorptive power of the atmosphere in the night than in the daytime; and also to the experiments of Dr. Wells relating to dew, and those of General Strachey, in India. The body of the air is practically a vacuum to the rays of heat, and all the heat absorbed is due to the presence of the aqueous vapour. Experiments have shown that the radiant heat of the sun is twice its illuminating power, and that it is increased at great elevations. The absorptive power of our atmosphere is of immense importance, since if it were removed all vegetation would cease.

BEETHOVEN'S SYSTEM OF COMPOSITION.

Professor Ernst Pauer, in beginning his third lecture on Saturday last, the 4th inst., stated that the sonata is a shortened and condensed suite. Emanuel Bach was the inventor of the modern sonata, of which his compositions contain the germ, through his introduction of the lyric principle. The sonata was much developed by Mozart, Haydn, and Clementi. Beethoven felt that the resources of the piano deserved a richer and more elevated treatment than they had received. Haydn first initiated the principle of thematic work, in the modern sense, which really comprises the secret of Beethoven's power and greatness. The Professor then gave the leading principles of thematic work in ten canons, which show that this mode of composition is founded on logical principles, under the influence of which the composer makes the most of his materials, thus producing a never-ending variety and unending charm. The development of the original idea to the climax is fully manifest in the works of Haydn and Mozart, but has been brought to the most wonderful perfection by Beethoven. The reason of this rests upon the strength, interest, and rich substance of his principal subjects, which he took infinite pains to invent in a strong and pure form, being the text on which the musical sermon is preached. This was shown in his sketch-books, which are full of interesting material treated in various modes. In composing he dived into the very depths of his own soul, and brought its richest treasures to the surface, selecting only what suited his purpose. He was an eminent example of that genius which is unity of thought penetrating through manifold phases. The lecture concluded with the analysis and performance on the pianoforte of the superb sonata No. 4 in E flat.

OUR FEATHERED FRIENDS.

THRUSHES.

The large genus of passerine birds popularly known as thrushes, is scattered all over the world, and includes that splendid beauty the golden oriole. It is not, however, of the family as a whole, but of its English representatives, we are speaking. Of the seven species found in England, four, the song-thrush, missel-thrush, blackbird, and water-ouzel, stay with us all through the year; two, the fieldfare and redwing, come to us only for the winter; and one, the ring-ouzel, is a summer visitor. As the last-named bird is the only one of the family not now with us, and as it is in February that the thrush and blackbird resume their song, the thrushes are the most prominent birds of the month now opening.

Winter still holds the land in his chilling grip. Nature is still asleep. Vegetation shows but scanty signs of life, brown and bare are the fields, and naked and cheerless the trees and hedgerows. But the thrush sings. Impatient at winter's long tarrying, he cannot, any more than the lowly snowdrop, await the coming of spring. Like that snow-white gem of Flora's, whose anxiety to wed the sunbeams is so keen, she forces her green tips through the ground before the snow has left us; so his restless ardour to woo his love cannot brook any further delay. Our thrush does not pair until the latter end of February, nor is the nest built until the last days of March; yet early in the present month, on the first clear day, we hear him warbling forth, in sweetest cadences, a song that cannot fail to touch the heart of her he fain would wed.

It is in the shrubberies chiefly, amongst the dark foliage of the evergreens, that we hear his delightful love-song. Other haunts he has; for there is scarcely a wood, plantation, thicket, or hedgerow, meadow, lawn, or garden, in which, at some time of the year, we are not almost sure to find him; and who that frequents our London parks has not heard his clear and liquid strain? But it is amongst the laurels, yews, and hollies, and where the ilex, ivy, and other evergreens nestle round country homes, that he loves best to dwell. It is here, amongst the shrubberies, where he seems so thoroughly at home, that we are most attracted by his lively, sprightly ways. How pretty it is to watch him on the neighbouring grass-land, or the lawn, his wings somewhat drooping, raise his head askance, as he hops about him in quest of food—showing us every now and then his mottled breast, and as often turning his back upon us as though fully confident we will not harm him! But though familiar in disposition, he loves seclusion, and retires directly his meal is over, to his leafy haunt to sing perchance afresh his love-lay. Rich, mellow, and sustained, his song has such full purity of intonation, and his notes are withal so varied, it were hard to find his equal amongst all the warbling choirs of April and May: excepting the nightingale's trill, not even Philomela himself can surpass him in the compass of his strain.

But the song-thrush—"singdrossel" as they call him in Germany, the "mavis" of Scotland, and the "throstle" of our English poets—is not the only member of the thrush family whose voice is heard in this raw, bleak month. The flute-like notes of the blackbird are one of our earliest indications that spring is not far distant. Loud, mellow, rich, and clear, his song is one that always attracts attention, though it lacks the variety we find in the thrush's rain of melody. His notes, which are only five or six in number, are more remarkable for power and tone than for compass or variety; but so brilliant are they, those few notes of his, he has always been ranked amongst our choicest warblers.

This shy, vigilant, restless bird is the "merle" of our poets, and the "woosel-cock," as Shakespeare calls him, "so black of hue, with orange tawny bill"—a name still traceable in the "garden ouzel" of some of our English counties. The blackbird frequents gardens, shrubberies, moist woods, groves, copses, and hedgerows, affecting the cultivated rather than the wilder districts: like the thrush, however, he has a preference for the shrubbery, where the perennial foliage of the evergreens affords him the seclusion he loves. Like the thrush, he is solitary in his disposition, being rarely seen in company with others of his species, except in the early morning and evening when feeding. Like the thrush, too, he loves retirement and seclusion; only he is far more retiring, and far shyer, than the mavis. From February until far on in the leafy month of June we hear his mellow pipe, but the jet-black chorister himself we rarely see.

If, however, you want to get a peep at him you may, by rising early and visiting the grass-land nearest to his evergreen homes, where you will most probably find him hunting for the worms that have been indiscreet enough to leave the holes in which they have passed the night. And if you come early enough, you will see the sable beauty in his most graceful attitude, which is when he alights on the ground. For a few seconds the coy creature remains motionless. Half-crouching, his tail slightly elevated, his wings only partly closed, his breast close to the herbage, his head raised and turned slightly aside, he listens, and looks warily around. Then, if he has satisfied himself that he is safe from intrusion, he hops about in search of a breakfast, stopping every now and then to look about him and listen. Though solitary at all other times, the blackbirds, as we have said, feed together. One by one you see them dart out from the neighbouring shrubberies, and alight, in the pretty crouching way we have tried to describe, on their chosen pasture. And one by one, their hunger allayed, they fly back rapidly, as they came, to their respective trees and shrubs. In the winter, when he cannot get a meal off the pastures, the blackbird feeds on the berries of the hawthorn, wild rose, holly, mountain-ash, and such like, and on grains and seeds. He is very partial too—and so is the mavis—to the little snails, whose prettily marked shells are so noticeable under all our hedgerows.

As might be inferred from his early song, the blackbird pairs early in the season—sometimes in the middle, but oftener towards the close, of the present month. The female bird has not the jet-black plumage of her mate; it is a dusky brown, and her bill, instead of being, like his, a bright orange, is brown. It is when she is sitting, and especially just after a shower, that his rich, flute-like notes are oftenest heard. It is then, too, that we hear his plaintive but beautiful call-note. As the spring advances, his song begins with earliest dawn, continuing at intervals throughout the day, until the gathering gloom of evening and his own black plumage fade together into night.

And amongst the very earliest music of the year we must include the song of the missel-thrush. Indeed, so early is it heard, his music, such as it is, belongs rather to mid-winter than to February. In December and January, even when the snow has spread its glittering shroud over the frost-bound earth, we hear his loud wild strain; and loudest and wildest is the lay just before a burst of rough weather—whence his popular name of "stormcock." This noble bird, which is not only the largest of our thrushes, but the largest of all our feathered choristers, is a frequenter of woods and fields. Of a bold and quarrelsome disposition, it is also wild and wary, and shuns the dwellings of man, except during the period of incubation, when it not infrequently visits our gardens and orchards. It is from this partiality of the bird for orchards, and from its supposed fondness for the berries of the missel-toe—found often in great profusion on apple-trees—that it has earned its name of missel or misseltoe thrush. During the winter months these birds are gregarious, being seen in flocks therein from a dozen to fifty or sixty. They are sometimes also seen in company with fieldfares. But their nesting season is close at hand, and very soon the flocks will have broken up, and the missel-thrushes will have paired off, each with his own particular mate, to the woods, and, here and there, to gardens and orchards. In the spring, when all other birds are doing their utmost to please their sitting mates, and are singing to them in their sweetest strains, the stormcock drops his lay; nor does he resume it until the shrieking winds and driving snow of another winter arouse once more his spirit of defiance.

When the swallows and the rest of our summer birds abandoned us towards the close of autumn, two birds there were that came to us from the icy North. The same winds that bore the swallows southward, brought us the fieldfare and the redwing. These two pretty thrushes are still with us, though, doubtless, their little hearts are yearning for their native pine forests of Norway. It is in the pine and fir forests of Scandinavia that they build their nests, and there they sing their love-songs. The song of the redwing is said to be exceedingly beautiful—so beautiful, indeed, that Linnaeus has dubbed him the "Swedish nightingale." But whether his strains can really be compared to Philomela's is a point we must leave to those who have heard him in the land of his birth in the joyous spring-time; for here he rarely, if ever, does more than practise a few of his notes in a very low tone—and no wonder, for how can the poor little wanderer sing when his "heart is over the seas?"

The redwing is the smallest of our thrushes. He can also be easily distinguished from the rest of the family by the abundance of white on the under parts, and by the pale reddish hue—whence his name—on the under side of the wings. He has the same "parded breast" as the thrush, missel-thrush, and fieldfare, though each of these birds have distinguishing tints for a background. Both the redwing and fieldfare are shy and wary on their arrival in our islands; but much of their natural timidity wears off, especially the redwing's, after they have been with us a month or so, and when hard weather compels them to come nearer our dwellings. The redwing frequents the more cultivated parts of the country, the fieldfare the wilder districts. Well-wooded parks and shrubberies are perhaps the favourite resorts of the redwing, though it is also seen in the fields, lanes, and, in severe weather, by the seashore; but, when the ground is frozen, a great number of the poor little things die of sheer starvation, for the berries to which the fieldfare betakes itself when animal substances fail, are only eaten by the redwing as a last resource. Both birds are gregarious, going in flocks of considerable magnitude.

In the spring, when the fieldfare and redwing are winging their way to their pine forests of the north, another thrush will be on his way to our shores from the regions of the Mediterranean. But as the ring-ouzel is one of our summer visitors, we shall say nothing of him just now. And the water-ouzel, or dipper, though a permanent resident with us, is in shape, habits, and disposition so different from the rest of the thrushes, him, too, we may leave for the present in his wild home on the banks of his mountain and moorland streams.

W. OAK RHIND.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

- | |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| RAILLIERS, TINDALL, AND COX.
Consumption: A Re-Investigation of its Causes. By C. W. De Lacy Evans.
BAILY AND CO.
Who's Who in 1882.
BENTLEY.
Zoe: A Girl of Genius. A Novel. By Lady Violet Greville. 3 vols.
BLACKIE AND SON.
William Ewart Gladstone and his Contemporaries: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 vols.
CAMMELL, PETER, AND GALPIN.
Shakespeare Reading-Book: Being Seven-temperatures: Fifty Years of Social and Political Progress. By Thomas Archer. Vol. II. 1840 to 1864.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Bogart my Neighbour. A Novel. By E. D. Gerard. 3 |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|

A CHINESE FESTIVAL AT SOURABAYA, JAVA.—SEE PAGE 138.

MONTENEGRINS STEALING ACROSS THE AUSTRIAN FRONTIER, NEAR CRIVOSCIE, HERZEGOVINA.

VALENTINE'S DAY: GREAT EXPECTATIONS.

VALENTINE'S DAY: GREAT EXPECTATIONS.

The customary sending and receiving of pretty love-tokens, epistolary, poetical, and pictorial, on the morn of St. Valentine, has descended from the adult youth of both sexes, who perhaps no longer care for themselves to keep up its practice, to become the occasion of a little playful excitement among the children, especially the girls below their "teens." Elder sisters may still observe it with sympathy; and the pleasant family party at the open house-door, in our Artist's drawing, consists of half a dozen fair damsels of different ages, besides the housemaid in their rear, eagerly waiting the postman's arrival. They might have reason, apparently, to expect at least a hundred letters for each of them; if we judge from the size of the paper-basket which has been supposed needful to contain all that this morning's delivery should bring. It is almost big enough to carry the youngest, a three-year-old little lady, still called "Baby," whose enjoyment of the fun beams from a merry childish face; while her hand lays a firm grasp on the rim of the basket. Miss Beatrice, who was eight last birthday and will be nine in May, has taken upon herself the important office, standing in front, of receiving the whole load of letters, which will presently be cast into that capacious vessel. She will then, with a merry shout, followed by the laughing train, rush up stairs and throw them all in a heap on the floor, to be scrambled for and claimed by their rightful owners. Their innocent glee may well be imagined; thanks to St. Valentine, whose turn of visitation comes pretty soon after New-Year's Day and Christmas, which likewise bring their own delivery of welcome friendly and affectionate tokens.

MONTENEGRIN RAIDS IN HERZEGOVINA.

The Austrian Government, which three or four years ago took possession of the provinces of Bosnia and Herzegovina, formerly belonging to Turkey, has now to deal with a troublesome insurrection, limited at present to certain districts, but probably fomented and supported by the Slav populations of the neighbouring independent Principalities. One of our Illustrations shows a few of the Montenegrin warriors stealing across the frontier into the territory of Crivoscie, for the purpose of joining the insurgents there. Some accounts of their forces already in arms have been published, from which it appears that in Herzegovina there are 450 men stationed between Fotscha and Stolacz, under the command of Davidavich, all armed with Martini rifles. They are also reported to be in possession of a Montenegrin mountain-gun. Two hundred insurgents under Osman Bey hold a position to the north of Bilek, while 650 men under the Montenegrin Voivode Vojnics are at Nevesinje. Both the latter bodies are very badly armed. In addition to the above, small marauding bands of from twenty to thirty men are met with in all directions. In the Crivoscie district there are about 1600 insurgents, half of whom are armed with Martini rifles; and in the Železnijiza valley in Bosnia, south of Sarajevo, there is a strong insurgent force reported to be commanded by Russian officers, and provided with a complete mountain battery.

An official despatch to the Minister of War states that Colonel Hotze, who is in command of a flying column of considerable strength, after ascending the Rogol ridge and securing it in front, intended to surround the almost inaccessible position held by the main body of the insurgents on the Krbijina heights, and then to effect a junction with the garrison of Foca. At Varos, however, he learnt that there was a large gathering of insurgents between Mrežica and Susejano. After a few unimportant skirmishes between the insurgents and the troops drawn from Foca to occupy Susejano, Jokve, and Brod, Colonel Hotze, fearing that the important position of Foca might be threatened, marched for that place by way of Mrežica and Ustik Plina, after previously driving back the insurgents, and arrived there on the 2nd inst. We now learn that the insurgents have captured and burnt Cogniza, a place of strategic value between Mostar and Sarajevo.

The Servian Government has adopted stringent regulations for the police supervision of emigrants from Bosnia and the Herzegovina, many of whom have been leaving Servia to join the insurrection.

OBITUARY.

SIR W. H. DRAKE, K.C.B.

Sir William Henry Drake, K.C.B., late Director of Supplies and Transport at the War Office, whose death we announced briefly last week, was son of Commissary-General John Drake, of Exmouth, by Maria, his wife, daughter of Mr. George Story, of Silksworth Hall, in the county of Durham, and was born in 1812. From 1838 to 1848 he was Colonial Treasurer in Western Australia, became successively Assistant-Commissary-General in 1845 and Commissary-General in 1849, and served in the Crimea. In 1867 he was appointed Controller for Ireland, and in 1869 for Great Britain, and from 1871 to 1877 he was Director of Supplies and Transports. He was made a C.B. in 1856, and K.C.B. in 1871. Sir William married, first, in 1834, Louisa, daughter of Mr. James Purkis; and secondly, in 1862, Elizabeth Lucy, daughter of the Hon. George Wood, Member of the Council at the Cape.

SIR W. PALLISER, M.P.

Major Sir William Palliser, C.B., M.P., died very suddenly from heart disease on the 4th inst. at his residence in Earl's-court-square. Sir William Palliser was well known through the projectiles that bear his name for piercing armour-plated ships, and for many practical advances in both offensive and defensive armament. The many services Sir William Palliser rendered to the science of artillery secured him the Companionship of the Bath in 1868 and the honour of knighthood in 1873. In 1875 he received from the King of Italy the Cross of Commander of the Crown of Italy. The youngest son of Lieutenant-Colonel Wray Palliser (Waterford Militia), he was born in Dublin in 1830, and was therefore only fifty-two years of age. He was educated successively at Rugby, at Trinity College, Dublin, and at Trinity Hall, Cambridge; and finally, passing through the Staff College at Sandhurst, he entered the Rifle Brigade in 1855, and was transferred to the 18th Hussars in 1858. He remained in the service to the end of 1871, when he retired by the sale of his commission. At the general election of 1880 Sir William Palliser was returned as a Conservative for Taunton.

We have also to record the deaths of—

Rev. Charles Bowen, Rector of St. Mary's, and Hon. Canon of Chester, on the 27th ult., at his Rectory, aged seventy-two.

Lieutenant-Colonel William B. Caldwell, formerly 92nd Highlanders, and sometime Governor of Assiniboia (Manitoba), on the 29th ult., at St. Stephen's-road, Westbourne Park.

The Rev. Edward Langdale, B.A., on the 29th ult., at East Hothly, Sussex, in his eightieth year. He was for fifty-four years Rector of that parish.

General Frederick Johnston, formerly of the 67th Foot, on the 31st ult., in his ninety-second year. The deceased entered the Army in April, 1810.

Mr. James John Bodkin, of Kilclooney, Galway, recently, aged eighty. He was for some time a member of the Imperial Parliament for the county of Galway.

The Hon. William Grant, of Sierra Leone, Member of the Legislative Council, on the 28th ult., in his fifty-first year. He was engaged largely in planting in Africa, and was proprietor of the weekly West African Reporter.

Mr. Samuel Sharp, F.S.A., F.G.S., on the 22nd ult., at Great Harrowden Hall, near Wellingborough, aged sixty-seven. This well-known geologist and archaeologist made large collections illustrative of those subjects, some of which were purchased for the British Museum; and he was also known as a numismatist.

Lady Brodie (Philotha Margaret), widow of Sir Benjamin Collins Brodie, Bart., F.R.S., Professor of Chemistry in the University of Oxford (who died Nov. 24 last), on the 27th ult. Her Ladyship was the daughter of Mr. John Vincent Thompson, serjeant-at-law, and was married to Sir Benjamin Brodie April 11, 1848: by him she had one son, the present Baronet, and five daughters.

Mr. John Marriott Davenport, F.S.A., of Oxford, a leading solicitor there, on the 31st ult., aged seventy-two. For fifty years he was Clerk of the Peace for Oxfordshire, and since 1858 District Registrar of the Court of Probate. He acted for a long period as Under-Sheriff of the county, his thorough acquaintance with which was exemplified by his "Oxfordshire Annals," and a complete list of its Sheriffs since the Conquest, with historical annotations.

The Rev. Canon William Stone, on the 2nd inst., in the Precincts, Canterbury Cathedral, in his eighty-second year. He was formerly Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford, and in 1822 took first class in classics. He was Incumbent of Christ Church, Spitalfields, from 1829 to 1856, and of St. George the Martyr, Canterbury, from 1858 to 1866, and was appointed Canon of the Cathedral in 1854. He published several sermons and contributed to general literature. He leaves three daughters, and an only son, Dr. Stone, one of the physicians to St. Thomas's Hospital.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated June 17, 1878), with three codicils (dated July 12, 1880, and June 10 and Oct. 1, 1881), of Mr. Joseph Henry Nettlefold, J.P., formerly of Birmingham, but late of Kingsfield, King's Heath, Worcestershire, who died on Nov. 22 last, at Allean House, Pitlochrie, Perthshire, was proved on the 30th ult. by Frederick Nettlefold, the brother and acting executor, the value of the personal estate amounting to upwards of £287,000. The testator leaves to his wife, Mrs. Mary Maria Nettlefold, £1000 and his wines and consumable stores, and she is to have the use for life of his furniture, plate, books, and household effects; a sum of £132,000 is to be set aside upon trust to pay the income to his wife for life, she supporting and educating his children while minors, subject to the payment thereof of portions to his three daughters on their respectively attaining twenty-one, and further portions on their attaining twenty-five or marriage, and eventually, on the death of the widow, the remainder of the said sum is to be held upon trust for them; to his said brother he bequeaths £500 for his trouble as executor, two sums of £10,000 each advanced to two of his nephews, and all his pictures by David Cox—these pictures, however, we understand were given by the testator shortly before his death to the Birmingham Art Institute; a lease of a piece of ground adjoining the Moseley and King's Heath Institute is granted to certain persons for a term of 1000 years at a peppercorn rent, if demanded, and, although not so stated, the ground is no doubt intended for the benefit of the said institute. As to the residue of his estate, real and personal, the testator gives one half to his said brother, and the other half to the children of his late brother Edward John Nettlefold; and he mentions as his reason for not leaving anything to his five sisters that he had made provision for them in his lifetime.

The will (dated June 20, 1878) of Mr. George Samuel Hayes, late of Brighton, who died on Dec. 4 last, was proved on the 12th ult. by Benjamin Whitaker, Edward Shimells Wilson, Edward John Wilson, and Benjamin West, the executors, the personal estate amounting to over £55,000. The testator leaves the pictures painted by his late wife to his son, George Huntington Hayes, and £20,000 upon trust for him; and legacies to friends and executors. Two thirds of the residue of his real and personal estate he gives to the children of his late half-sister, Mrs. Dykes; and the remaining one third between his niece, Lucy Hayes, and the daughters of his late half-brother, John Allanson Huntington.

The will (dated Jan. 14, 1874), with a codicil (dated Feb. 9, 1876), of Mr. Francis Thomas Gibb, late of Greenford Lodge, near Southall, Middlesex, who died on Oct. 30 last, was proved on the 20th ult. by Mrs. Emmeline Favell Gibb, the acting executrix, the personal estate amounting to over £52,000. The testator leaves legacies to his brothers and other relatives, and also to friends and servants; and all his real estate, including his estate in Cardiganshire, and the residue of the personalty, upon trust for Francis Hughes Gibb, the son of his late nephew, Charles John Gibb, if and when he shall attain twenty-five.

The will (dated Sept. 1, 1881), with a codicil (dated Nov. 11 following), of Mrs. Mary Anne Smith, late of No. 21, Russell-square, who died on Nov. 13 last, was proved on the 25th ult. by John Norbury, John Foster Elmslie, and David Laing, jun., the executors; the personal estate amounting to over £44,000. The testatrix bequeaths £5000 to the London Hospital; £500 each to the Scotch Hospital, Crane-court, Fleet-street; the Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, Victoria Park, and the Royal Free Hospital, Gray's-inn-road; £300 to the Royal Sea-Bathing Infirmary, Margate;—£100 each to the Parochial Schools of St. George's, Bloomsbury; the Infant Orphan Asylum, Wanstead; the schools in connection with Christchurch, Woburn-square, in Little Guildford-street; the London Truss Society, and the National Benevolent Institution;—£50 each to the Bloomsbury Dispensary and University College Hospital; and very numerous legacies to friends, godchildren, servants, and others, all free of duty. As to the residue of her property, she gives one half to the children of Henry Wyatt and Susannah, his wife, and the other half to the children of Peter Gay. The deceased was the widow of Mr. George Smith, distiller, of Whitechapel, who died about sixteen years since, and twelve of whose horses drew the funeral car of the Duke of Wellington.

The will (dated Dec. 10, 1851) of Miss Sophia Bridget Hunt, late of Stoke Doyle, Oundle, Northamptonshire, and of No. 20, St. James's-square, Bath, who died on Nov. 25 last, was proved on the 13th ult. by John Hunt, the brother and acting executor, the value of the personal estate exceeding £42,000. The testatrix gives legacies to or upon trust for her brothers John and Edward, for her sister, Maria Anne, and for two cousins; and the residue of her real and personal estate to her brother John.

The will (dated Aug. 9, 1881) of Mr. Edward Frederick Christian Ritter, late of Wildwood, near Enfield, who died on Nov. 29 last, was proved on the 24th ult. by Mrs. Jane Ritter, the widow, and Samuel Maxwell Alexander, the acting executors, the personal estate amounting to over £24,000. The testator leaves to his wife £500 and all his jewellery, furniture, plate, household effects, horses and carriages; to his daughter Jane, £200 per annum during the widowhood of his wife; and the residue of his property, real and personal, upon trust for his wife for life or widowhood, and then for his five children, Mrs. Elizabeth Robertson, Mrs. Anna Weir, Miss Jane Ritter, John Edward Ritter, and Frederick Ritter. The testator directs that the Wildwood estate, of about fifty-five acres, is not to be sold during the widowhood of his wife without her consent; and his Australian estates not until the death of the last survivor of his five children.

The will (dated April 19, 1879), with a codicil (dated Nov. 20, 1880), of Mrs. Marianne Williams, late of Grove-road, Stamford-hill, who died on Nov. 10 last, was proved on Dec. 30 last by Frederick Henry Williams and Walter Edward Williams, the sons, the executors, the personal estate exceeding £23,000. The testatrix makes provision for her daughters, and her son Benjamin, and gives legacies to grandchildren and servants. The residue of her property she gives to her said sons, Frederick Henry and Walter Edward.

The will (dated Dec. 3, 1879) of the Rev. Francis Knyvett Leighton, D.D., Warden of All Souls' College, Oxford, who died on Oct. 13 last, was proved on the 14th ult. by Mrs. Catherine Leighton, the widow and acting executrix, the personal estate being over £5000. The testator gives £600 and his jewellery to his wife and the use of certain of his furniture, plate, &c., for life; a legacy to his sister; and the residue of the personalty to his son, Charles Arthur Baldwin Knyvett Leighton.

The War Office has acceded to the request of the commanding officers of the metropolitan volunteers that a volunteer review shall be held on Easter Monday if a suitable locality can be found.—The annual spring muster of all the troops composing the City of London Volunteer force is fixed for Saturday, May 6.

VALENTINE'S DAY.

Why was it not in June? It should have been glorified with sunshine, and musical with larks. The hawthorn should have made it odorous, the buttercup have burnished its meadows, and the laburnum have gilt its gardens. Nay, the very queen of summer, the rose herself, should have flushed into crimson at its coming. Languorous sultriness were the fitting temperature of the air it should breathe, and the drowsing boom of the bee should accord a murmurous welcome to one whose very life is nothing if not passion, hot and tender as Juliet's own that southern night she sighed herself to her Romeo. The serenade of the lovelorn nightingale, the gush of the rejoicing thrush, seem the minstrelsy willed for it from creation.

But February! Of all months in the year, why that vernal November? February, clammy with fogs or rheumatic with rain. February, it may be, ghastly with sheeted snows, the ghosts of sepulchred blossoms, or iron with ruthless frost that kills comfort in all but boisterous health and steel-nerved skaters. What has the laughing saint of burning sighs to do with iced streams and solid lakes? or more probably with the abominations of mud and mire that make our ways into very Sloughs of Despond that we poor mortal pilgrims almost fail to struggle through.

Pan invented the festival; did he? Then was he more of the mere sylvan brute than sculptors or Theocritus have imagined him for us. The god must have been more minus and the animal more plus in his deityship than we have dreamed. Ah, but I err. How could I wrong the divine art of Italia by deeming it ignorant or perverse? It was in the February of Campania and Sicily, of Parthenope and of Hybla, that the lover of Syrius fixed this glowing day. There, in the sweet South, a cloudless purple heaven hung over it, and a thousand sun-bathed flowers and fragrant shrubs watched for its advent and welcomed its kingly progress. It is an alien here from its own warm clime, "the land of the orange and myrtle." So much the better, we say, now we reflect and revise our first impulse of ignorant wonderment. For the drearier the region, the more is the need of this radiant visitant. In its primal abode it did but gild the sunshine and add a perfume to the violet. With us its lustrousness and warmth illumine the murkiness of winter ways and the dreariness of chill and sombre skies. Our hearts grow glad with an Hesperian glow as this February fourteenth heralds the coming of the comrade of Cupid and the forerunner of Hymen. The twilight air grows lustrous in its presence. Sunlessness turns to a radiance of glory around it. And if mere inanimate nature laughs into light beneath its gladsome glances, how do the beating hearts in human bosoms dance into delight to its footsteps! How its coming melts the ice in the frostiest natures of the mart and the manufactory! Those meant for men and made into money-grubs—even they, in counting-house and shop, in busy street and ledgered office, are through some golden hours, it may be, at times conscious of the old natural throbs of feelings felt in boyhood and in youth. Their fancies, like to Falstaff's, fall to "babbling of green fields" and of fond, foolish days they once gave to mirth and merriment, when they lived for jests and jollity, and "nods and becks and wreathed smiles" were more to them than lucky hits on "Change and rises in the Share Market bringing golden gains. Just for these February moments they relive their hours when brown eyes were worshipped, and it was heaven to "toy with the tangles of Neaira's hair."

If grey-beards are thus touched by St. Valentine to boyishness, how does the charm work on those as yet in the first grandeur of their manhood, or those yet younger, on whose would-be manly lips and chins the dawn of moustache and beard is as yet but an expectancy and a hope!

To them each postal delivery is a crisis, and each letter a heart-quake. How they would simulate a stoicism of aspect, how vainly! as the over-weighted man of missives toils or staggers to their business abodes! Mincing-lane and Capel-court, Cheapside and Leadenhall-street, are, for these hours only, palpitating and hysteric on other treasures than bills and bank-balances, good lines and heavy transactions.

There has been a grand transformation-scene under the shadows of the Mansion House, and in the very heart of the business centre of the mighty city of commerce. Dick Whittington has turned to Harlequin, and is lost to all but the lures of Columbine. The gloomy dens of drudgery are gone. The abodes of bliss are before and around us. Till eve's grey curtain obscures the scene, some gleams of light paradisaical will linger in our vision and irradiate our inmost hearts.

Come with us to the stern palaces of Themis or to the dusty, musty chambers in which her votaries befoe their brains with the subtle problems of cases darkened by law which should determine them. See the gay or anxious twinkle in the eyes of briefless barristers and of over-worked Q.C.s. He who has hardly as yet worn a wig, "as to the manner born"—he, of course, is taking the fever naturally. Love and measles are the doom of boyhood and the catastrophes of youth. There shall be whispers and light laughs in Courts to-day; and other Judges than the one yet dreaming of Whittier's barefooted Maud Muller shall be heard by the mocking Bar humming old love-tunes, musical of the past that has wandered back to them, in all its fairness, with the fleeting amateness of this day of St. Valentine.

So is it with the sentry on guard, the sailor on his watch; the policeman whose "life is not a happy one," even he this day has memories of cooks who comfort, and of the mutton they dispense to their public guardians. Does the ruggedness of the Coster soften this fourteenth, so that he forgets the stormy delights, the fierce joy of trampling on wife or mother, or the certaminia gaudia, "the rapture of the strife" of kicking bobbies or mutilating belated travellers? Is yon sweep coloured sweetly in thought by the softening Saint? Look at those mutes acting, with such assumed sorrow, anguish too deep for tears at the home of death. Can it be that deep down, hidden beneath their inky cloaks and garbs of woe, even now love laughs unseen, and behind those darkest clouds of gloom there are silver linings that Valentine Day has tenderly touched in?

But we have plunged in medias res, like epic poets. What of the homes suburban from which these City toilers have crowded to their many vocations? Were not small noses flattened, from earliest dawn, against front window-panes, in eager watchfulness for the burdened advent of the Valentine bringer? Oh, the shrill shouts of tiny exultations that greet the delivery of the longed-for letters! But we drop our useless pen that, all in vain, would strive to express the maiden hopes and girlish fears, the blushing ecstasies of tender fifteen or more mature twenty, shyly or triumphantly bearing off the dear laced and perfumed treasures to be read and re-read in secret, and confided laughingly to sister or to friend.

Ah, that we were young once more! Give, oh give us back our youth, with the freshness of feeling that in thousands of unworn hearts to-day shall throb and flutter in welcome to the visitation of Saint Valentine and his presentments! Well, wife of mine, "you'll in your girls again be courted, and I'll go wooing with my boys." W. C. B.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS

have gained the HIGHEST AWARDS at all the recent INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITIONS, including the Two Gold Medals for Uprights and Grands, Melbourne, 1881; the First Prize, Queensland, 1880; the Two First Special Prizes, Sydney, 1880; the Legion of Honour, Paris, 1878, &c.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS' PIANOS for SALE, HIRE, and on the THREE-YEARS' SYSTEM.JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.

The principal of the previous honours gained by the BRINSMEAD PIANOS are:—

THE DIPLOMA OF HONOUR and GOLD MEDAL, South Africa, 1877.
THE GRAND MEDAL OF HONOUR and DIPLOMA OF MERIT, Philadelphia, 1876.
THE DIPLOMA OF HONOUR, Paris 1874, and the HONORARY MEMBERSHIP OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF FRANCE, Paris, 1870.
THE GOLD MEDAL, Paris, 1870.
THE DIPLOMA OF EXTRAORDINARY MERIT, Netherlands International Exhibition, 1869.
THE MEDAL OF HONOUR, Paris, 1867.
THE PRIZE MEDAL, London, 1863, &c.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.

for Extreme Climates.
With the Perfect Check Repeater Action, Patented 1862, 1863, 1871, 1875, 1879, and 1881, throughout Europe and America.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.

"Paris, Nov. 4, 1878.
"I have attentively examined the beautiful pianos of Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons that are exhibited at the Paris International Exhibition of 1878. I consider them to be exceptional in the case with which gradations of sound can be produced, from the softest to the most powerful tones. These excellent pianos merit the appreciation of all artists, as the tone is full as well as sustained, and the touch is of perfect evenness throughout its entire range, answering to very requirement of the pianist."
"Ch. Goussard."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.

"Paris, Sept. 8, 1878.
"We, the undersigned, certify that, after having seen and most conscientiously examined the English Pianos at the Universal Exhibition of 1878, we find that the piano belongs to the Grand Piano of the house of Brinsmead.
"NICOLAS RUBINSTEIN,
"D. MAGUAT,
"Chevalier ANTOINE DE KONSTANT, Court Pianist to the Emperor of Germany."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.

"I have pleasure in expressing my opinion that the Paris Exhibition Model Grand Pianofortes of Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons are unsurpassed. The tone is deliciously sweet, sustained, and extraordinarily powerful; the touch responds to the faintest and to the most trying strains on it, and the workmanship is simply perfect."
"W. Kuss."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.

"Illustrated London News."
"The principle of the Brinsmead firm is to give the best piano of its kind the best of materials, the best of care, the best of taste, and the best of finish, and this is why the manufacture in Kentish Town sends down to Wignam-street so many pianos perfect in scale, sustained in tone, elastic in touch, with equal and responsive touch, and, in fact, as near as possible to that ideal that all musicians must require. A thing of beauty that is a joy for ever."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.

"Daily Chronicle."
"In tone the instrument is exceedingly rich and sweet, and in touch the very perfection of lightness. Messrs. Brinsmead may certainly be congratulated upon their success."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.

"Morning Advertiser."
"The Legion of Honour. In addition to the other distinctions awarded to Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons at the Paris Exhibition of 1878, the founder of the firm has been created Chevalier of the Legion of Honour."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.

"Daily News."
"A new Pianoforte, recently manufactured by Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons, claims notice, not only on account of its beauty and richness of tone, but especially for some ingenious mechanical novelties, the most important being the addition of a third pedal, by means of which the sound of any note or notes may be almost indefinitely prolonged at the will of the player. Thus bass notes may be sustained after being struck by the left hand, which may then be taken away, and, with the right hand, may execute the most brilliant staccato passages, thus giving almost the effect of four hands. The patent 'check-repeater action,' a speciality of Messrs. Brinsmead, enables the performer to command with ease the most rapid reiteration of the same note; the facility of the key movement in general being such that glissando passages can be executed with such perfect ease as to render them practicable with the lightest touch. The volume of tone is intensified by a peculiar construction of the sounding-board, another improvement being the system of bridging, by which the vibrations are increased and rendered sympathetic. The Pianoforte is capable of all degrees of delicacy and power, its massive structure rendering it less liable to get out of tune than usual; and the instrument is altogether calculated to extend the reputation of its makers."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PIANOS

may be obtained of all the principal Musicellers.
Prices from 37 guineas to 350 guineas.

18, 20, WIGMORE-STREET, LONDON, W.,
and
THE "BRINSMEAD WORKS,"
GRAFTON-ROAD, KENTISH TOWN, N.W.

ILLUSTRATED LISTS FREE.

EVERY PIANO GUARANTEED FOR FIVE YEARS.

PETER ROBINSON'S MOURNING
WAREHOUSE,
REGENT-STREET, Nos. 256 to 262.MOURNING ORDERS SENT AT ONCE
UPON RECEIPT OF LETTER OR TELEGRAM.

A large Staff of very competent Dressmakers and ASSISTANTS are kept purposely to TRAVEL to all parts of the country—no matter the distance (free of any extra charge whatever to the customer) with a full assortment of Made-up Goods of the most fashionable and suitable description.

FOR A FAMILY MOURNING, and also Mourning for Servants.

Orders, however large, can be completed at very short notice by Dressmakers of the greatest proficiency (either French, German, or English).

Address—
PETER ROBINSON'S
COURT AND GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE,
256 to 262, REGENT-STREET, LONDON.

One of the most important Houses of its kind in England.
Established as a Mourning Warehouse Thirty Years.

COUTURIÈRES FRANÇAISES.

Experienced and good fitting Dressmakers.
Both French and English
(charges moderate),
at PETER ROBINSON'S COURT AND GENERAL
MOURNING WAREHOUSE, 256 to 262, Regent-street.

FASHIONABLE BLACK COSTUMES.

Cashmere and Satin de Lyon, or Silk, combined, perfectly New Styles,
made to Paris models,
from 5 guineas complete.

Also, very useful Costumes, at 2 guineas, with Cape or otherwise.

At PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT-STREET,
London, Nos. 256 to 262.

EVENING, DINNER, and BALL DRESSES.

A Magnificent Collection
of Handsome Evening Dresses,
all considerably Reduced in Price
during the Sale.

Black Satin Trimmed Lace, 3½ guineas.

Black Spanish Net Trimmed Satin, 2½ guineas.

Brussels Net, at 2½, 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d.

Non-Crushing Tulle, 4s.

Cream and Ivory Llama and Nuns' Cloth Trimmed Lace,
3s. 6d. and 3s. 6d.

Striped Grenadine, 18s. 9d.

All with ample Materials for Bodices.

Sketches free.

PETER ROBINSON, MOURNING WAREHOUSE,
REGENT-STREET, LONDON.

BLACK SILKS.

Owing to the Panic in Lyons,

Manufacturers have been compelled to realize their Stocks.

PETER ROBINSON

has taken advantage of the opportunity,

and has purchased for cash upwards of £10,000 worth of the HIGHEST CLASS BLACK SILKS,

Plain and Damask.

He is enabled to sell the best goods at the lowest prices.

Plain Black Silks,
Rich Black Satin,
Rich Black Tulle,
Rich Black Vellut.

Black Brocade Velvets,
Black Satin Merveilles,
Lyon Velvets.

Patterns free. Address—
PETER ROBINSON, MOURNING WAREHOUSE,
256 to 262, Regent-street, London.

LATEST from "LE FOLLET."

"Of all annoyances, as connected with 'la toilette,' none is greater than the purchase of some material apparently the 'very thing' required, the subsequent finding that 'appearances are deceiving,' and money, time, and trouble have all been wasted in the acquirement of an article whose beauty was transient, and durability nil.

Since our first recommendation of the

'LOUIS' VELVETEEN,

every purchaser has reiterated the praise we bestowed.

Many makers would have contented themselves with having this gained public favour; but the great competition in Velveteens, and the praiseworthy determination not to be surpassed, have led the manufacturer of the

'LOUIS' VELVETEEN

to be constantly seeking improvements, which have resulted in the production of the

GENUINE WOVEN FAST PILE, WITH

'GENOA FACE.'

The strictest examiner may try every test of touch and sight without discovering these are other than the Genoa velvets they so closely resemble; while the peculiar arrangements resulting in the 'fast woven pile' enable them to stand interminable and rough wear, that would ruin real velvets at four times the price."

N.B.—Every yard of the genuine bears the name

"LOUIS."

"LOUIS" VELVETEENS.

CHAS. MEEKING and CO., Holborn, supply

all qualities of the celebrated "LOUIS"

in Black and all Colours at most moderate prices.

Patterns free by post.

SHETLAND SHAWLS.—The Marvel, two yards square, White, 1s. 10d.; Black, Grey, or Cardinal, 2s. The Zephyr, richly fringed, White, 3s. 3d.; Black or Cardinal, 3s. 6d., post-free.—ROBINSON and CLEAVER, Belfast.CAMBRIE POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS

REAL IRISH CAMBRIE—ALL PURE FLAX.

Children's .. 2s. 6d. per doz. Hemstitched.

Ladies' .. 3s. 6d. " " Ladies' .. 4s. 9d. per doz.

Gent's .. 4s. 10d. " " Gent's .. 5s. 6d. " "

"The Cambrics of Robinson and Cleaver have a world-wide fame."—The Queen. Samples and Price-List post-free.

ROBINSON & CLEAVER, Manufacturers to the Queen, Belfast.

ÆSTHETIC.

PIESSE AND LUBIN.

The Perfume affected by the Æsthetics. Dreamy of Flowers, Roly Bella, Tuberosa, Jasmijn in union; abstracted from them while yet in blossom.—Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond-street, W.

FLORIMEL OF PALM.

PIESSE AND LUBIN.

For the Prevention of Chapped Hands, Rough Skin, Chills, &c. Once using will convince the most sceptical that, if daily applied, too much cannot be said in favour of Florimel of Palm for rendering the skin or hands white, soft, and fair. In Glass Jars, 3s. 6d.—Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond-street, London. Sold by the trade generally.

LADIES' ELASTIC SUPPORTING BANDS,

for use before and after Accouchement.
Instructions for measurement and prices on application to POPE & PLANTE, 4, Waterloo-place, Pall-mall, London, S.W.

THE PERFECTION OF PREPARED COCOA.TAYLOR BROTHERS'
"MARAVILLA" COCOA.

Sold in tin-lined Packets only, by all Grocers.

TAYLOR BROTHERS call the attention of consumers to the high sustaining and nutritive powers possessed by MARAVILLA COCOA and MARAVILLA COCOA ESSENCE. These articles being prepared with great judgment and skill from the choicest growths of the Trinidad and South American estates, compare advantageously with the productions offered by other houses, and a trial is strongly recommended before a preference is finally given to any other description.

TAYLOR BROTHERS, MARAVILLA, HOMCEOPATHIC,
ROCK, FLAKE, AND PEARL COCOA
MANUFACTURERS,
Brick-lane and Wentworth-street Steam Mills, Spitalfields,
London.

"A PURE COCOA OF THE CONSISTENCY OF TEA."TAYLOR BROTHERS'
"MARAVILLA" COCOA ESSENCE.

Sold in Tins and tin-lined Packets only, by all Grocers.

FRY'S
FRY'S CARACAS COCOA.

"A most delicious and valuable article."—Standard.

PURE COCOA ONLY.

FRY'S COCOA EXTRACT.

"Strictly pure."—W. W. BROADBENT,
F.I.C., F.C.S., City Analyst, Bristol.
FIFTEEN PRIZE MEDALS.

SCHWEITZER'S COCOATINA.

Anti-Dyspeptic Cocoa or Chocolate Powder.

Guaranteed Pure Soluble Cocoa, with excess of Fat extracted.

Four times the strength of Cocoa Thickened yet Weakened with Arrowroot, Starch, &c.

The faculty pronounced it the most nutritious, perfectly digestible Beverage for "BREAKFAST, LUNCHEON, or SUPPER."

Keeps in all climates. Requires no cooking. A teaspoonful to Breakfast Cup, costing less than a halfpenny. Samples gratis.

In Air-Tight Tins, at 1s. 6d., 3s., &c., by Chemists and Grocers.

H. SCHWEITZER and CO., 10, Adam-street, London, W.C.

CHOCOLAT MENIER.

Awarded the GRAND DIPLOMA OF HONOUR.

CHOCOLAT MENIER, in ½ lb. and ¼ lb. Packets.

For BREAKFAST and SUPPER.

CHOCOLAT MENIER.—Awarded Twenty

PRIZE MEDALS.

Consumption annually exceeds 21,000,000 lbs.

CHOCOLAT MENIER. Paris, London, New York.

Sold Everywhere.

THE ESSEX FLOUR AND GRAIN

COMPANY, Liverpool-road, London, N., supply the best goods only.

Flour: Whites for Pastry, per 56 lb., 10s.; Households, for Bread making, 9s. 4d.; Wheat Meal for Brown

Bread, 8s. 4d.; Best Scotch Oatmeal for Porridge, per 48 lb., 3s.;

American Hominy, 2s. 8d.; Barley, Buck Wheat, Maize, and Mixed

Corn for Poultry, per bushel, 2s.; Middlings, 2s.; Bran, 1s.;

Pearl Split Peas, per peck, 3s.; Split Egyptian Lentils, 3s.; Meat

Bacuits, per 48 lb., 2s. 6d.; Barley Meal, per 48 lb., 3s.; Lentil

Flour, per 48 lb., 3s.; per 48 lb., 3s. All other kinds of Grain and Seeds. Price-List on application. Special quotations for large orders. P.O.O. and Cheques payable to George Young.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

IS A WORLD-WIDE NECESSARY.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

FOR THE NURSERY.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

FOR THE FAMILY TABLE.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

FOR THE SICK ROOM.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

HAS A WORLD-WIDE REPUTATION.

BORWICK'S BAKING POWDER,

for Bread, Cakes, Pies, and Puddings.

BORWICK'S BAKING POWDER.

Four Gold Medals. 600,000 Packages Sold Weekly.

GENUINE DUBLIN WHISKY.

THE MOST WHOLESOME OF ALL SPIRITS.

DUBLIN WHISKY, Distilled by Messrs.

JOHN JAMESON and SON, GEORGE ROE and CO.,

WILLIAM JAMESON and CO., and JOHN POWER and SON, can be obtained in Wood by wholesale merchants and dealers, direct from their respective distilleries.

CHAS. CODD'S ORANGE CHAMPAGNE

is made simply from oranges. It is a light and wholesome tonic, and being free from chemicals as well as spirit, it is the purest and best of the non-alcoholic drinks. Price, in London, in large champagne bottles, 7s. per dozen; in small, 4s. Bottles charged 2s., and same allowed when returned.—C. Codd and Co.,

79, Copenhagen-street, London. Sold by all Grocers, Chemists, and Wine Merchants.

FLORAL BELL LIQUID DENTIFRICE.

Superiority and excellence over all. Unequalled for Cleansing, Preserving, and Beautifying the Teeth and Gums.

It removes tartar, hardens the enamel, arrests decay, and imparts to the breath, under all circumstances, a most delightful fragrance. A few drops on the brush night and morning is all sufficient. Use only Floral Bell Liquid Dentifrice. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers.

LIFE, GROWTH, and BEAUTY for the

HAIR. MELROSE FAVORITE HAIR RESTORER.—

Supplies everything to keep and restore a beautiful head of hair.

Nature's Lovely Crown Melrose is not a dye. Use Melrose if your hair is grey or white. Use Melrose if your hair is falling out and to remove dandruff. Use Melrose to give luxuriant growth and to prevent baldness. Sold in two sizes, at 2s. 6d.

and 3s. 6d., by Chemists and Perfumers.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.
SUBSTANTIAL ARTISTIC FURNITURE

(Regd.)

OETZMANN & CO.,

HAMPSTEAD-ROAD,

NEAR TOTTENHAM-COURT-ROAD.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZMANN

and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 75, and 79, HAMPSTEAD-ROAD, near Tottenham-court-road, London. CARPETS, Furniture,

Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass,

Paper Hangings, Pictures, Brackets, Clocks, Pianos, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout. Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality.

OETZMANN and CO.

THE "CANTERBURY" EBONIZED

CHIPPENDALE DRAWING-ROOM SUITE, SIXTEEN

GUINEAS, consisting of a handsome Cabinet, with two bevelled plates in back, and decorated panel on door; an Octagon Centre

Table; Six Chairs and Two Arm-Chairs, with circular cushioned seats, covered in Silk Plush, Roman Satin, or Tapestry. Illus-

VISIT OF THE SAILOR PRINCES TO CEYLON: VIEW OF KANDY.—SEE PAGE 138.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.

No. 2233.—VOL. LXXX.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1882.

TWO SIXPENCE.
WHOLE SHEETS By Post, 6d.

1. Clearing the Orenburg Railway of Snow. 2. A Snowed-up Station. 3. Windmills at Morahanak. 4. Digging out the Train. 5. Interview with the Governor of Orenburg.
6. Starting from Orenburg. 7, 8, 9. Russian Fellow-passengers—Refreshments. 10. Soldiers on Furlough. 11. Waiter. 12. Officer.

OUR SPECIAL ARTIST WITH THE JEANNETTE RELIEF EXPEDITION: SKETCHES ON THE WAY TO SIBERIA.—SEE PAGE 149.

BIRTHS.

On the 8th inst., at 116, Southgate-road, N., the wife of Mr. Edward Plant Elliott, of a daughter.

At Allahabad, India, on the 22nd ult., La Marquise de Bourbel de Montpinçon, of a son.

MARRIAGE.

On the 24th ult., at Holy Trinity Church, Paddington, by the Rev. Frederick Moore, M.A., Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen, assisted by the Rev. A. J. D. O'Neely, B.D., King's College, William Francis Vetch, Esq., Major 1st Battalion Royal Dublin Fusiliers (late Royal Madras Fusiliers), to Janette Olive, eldest daughter of George Tinline, Esq., of 17, Princes-square, Baywater, and Lyndon, New Zealand, formerly of Adelaide, South Australia.

DEATHS.

On the 7th inst., at Pegli, Ellen Margaret, the last surviving daughter of the late Alexander Macdonald, of Hyde-park-street, aged 71.

On the 4th inst., at Boulogne-sur-Mer, Mrs. W. H. Inglis (née Jane Jeffery), in her 72nd year.

On the 14th inst., at Bellevue, 8, Merchiston Park, Edinburgh, Jane Ferguson, widow of Alexander Robertson, Captain in the 3rd Regiment, and last surviving daughter of General Ferguson, of Dunfallyn, Perthshire. Friends will please accept this the only intimation.

*. The charge for the insertion of Births, Marriages, and Deaths is Five Shillings for each announcement.

THE WEATHER.

RESULTS OF METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS AT THE
NEW OBSERVATORY OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY.

Lat. 51° 28' N.; Long. 0° 18' 47" W. Height above Sea, 34 feet.

DAY.	DAILY MEANS OF					THERMOM.		WIND.		General Direction.	Miles.	In.
	Barometer Corrected.	Temperature of the Air.	Dew Point.	Relative Humidity.	Amount of Cloud.	Maximum, read at 10 A.M.	Minimum, read at 10 P.M.	Force.	Direction.
1	30.420	34.5	33.2	86	10	37.5	29.9	SSW.	SSW.	34	0.000	0.000
2	30.491	38.4	35.4	90	9	43.5	33.3	SSW.	SSW.	50	0.000	0.000
3	30.495	41.0	37.3	87	10	44.8	38.8	S.	S.	139	0.000	0.000
4	30.400	39.1	33.8	83	10	42.7	34.6	S. S.W.	SSW.	181	0.000	0.000
5	30.371	36.0	32.3	88	10	37.9	34.2	S.	S.	235	0.000	0.000
6	30.163	28.4	34.4	87	6	45.5	34.2	S.	S.	199	0.005	0.005
7	29.850	42.1	38.6	89	6	49.6	32.9	S. SSW.	S. SSW.	190	0.005	0.005

* Dew.

The following are the readings of the meteorological instruments for the above days, in order, at ten o'clock, a.m.:—
Barometer (in inches), corrected .. 30.420 30.491 30.495 30.400 30.371 30.163 29.850
Temperature of Air .. 34.5 38.4 41.0 39.1 36.0 28.4 42.1
Temperature of Water .. 33.2 35.4 37.3 33.8 32.3 34.4 38.6
Direction of Wind .. SSW. SSW. S. S.W. S. S. SSW.

THE THEATRICAL SEASON at MONACO, 1882.
Two Troupes are engaged at the Theatre—one for Operetta and Vaudeville (the Troupe of the Bouffes Parisiens, Paris, the direction of which has been entrusted to Mr. Plunkett, Ancient Director of the Palais Royal).
The other, the Italian Opera Troupe, is conducted by M. Jules Cohen, of the Academy of Music.

The following is the Programme of the Representations:—
Saturday, Feb. 18, RIGOLETTO, by Mesdames Albani and Schallchi; Messrs. Maurel and Gayarré.
Sunday, Feb. 19, FAUSTO, by Madame Albani (Marguerite), M. Gayarré (Faust), M. Faure (Mephistopheles), M. Maurel (Valentin), Madame Schallchi (Sibylle), Madame Stenard (Maitte).
Monday, Feb. 20, FAUSTO.
Tuesday, March 1, LUCIA, by Madame Albani and M. Faure and Gayarré.
Wednesday, March 2, LUCIA.
Thursday, March 3, LUCIA.
Friday, March 4, AMLETO, by Mesdames Albani, Schallchi, and Messrs. Faure and Gayarré.
Saturday, March 5, AMLETO, Lucia, or FAUSTO.
The Opera of "Fausto" will always be played with the extraordinary distribution of Madame Albani, and Madame Schallchi.
After March 15 a series of Brilliant Concerts will terminate the season.
It will be the first appearance of M. Faure in the rôle of Ashton in "Lucia," and also for the first time that Mr. Maurel will sing Rigoletto.
These celebrated artists have never appeared together in any theatre.

PIGEON-SHOOTING, MONACO, 1882.

GRAND INTERNATIONAL MATCHES. All demands for information should be addressed to Mr. A. BLONDIN, Monaco. Open to all upon a written introduction from a member of the Hurlingham Gun Club, London; the "Cercle des Patineurs," Paris; or the "Tir du Bois de la Cambre," Brussels.
Friday, Feb. 17, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, Feb. 18, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, Feb. 19, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, Feb. 20, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, Feb. 21, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, Feb. 22, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, Feb. 23, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, Feb. 24, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, Feb. 25, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, Feb. 26, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, Feb. 27, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, Feb. 28, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, Feb. 29, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, Feb. 30, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, March 1, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, March 2, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, March 3, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, March 4, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, March 5, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, March 6, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, March 7, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, March 8, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, March 9, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, March 10, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, March 11, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, March 12, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, March 13, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, March 14, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, March 15, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, March 16, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, March 17, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, March 18, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, March 19, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, March 20, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, March 21, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, March 22, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, March 23, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, March 24, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, March 25, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, March 26, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, March 27, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, March 28, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, March 29, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, March 30, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, March 31, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, April 1, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, April 2, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, April 3, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, April 4, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, April 5, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, April 6, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, April 7, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, April 8, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, April 9, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, April 10, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, April 11, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, April 12, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, April 13, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, April 14, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, April 15, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, April 16, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, April 17, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, April 18, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, April 19, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, April 20, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, April 21, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, April 22, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, April 23, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, April 24, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, April 25, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, April 26, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, April 27, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, April 28, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, April 29, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, April 30, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, May 1, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, May 2, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, May 3, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, May 4, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, May 5, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, May 6, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, May 7, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, May 8, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, May 9, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, May 10, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, May 11, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, May 12, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, May 13, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, May 14, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, May 15, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, May 16, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, May 17, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, May 18, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, May 19, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, May 20, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, May 21, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, May 22, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, May 23, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, May 24, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, May 25, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, May 26, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, May 27, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, May 28, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, May 29, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, May 30, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, May 31, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, June 1, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, June 2, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, June 3, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, June 4, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, June 5, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, June 6, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, June 7, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, June 8, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, June 9, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, June 10, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, June 11, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, June 12, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, June 13, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, June 14, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, June 15, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, June 16, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, June 17, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, June 18, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, June 19, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, June 20, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, June 21, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, June 22, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, June 23, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, June 24, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, June 25, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, June 26, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, June 27, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, June 28, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, June 29, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, June 30, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, July 1, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, July 2, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, July 3, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, July 4, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, July 5, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, July 6, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, July 7, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, July 8, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, July 9, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, July 10, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, July 11, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, July 12, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, July 13, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, July 14, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, July 15, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, July 16, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, July 17, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, July 18, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, July 19, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, July 20, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, July 21, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, July 22, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, July 23, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, July 24, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, July 25, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, July 26, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, July 27, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, July 28, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, July 29, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, July 30, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, July 31, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, August 1, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, August 2, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, August 3, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, August 4, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, August 5, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, August 6, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, August 7, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, August 8, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, August 9, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, August 10, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, August 11, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, August 12, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, August 13, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, August 14, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, August 15, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, August 16, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, August 17, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, August 18, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, August 19, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, August 20, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, August 21, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, August 22, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, August 23, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, August 24, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, August 25, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, August 26, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Tuesday, August 27, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Wednesday, August 28, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Thursday, August 29, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Friday, August 30, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Saturday, August 31, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Sunday, September 1, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, 250 metres. Prize, 10 francs.
Monday, September 2, POULE

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

My aged and esteemed contemporary the Saturday Review, in a stupidly spiteful article called "King Charles's Head," which is mainly devoted to abuse of the gentlemen who write leading articles in the daily newspapers, makes the following puzzling statement:—

Some years ago, when Arminius still lived to reprove and correct us, a widely circulated journal missed few chances, and created many, of naming a typical being named Mary Jane. In season and out of season these syllables rose to the lips of Leo Adolescents.

As it was Mr. Matthew Arnold, who, in some amusingly hypercritical essays, dubbed the leader-writers in the journal in question "Young Lions" (in the Cornhill, I think: I was abroad at the time, and did not read the essays, of which I heard), I presume that he is the reproving and correcting critic "lugged" in as "Arminius." I call Mr. Arnold's description of the "Young Lions" amusing, for the reason that when he wrote the papers in question the leader-writers were middle-aged, as they are now elderly lions. And they are still writing leading articles in the same journal.

I happen to be very well acquainted with two of "Arminius' " lions. Between them they have written some ten thousand leaders in the paper sneered at in the Saturday Review. I have a tolerably retentive memory; I have read this particular organ of public opinion constantly and carefully during nearly a quarter of a century; but I cannot recollect the name of any such "typical being" as "Mary Jane" as rising to the lips of Leo Adolescents "in season and out of season." Mr. Thackeray, indeed, had two mythical girl children of the lower middle class called Maria (not Mary) Jane and Sarah Ann, on whose humours he was very fond of dwelling; and John Leech, in his caricatures in Punch, was equally fond of ringing the changes upon Anna-Mariar and Matilda-Jane. My impression is that the writer in the Saturday is a very young man, who has been "laid on" by my venerable contemporary to give its columns a fillip of "spiciness;" and that when he wrote the article entitled "King Charles's Head" he did not know what he was talking about.

"Ignotus" gives me (through the medium of a Remington Type-Writer) a version of the anecdote of the Duke of Marlborough and Lord Peterborough, somewhat different from the one on which I lately lighted in the French "Dictionnaire Universel"—

Lord Peterborough, leaving the House of Lords in his coach at a time when Marlborough was very unpopular (N.B.—This must have been shortly after the end of the war of the Spanish Succession), was stopped by the mob, who mistook his carriage for that of Marlborough. "My friends," said Peterborough, "I can give you two conclusive proofs that I am not his Grace of Marlborough; in the first place, I have but five guineas in my pocket; in the second place, they are quite at your service;" at the same time throwing the money among them.

At all events some fruit is obtained from our little word combats in the "Echoes;" and "fruit" should be, according to Bacon, the end of all inquiry. "J. R. W. H." sends me a very curious communication touching "parcel-blindness" and "parcel-blind." He suggests that both "C. E. D." and the present writer may be mistaken in thinking that "parcel blindness" is an accepted expression, and that the legitimate locution is "pearl-blindness." "A very slight error in a note-book memorandum may," adds "J. R. W. H.," "have caused the mistake." In support of this inference, I am referred to Todd's Johnson, 1818, heading "Pearl." "Cataracts pearl coloured . . . are esteemed proper to endure the needle;" and again, "pearl," "a white speck or film growing on the eye."

The suggestion is, no doubt, a highly ingenious one; still the "very slight error"—if error it be—must have first crept into a "note-book memorandum" some hundreds of years ago. "A. A." tells me that the expression, in the sense of being half or partially blind, is to be found in one of the plays of Beaumont and Fletcher. Massinger, again, in "The City Madam," Act II. sc. 2, has "He's parcel-physician, and as such prescribes, &c. . . parcel-poet, and sings encomiums to my virtues sweetly." A correspondent at Leicester informs me that Beaumont and Fletcher have "parcel-guilty," and Ben Jonson "parcel drunk;" and, finally, twenty-two correspondents quote Sir Walter Scott:—"The old dame was parcel blind and more than parcel deaf." Where be your pearls, now, quotha? Yet has the "pearl" suggestion a strange semblance of being tenable.

Here is a pretty tiny kickshaw of bibliography bearing on the ballet of "La Sylphide," and obligingly contributed by "S. T.," Leeds. It is stated in Heath's "Beauties of the Opera and Ballet" (London: Bogue, about 1847) that Charles Nodier, the celebrated French tale writer, learned the legend of the "Mountain Sylph" while making a tour through the Highlands of Scotland, and embodied it in a story called "Trilby." The Scottish "Trilby" is said to be the Genius of Home—the deity of the domestic hearth. Is this so, "Scots wha hae!" However, from Charles Nodier's "Trilby" the famous French tenor, Nourrit, composed the ballet of "La Sylphide."

Mem.: The mention of Nourrit by my Leeds correspondent sent me at once to Mr. Charles Hervey's "Theatres of Paris" (London: Mitchell, 1846). Mr. Hervey takes note of the fact that the historically ugly dancer Petipa (who from his exceptional grace and agility was always selected to be the partner of the beautiful Giulia Grisi) made his début as Donald in "La Sylphide," in June, 1839; but nothing is said concerning Nourrit's collaboration in that charming ballet. Poor Nourrit!—"the Talma of the Opera," as he was called. During the Revolution of July the people carried him in triumph on their shoulders; and he had to sing the Marseillaise all the way from the Boulevard corner of the Rue Lepeletier to the Château d'Eau. Adolphe Nourrit, it is said, was the only singer who ever did the primo tendre part in "Robert le Diable" justice. In the end he went as mad as, in after times, the sweet tenor Giuglini did, and killed himself by throwing himself from a window at Naples.

Mem.: I learn from Mr. Hervey's book that forty years ago very vigorous precautions against fire were adopted at the Paris Grand Opera. "A municipal guard remained after the performance to keep watch over the whole interior of the building; and it was his duty to see that the firemen passed enormous sponges filled with water over the scenery which had been used that evening; and also that the iron curtain was duly placed in front of the stage, so that, in case of fire breaking out behind the scenes, the flames might be prevented from spreading over the house." We have heard a good deal, within these latter days, of iron curtains in theatres. The rigorous precautions in use at the Grand Opéra in the Rue Lepeletier were powerless to prevent that edifice from being very completely burnt on the night of Oct. 28, 1873.

The officers of that distinguished branch of her Majesty's land service, the cavalry, are complaining of what they think to be a grievance. I find in the Standard a letter from "Chasseur," in which the writer states that an order has been received by colonels commanding cavalry regiments "that no horse is to be passed as a charger whose tail has been docked." "Now," continues "Chasseur," "everyone who knows anything about a horse knows that in many horses the root of the tail grows so low down that it amounts to a deformity; and they must be docked; and I do not think I am in error in saying that one half of the horses in England are docked." That may be—and more's the pity; yet the weightiest "horsey" authorities seem to be dead against docking. Read the late Edward Mayhew "Illustrated Horse Management" (London: W. H. Allen, 1873), p. 423:—

The tail in the quadruped principally directs the course. Hence we perceive the folly of those people who, to gratify a whim, excise or mutilate the integrity of so important a part; thus sacrificing positive safety to a false notion of improved appearance. Happily, however, the barbarous custom which once prevailed is now generally discarded; although docking is, even at the present moment, occasionally practised, under a notion of improving deficient quarters. . . . A short tail is rarely compatible with perfect safety.

Carefully looking through the plates in the sumptuous folio of the Duke of Newcastle's "New Method of Horsemanship" (Antwerp, 1657), I cannot find a single steed that has his tail docked; although in the engravings representing the exercises of the riding-school many of the horses have their tails clubbed, and tied up with ribbons. Nor in the vignettes of modern cavalry drill appended to the English edition of the Duke's great work, published by Brindley, in Pall Mall, in 1793, are there any chargers with docked tails. From this I pass to a very curious book, being a translation, by an anonymous hand, of the Prussian General Wurmery's well-known work on Cavalry. The plates—very spirited etchings—represent cavalry of all nations—Uhlans, Hussars, Cossacks, Mamelukes, Janizaries, Moors of Barbary, and so forth. All the horses have streaming tails. Turning to the English section, I find long tails worn by the chargers of the Royal Horse Guards and all heavy dragoon regiments. The light dragoon regiments and the yeomanry corps alone show horses with docked tails. The translation from Wurmery was published in 1798.

Mem.: The tails of the cart and saddle horses in that great treasury of late eighteenth-century costume, "Pyne's Rustic Figures," seem to be rather thinned and pruned than arbitrarily docked. The fact, nevertheless, is that long before the end of the century we had gotten a bad name among Continental nations for our addictions to mutilating horses' tails. The French satirist, obviously writing before the Revolution, accused us of being a bizarre and capricious people, who Coupe la tête aux rois et la queue aux chevaux.

Mr. Samuel Sidney, in his admirable "Book of the Horse" (London: Cassell, Petter, and Galpin), makes very short work of the docking system. Hear S. S.:—

Formerly horses were universally docked, sometimes very short, under the idea that it improved the appearance of their quarters. Of late (1873) the practice of docking the tails and hogging the manes has been revived by polo-players. Even hunters have thus been disfigured; but, like crinolines and chignons, it is a beastly fashion that cannot last for ever.

Oddly enough, I found that I had marked the page (510) in "The Book of the Horse" with a fashion-plate from "La Belle Assemblée," representing "a French lady on horseback in the Long Champ and Elisée, Paris." The plate is dated 1817. The costume of the fair Amazon I think I have described in a previous "Echo;" but I may not have noticed the fact that the mane of her horse is hogged and its tail docked to a grotesque and cruel degree of brevity. Of two things—one; either the original model of the Amazon came, not from the "Long Champ and Elisée, Paris," but out of our own Leicestershire or Yorkshire; or else the French had learnt by the year 1807, not only how to cut off the heads of kings, but also the tails of horses.

"More Last Words of Mr. Baxter." The tail of the French lady's "horse" is not only docked, but "nicked." Lady and gentlemen subscribers to the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, if you wish to be horrified, read the description of the processes of docking and "nicking" horses in "The Horse in the Stable and the Field," by "Stonehenge" (London: Routledge), p. 580. Take notice, likewise, that the portrait of the Godolphin Arabian is drawn with the longest of tails. Basta! I hope that I have not bored anybody by this lengthy disquisition on horses' tails; and as it is, my Gervase Markham and my Lawrence's "Farriery"—a rare tome full, I am sorry to say, of pictures of cruelly docked hunters and racers—are at the binder's. Else, indeed, I might have become wearisome. "But you have been wearisome," I fancy that I hear some gentle reader murmur.

News from Mazatlan, in the state of Sinaloa, Mexico. "G. K." writes me from the Union Club at the prosperous seaport in question, concerning a statement made a long time since in this page that the epithet "Cordon Bleu," as applied to an excellent cook, could only with propriety be conferred on a female practitioner of the culinary art. I wrote this in contradiction to a remark made by my esteemed friend Mr. Punch, who appeared to think that a "cordon bleu" could be of either sex. But there is a wise gentleman at Mazatlan, of Gaelic lineage, who opines that Mr. Punch was right and that I am wrong. I hope that I am so; for I like Punch to be in the right.

The sage of Mazatlan has "read the matter up," and has forwarded me, through "G. K.," three and half pages of beautifully written "copy," in which are accumulated arguments and illustrations to prove that men and women cooks of exceptional capacity were styled "cordon bleus" many generations before the time of "La Belle Fanchon au Cordon Bleu," whom I found in Beauvillier's "Art du Cuisinier" as having flourished at a Paris cabaret late in the eighteenth century.

The French gentleman at Mazatlan admits that I have some authorities in my favour as to the term "cordon bleu" being confined to the gentler (and better) sex. He cites (but I did not) the Dictionary of Napoleon Landais:—

Cordon Bleu. Chevalier de l'ordre du Saint Esprit. Se dit (familièrement) aussi des personnes très habiles à la cuisine . . . par plaisanterie d'une excellente cuisinière.

He cites Charles Nodier. Cordon bleu: une personne excellente dans la cuisine.

Finally, he quotes (but I did not) the almost unanswerable Littré, who says that the term of "Cordon bleu" is familiarly applied to "une cuisinière très habile."

I might be content to stand or fall by Littré; but the French gentleman declares so positively that Madame de Sévigné, Boileau, Chamfort, Vauvenargues, "and many more," apply the expression "cordon bleu" indifferently to male and female cooks of eminence, que je me tiens pour battu. I throw up the sponge; but I will pick it up again, if I can. Meanwhile I have sent the French gentleman's communication to Mr. Burnand. That Gloomy Chieftain might incite one of his smart young men to pen a triumphant ode on the "Cordon Bleu" and the defeat of the rash champion of "La Belle Fanchon."

News from Rome. A dear friend domiciled in the Eternal City writes me that the ceremony of unveiling the tomb erected to the memory of Joseph Severn, late her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Rome, on the occasion of the transfer of his remains to a new grave, next to that of the poet Keats, was to take place in the Old Protestant Cemetery, near the Porta San Paolo, on the Sixteenth Instant. Lord Houghton was to preside, and to deliver an address on the occasion. Mr. Walter and Mr. Arthur Severn, sons of the deceased friend of Keats, were to be present. By the time, then, that this sheet goes to press the interesting celebration will, I hope, have been successfully accomplished. I feel sure that it will be a very beautiful one. In Italy the line which divides a funeral from a festa is a very thin one. "Death is nothing but the middle point between two lives—between this and another," writes Lucan. The modern Italians practise what the old Roman poet taught. Of course, in the Protestant burying-ground not all the picturesque amenity of a Campo Santo is to be looked for; yet is that old Cemetery at Rome, hard by the Pyramid of Caius Curtius, one of the cheerfulest churchyards that I know. You do not feel gloomy even when you read the despairing epitaph on Keats's monument:—

This grave contains all that is mortal of a young English poet, who on his death-bed, in the bitterness of his heart at the malicious power of his enemies, desired these words to be engraven on his tombstone:—"Here lies one whose name was writ in water." Feb. 24, 1821.

No; the gloom is dispelled when you remember that Time, who is as eloquent, and just, and mighty as Death, and who has long since conclusively pronounced the Right Hon. John Wilson Croker, of the Quarterly Review, to have been a Humbug, has triumphantly vindicated the memory and the fame of John Keats, and that his name is writ, not in water, but in letters of gold in the roll of English poets.

The Carnival of Venice is dead—or at least moribund. The Paris Carnival is no longer worth talking about; for Mardi Gras has sunk to be the ghost, and the disreputable ghost, of its old merry self. "Miriam cures wounds and Pharaoh is sold for balsam," as the old Knight of Norwich has it. Yes; the modern Mardi Gras festivities have come to the complexion of puffing quack salves, medicated chocolate, and corn-plasters in connection with those stupidly and monotonously vicious entertainments, the Bals Masqués. But the Roman Carnival still lives, after a fashion; albeit mainly, I am afraid, for the benefit of the hotel, restaurant, café, and lodging-house keepers of the Corso, and the collateral profit of the tradespeople of the Piazza di Spagna and the Via Condotti.

I have before me the official programme of the "Carnevale di Roma" for 1882, emanating from the "Comitato Promotore delle Feste." The Roman "High Jinks" began on Saturday, the 11th inst., and conclude on Tuesday, the 21st. On the opening day there was a "Corsa dei Barberi," or wild pony-race, a procession of masks, and a "getto di coriandoli," or pelting-match of sham sugar-plums in chalk. The remainder of the festival seems to be composed of masked balls at the Costanzi and other theatres, fireworks, illuminations of "moccoletti"—do you remember Didenò's description of the "Moccoletti" in the "Pictures from Italy"?—Japanese lanterns, lotteries, and the electric light. The prizes in one of the lotteries are substantial enough. The first prize is ten bottles of champagne; the second a supper for eight persons. But suppose you drew one of three prizes, and that you were a stranger, and alone and friendless in Rome. You could scarcely drink ten bottles of champagne or eat eight suppers, at a sitting.

G. A. S.

OUR SPECIAL ARTIST IN SIBERIA WITH THE JEANNETTE RELIEF EXPEDITION: THE NEW YORK HERALD EXPRESS ON THE ROAD.

THE RELIEF OF THE JEANNETTE ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

We this week publish the first of a series of Sketches that will be furnished by our own Artist and Correspondent, who has undertaken to travel to the North Coast of Siberia with the expedition for the relief of the survivors of the American Arctic Exploration party dispatched by Mr. James Gordon Bennett, of New York, in the steam-yacht Jeannette, from San Francisco, and proceeding through Behring Strait to the mouth of the Lena. It was made known in Europe, about two months since, by an official telegram from Siberia to St. Petersburg, that on Sept. 14 there was discovered, at about thirty miles from Cape Borakais, near the mouth of the River Lena, in Siberia, a boat, the crew of which, consisting of thirteen men, had escaped from the American steamer Jeannette, which has been lost. The Russian local authorities gave immediate assistance to the crew, who were found to be in a very distressed condition; and the Governor of the province, on his own responsibility, put some money at their disposal, pending arrangements to be made by their friends, in London and New York. The commander of the boat found was Mr. Melville, who was engineer on board the Jeannette. He states that the ship was caught by ice on June 23, in latitude 77 deg. N. and longitude 157 deg. E. Three boats made off from the ship and proceeded together till within fifty miles of the mouth of the Lena, where they were separated by strong winds and fogs. It was boat No. 3 which was under the command of Mr. Melville, and which, on Sept. 29, reached the easternmost of the mouths of the river Lena, but was caught by moving ice and borne away to sea. On Nov. 10 two men, Nindemann and Norris, arrived from Bulun, and announced that Lieutenant De Long, Dr. Ambler, and twelve others from the crew of boat No. 1, had been stranded off the most northern mouth of the Lena, and were in a most miserable condition from want of food. A party was immediately dispatched from Bulun to assist the distressed seamen. With regard to the other boat, no news had been received. The Governor of Irkutsk states that, on Sept. 14, three natives of the coast near the Lena Delta, at a place about 140 versts north of Cape Bykov, discovered a large boat with eleven survivors from the shipwrecked steamer Jeannette, who had suffered greatly. The adjutant of the chief of the district was immediately charged to proceed with a doctor and medicines to succour any of the survivors, and to search for the rest of the shipwrecked crew. On Oct. 29 there also arrived at Bulun the boat No. 1, with the sailors Nindemann and Norris, with the information that Lieutenant De Long, Dr. Ambler, and a dozen other survivors had landed at the northern mouth of the Lena, where they are at present in a most distressing state, many having limbs frozen. An expedition was immediately sent down the Lena to make diligent search for the unfortunates in danger of death. Melville added that money was urgently needed, and should be sent by telegraph to Irkutsk and Yakutsk; and that the most energetic measures should be taken for the discovery of the remainder of the crew, and for the relief of those who were left on the ice at the mouth of the Lena River.

THE CHINESE TEA-SHIP MEE-FOO.—SEE PAGE 150.

1. Bosnian pack-horse. 2. Serpentine road made by Austrian Pioneers, over the Romanya Planina. 3. Defile of Mokro. 4. Turkish fuel-cart. 5. Deserted farm-house.

SKETCHES IN BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

The ship Jeannette, as will be remembered, sailed from San Francisco for the Arctic regions on July 8, 1879. She was originally known as the Pandora, a steam-yacht of 500 tons, the property of Sir Allan Young. Her commander was Captain G. W. De Long, of the United States service. Most of the officers and crew were experienced men, who had been in former expeditions to the Polar circle. Since she sailed towards the North, the Jeannette was heard of on Sept. 3 of the same year, when she was sighted by a whaler steaming in the direction of Wrangel Land. In the summer of 1880 the United States Government sent the revenue-cutter Corwin to the north to search for any tidings of the Jeannette. Nothing was heard of her, and in the summer of last year Mr. Bennett issued circulars to the principal Arctic authorities in this country, among whom were Sir Allan Young, Sir George Richards, Sir Leopold M'Clintock, and Sir George Nares, asking them what steps, if any, they considered should be taken to relieve or assist the Jeannette in the spring of this year. As the result of his inquiries, the American Government fitted out the Rodgers with a crew of thirty-five officers and men, and sent her, in June last, through Behring's Strait, with instructions to cruise along the Siberian coast, communicating with the natives and endeavouring to obtain tidings of the missing vessel. Nothing, however, could be learnt about her. The revenue cutter the Thomas Cowan was also sent, and from the report of a whaler who had spoken with her it was learnt that she had reached Wrangel Land without finding any traces of the Jeannette. Two whaling-vessels, indeed, which had been missing were found, one of them with three corpses on board, the other without the remains of the crew or any sign of life. On the Atlantic side, the Alliance corvette was sent to search northward of Spitzbergen, on the chance of the Jeannette having drifted round the extreme north of Greenland. The Alliance returned with nothing to report, and she again started on a final search before the close of the autumn.

The following despatches by telegraph from Lieutenant Danenhauer, concerning the situation of the crew of the Jeannette, have been received at the London office of the New York Herald:—

"Irkutsk, Feb. 1.

"Our three boats left Semenofsky Island on the morning of Sept. 12, bound for Barkin, ninety-five miles distant. We got clear of the ice at noon. Heavy gale from north-east, and boats dispersed during night; captain's boat loaded deep, lost mast and sails. We made land on the evening of the 17th, shoal water. Boat abandoned two miles from beach; party waded and reached deserted village, Sagastyr; 'cached' log books; proceeded south on the 19th. De Long's last record found reads as follows:—'Saturday, Oct. 1.—Fourteen of the officers and men of the Jeannette reached this hut on Wednesday, Sept. 28, and, having been forced to wait for the river to freeze over, are proceeding to cross to west side this morning on their journey to reach some settlement on the Lena river. We have only two days' provisions, but, having been fortunate enough thus far to get game in our pressing needs, we have no fears for the future. Our party all well, except Erickson, whose toes have been amputated in consequence of frostbites. Other records will be found in several huts on the east side of the river, along which we have come from the north.—(Signed) George W. De Long.' Three subsequent records had been found. Erickson died Oct. 7; party in great distress for food. Norris and Nindemann were sent ahead for relief, Oct. 9. They marched south fifteen days, and were found in a starving condition, Oct. 24, by three natives, who took them to a settlement. They could not make themselves understood. News of them reached Yakutsk, when immediate search commenced, and the party was traced to a wilderness on the left bank of the Lena.

The latest despatches from Lieutenant Danenhauer are as follows:—

"Irkutsk, Feb. 4.

"Lieutenant De Long is between Bulun and Saskuarut, in a narrow wilderness eighty miles long, and devoid of game and habitation. The new search expedition will build huts and go over every inch of the region, which is ploughed by heavy drift-ice every spring. During the afternoon of the day before we parted Lieutenant Chipp's boat (second cutter) did better than ours. About dusk he was a thousand yards off our weather quarter, and was seen to lower sail, as if rounding to. We lay for twenty hours under a triangular drag. At daylight nothing was to be seen. Chipp could not have got back to the islands in a north-east gale, and he was unable to carry his share of provisions. I observed a strong easterly current near the Lena Delta, and there were masses of drift-wood between us and the Siberian Islands. We discovered Jeannette Island, May 16, 1881 (?), in latitude 76 deg. 47 min., longitude 158 deg. 56 min. east. It was small and rocky, and we did not land upon it. Henrietta Island was discovered May 24, in latitude 77 deg. 8 min., longitude 157 deg. 43 min. east. We visited it and found it to be an extensive island, animals scarce, many glaciers. A very large island, found in latitude 76 deg. 38 min., longitude 148 deg. 20 min. east, was named Bennett Island. On it we found many birds, old horns, drift-wood and coal, no seal, no walrus; strong tidal action, bold and rocky. The south cape we named Emma. The general health of the crew during twenty-one months was excellent; no scurvy. We used distilled water, bear and seal meat twice a week, but no rum. Divine service was held regularly; we took plenty of exercise, and everybody hunted. Game was scarce, but we got thirty bears, 250 seal, and six walrus; no fish or whales seen. All possible observations were made during the drift, the result showing a north-westerly course, the ship heeling over, and being heavily pressed by ice most of the time. The mental strain was heavy on some of us. The result of the drift during the first five months was 40 miles by tidal movement of ice; very rapid drift the last six months. Soundings pretty even, 18 fathoms near Wrangel Land, which often visible 75 miles distant. The greatest depth was 80 fathoms; average depth, 85; bottom, blue mud; shrimps plentiful; meteoric specimens got from bottom: surface water temperature 20 deg. above zero. The extremes of temperature of air were—cold, 58 deg. below zero, Fahrenheit; heat, about 44 deg. above. During the first winter the mean temperature was 33 deg. below zero; second winter, 39 deg. below. During first summer mean temperature was 40 deg. above zero. The heaviest gale showed a velocity of 50 miles an hour, but such gales were not frequent. Barometric and thermometric fluctuations were not great. There were disturbances of the needle coincident with the auroras. Telephone wires were broken by the ice movements. Winter's growth of ice was 8 ft. The heaviest ice seen was 23 ft. thick. Chief-Engineer Shock's heavy truss saved the ship from being crushed. Before entering the ice near Herald Island we visited Nordenskiöld's quarters during the previous winter, and found that he was safe. During the first week of the retreat of the Jeannette we drifted back 27 miles more than we could advance. The snow was nearly knee deep. The naturalist's notes were saved, but the photographic collection was lost with the ship. Lieutenant Chipp's 2000 auroral observations were also lost. De Long's records found say Collins volunteered to stand by the dying sailor Erickson, and let the others push south. Jack Cole's mind is not entirely gone. He has not been violent for twelve days, but is happy and harmless. Getting home may restore him."

"Irkutsk, Feb. 6.

"A letter has just been received from Engineer Melville, through Count Ahlefeldt Leuwigen, dated Jan. 13. He says he has arranged to search for Lieutenant De Long and his missing companions of the Jeannette, with three parties, the first headed by Nindemann, and Lobokoff, a Russian; the second, by Bartlett and Kolinkin; and the third, by Melville and Groenbeck. The first party was to leave Irkutsk at once, and all will be in the wilderness by March 1. Count Leuwigen has volunteered his assistance, and is enthusiastic in the work."

The region of the Delta or the Mouths of the Lena, where Lieutenant De Long and his comrades are now, it is feared, suffering great privations, and still awaiting the relief that is already on its way to their remote place of detention, is by no means an unknown or unexplored part of the world. It has, during a hundred and fifty years past, been frequently traversed by the Russians descending the river Lena from the town of Yakutsk, which is a place of considerable traffic and the capital of the extensive province of Yakutsk, in North-eastern Siberia. So long ago as 1735 and subsequent years, Russian vessels explored the lower course of that great river to the Arctic Ocean, and the neighbouring seacoasts, not encountering any formidable natural obstacles. An account of the history of these and other Siberian explorations will be found in Professor Nordenskiöld's book, "The Voyage of the Vega," which we lately reviewed. The Vega, of the Swedish Arctic Expedition, was off the mouths of the Lena, on her voyage eastward to Behring Strait, in August, 1878, and there she parted company with her consort, the smaller vessel named the Lena. This steam-boat, commanded by Captain Johannesen, then entered the river Lena, at the eastern or Bykov mouth, in Borskaia Bay, and passed up the river to Yakutsk, in about three weeks, reaching that town on Sept. 21. The first inhabited place, or station, on the Lena river, is called Tas Ary, and the next, 150 versts higher up, is a village named Bulun, on the border of the "tundra," or vast desolate plain stretching away to the north-west. A few Russian officials, with a priest, reside at Bulun; but most of the inhabitants are Yakuts, of the same Tartar tribe as the pastoral race dwelling in the adjacent country. The Lena, before it reaches the open sea, branches out into seven different channels, all more or less navigable, called Anartitsch, Bjelkoj, Tumat, Kychistach, Trofimov, Kischlach, and Bykov; and all these, with the stations named in the recent despatches relating to the crew of the Jeannette, such places as Saskuarut, Bulunkan or Bulungan, in the interior, Sagastyr and Barkin, on the north-eastern shore of the Delta, will be found in the Map annexed to Professor Nordenskiöld's lately-published narrative. Cape Borskaia, or Borchaja, is three or four degrees eastward of the most easterly outlet of the Delta, on the opposite shore of Borskaia Bay, and near the mouth of the Yana, where there are important Russian trading and mining settlements. It is evident that there can be no difficulty in getting access to the place where Lieutenant De Long and the rest of the crew of the Jeannette have been cast ashore, and bringing to them such relief as they need.

The proprietor of the New York Herald, Mr. J. Gordon Bennett, having commissioned Mr. Jackson, a special correspondent of that journal, to travel overland from Russia with the relief supplies for these distressed explorers, a special Artist of the Illustrated London News, Mr. A. Larsen, of Copenhagen, was at once engaged to accompany Mr. Jackson upon this distant errand. He is a Danish artist, who has travelled much in Siberia; and we are in possession of Sketches that he brought home from his former journeys in that region, which will be, from time to time, presented to our readers. Mr. Jackson and Mr. Larsen started from St. Petersburg on the 19th ult., travelling by Moscow to Samara, on the Volga, and thence to Orenburg, on the Ural, which they reached on the Sunday night, the 22nd ult. They had the railway as far as Orenburg, which is a town of 6500 inhabitants, on the verge of the Kirghis Steppe, and on the boundary line between Europe and Asia. The Governor of Orenburg, having received a communication from General Anutchin, Governor-General of East Siberia, relating to the expected journey of the Jeannette Relief party, received Mr. Jackson and Mr. Larsen with many polite attentions, and gave them all the assistance in his power. He furnished them with an escort, on the 26th, when they departed from Orenburg, as shown in our Artist's Sketch, to Fort Orsk, on the Siberian frontier; their conveyance being the covered sledge, with post-horses, used in winter all through Siberia. The journey before them is one of three or four thousand miles; the chief towns on their route would probably be those of Omsk, on the river Irtysh above Tobolsk, then Tomsk, on a tributary of the Obi, Krasnoyarsk, on the Yenisei, or perhaps Yeniseisk, and so on to the Lena, at Yakutsk. We shall, upon receiving further Sketches from our Special Artist, not delay to publish them in an early Number of this Journal.

THE CHINESE STEAMER MEE-FOO.

These are days of rapid development, so that events which a few years ago would have attracted great attention and curiosity now excite but little notice. Among such events may be esteemed the arrival in the Thames of the Chinese owned steamer Mee-Foo, Captain R. Petersen, bringing a cargo of tea, and, as passengers, the native representatives of an Association of Chinese merchants, called Shaou Shing, to establish an agency in this country. The steamer was originally the iron barque Bencutha, built in the Clyde by Messrs. W. Hamilton and Co., in 1876, which in 1879 was wrecked on the Shantung promontory: she was got off and towed into Shanghai, where, in the Tung-ka-doo Docks, she was cut through amidships and fitted up as a screw steamer, 57 ft. being added to her length. Her dimensions are now, length over all, 295 ft.; beam, 33 ft.; total depth, 26 ft. 3 inches. Her tonnage is 1284 net, and 1745 gross; her engines are of 150-horse power nominal. The work of converting her into a steamer having been successfully accomplished, she was bought by her present Chinese owners, Chiu Shiong Kok, who have named her Mee-Foo, signifying "Wealth and Beauty." After making some coasting voyages, and two trips to San Francisco, she was dispatched to London, and is the first steamer flying the Chinese flag which has discharged a cargo in this country. The Mee-Foo is shown in our Illustration, which is from a photograph taken at Hong-Kong. The managers of Shaou Shing and their friends went on board the departing steamer to bid farewell to the passengers, now every day to be seen in our metropolis. The Mee-Foo sailed on her return voyage to China on the 19th ult., taking a miscellaneous cargo. In commemoration of his having commanded the first Chinese owned steamer trading with this country, the London consignees of the Mee-Foo presented Captain Petersen with a silver tea-service.

BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA.

The Austrian Government has much trouble and anxiety just now, in contending with the Slav insurrection of Crivoscie, Herzegovina, and part of Bosnia, the provinces annexed or occupied by this Government in 1878. According to Mr. Arthur Evans, an English political correspondent who has sojourned in those countries during several years past, their present revolt is not caused by foreign intrigues, but is "the result of Austrian maladministration—of the failure to regulate the agrarian relations; of bureaucratic and military arrogance; of the cruel exactions of the Imperial tax-gatherers; and, above all, of the systematic attempt to denationalise a people intensely attached to its national language and traditions."

It seems to have been the recent attempt to enforce the military conscription in the district of Crivoscie that was the immediate occasion of this outbreak; but the feeling of Slav nationality, which extends to the neighbouring people of Serbia and Montenegro, and which is fomented by Russian propagandist associations, was probably excited to bring on a conflict against the Austrian dominion. Crivoscie, the headquarters of the insurrection, is a small community of six hundred inhabitants, situated in the midst of a range of craggy mountains, the highest of which attains 5600 feet above the level of the sea. Risano, at the entrance to the disaffected district, is about ten miles from Cattaro. Troops advancing thence towards Crivoscie will be obliged to take the road, if such it may be called, leading over mountain heights and through deep ravines to a small place called Upper Ledence, where, during the Dalmatian campaign of 1869, an attempt was made to construct a fort. The worst part lies between Upper Ledence and the village of Durzno, located in an all but inaccessible valley, at the opposite end of which is a steep rugged path ascending to Crivoscie. There are narrow passes at different points of the road; and it is peculiarly well adapted for guerilla warfare. It is, no doubt, the problem of moving a large body of troops through such a difficult country, and the impossibility of using artillery, that has hitherto made the Austrian authorities delay to crush their enemies, by whatever name they may be called in official accounts—rebels, insurgents, or brigands. The local officials are not aware of their number. All that is known on the subject is that the population of the Dalmatian highlands and the southern districts of the Herzegovina have risen in arms, and that the troops quartered in that part of the country require reinforcements before decisive operations can be undertaken.

The authorities in Herzegovina are organizing native volunteer corps, and those of Iasnio, Popovo, and Ljubask are said to have received arms from Netkovich. The Crivoscie people are trying to gain over to their cause the portion of the Bocche lying above Cattaro, but hitherto the party of peace and order have kept the upper hand. It is added that General Jovanovics, the Austrian military governor, on his way from Ragusa to Mostar, has been exceedingly well received by the people. The inhabitants of many of the villages on the way formally denied having any connection with the insurrection. This sounds probable enough, as in that part there are many Catholics who, even under the Turks, took little part in the insurrection either in Bosnia or in Herzegovina, and who may now be supposed to be even less disposed to rise against a Catholic Power.

In Bosnia, the military commander of Sarajevo reports that Major-General Obadics made several offensive movements against the insurgents on the 5th inst. The troops started from Sasjeno on the one and Karaula Humic on the other side. The insurgents avoided both columns. In the afternoon, at Sasjeno, the left flank had some firing with the insurgents, in which three soldiers were wounded. As both the places named are on the left bank of the Drina, it would seem that the insurgents have abandoned their attempts to cross to the right bank of the river and hover about the positions held by the troops. They are now more to the south, and close to the Montenegrin frontier.

One of our Special Artists, who has gone through the experiences of former campaigns in Bosnia and Herzegovina, furnishes the illustrations presented this week. They include views of the serpentine or winding road, constructed by Austrian pioneers for the military service, over the Romanja Planina, an elevated plateau, connected with that of the Karst, 6000 ft. above the Adriatic sea level. This high ground, at its north-west end joins the mountain range separating the valleys of the Bosna, the Drina, and the Save rivers, from each other, and forming the natural division of the entire region. The romantic but perilous defile of Mokro is shown in one of our Artist's Sketches. Others represent the rude wagon of the Bosnian Mohammedan farmer, with its clumsy wooden wheels, drawn by small bullocks or rather calves, serving for the carriage of fuel, or any rustic merchandise; the pack-horse, which is the only possible conveyance over the wretched paths and steep passes in the mountainous parts of that country; and a deserted house, formerly the dwelling of a Mussulman family, in one of the Bosnian villages. In such a habitation, the ground-floor apartments are usually occupied by servants; a flight of stairs leads up to the first floor, where the family live, the apartments of the ladies being strictly separate from those of the gentlemen. There is little furniture; but the divan, covered with carpets, which runs all round the walls of the principal room, is used by the men for sleeping at night, as well as for sitting and conversing by day.

Mr. Walter Clifford, assisted by Madame Alice Barth, Middle. Giulietta Arditi, Mr. Faulkner Leigh, Mr. Romaine-Walker, and Mr. Henry Parker, gave a charming selection of vocal and instrumental music, with recitations, to the inmates of Brompton Hospital last week.

Sir Charles Mordaunt has remitted 10 per cent to his Somersetshire tenants for the seventh half-year in succession. The Earl of Kinnoull has intimated to his tenants that he will allow them a reduction of 5 per cent on their rents for the last year and the next two years.

Sir Moses Montefiore has written a letter to the Lord Mayor, inclosing a cheque of £500 on behalf of the fund for the erection of a new building for the City of London College, and expressing heartfelt thanks for the service his Lordship rendered to the cause of the Jews in Russia by presiding at the meeting held at the Mansion House.

Lord Carnarvon has accepted the presidency of the Board of Governors of the Newbury Grammar School, under the new scheme which has been prepared by the Charity Commissioners. New school buildings of much larger dimensions than those which exist are to be erected on a healthy site on the outskirts of the town.

Vice-Chancellor Sir James Bacon attained his eighty-fourth year last Saturday. He is the oldest Judge on the English Bench. The learned Judge, who was appointed a Vice-Chancellor in June, 1870, also holds the office of Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, to which place he was appointed on the Bankruptcy Act of 1869 coming into operation.

PLAYHOUSES.

There have been grand pantomime doings this week at "the houses twain of Covent Garden and of Drury Lane." The muse of Horace and James Smith, in the "Rejected Addresses" having given priority (probably for the sake of a rhyme) to the first-named house and the poet being King, I will take the splendid theatre in Bow-street first; although, as most people know, the first Drury Lane Theatre was opened under Killigrew's patent in the year of grace 1662; whereas Rich did not transfer his Lincoln's-inn-fields company to the theatre built for him in Covent-garden until 1732. At the "Garden," then, the grand Christmas Pantomime of "Little Bo-Peep," having run its appointed and splendid course and won golden opinions from all sorts of people—especially the little people—assumed, just as the curtain was about to drop on its glories, the character of a Phoenix, and blazed forth again with renewed lustre. To speak more prosaically, the "run" of "Little Bo-Peep" was prolonged for an additional week beyond the time originally contemplated for its duration. Its renewal of life was short but merry. The "topical" allusions in the diverting School Board examination scene were largely and cleverly developed; and a still more interesting attraction has been the "Æsthetic Quadrille," danced by the wonderful Girards, and Mdlles. Alice Holt, Emily Allcroft, Rosa, and Laurie. The dresses worn by these choreographic "Æsthetes" were, of course, "utterly too too," and the "Æsthetic Quadrille" was a brilliant success; but, at the same time, I am puzzled to determine where the original models are to be found whence the "æsthetes" whom we see on the stage are copied. There are a good many young ladies who, being so fortunate as to be endowed with the Prærafaellite tawny hair and the Prærafaellite maxillaries, "make up" after Miss Ellen Terry; and there are a good many gentlemen who wear velvet coats, knickerbockers, and coloured hose when they play lawn-tennis or go bicycling; but did you ever see any persons dressed like Balthorne in society? I never did. Even that good-natured eccentric Mr. Oscar Wilde did not venture to wear knee-breeches in public until he crossed the Atlantic; and to all appearance American audiences no more approved of his knee-breeches than Mr. Oscar Wilde himself did of the Atlantic Ocean.

At Drury Lane that "manager of much resource" Mr. Augustus Harris, has triumphantly demonstrated that it is not always nor necessarily a work of supererogation to paint the lily and gild refined gold. "Robinson Crusoe" as it was first produced on "Boxing Night" was the handsomest pantomime that had been witnessed for many years. Mr. Augustus Harris determined to make his pantomime, in the eighth week of its age, still handsomer; and crowded audiences attest, every night—to say nothing of the morning performances—his delighted appreciation of the Harrisian Supplement or Augustan Augmentation to "Robinson Crusoe." The new and gorgeous addition consists in a very dazzling and tasteful pageant which succeeds the Procession of the Guilds through Old London, in the scene where the returned and rejoicing Crusoe is presented with the freedom of the City. The spectators are now favoured with the glittering spectacle of a train of beauteous damsels and scarlet-clad trumpeters, playing on rebecs, hautboys, shawms, and all manner of psaltery, following whom is a bevy of gorgeously arrayed knights, ladies, pages, and pursuivants. A raised dais has been erected at the back of the stage to allow these gorgeous masquers more elbow-room. Then a kind of International Entente Cordiale is symbolised by performers personating John Bull and a typical Yankee, bearing respectively the American ensign and the "meteor flag" of England, and joining hands in affectionate salutation to the strains of a chorus with the agreeable burden of "The Star-Spangled Banner and the Dear Old Union Jack." "Robinson Crusoe" has been further renovated by new dresses made in Paris and London, new decorative effects, new jokes and "funniments," and new music. But for the many other novelties which Mr. Augustus Harris has in store for the delectation of the patrons of Old Drury, the pantomime of "Robinson Crusoe" might be backed (in degree) to run to the Greek Kalends.

I went on Monday night to the Gaiety—one must be particular nowadays in specifying the time at which theatrical performances take place—to see how Mr. Robert Reece's three-act burlesque-drama of "Aladdin" was getting on; and it was gratifying to find that the young gentleman (he has only been dramatised about five hundred times within the last one hundred years or so) was getting on even better than could be expected in the second week of February. That is to say, the house was filled by an audience both fashionable and popular; and it was equally pleasant and edifying to observe that immaculate Respectability in the dress circle, the Upper Ten in the private boxes, the small bourgeoisie in the pit, and the Gilded Youth in the stalls, all seemed equally delighted with the remarkable performance on the stage. The evening passed in a continuous tintamarre of laughter and applause, which must be so highly satisfactory to all persons concerned, including the esteemed Mr. John Hollingshead, the magician of the not only Wonderful, but "Sacred" lamp of Burlesque. The charm of "Aladdin" is its admirably artistic arrangement and distribution. As every well-ordained picture should have, it possesses a foreground, a background, and a middle distance. The foreground is inimitably filled by a choice quintet of artistes, comprising Mr. Edward Terry, Mr. E. W. Royce, Miss Kate Vaughan, Miss Connie Gilchrist, and Miss Nellie Farren. The middle distance is occupied by elegant scenery, handsome decorations, and a sparkling ballet. The background is unobtrusively but efficiently filled by Mr. Robert Reece's own burlesque drama. The great merit of "Aladdin" is that any wearisome suggestion of the Arabian Nights' Entertainments is not at any time forced on your attention. Who cares to be bored with the Arabian Nights? Certainly not the gilded youth of the period; and it is for this reason, I should say, that Mr. John Hollingshead dresses his pretty ballerine, not as the ladies in brocaded caftans and buggy trousers, and with "golden lily" feet, are dressed at Pekin or Canton, but as the young ladies who attitudinise and pirouette in the "Petit Faust" and the "Black Crook," "Giroflé and Girofla," and "Geneviève de Brabant" are attired. It is possible on the stage to be too realistic. That was shown by the enthusiastic amateur who, when he played Othello, blacked himself all over. That is shown in the splendid revival of the "School for Scandal" at the Vaudeville, in which an excess of sombre furniture, by "real" upholsterers, produces an effect not half so attractive as it might have been had the scenic artist and the property man had a little more scope and verge. Mr. John Hollingshead is too experienced and too discreet a manager to fall into such an error as this. The damsels of the Flowery Land are not accustomed to exhibit their apparatus of locomotion; but a Gaiety audience demand, as the gentleman in Mr. Dickens's novel did, "plenty of leg;" so Mr. Hollingshead arrays his corps de ballet in the graceful and piquant costumes of mediæval pages and Watteau shepherdesses. Mr. Robert Reece ably seconds the action of his astute impresario by giving to his drama not an Oriental but a metropolitan colour, by capturing the passing folly as it flies, by crystallising the slang catchwords of the day, and by teaching the young idea how to shoot, in the direction of the light, the brisk, the breezy, and the "Zoedonish." This is the true art of Burlesque. This is the true "Segreto per esser felice." Young Maffio Orsini was, after a fashion, a genuine burlesque dramatist. Hear him merrily singing—

Non curiamo l'incerto domani
Se quest'oggi c'è dato a goder.

What a pity that so short a time after the brindisi had gone round that terrible Donna Lucrezia with the Seven Monks and the Seven Coffins should have appeared on the scene!

Ably seconded by Mr. T. Squire and Mr. J. J. Dallas (excruciatingly funny as Aladdin's mother), and with Miss Phyllis Broughton looking charming as the Prince of Pekin, and Miss Agnes Hewett presenting a most radiant aspect as the Captain of the Guard, Mr. Robert Reece's burlesque-drama must convince the most sceptical critic that, if Rosherville Gardens be the place whereat to spend a Happy Day, in the Gaiety Theatre, under the management of Mr. John Hollingshead and the dispensation of burlesque is pre-eminently the place where you may spend a Happy Night. Personally, I could go to see Aladdin over and over again—were it only for ten minutes—to hear Miss Nellie Farren (who looks enchanting as Aladdin) sing that most moving song in the Cave of the Lamp scene. What the song is about I could not well make out, and it does not much matter; but in melody, gesture, humour, and pathos, Miss Farren was simply perfect, and richly deserved her repeated encores. A wonderful little woman.

G. A. S.

THE COVENT-GARDEN PANTOMIME.

ANOTHER TREAT TO POOR SCHOOL-CHILDREN.

Gaily brightened by a "quite too-too consummately utter" æsthetic quadrille—really an imitatively droll and mirth-moving dance, which might add zest to many a Fancy-Dress Ball during the season—the Covent Garden pantomime, "Little Bo-Peep," has been performed with extra vivacity during the present (the concluding) week. This new and exceedingly popular feature of a charming pantomime excited the ringing laughter of the three thousand poor school-children who were gratuitously entertained at a special matinee last Tuesday. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales had graciously signified that the Princess and himself would have been happy, had their engagements permitted, to attend the first of these juvenile matinées given by the proprietors of this Journal on Jan. 12. Fortunately, their Royal Highnesses could be present on Tuesday; and with the Prince and Princess, and Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud, came the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and family. Bouquets were presented to the Royal party by Master Ingram and two of the children of the Foundling Hospital. The three thousand little ones were not only entertained by "Little Bo-Peep," but were also regaled with cake, oranges, bon-bons, and given a threepenny bit each, thanks to the generous response made to the Rev. Edward Ker Gray's appeal in the Standard and the Daily News. A list of the subscriptions received by the reverend gentleman is given in the advertising columns of our present Number.

The Æsthetic Quadrille (to be performed for the last time to-night) has been enthusiastically encored and redemanded. It richly merits the applause. It is the most humorous of skits against the modern school of æsthetes ridiculed in "The Colonel" and "Patience." The fantastic dresses, designed by M. Pilotell, the exaggerated "æsthetic properties" supplied by Messrs. Liberty and Co., of Regent-street, and the grotesque effect of the whole dance may be pronounced unique. When, to the tune of the æsthetic music of Mr. Crowe's band, the elastic-limbed Girard Family, that accomplished danseuse, Mdlle. Rosa, and her skilful companions, Mdlles. Alice Holt, Laurie, and Emily Allcroft, limply go through the languid opening figures of the Æsthetic Quadrille, the house at once recognises the meaning of the quaint burlesque; and laughter is loud and long when, to quicker music, the fun of the dance becomes fast and furious. The Æsthetic Quadrille is a decided "hit," and adds another laurel to the brow of M. Déwinne, the ballet-master.

MUSIC.

THE CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

"Tannhäuser" was produced at Her Majesty's Theatre, in an English version, on Tuesday evening. This is the fourth of Wagner's operas that have been brought out by Mr. Rosa, adapted to our language; "The Flying Dutchman," "Rienzi," and "Lohengrin" being the others. It was the first hearing of an English adaptation of the opera, and the occasion offers another instance of Mr. Rosa's artistic enterprise. The cast was generally a very efficient one, specialties having been the excellent performances of Madame Valleria and Herr Schott, respectively, as Elisabeth and Tannhäuser. Among the principal effects of the evening were the delivery by the former of Elisabeth's share in the duet with Tannhäuser in the second act, her expression of consternation at the knight's frenzied rhapsody in the tournament of song, her intercession for his pardon, her appealing prayer, and the final expression of agony and despair. In vocal and dramatic refinement it was a performance of exceptional merit. Herr Schott's resonant voice told well in the more declamatory passages of Tannhäuser's music, especially in the audacious outburst in praise of Venus in the contest of singers; in the knight's farewell to Elisabeth, and his despairing narration to Wolfram after his return from the pilgrimage to Rome. The music of the last-named character was effectively sung by Mr. Ludwig, who was particularly successful in his solos in the scene of the tournament of song and the delivery of the romance, "Like death's dark shadow" (the address to the evening star). The little, but important, music assigned to Venus was brightly rendered by Miss G. Burns; and the solo of the shepherd boy was exceedingly well given by Miss Irene Adams. Mr. H. Pope was an impressive Landgrave; and other characters were efficiently filled by Mr. B. Davies (Walther), Mr. H. D'Egville (Biterolf), Mr. D. Thomas (Heinrich), and Mr. Leahy (Reinmar).

The English text has been skilfully adapted by Mr. J. P. Jackson, by whom the translations of Wagner's other operas were specially made for Mr. Rosa's performances.

The scenery (by Signor Magnani, of Parma) is extremely beautiful, and the costumes and stage appointments are splendid. An orchestra of first-rate quality rendered the instrumental details with admirable effect, particularly the fine overture and the equally fine music preceding the tournament of song; and the chorus-singing was far superior to what is frequently heard on our opera stage. Mr. Raudegger conducted with special ability.

The principals were several times recalled; Mr. Rosa and Mr. Raudegger were called on at the close of the performance; and the reception of the opera throughout was such as to promise a continued success that is justly due. "Tannhäuser" was announced for repetition yesterday (Friday) evening.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The seventieth season of this society opened well on Thursday week, when the concluding portion of the programme was devoted to a performance of Beethoven's ninth symphony, the colossal work that forms the climax to the series of his productions of that class, and that still remains the grandest example of symphonic art, admirable alike for its elevation of style and amplitude of development; and special in its structure, as including (in its final portion) a vocal setting of Schiller's "Ode to Joy." Great interest always attaches to its performance by the Philharmonic Society, it having been composed (in 1823) for this institution, and first performed in England at one of the concerts of the season of 1825. Its rendering last week was generally excellent, particularly so in the orchestral portions. The newly-formed choir associated with the society sang the choral music well, considering its extreme difficulties; and the vocal solos were very efficiently rendered by Misses Marriott and Orridge, Mr. F. Boyle, and Mr. F. B. Foote.

The orchestral performances of the overtures to "Der Freischütz" and "Die Meistersinger" proved—as in the case of the choral symphony—the good results of the rule, established last year, of having at least two rehearsals for every concert. In the first part of the programme, Mendelssohn's violin concerto in A minor was very finely played by Mr. Carrodus, one of the best pupils of the composer; Liszt's "Chorus of Reapers" (from his "Prometheus") music was well sung by the Philharmonic Choir, and Sir Stenודה Bennett's quartet, "God is a spirit" (from "The Woman of Samaria"), was rendered by the solo vocalists already named. Mr. W. G. Cousins was cordially greeted on his appearance as conductor, which office he has worthily held since 1867.

STRAND THEATRE.

"Le Jour et la Nuit," Lecocq's latest, and one of his best, productions, has been brought out here, in an English version, by Mr. Farnie, entitled "Manola." In the original libretto (by MM. Vanloo and Leterrier) a Portuguese Baron is expecting the arrival of his fourth bride (a widow), when he is called to a frontier war between his own country and Spain. Meanwhile, Manola, a young creole girl, has arrived at the Castle, of which the Intendant, or steward, Miguel, is her lover. She is seeking refuge from the pursuit of the routé Prince Calabazas; to save her from whom Miguel introduces her as the intended of the Baron, who arrives and is charmed by the attractions of Manola. The real intended now appears, and, in order to smooth matters, consents to pass for the attendant of Manola; the one being the bride of the Baron, apparently, by day, the other, in reality, by night; hence the French title of the piece, which in its original shape includes pungent points that are more appropriate on Parisian ground than here. A series of mystifications ensues, and all is set right at last. Mr. Farnie has judiciously modified the text, and rendered it fit for a London audience.

The music is, in some instances, an advance on M. Lecocq's previous productions, and is, generally, full of spirit and impulse. Among many effective pieces may be specified the couplets, "Had I only known," for Manola; her "Snake-song" and "Berceuse," the duets for Manola and Miguel (especially "Let us die"); the "Castagnette" (bolero, for soli and chorus); and the concerted music of the second finale. An effective drinking-song, for Miguel (and chorus), "Shall we one glass," is an interpolated piece by M. De Wenzel.

Miss Leo and Miss Veronn were, respectively, efficient representatives of Manola and Beatrix; as were M. Desmonts of Miguel, Mr. W. J. Hill of Prince Calabazas, Mr. Ashley of Dona Brasciro, and Mr. Stepan of Stefano; the small parts of Tessa and Sanchita having been well filled by Misses M. Branscombe and V. Carew. The piece is well put on the stage, and is likely to have a successful run.

The second of Mr. E. H. Thorne's evening concerts at the Royal Academy of Music took place on Monday evening with a programme of sterling interest, including his own clever pianoforte performances.

The third of Mr. Sims Reeves's concerts of "Operatic, National, and Miscellaneous Music," at St. James's Hall, took place on Tuesday evening, when the eminent tenor sang the scena and aria, "Fra poco," in a selection from "Lucia di Lammermoor;" the song, "The grasping, rasping Norman race" (from "Robin Hood"), and Hutton's song, "Good-bye, sweetheart." Madame Marie Roze, Misses S. Jones and C. Elliott, Messrs. W. Shakspeare, F. B. Foote, and H. Pyatt, contributed to the vocal programme; Signor Piatto played a violoncello solo, and the "Anemoic Union" gave some skilful performances. The fourth concert takes place next Tuesday evening.

Another of the excellent London Ballad Concerts was given at St. James's Hall on Wednesday with the customary success. On Ash-Wednesday (next week) a sacred concert will be given at the same place by the same body of artistes.

Of the concert of the Bach choir, on Thursday evening, we must speak next week; as also of the resumption of the Crystal Palace Saturday afternoon concerts this week.

The concert given on Thursday week at the Victoria Coffee Hall (one of a series under the direction of Mr. Clement Hoey) was rendered special by the presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Duke and Duchess of Teck. A programme of popular interest was effectively rendered by Mesdames Liebhart and A. Paget, Misses Hardy (amateur), F. Hipwell, and H. Beebe, Mr. C. Abercrombie, Mr. H. Bailey, Mr. H. Thorndike, and Mr. E. Roberts. Mr. Buziau (violin), Mdlle. Buziau, and Miss Waud (pianists), and the Royal Artillery band contributed instrumental performances. This week's concert included a Mozart programme, contributed to by students of the Royal Academy of Music.

The first of a series of matinées was given on Wednesday, in the arena of the Royal Albert Hall, by the students of the National Training School for Music.

The Henley Royal Regatta is fixed for Thursday and Friday, July 6 and 7.

The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland held his second Levée for the season at Dublin Castle on Tuesday.

At the annual general meeting of the Royal Horticultural Society, held on Tuesday, an encouraging report was presented.

The consecration ceremony of the Greek church at Bayswater, of which we gave an illustration last week, was performed by the Archbishop of Corfu.

The National Rifle Association of the United States has accepted the English challenge to a match at Wimbledon this year, on condition that a team of English Volunteers is sent for a return-match at Creedmoor next year.

The progress of Canada formed the subject of a paper read before the members of the Colonial Institute on Tuesday night; the lecturer and most of the speakers in the debate bearing testimony to the encouraging signs of increased prosperity throughout the Dominion.

THE WAR IN TUNIS: A FRENCH COLUMN ON THE MARCH.

THE FRENCH ARMY IN TUNIS.

Our illustration of the march of a detachment of French troops, across the wild and rugged country in the southern part of the Regency of Tunis, shows that their recent North African warfare is something like the campaigns of the British Army in South Africa, during the Kaffir and Zulu wars. The Arab tribes in the remoter districts are by no means yet subdued, but the whole of the Mediterranean shore, with the Gulf of Tunis and adjacent coasts, is completely in possession of the French.

The city of Tunis, where the Bey is still permitted to enjoy a nominal reign, has a population of 100,000 souls, which may be roughly divided into 50,000 Arabs, 30,000 Jews, and 20,000 Christians. The Arabs occupy the upper portion of the town, the Jews a wholly distinct quarter below the Moorish city, and the Europeans the plain between the hill and the lake. Under the régime of M. Roustan, a French colony bids fair to fill up the entire space between the Bab-el-Bhar and the "little sea" with a miniature Algiers. Tunis has already its Boulevard de la Marine, its French Residency, with a guard of French soldiers, and its French cafés of all kinds and sorts; while the Société Marseillaise, the Grand Hotel, and the Crédit Lyonnais seem to compete for supremacy in the splendour of their respective establishments. The most interesting building in Tunis is the Dar-el-Bey, or City Palace. It occupies one side of the square facing the citadel, which received the name of Souk-el-Islam three years ago. The Dar-el-Bey contains a few rooms which were occupied by Caroline of Brunswick, who happened to be visiting Tunis when Lord Exmouth threatened to bombard Goletta a few days after his attack on Algiers. Many old Tunisians still speak of the splendid reception which the then Bey of Tunis offered to the English Princess. In the Dar-el-Bey Muhamed Essadek received the Grand Cross of the Bath at the hands of Admiral Yelverton, and there he has successively welcomed three of our own Royal Princes within the last quarter of a century. All this is over now. The bitterest pang the Bey has suffered since he became a French vassal last May was occasioned him when M. Roustan demanded the surrender of the Dar-el-Bey, as a residence for General Lambert and a site for the new Tunisian Bureaux Arabes. The old man wept, and pleaded in vain his religious obligation to pass there the twenty-seventh day of each Ramadan fast. Of course he yielded at last, but he refused to be comforted; even when the Resident cynically remarked that the French would take good care of him at Tunis, and consider him their guest during the next Ramadan.

The recent additions to the Inner Temple Library, consisting of a new wing of two large rooms and a lecture hall for the use of the students, having been completed, the library was reopened last Saturday morning. The treasurer, Mr. Maule, Q.C., in order to celebrate the opening of the new wing, invited the Benchers and a select party of friends to luncheon with him.

BURMESE BALLET GIRLS AS THEY PERFORMED BEFORE THE VICEROY OF INDIA AT RANGOON.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Paris, Tuesday, Feb. 14.

The weather here continues to be extraordinarily mild, and the whole city seems gay and happy. If the trees were not black and naked one might think that spring had really come. On Sunday there was a brilliant attendance at the Auteuil race-meeting, and the retour des courses, that scene so characteristic of Parisian life, took place in a blaze of golden sunlight. The Champs Elysées were black with equipages and pedestrians, and in the course of the afternoon some two hundred thousand Parisians took a "constitutional" between the Place de la Concorde and the Arc de Triomphe. The garden of the Tuileries was a curious and interesting sight. Along the wall under the southern terrace the mammas and papas sat sunning themselves like lizards, lézardant, as the boys say in the south; beside them the buxom nurses from Burgundy or Picardy, with their long streamers of broad blue or rose ribbon, lavished maternal care on the babies, and, amidst the flocks of children and the block of toy carts and carriages, the soldiers, the legendary fantassins and pompiers, threaded their way and cast longing glances at the opulent charms of the Nommes. Guignol and the Marionette theatre counted their audiences by the hundred; half a dozen football-matches were going on calmly, in the French style, in the open spaces, and the whole garden re-echoed with the sharp taps of a ball-game that is now so popular here and in which a tambourine is used instead of a bat. That day the Parisians indulged in a veritable debauch of sunlight and air; it was a typical Parisian Sunday worthy to figure in a modern "Tableau de Paris."

By a strange coincidence, on this very Sunday Mlle. Héloïse Mercier, the eldest and surviving daughter of Louis Sébastien Mercier, the author of the famous "Tableau de Paris," died in Paris, at the advanced age of ninety.

For the moment, politics do not occupy a large place in the public attention. The deputies meet three or four times a week, but they do not appear to do much except write letters and newspaper articles, and even verses. M. Clovis Hugues, the Radical deputy for Marseilles—bagasse!—writes a chronicle of the week in verse, and Rochefort's journal, L'Intransigeant, publishes it, and makes "a feature" of it. M. Clovis Hugues is truly a type. Dining at Victor Hugo's the other day, Clovis remarked: "Well, maître, you have a poet at your table to-day." Victor Hugo acquiesced, and added gently that there were two poets at table. Shortly afterwards the irrepressible Clovis summed up some general observations by saying: "After all, the nineteenth century will have had two poets." "Oh! leave me the nineteenth century, and I will leave you the twentieth," replied Victor Hugo.

And M. Gambetta? The ex-Premier, it appears, has had an audience of the King of Italy. Furthermore, he has advised his friends to support the Freycinet Cabinet, as far as possible; and he has evidently abandoned the dissolutionist campaign which, for that matter, he had hardly begun.

There has been some talk amongst the Radicals about the recent expulsion of a Nihilist emissary, M. Pierre Lavroff. M. Lavroff is a venerable gentleman who has long resided in Paris, where he has lived as a teacher of languages and as a journalist. Recently he announced in L'Intransigeant the opening of a subscription in favour of the "Red Cross Society of the Will of the People." The Gambetta Cabinet had already promised to expel M. Lavroff, and M. de Freycinet could not refuse. This measure is the consequence of the arbitrary character of the law of 1849, which makes it almost impossible to resist a request of expulsion coming from a foreign Government. M. de Freycinet intends to have this law modified. M. Lavroff has gone to London.

I spoke last week in this column of a book of M. Paul Alexis on Emile Zola, which may be handed down to posterity as a proof of the place that can be conquered with a certain vigour of temperament, imperturbable aplomb, ignorance of all delicacy and respect, and the art of grouping around one willing creatures who do not ask anything better than to be heralds of charlatanry and beaters of the big drum of réclame. Alphonse Daudet is an artist, and not for a moment to be placed on the same level as Zola. Still it is curious to observe that a day or two after the publication of "Emile Zola, Notes d'un Ami," M. Ernest Daudet—"Dora" of the Figaro—published "Mon Frère et Moi," souvenirs of childhood and youth. M. Ernest Daudet tells us much that is interesting about his illustrious brother, and still more about himself. The misfortune is that, just when M. Ernest Daudet arrives at an interesting point, he stops short, and explains that he has not the right to take the bloom off the narrative that Alphonse Daudet himself intends to write, either in his memoirs or in the history of his books! The attempt to anticipate immortality has its disadvantages. Perhaps good taste would have counselled both Alphonse and Ernest Daudet to keep their souvenirs and autobiographies in their desks, at least for a good number of years.

The affairs of the Union Générale are likely to occupy the attention of the official liquidators for many months. MM. Bontoux and Féder are still in prison, and several members of the aristocracy who were mixed up in the Union have been examined by the magistrates. The consequences of the disaster are still being made evident almost daily by failures, suicides, loss of reason, and loss of honour. The excitement, however, is over, and public curiosity is already looking out for a new prey.

To-night, opening of the exhibition of the Aquarellistes Français in the new picture-gallery, Rue de Sèze; Wednesday, first performance of the new ballet, "Namouna," at the Opera; Thursday, first ball of the season at the Elysée; Saturday, masked ball at the Opera; and then . . . Lent, Ash-Wednesday, lectures by the eloquent Dominican Father Montabré, a strange mixture of fashion and piety—such is the programme of Paris life between this and Easter, when festivities will be resumed and the season prolonged into the spring, according to the English fashion.

As a result of the War-Office inquiry into the administration of the Royal Hibernian Military School at Dublin, the commandant, Colonel L. S. Cotton, has sent in his resignation.

There was an explosion last Saturday evening, at the Coedcae New Steam Coal Pit, situated about three miles beyond Pontypridd, just beyond the opening of the Rhondda Valley. Six lives were lost.

Last month the officers of the Fishmongers' Company seized at Billingsgate Market 8 tons 14 cwt. of fish as unfit for human food. This is an unusually small quantity. It included 42 salmon, 282 lobsters, 1 barrel of sprats, 9 bags of periwinkles, 1 basket of shrimps, 7 of skate, and 11 of smelts, 32 boxes of haddocks, 2 of hake, 2 of herrings, 87 of plaice, and 13 of whiting, and 26 kits of oysters. With the exception of a hundredweight, which came by water, the whole quantity was delivered by land or rail.

THE CHURCH.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Brooke, John, to be Vicar of St. Katharine's, Northampton.
Cornish, C. E., Vicar of South Petherton, Ilminster; Vicar of St. Mary Redcliffe, Bristol.
Crosse, Arthur B., late English Chaplain at Biarritz, and formerly Rector of Kessingland, Suffolk; Vicar of St. George's, Barrow-in-Furness.
Darbyshire, J., Vicar of St. Paul's, Wolverhampton; Vicar of St. Philip's, Sheffield.
Dunkley, William, Vicar of Hoar Cross, near Burton-on-Trent; Vicar of St. Thomas's, Toxteth Park, Liverpool.
French, S., late Chaplain to the Bishop of Adelaide; Incumbent of St. Peter's, Glenelg, South Australia.
Holland, F. J., Minister of Quebec Chapel, Marylebone; Canon of Canterbury Cathedral.
Hey, C. E., Rector of Bristol Cathedral; Vicar of South Petherton, Ilminster, Somerset.
Jones, John Lewis, Rector of Michaelstone-le-pit, Cardiff.
Kruckenberg, F. T.; Vicar of Grewelthorpe, Yorkshire.
Leeman, W. L., Vicar of Seaford, Liverpool; Rector of Welton-le-Wold, Lincolnshire.
Ockford, C. F., Curate of St. Paul's, Westminster, Bristol; Secretary of the Navy Mission Society.
Pryce, John, Rector of Trefdraeth-cum-Llangwfan; Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Bangor.
Shelford, L. E., Vicar of St. Matthew's, Upper Clapton; Honorary Chaplain to the Bishop of Bedford.
Smithwick, R. F., Chaplain to Lord de Tabley; Vicar of Seaford, Liverpool.
Symonds, A. H., Curate of Lifford; Vicar of Kingsbridge.
Vaughan, J. M., Rector of Doddbrooke, Kingsbridge, Devon; Vicar of Engliscombe, Bath.
Webb, Thomas William, Vicar of Hardwick; Prebendary of Nunnington in Hereford Cathedral.
Williams, Augustin, Rector of Icomb and Chaplain to the Stow Union; Rector of Todenham.
Wilson, Percival Ewen, Curate of St. George's, Bloomsbury; Rector of All Saints', Birmingham.
Young, J.; Vicar of Bradshaw, Halifax.—Guardian.

The Convocations of Canterbury and York met on Tuesday, and discussed a variety of topics.

The Queen has approved the appointment of the Rev. Dr. J. M. Strachan, M.D., to the Bishopric of Rangoon, vacant by the resignation of the Right Rev. Dr. Titcomb, D.D.

Her Majesty has conferred upon the Rev. F. G. Holland, minister of Quebec Chapel, Marylebone, the canonry at Canterbury vacated by the death of the Rev. W. Stone.

The Bishop of Salisbury has fixed April 19 and 20 for the annual diocesan synod, to take place in the chapter-house of the cathedral. The synod comprises about 400 members, lay and clerical, and resident in Wilts and Dorset.

A service in connection with the Church and State Guild was held on Thursday week at the Church of St. Thomas, Regent-street. The sermon was preached by Dr. Oakley, Dean of Carlisle.

A site has been secured at Bournemouth for a memorial church to the late Rev. A. M. Bennett, first Vicar of St. Peter's, the patronage of which is vested with the governors of Keble College, Oxford. The building fund exceeds £6000.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has requested the attention of the National Society to the opportunity that is afforded by Mr. Mundella's new code for appointing preliminary inspectors in secular knowledge in Church schools.

Princess Christian on Saturday last laid the foundation-stone of a church to replace the parish church of St. James's, Paddington. The new structure, intended to accommodate 1300 persons, and which will cost about £14,000, will be from the designs of the late Mr. Street. Several ladies and children presented to her Royal Highness contributions towards the purchase of an organ, to cost about £1000.

In consequence of the resignation of the Rev. William Stafford Finch, of the vicarage of St. Peter's, De Beauvoir Town, the members of the congregation and his friends have presented him with a testimonial of their esteem and regard for his labours in the parish for the past twenty-six years. The testimonial consists of a handsome illuminated address, a silver inkstand, and a tea-tray. His son, the Rev. Charles J. Finch, succeeds him in the vicarage.

BURMESE BALLET GIRLS.

The festivities with which the Marquis of Ripon, Viceroy of India, was entertained at Rangoon, when his Excellency was there as an honoured guest of the Commissioner of British Burmah, were partly described in our last week's publication. They included the special treat of a grand "Pooay," or native Burmese theatrical exhibition, combining the features of a dramatic, musical, and terpsichorean performance, opera, ballet, and extravaganza, by a select company of amateurs and professionals, who did much credit to their national talent, while giving a lively idea of the peculiarities of national taste. The dancing, however, was carefully regulated with a view to English notions of propriety; and the graceful damsels who appeared on the stage, posturing with measured motions to the music of a powerful orchestra, were daughters of the most respectable Burmese families, altogether different from the common class of hired dancing-girls. They were attired in robes of ample drapery, with elaborate coronets or head-dresses, and with gold chains and other decorations, which did not impede the stately movements—rather of the arms and hands than of the feet, with frequent rising and bowing, alternately, and swaying the head and shoulders to the right or to the left—by which they captivated the eyes of an assembly of spectators. There was nothing violent or unladylike in this performance, the general character of which is shown in our illustration, from a photograph by Mr. P. Kier, of Rangoon, and which the reader may compare with the figures represented in a page of Illustrations given in our last. The music, indeed, though delightful to a Burmese ear, was not such as we are accustomed to hear in Europe; the clang of cymbals and tom-toms, the drone of long trumpets, and the beating of drums, made a discordant din which could just be endured, but which none of us could have enjoyed.

The Bath and West of England Society's meeting will this year be held at Cardiff, in the Whitsun week. This will be the second time that the society has visited South Wales.

Lord Aberdare presided at the ordinary meeting of the Royal Historical Society on Thursday, when Dr. Zerffi read a paper on "The Iklik by Hamdani" with reference to the ancient Sabeen Empire.

A bust of the late Lord Taunton has been placed in the Taunton Shirehall. His Lordship represented the town in Parliament for twenty-seven years.

The International Exhibition of Appliances for the Prevention of Smoke, at South Kensington, which opened on Nov. 30 last, was closed on Tuesday. The number of visitors was 116,000. There is a deficiency of about £800 in the funds.

By the resignation of Professor Cayley a place in the Council of the Cambridge University Senate has become vacant, and the election took place on Tuesday, and Professor Stuart (Mechanics), of Trinity College, was returned without opposition. Mr. Frederick Watson, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, was chosen for the post of Hulsean Lecturer for the ensuing year.

THE COURT.

By the advice of her Majesty's physicians, Mentone has been selected as the spot where the Queen will sojourn for a few weeks; quiet and change of air being deemed desirable for the continuance of her Majesty's usually good state of health. The journey, as at present arranged, will be taken about March 15, when the Queen and Princess Beatrice will embark from Portsmouth in the Victoria and Albert, which will be conveyed to Cherbourg by the Alberta, the Enchantress, and the Galatea, special trains afterwards conveying the Royal travellers to Mentone. Her Majesty's return will be timed for the marriage of Prince Leopold during April at Windsor. Favourable accounts of the Duchess of Connaught have continued to be received by the Queen since her Royal Highness's removal to Windsor Castle. Her Majesty as usual after the opening of Parliament, gave a dinner to the Lord Chamberlain on his arrival at Osborne to present the Address from the House of Lords in reply to the Speech from the Throne. The Court attended Divine service on Sunday, performed at Osborne by the Rev. Canon Prothero. Mrs. Drummond, of Megginch, has been on a visit to the Queen, and Lady Cochrane and the Misses Cochrane, the Rev. Canon Prothero, and Colonel Sir Charles Pearson, governor and commandant of the Royal Victoria Hospital at Netley, have dined with her Majesty. The Queen and Princess Beatrice came to town on Thursday, and yesterday the first Drawing-room of the season was held by her Majesty at Buckingham Palace. To-day (Saturday) the Queen and the Princess go to Windsor Castle to see the Duchess of Connaught.

The Queen has signified her intention of creating Lord Carlingford a knight of the Order of St. Patrick, in the room of the late Lord Lurgan.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales since his arrival in town has been busy in furthering science and art, as well as in the amelioration of the multitude, and in charity. Yesterday week the Prince and Princess honoured with their presence the performance of Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," by the Carl Rosa Opera Company, at Her Majesty's Theatre. Last Saturday his Royal Highness attended a meeting of the members of the Standing Committee of the British Museum; and subsequently, accompanied by the Princess and his daughters, he was present at a military assault-at-arms at the Royal Albert Hall in aid of the funds of the Royal Cambridge Asylum for Soldiers' Widows. The same evening he was entertained by the "Savages," his Royal Highness being elected an honorary member. The Irish Ballad Concert, too, at the Royal Victoria Coffee Hall, Waterloo-road, a few evenings since, was distinguished by the presence of the Prince and Princess, who, with the Duke and Duchess of Teck, warmly evinced their appreciation of Mr. Clement Hoey's successful entertainment. Sir Thomas A. Jones, P.R.H.A., has had a sitting from the Prince for his portrait, which is intended for the Freemasons' Hall, Dublin; and his Royal Highness has also sat to Mr. H. Brookes. The home life of the Prince and Princess has been enlivened by an interchange of visits between the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Princess Christian, Princess Louise of Lorne, and the Duke and Duchess of Teck. Their Royal Highnesses have also visited the Duke and Duchess of Connaught at Windsor Castle, where they lunched. The Prince and Princess and the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh were present on Tuesday afternoon at the Covent Garden pantomime of "Little Bo-Peep," a supplementary entertainment to 3000 school-children who were unable, through want of space in the theatre, to partake of the treat given on Jan. 12 by the proprietors of this Journal. The Princess accepted bouquets from the hands of Master Ingram and two of the Foundling Hospital children. Their Royal Highnesses have also been to Her Majesty's and to the Haymarket Theatres. The Prince, desiring to pay a compliment to the dramatic profession, has, so we learn from the World, invited a party of the principal gentlemen connected with it to dine with him to-morrow (Sunday) at Marlborough House. Covers will be laid for thirty. A few non-professional guests will be present, including the Prince of Leiningen, Lord Aylesford, Dr. W. H. Russell, and Mr. George Lewis.

His Royal Highness has consented to take the chair at the public meeting to be held in connection with the Great International Fisheries Exhibition, London, 1883, at Willis's Rooms, on the 27th inst.

The Prince will visit Great Yarmouth towards the end of May for the purpose of opening the new municipal buildings.

Sir Edward Malet, the British Consul-General, has announced to the Khedive the approaching visit of Princes Albert Victor and George of Wales.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh will open the new Eddystone Lighthouse about the end of March, when her Royal and Imperial Highness will give it its first light.

Princess Louise of Lorne, who had been on a visit to the Duke and Duchess of Connaught at Windsor Castle, returned to town on Monday. Her Royal Highness has become patroness of the Women's Emigration Society.

Prince Leopold will preside at the festival of the National Hospital for the Paralyzed and Epileptic, at the Freemasons' Tavern, on March 14.

The Empress of Austria has been in the saddle most days during the week, her Majesty having hunted with the South Cheshire, the North Stafford, the North Shropshire, Sir Watkin Wynn's, and the draghounds. Fair sport has been had over the many miles circuit.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

Mr. Louis Ponsonby, only son of the Hon. Gerald and Lady Maria Ponsonby, was married to Miss Leybourne Popham, of Littlecote, on the 9th inst., at St. Mark's Church, North Audley-street.

Mr. Augustus Langham Christie, son of the M.P. for Lewes, married Lady Rosamond Alice Wallop, third daughter of the Earl and Countess of Portsmouth, the same day, the ceremony taking place at ten a.m. at Wembworthy parish church, North Devon.

The marriage of Mr. Henry Spedding, of Mirehouse, Cumberland, with Lady Jane Stewart, fourth daughter of the late Earl of Galloway, also took place the same day at St. Peter's Church, Eaton-square.

Mr. Frederick Mackarness, son of the Bishop of Oxford, and Miss Amy Chermiside, daughter of the Rev. Seymour Chermiside, formerly Rector of Wilton, Wilts, were married at St. Mary Abbots, Kensington, last Saturday, by the Bishop.

The marriage of the Hon. the Master of Rollo and Miss Mary Hotham is arranged to take place on March 21; that of the Hon. Arthur Henniker, Coldstream Guards, and the Hon. Florence Milnes, shortly after Easter; and that of the Earl of Winterton and Lady Georgiana Hamilton, daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Abercorn, the middle of next month.

A marriage is arranged between the Hon. Patrick Greville-Nugent, fourth son of Lord Greville of Clonyn; and Emengarda, only daughter of the late Augustus Ogilvie Esq., of Cove, Dumfriesshire, N.B.

THE SILENT MEMBER.

Words, words, words only have hitherto been the result of the united efforts of both Houses of Parliament. But the House of Lords continues to offer the example of terseness to the loquacious Lower House. Nor have the words dropped by noble Lords been altogether fruitless. In accordance with the general feeling of abhorrence which the intelligence of the Russian persecution of the Jews excited in this country, the Duke of Somerset on the 9th inst. inquired whether the Foreign Secretary had received any official information on the subject. Earl Granville, while explaining that the Government had no right to interfere in the domestic concerns of a Foreign Power, dextrously managed to convey the Government's sense of the barbarous nature of the persecution. The Marquis of Salisbury likewise showed himself in accord with the prevailing sentiment, but reserved his irony for a presumably inadvertent slip of the Foreign Secretary implying that a slight discourtesy had been offered to Austria recently. This conversation, brief though it was, can scarcely fail to have a good effect in Russia. While the debate on the Address was still being continued in the other House, their Lordships yesterday week were rewarded for their loyal dispatch by hearing the Earl of Kenmare read her Majesty's gracious message of thanks for their Address. The Earl of Rosebery at the same sitting, readily acquiring the perfunctory, official tone, as Under-Secretary for the Home Department, could offer Lord Stanley of Alderley no hope that the sentences on Messrs. May and Moir for bribery would be reconsidered. On Monday the smouldering opposition of the majority of their Lordships to the Irish Land Act found vent in an eruption, aimed to throw discredit on the Government for having suffered the appointment of Mr. Godley and Mr. Fottrell to subordinate posts on the Land Commission. In vain did Lord Carlingford explain that Mr. Fottrell (whose offence was the circulation of a pamphlet on the land question) and Mr. Godley had sent in their resignations, and that Mr. Fottrell's had been accepted. The dissatisfaction that prevailed gave some indication of what might be expected during Friday's debate. Meantime, such grave questions as the state of Egypt and Tunis have been casually opened by noble Lords—only to be neatly avoided by Earl Granville.

What will be the upshot of the Procedure debate? That is the question which has hung like a cloud over the House of Commons all the time the Hibernian opposition to the Address has dragged its slow length along. Sir Stafford Northcote has directly joined issue with the Government. The Leader of the Opposition (flushed with success over the Ministerial defeat on the Bradlaugh question) elected to deliver battle on the first clause—the Closure clause—and the issue of the great Party Combat may even now be trembling in the balance. Whatever the end may be, it is a pity the Government did not frame this vital clause more clearly.

The most noticeable feature of the week's debate on the Commons' Address was Mr. Gladstone's reference to the Home-Rule Amendment of Mr. J. P. Smyth. That hon. member had moved that words should be added to the Address to the effect that the only efficient remedy for the deplorable condition of affairs in Ireland would be a readjustment of the relations established between England and Ireland by the Act of Union. "Show us a plan by means of which the local affairs of Ireland can be conducted in Ireland without impairing the integrity of the Empire!" That was virtually Mr. Gladstone's answer; and this shadow of a suggestion of the possibility of any kind of feasible Home Rule being even considered roused the wrath of many critics within and without the House. But Mr. Smyth's amendment was negatived by 93 to 37 votes on the 9th. The same evening, Mr. Justin McCarthy introduced his amendment condemnatory of the Coercion Act and actions of the Government, and reaffirming the necessity of establishing a Constitutional Government in Ireland. At wearisome length, Mr. Forster defended his administration; and the only noteworthy speeches during the whole of the four nights of debate were Mr. Plunket's eloquent attack on the Government, Lord Randolph Churchill's flippant deliverance, Mr. Chamberlain's spirited rejoinder to Mr. Plunket, Mr. Shaw-Lefevre's reply to Lord George Hamilton, and Mr. Sexton's tolling the knell of departing day at Kilmalsham on Tuesday. By 98 to 30—a majority of 68—was Mr. McCarthy's amendment defeated. The Address was then (just a week after its introduction) agreed to by a majority of 65—87 against 22 votes. And the House was counted out during the discussion of Sir John Hay's motion with regard to the murder of Captain Brownrigg.

Wednesday did not pass without a miscellaneous criticism of the foreign and home policy of the Government. On the strength of his familiarity with the East, Sir H. Drummond Wolff (the Foreign Secretary in reserve of the Fourth Party) took advantage of the bringing up of the report to air his glibness on the well-threshed Eastern Question, as did Mr. Ashmead Bartlett; but both were most effectively answered by Sir Charles Dilke. Sir William Harcourt having been drawn into a statement concerning the Water Question in London (the Home Secretary trusted that that matter would be settled by the new Municipal Government for the Metropolis), the House separated with the lively prospect of a stout contest on the new Rules of Procedure.

SKETCHES OF LIFE IN RUSSIA.

The picturesque though rough aspect of several classes of the Russian population, who are but half-European in their attire and outward appearance, is shown in another page of Sketches by the same Artist whose pencil has delineated some former examples. "Coming from Market" is upon a road into the country around St. Petersburg, where the signs of artificial urban elegance and refinement are soon left behind, giving place to rusticity alike in the ill-kept highway and the adjacent fields, and in the rude carts, with single horses in queer clumsy harness, carrying home the peasants with their wives and daughters. They have been making needful purchases in town. The scene might be in Connaught, but for the foreign garb of the driver and the peculiar shape of the four-wheeled vehicle, unlike anything to be met with in the British islands. As for the two heads of the people, identified as "Street Characters," who may be encountered any day in the Russian metropolis, the long-haired, full-bearded Moujik is an unmistakable native Muscovite; but the other, with his shaven face, black necktie, and ordinary cap, might be taken for an English mechanic returning from the workshop. It is very different with the two figures of old-fashioned Russian merchants, or retail tradesmen, more likely, dealing with the peasantry and lower classes; they best please their customers by keeping to the national style of dress and manners, and piously crossing themselves, as good orthodox believers, whenever they begin a conversation for some luck-bringing bargain of trade. The Tartar merchants, who come from South or East Russia, bringing the wares of their district for sale, are quite equal to those shopmen of the city in the arts and graces of commercial life. Religion, with all classes of the populace below the rank of Government officials and University students, is still a very serious concern in Russia; and here we see the devout worshippers kneeling in prayer before one of the shrines, adorned with a picture of the Virgin, which is illuminated by tapers and a swinging lamp. The nuns, also, belonging to a religious Order, are to be met going their rounds from door to door, begging the contributions of pious Christian folk, or stopping to reckon up the amount they have received.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

ITALY.

In the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies on the 10th inst. Signor Magliani, the Minister of Finance, replying to a question with regard to a reduction of the salt tax, said that the present condition of the Budget did not permit of such a measure. The Minister added, however, that he was prepared to introduce a bill for allowing a drawback to manufacturers who use salt in the processes in order to promote the export trade, but beyond this nothing could be done. The Chamber accepted the principle of the representation of minorities. After a long and animated sitting the Chamber, on Tuesday afternoon, passed the Scrutin de Liste Bill by 200 votes against 143.

HOLLAND.

M. Six, Minister of the Interior, has resigned; and M. Pynacker Hordyk, Professor of Law at Utrecht, has been appointed to succeed him.

BELGIUM.

In the sitting of the Chamber of Representatives on the 10th inst. the estimates for the Ministry of War were discussed. In the course of the debate General Gratry, the Minister, said that he did not think it would be found necessary to construct fortifications on the line of the Meuse. He added that the pamphlet of General Brialmont on this subject was written by him in his private capacity, but he, General Gratry, had reprimanded him on account of the anti-constitutional theories which he had therein advanced.

GERMANY.

Prince Henry of Prussia, the Crown Prince's second son, will start on another cruise in the middle of July. He will be attached to the staff of the new corvette Olga. The Olga, named after the Queen of Wurtemberg, is one of the finest vessels of the German cruising fleet. Her armament consists of ten of Krupp's 15-centimetre guns, and she will carry a complement of 247 men. The Olga's cruise will have a duration of about fourteen months, in the course of which she will visit the principal ports on the east coast of South and Central America, and in the West Indies.

The Prussian Chamber resumed its sittings on Tuesday with the second reading of the Budget, which offered few features of general interest, and the House adjourned till Thursday.

Intelligence has been received at Berlin of the death, at Cannes, on the 8th inst., of Berthold Auerbach, the celebrated novelist and poet. The news caused great sorrow in the family of the Crown Prince and among all circles of society.

RUSSIA.

Prince Suworoff died on Sunday evening. It is officially announced that General Kryshanowsky, Governor-General of Orenburg, and Privy Councillor Klimoff, of the Ministry of Domains, have been dismissed from the public service.

TURKEY.

Ali Fuad Bey has been appointed Minister of Public Instruction. Reouf Bey, and Said Bey, a relation of Mahmoud Nedim Pasha, who were recently arrested on a charge of treason, have now been set at liberty.

CANADA.

The Dominion Parliament was opened at Ottawa on the 9th inst. The Marquis of Lorne, in his opening address, congratulated the country on the flourishing state of agriculture, its growing manufactures, and the expansion of its trade and commerce. His Excellency referred in fitting language to the death of President Garfield. He spoke in praise of the North-West of the Dominion, which he had recently visited, and said the time had come for the division of that territory into four or more provincial districts, with appropriate nomenclature.

The Address in reply to the Governor's Speech was carried on the 10th, without amendment from the Opposition.

During the debate on the Address Mr. Burke, the Leader of the Opposition, declared that the Canadian Extradition Laws were disgraceful, and also maintained that Canada should have power to negotiate directly with foreign countries with regard to trade.

A Bill has been introduced for the appointment of a Court of Railway Commissioners for Canada and British Columbia. The Supreme Court has decided that a Court of Appeal formed by a local Government is not a provincial Court within the meaning of the British North American Act.

The revenue for the year ending June 30 was 29,635,297 dols., and the expenditure 25,502,554 dols. The exports for the year were 10,000,000 dols. in excess of the preceding year. The increase was wholly in British trade.

SOUTH AFRICA.

Fighting is reported from the Transvaal. A Boer force crossed the Convention boundary and attacked the natives under the Chief Montsima, who it is stated repulsed the Boers. The situation in Basutoland is described as grave.

A slab will, it is said, shortly be placed on the house where Sir Walter Scott lived when in Rome.

A Bombay telegram reports that the inhabitants of Herat are in open rebellion, and troops have been ordered to proceed thither from Cabul.

Mr. Stillman, the Times correspondent, who was said to have been murdered in the Herzegovina, is now reported to be in Athens alive and well.

The members of the special British mission sent to invest the King of Saxony with the Order of the Garter left Dresden last Saturday morning on their return to London.

Chincha, a Peruvian town, has been sacked by a band of marauders. Sixty of the inhabitants were killed and an immense quantity of property destroyed.

Of 980 women who are this year pursuing the higher courses of education in St. Petersburg, 521 study physics and mathematics, and only 417 literature. 610 are of noble origin, and 774 profess the Orthodox faith.

In the course of some excavations which are being made in the outskirts of Pompeii, thirty human skeletons in different states of preservation have been found. One of them, stretched at full length, appeared to be in the act of clasping to its breast some kind of purse, the shape of which was still traceable, and which contained a gold coin of Vespasian, six silver, and ten bronze coins, cardrups, pearls, and engraved precious stones. Near the other skeletons were found gold and silver coins of Galba, Tiberius, Nero, and Domitian, with gold bracelets and cardrups, pearls and precious stones.

GENERAL HOME NEWS.

The date of the Oxford and Cambridge boat-race has been fixed for Saturday, April 1.

On the first day of the Session application for three hundred and twenty private bills was lodged.

An Order in Council notifies that the Militia of Ireland will not be called out for exercise in the year 1882-3.

At a Court of the Leathersellers' Company, held recently, donations amounting to £863 were voted to charities.

The Right Hon. the Speaker will begin his full-dress Parliamentary dinners on Wednesday, March 1.

Lord Wimborne has bought Branksome Dene estate, which lies close to the sea, a little to the west of Bournemouth.

Lord Algernon Percy was yesterday week returned unopposed as the new member for Westminster, in the place of Sir C. Russell, resigned.

Mr. T. J. Stone has been appointed principal clerk of committees in the House of Commons, in the room of Mr. Charles Eales, deceased.

Mr. G. A. Charsley, of Beaconsfield, was on Monday elected Coroner for South Bucks, in the room of Mr. Frederick Charsley, who has resigned.

From the United States and Canada there were landed at Liverpool last week 106 cattle, 5326 quarters of beef, 1002 carcasses of mutton, and 250 hogs. There were no sheep.

At a sale of greyhounds at Liverpool on Tuesday, Mr. S. S. Swinburne's famous courser Salamis brought 245 guineas; Queen Sibyl was disposed of at 150 guineas; and Surprise fetched 200 guineas.

At a conversation at the Mansion House on Tuesday, the 28th inst., there will be an exhibition of pictures, drawings, sketches, statuettes, and unpublished etchings, contributed by the members of the City of London Society of Artists for distribution by ballot amongst the fellows and subscribers.

The boring of the seven-foot gallery commenced at Abbot's Cliff, Dover, for the purpose of testing the practicability of a Channel tunnel, has been extended for one mile, and is being proceeded with under the sea in the direction of the Admiralty Pier. No water has entered the gallery.

Mr. George Driver Fottrell, the solicitor to the Irish Land Commission, has resigned his office in consequence of his connection with the publication entitled "How to Become the Owner of Your Farm," which was issued with the official sanction of Mr. Godley, the secretary to the Commissioners. The appointment is worth £1000 a year.

A new mechanics' institute at Horsforth, near Leeds, was opened last Saturday by Lord Cranbrook, who pointed out the advantages which such institutions conferred upon artisans in enabling them to add to an elementary education not only knowledge very useful to them in their handicrafts, but that which rendered their lives more hopeful and pleasurable.

The Sportsman's Exhibition was opened on the 9th inst. at the Agricultural Hall, Islington. There are many thousands of objects, including guns, boats, cricket apparatus, carriages, bicycles, articles used in social sports and in camping out, boxing gloves, gymnastic appliances, foils, broadsword, masks, and helmets.

The works of the late T. S. Robins (a member of the New Society of Painters in Water Colours), comprising views in England and Wales, Holland, France, Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, and the Rhine, and a large number of admirable sketches of shipping and craft of the past, will be sold next Thursday, at one o'clock, at the auction-rooms of Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Woods.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEB. 25, 1882.

SUNDAY, FEB. 19.

Quinquagesima. Westminster Abbey, 10 a.m., Rev. William III., King of Holland, born, 1817. Charles Cowden; 3 p.m., Rev. J. Llewellyn Davies. Morning Lessons: Gen. ix. 1-20; Matt. xxvii. 1-27. Evening Lessons: Gen. xii. or xiii.; Rom. iii. St. Paul's Cathedral, 10.30 a.m., Rev. Canon R. Harvey; 3.15 p.m., Bishop Hiers Claugton; 7 p.m., St. James's, noon, probably Rev. Dr. Montague Butler.

MONDAY, FEB. 20.

Princess Louise of Wales born, 1867. Election of Pope Leo XIII., 1878. British Architects' Institute, 8 p.m. (discussion on Uniformity in Building and Sanitary Legislation). London Institution, 6 p.m. (Dr. E. B. Tylor on Mythical and Magical Beliefs). Asiatic Society, 4 p.m. (Dr. Schöen on the Chinese Language; Mr. R. Cust on African Scholars). Medical Society, 8.30 p.m.

TUESDAY, FEB. 21.

Shrove Tuesday. Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Professor McKendrick on the Mechanism of the Senses). Anthropological Institute, 8 p.m. (papers by Messrs. J. E. Price, A. Macalpine, A. W. Howitt, and the Rev. Lorimer Fison). Civil Engineers' Institution, 8 p.m. (discussion on Air Refrigerating Machinery). Pathological Society, 8.30 p.m. Statistical Society, 7.45 p.m.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 22.

Ash Wednesday. Beginning of Lent. Geological Society, 8 p.m. Hunterian Society, 8 p.m. Provident Clerks Benevolent Fund, annual meeting, 6 p.m. Dramatic and Musical Sick Fund, anniversary dinner, Willis's Rooms.

THURSDAY, FEB. 23.

The Prince of Wales's Levée, St. James's, 2 p.m. Royal Institution, 3 p.m. (Dr. P. L. Selater on the Geographical Distribution of Animals). Middlesex Hospital, quarterly court, noon. London Institution, 7 p.m. (Rev. Dr. W. Sparrow Simpson on the organist composers of St. Paul's Cathedral—musically illustrated).

FRIDAY, FEB. 24.

Moon's first quarter, 9.31 p.m. St. Matthias, apostle. Browning Society, 8 p.m. Sacred Harmonic Society, 7.30 p.m. (Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch" and Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, and a new "Te Deum" by Mr. W. G. Cousins).

SATURDAY, FEB. 25.

Hare-hunting ends. Royal Institution, 8 p.m. (Mr. Watkiss Lloyd on the "Iliad" and "Odyssey"). Botanic Society, 3.45 p.m. Physical Society, 3 p.m. Canary Show, Crystal Palace (five days).

1. Road near St. Petersburg: coming from Mark
4. Russian Nuns.

2. Russian Merchants (Old Russia).
5 and 6. Street Characters, St. Petersburg.

3. Praying at a Street Chapel.
7. Tartar Merchants.

LIFE IN RUSSIA.—SEE PAGE 155.

PEOPLE I HAVE MET.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT ARTFUL VICAR."

THE YOUNGER SON.

The Honourable Hugo-Yemuc-Kerr was a half-forgotten son of the nineteenth Baron Nortiman, of Hightantrums, in the county of Diddlesex, a peer who lived chiefly on the fascinations of his title and discourse. Somehow or other, in rain and fine weather, these valuable acquisitions had kept him in pleasant company all his days. He had not the smallest idea of the amount of his debts, and never bothered himself about them, for whenever he or his heir, the Honourable Felix, wanted money, they could always join in some operation which satisfied the lawyers and insurance offices. Only once the elder nobleman had been constrained on such an occasion to seek a brief interview with Mr. Attenborough on the subject of the great Mockworth diamond, which was an ancient and precious possession in this noble family; but his more experienced offspring, having got wind of that transaction, resented it as derogatory to his rank and future title, because he had ascertained through a confidential aunt that it had been changed for paste by an impecunious ancestress nigh fifty years before.

"Hang it," muttered the Honourable Felix. "The Relieving Officer has been making a gander of himself again. Drummond or Ransom would have let him draw on them, taking that old bit of glass as a pledge of honour, and would never have even looked at it. I deposited with Flush and Bobbingpenny three flannel waistcoats and an old saddle in a plate chest for safe custody the day after the Derby last year; and when I told them I should want a thou the senior partner said, 'Of course, of course.' I saw, too, he was quite pleased at my asking for it, because I had walked down St. James's-street with Bill Bobbingpenny, his godson, the day before, and promised to put the young cub up for White's. But if the R.O. is caught marching against the Lombards, we shall get blown, the pair of us."

Now the "Relieving Officer," or, for brevity's sake, the "R.O.," was a term of endearment which the Honourable Felix, in common with other young noblemen and gentlemen at Eton, applied to his father. It was an interesting reminiscence of his sojourn at that admirable public school, and had reference to the tips or gifts of money, without which no parent was ever allowed to depart when he visited the college precincts. Times were altered since then. Felix the oppidan had bloomed into Felix the guardsman, and he felt the responsibility of protecting the head of his house from such imprudences as that above mentioned. The seniors of one generation are but as children to the youth of the next, in the ways of the world—so grand and good a thing is "Progress."

Lord Nortiman and his heir lived very respectably in this way. Hightantrums Court was really a very fine place, and the rent-roll attached to it was a thing to make one wink—on paper. Few knew or presumed to guess at the secrets of a nineteenth Baron; and there had never been any ugly scandal about him or his belongings. They got into scrapes, as other noblemen do, and those scrapes got into the papers or into after-dinner stories in select society; but that was neither here nor there. . . Stories are told about everybody; and must not be credited by well-conditioned folk, or all reverence for the upper classes would be at an end. It was enough that Lord Nortiman

The Honourable Felix called to him from the opposite side of Bury-street, where they met by chance, to say, "So it's all U P now, old man!" and there was an ugly glitter in his eye-glass as he noted his brother's haggard looks.

Then all at once came an extraordinary return of prosperity. One night the Hon. Hugo-Yemue-Kerr went to bed a beggar, and got up a peer. His elder brother had broken his neck at a steeplechase, and Lord Nortman had caught a chill on a damp drawingroom day, where he had heroically stood in thorough draught in silk stockings. The new Lord rushed to London by special train, and was inclined to take things haughtily; but, in truth, he had only exchanged the life of a primitive fisherman for a somewhat prosaic existence in solicitors' offices. Every person to whom either he or his wife (now a Peeress) had ever owed a sixpence started out of the earth, bill in hand, as if by magic; and their name was legion. First and last, in his salad days, perhaps he had spent by hook or by crook some forty thousand pounds, a good deal of it in discount, wine, and jewellery. He owed more than a quarter of a million. Of course, as far as the law was concerned, his father's and brother's debts died with them, and he took his besmirched title as other men do, without paying off any of the obligations on it, or acknowledging the security for which it had been virtually pawned. He racked and harried his tenants; he gave nothing and took much; but his own personal debts merely kept him a poor man; and he lived to its bitter close the shifty and dishonest life of a younger son, who has eaten his corn and drunk his wine before vintage or harvest. The custom of primogeniture and entail has some pleasing aspects.

Deacon's Advertising Offices, 154, Leadenhall-street, E.C.

Times, apply to the agents of the International Sleeping-Car Company, Paris, London, Berlin, Brussels, Cologne, Frankfurt, Vienna, Madrid, and Rome.

NEW BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, and CO.'S LIST.

INCLUDING TWO YEARS AT THE COURT OF KING MTESSA.
UGANDA AND THE EGYPTIAN SUDAN. With a Description of the Slave Districts of Bahari-Chazal and Darfour. With a New Map of 120 miles in these Provinces, numerous illustrations, and Special Scientific Notes. By R. W. FELKIN, F.R.G.S., and O. T. WILSON, M.A., F.R.G.S. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 28s.

MAGYARLAND: A Narrative of Travels through the Snowy Carpathians and Great Alps of the Magyar. By a FELLOW of the CARPATHIAN SOCIETY (Diploma of 1880), and Author of "The Indian Alps." 2 vols., royal 8vo, cloth extra, with about 120 Woodcuts from the Author's own sketches and drawings, 38s. [Ready.]
 "The author is a born artist both with her pen and pencil."—Times.
 "This extremely interesting work... Full of information... and is a most valuable addition to every point of view to much praise."—St. James's Gazette.

THE NEW WORK BY W. H. RUSSELL, LL.D.
HESPEROTHEN: Notes from the Western World. A Record of a Ramble through part of the United States, Canada, and the Far West, in the Spring and Summer of 1881. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 24s. [Now ready.]

VICTOR HUGO AND HIS TIMES. Translated from the French of A. BARROU by ELLEN E. FRENCH. 120 illustrations, many of them from designs by Victor Hugo himself. Super-royal 8vo, cloth extra, 34s. [Ready.]

BERTHOLD AUERBACH'S NEW NOVEL is SPINOZA. Price 4s. 3 small post 8vo vols., cloth limp, in the Tauchnitz Series. Price 2s. each volume.

Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth extra, 418 pp., price 12s. 6d.,
NOAH'S ARK; or, Mornings in the Zoo. Being a Contribution to the Study of Unnatural History. By PHIL ROBINSON, Author of "My Indian Garden," "Under the Pampas," &c. A most charming and humorous book.

THE NEW ADDITION TO LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS IS FAIR FROM THE MADDING CROWD. By THOMAS HARDY. New Edition. Cloth extra, 6s.

THE LAND OF DYKES AND WINDMILLS; or, Life in Holland. By F. S. BIRD. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 12s. 6d.

ENGLISH LITERATURE IN THE REIGN OF VICTORIA. By HENRY MORLEY, LL.D. With a 40-page Frontispiece, giving some hundreds of Facsimiles of the Signatures of Authors. Second Edition. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

A LADY TRADER; or, Adventures in the Transvaal. By Mrs. HECKFORD. 1 vol., cloth extra, 10s. 6d.

CHARITIES OF LONDON FOR 1882. Low's Handbook of more than 900 Charitable Institutions and Funds; giving the Objects, Date of Formation, Address, Income and Expenditure, Treasurer and Secretary. Edited and Revised by CHARLES MACKENZIE. Annually, 1880, 1s. 6d.; new ed., 1s.

THOMAS A KEMPIS: A Daily Text-Book. Containing a Brief Selection for Every Day in the Year from the "Imitation of Christ." Edited by W. E. WILKES. Small post 8vo, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.
 SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, and RIVINGTON.

SMITH, ELDER, and CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Ready Feb. 23, 4to, price 42s., handsomely bound in cloth gilt, gilt edges, by Bun and Co.,
THE SECOND EDITION OF

A BIRTHDAY BOOK. Designed by her Royal Highness THE PRINCESS BEATRICE. NOTICE.—In consequence of the large number of different printings necessary to produce some of the Chromo-lithographs, considerable delay must arise before a third edition can be issued.

Ready Feb. 23, Second Edition, with a Portrait, 2 vols., crown 8vo, 18s.

MEMORIES OF OLD FRIENDS. Being Extra-Excerpts from the Journals and Letters of Caroline Fox, of Fenwick, Cornwall, 1781, from 1801 to 1817. To which are added fourteen Original Letters from J. S. Mill, never before published. Edited by HORACE N. PYM.

NEW WORK BY MATTHEW ARNOLD.
 In a few days, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.,

IRISH ESSAYS AND OTHERS. By MATTHEW ARNOLD.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

POOR ARCHIE'S GIRLS. By KATHLEEN KNOX. 3 vols., post 8vo. A very powerful and even original novel.—Academy.

LOVE THE DEBT. By BASIL. 3 vols., post 8vo. [This day.] London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 15, Waterloo-place.

A NEW CYCLOPEDIA WITHIN THE REACH OF ALL.

CASELL'S CONCISE CYCLOPEDIA. Illustrated.

Part I. ready Feb. 24. To be completed in 7 Parts at 6d.

Everyone feels the need of a Cyclopaedia, but it is comparatively few who can afford to purchase a large and expensive work in many volumes. CASELL'S CONCISE CYCLOPEDIA, however, containing in a compact form Reliable Information on Every Department of Knowledge, arranged in Alphabetical Order, so that the information sought can be found on the instant, will most undoubtedly meet a want long felt. "PROSPERITIES of this important and valuable work can be obtained at all Booksellers, or will be sent, post-free, on application to CASELL, PETER, GALTIN, and Co., Ludgate-hill, London.

IMPORTANT NEW WORK OF INTEREST TO EVERY HOUSEHOLDER.

In MONTHLY PARTS, price 7d.,

OUR HOMES, AND HOW TO MAKE THEM HEALTHY.

Edited by SIR HENRY FORSTER MURPHY, Medical Officer of Health to the Parish of St. Pancras; Hon. Secretary to the Epidemiological Society, and to the Society of Medical Officers of Health. Assisted by Eminent Contributors.

Part I. ready Feb. 24. Illustrated. To be Completed in 24 Parts. Prospectuses at all Booksellers, or post-free from CASELL, PETER, GALTIN, and Co., Ludgate-hill, London.

Second Edition in the Press, will be ready on Feb. 20, of FAUCIT OF BALIOL. A Novel. By HERMAN MERIVALE. 3 vols.

"Mr. Merivale's novel has a quality of success which is certainly not to be common, from the fact that the book is one which it is difficult to lay down when it has once been taken up, and which makes us hope for another from the same hand."

"It is a delightful book to read, full of humour and spirited rattle, and strokes of true imaginative power, of buoyant satire, flashes of poetry, and matches of a careless wisdom."—Spectator.

CHAPMAN and HALL, Limited, 11, Henrietta-street, W.C.

FOUR POPULAR NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN. "A book so fresh and pleasant will be welcome to all readers."—Illustrated Paper.

A MERE CHANCE. By ADA CAMBRIDGE.

THE SENIOR PARTNER. Mrs. J. H. RIDDELL.

JACK UNQUHART'S DAUGHTER. PAMELA SNEYD.

RICHARD BENTLEY and Son, 8, New Burlington-street.

PRACTICAL LESSONS IN PAINTING ON CHINA, PORCELAIN, &c. By Madame la BARONNE DELAMARIE-ELLE. From the French by Gustave A. Houvier. Fifth Edition. Price 1s.; post-free, 1s. 1d. London: LECHEMAN, BARNES, and Co., 60, Regent-street, W.

NEW BOOKS AND PUBLICATIONS.

CHATTO and WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS. Full Lists of Announcements by post.

IRELAND UNDER THE LAND ACT. Letters to the "Standard" during the crisis in Ireland, containing the most recent information about the State of the Country, the Popular Leaders, the League, the Sub-Committees, &c. With Leading Cases under the Act, giving the evidence in full; Judicial Dicta, &c. By E. CANT-WALLI, Barrister-at-Law. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. [In the press.]

SOME PRIVATE VIEWS. BY JAMES PAYN. Author of "By Proxy," "High Spirits," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. "A volume of essays always lively, often witty... Mr. Pryn is almost as easily read as Charles Lamb, and provokes much more merriment among people whose laughter is hung on a hair trigger."—Daily News.

HALF-HOURS WITH FOREIGN NOVELISTS. With Notices of their Lives and Writings. By HELEN and ALICE ZIMMERMAN. A New Edition. Two vols., crown 8vo, 12s. "The sketches of the stories, and the extracts from them, are admirably done, and they are not better than the short notices of the novelists themselves. It would be difficult to over-praise the work as a whole."—Scottishman.

CAVALRY LIFE; or, Sketches and Stories in Barracks and Out. By J. WINTERS. 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, 12s. "One of the best books of its kind that we have seen. All the characters bear the unmistakable air of truth, and all the stories are lively. The book is full of 'go.'"—Saturday Review. "Very graphic and amusing."—St. James's Gazette.

THE PRINCE AND THE PAUPER: A Tale for Young People of all Ages. By MARK TWAIN. Crown 8vo, cloth, with 100 illustrations, 7s. 6d. "A tale of absorbing interest."—Standard. "A remarkably ingenious and sensible story, capably told, in an easy and picturesque style."—Times.

Also, uniform in size, style, and price,
A TRAMP ABROAD. By MARK TWAIN. "The book is full of good things."—Athenaeum.

THE INNOCENTS ABROAD; or, New Pilgrim's Progress. By MARK TWAIN. CHATTO and WINDUS, Piccadilly, W.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL.

"The best, most entertaining, as well as edifying of all the numerous serial publications."

THE JANUARY PART, Price 7d., contains:

REMINISCENCES OF A LONG AND BUSY LIFE.

By W. CHAMBERS. Reprinted, and now ready.

NEW VOLUME (74), for 1882, of the LONDON JOURNAL, Illustrated.

NINE SERIAL STORIES, each equal to a Three-volume Novel.

"A Simple Sumner," "A Wife's Legacy," "A Woman's Power," "Devon Towers," "Fatal Beauty," "Lady Gwendolyn," (by James Grant), "Lady Ottoline," "Price of a Fortune," and "Written in Fire."

SHORT SERIALS.

"Neath Fancy's Spell," "Her Only Love," and "Drowned Honour."

HOLIDAY NUMBER.

"Borrowed Plumes" and "The Secret of the Waves."

CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

"His Phantom Bride." By the Author of "The Ice Carnival."

TWENTY-THREE SHORT TALES.

"A Bachelor's Experiences," "Almost Past Retrieving," "Happy Awakening," "Regular Assassin," "Driven to It," "Hor Golden Gorge," "Jolly Young Waterman," "Let the Spry," "Over the Garden Wall," "The Return from the Circus," "Twice in the Wrong," "A Brave Wife," "Almost Wrecked," "Ring of Roses," "Dinthe," "Her Lord and Master," "In the Gloaming," "A Kiss Me Quick," "Meet Me in the Lane," "Shall I Grow Pale?" "Wolf in the Fold," and "Uncle Jack's Darling."

LONDON JOURNAL can be had in India, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Canada, and the United States.

LONDON JOURNAL HALF-YEARLY VOLUMES form a beautiful gift book for all seasons. Volumes 1 to 74 may now be had, price 1s. 6d., cloth. G. VICKERS, 354, Strand, and of all Booksellers.

PRIZES VALUE £100 GIVEN AWAY.—See

WELDON'S ILLUSTRATED DRESSMAKER.

Price 1d. Monthly. March Number contains an Extra-Gratis Eight-Page Supplement, twenty-four pages of Letter-press, 60 illustrations of Spring Fashions, Fancy Costumes, Undermen, How to Dress Well, Practical Dress Instructor, Long Engagements or Early Marriages, Hairdressing, Nursing, Furnishing, Weddings, Distribution of Prizes, &c.

Yearly subscription, 1s. 6d. post-free.

A FASHION BOOK AND PAPER PATTERN for 1d. MONTHLY.

WELDON'S BAZAAR. Price 1d. Monthly. A Magazine of Children's Fashions. March Number contains a Gratis Paper Pattern of a Girl's Princess Dress, Children's Fashions and Novelties, 60 illustrations for Boys and Girls, Fancy Costumes, Nursery Notes, Sunday Occupation for Children, Distribution of Prizes, &c.

The Two Magazines sent post-free, 3d.

Yearly subscription, 1s. 6d. post-free.

WELDON and Co., 7, Southampton-street, Strand, W.C.

SUNDAY SONGS. By Mary Mark Lemon and ROBERT L.

No. 1. "Cast thy bread upon the Waters."

No. 2. "He giveth His beloved sleep."

No. 3. "Arise, He calleth thee."

No. 4. "Thou art the Way."

Each in two keys. 2s. each net.

Knock and Sons, 15, Holles-street, W.

AUGENER and CO.'S UNIVERSAL CIRCULATING MUSICAL LIBRARY. In which is issued London's Library, is now the largest in Europe, and subscription, two guineas.—31, Regent-street. Prospectuses gratis.

WILL SHORTLY BE PUBLISHED.

DECORATIVE ART EMBROIDERY. The Universal Guide to Decorative Art Embroidery, Churchwork, and Artistic Needlework; also to Knitting, Crochet, &c. Profusely illustrated. Price One Shilling. To be had of all Booksellers and Berlin Repositories in the United Kingdom.—London: KENT and Co., Paternoster-row.

Third Edition, price 1s., post-free.

THE New Electrolytic Treatment of Cancer and of Simple Tumours. By G. EDGECOCK, M.D. NELSON and Co., 23, Duke-street, Grosvenor-square, W.

JUST PUBLISHED, post-free, 2 stamps.

DYSPEPSIA and the SEVERER FORMS OF INDIGESTION. A small pamphlet on these distressing complaints and their complete cure. Published by the Author, RICHARD KING, Esq., Staff Surgeon R.N., 23, Warwick-st., Ebury.

New Edition, post-free, Six Stamps.

FIT S.—EPILEPSY, or FALLING SICKNESS; with ESSAYS on GIDDINESS, SENSATIONS, FAINTS, and HEADACHE. A Treatise explaining the Causes, Treatment, and Prevention of these Disorders; with directions for Diet. By S. BERRY NICHOLLS, Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians. Published by Mr. WILLIAMS, 10, Oxford-terrace, Hyde Park, London.

Fourth Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.,
EPILEPSY (The Tonic Treatment of). By WALTER TYRRELL, M.R.C.S. London: DAVID BOOKE, 3, St. Martin's-place, W.C.

D. R. DE JONGH'S

(KNIGHT OF THE ORDER OF LEOPOLD OF BELGIUM. KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOUR.)

LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL.

THE PUREST. THE MOST EFFICACIOUS. THE MOST PALATABLE. THE MOST DIGESTIBLE.

Proved by thirty years' medical experience to be

THE ONLY COD-LIVER OIL which produces the full curative effects in

CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, AND WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D., Physician to the Westminster Hospital.

"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL, Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.

"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

DR. HUNTER SEMPLE, Physician Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest.

"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL introduced into medical practice by Dr. DE JONGH, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion, that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is by no means disagreeable, and might be regarded as pleasant. I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S., Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.

"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbon' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsules IMPERIAL Half-Pint, 2s. 6d.; Pint, 4s. 6d.; Quart, 8s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

SOLE CONSIGNEES, ANSAR, HARFORD, and CO., 77, STRAND, LONDON.

WELL WORTHY OF NOTICE.

AS A CERTAIN CURE for Bilious and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, Wind, Spasms, Flatulency, Nervous Depression, Irritability, Lassitude, Loss of Appetite, Dyspepsia, Heartburn, Giddiness, Dizziness of the Eyes, &c.

DR. SCOTT'S BILIOUS AND LIVER PILLS as a general family aperient medicine have no equal, being as mild and tonic in their action as they are certain in their curative effects. Prepared only by W. W. ARNOLD, 173, Seymour-place, London, W., in Boxes, 1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. Sold by all Chemists. Ask for Dr. Scott's, wrapped in green paper.

TAMAR INDIEN GRILLON, For CONSTIPATION. BILE, HEADACHE.

TAMAR INDIEN GRILLON, A LAXATIVE AND REFRESHING FRUIT LOZENGE.

UNIVERSALLY PRESCRIBED BY THE FACULTY.

TAMAR INDIEN GRILLON. 2s. 6d. per Box, stamp included. Sold by all Chemists and Druggists.

Wholesale—E. GRILLON, 65, Queen-street, London, E.C.

BLAIR'S GOUT PILLS, THE GREAT REMEDY FOR GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

Sold by all Chemists, at 1s. 1d. and 2s. 6d. per Box.

SPANISH FLY is the acting ingredient in ALEX. ROSS'S CANTHARIDS. It quickly produces hair on the face and head. 3s. 6d.; post, 4s. stamps. Perfect Hair Dy, 3s. 6d.—ROSS, 21, Lamb's Conduit-street, London, W.C.

SULPHOLINE LOTION.—An external Cure for Skin Diseases. There is scarcely any eruption but will yield to SULPHOLINE and fade away in a few days. Ordinary pimples, redness, blotches, scurf, roughness, vanish as if by magic; while old skin disorders, that have plagued sufferers for years, however deeply rooted, Sulpholine will successfully attack them. It does not irritate the delicate skin which causes these annoying irritable affections, and always produces a clear skin. Sulpholine Lotion is sold by Chemists. Bottles, 2s. 6d.

NUDA VERITAS.—GREY HAIR restored by this valuable specific to its original shade, after which it grows the natural colour, not grey. Used as a dressing, it causes growth and arrests falling. The hair is harmless and effectual restorer extant. One trial will convince it has no equal. Price 10s. 6d., of all Chemists and Hairdressers. Testimonials free.—Agents, B. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

ROBARE'S AUREOLINE, or GOLDEN HAIR WASH.—For producing the beautiful golden colour so much admired. Warranted perfectly harmless. Price 5s. 6d. and 10s. 6d., of all principal Perfumers and Chemists throughout the world.—Agents, B. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

MADAME ELLIOT makes up DRESSES stylishly and fits elegantly.

8, Great Portland-street, Oxford-street.

MADAME ELLIOT'S CORSETS.

Splendid Shape. French and English make, 5s. 6d., 10s. 6d., 12s. 6d., 14s. 6d., 16s. 6d., 18s. 6d., 20s. 6d., 22s. 6d., 24s. 6d., 26s. 6d., 28s. 6d., 30s. 6d., 32s. 6d., 34s. 6d., 36s. 6d., 38s. 6d., 40s. 6d., 42s. 6d., 44s. 6d., 46s. 6d., 48s. 6d., 50s. 6d., 52s. 6d., 54s. 6d., 56s. 6d., 58s. 6d., 60s. 6d., 62s. 6d., 64s. 6d., 66s. 6d., 68s. 6d., 70s. 6d., 72s. 6d., 74s. 6d., 76s. 6d., 78s. 6d., 80s. 6d., 82s. 6d., 84s. 6d., 86s. 6d., 88s. 6d., 90s. 6d., 92s. 6d., 94s. 6d., 96s. 6d., 98s. 6d., 100s. 6d.

Also specialities in Ladies' Tonnure, Tournure-Jaun, Grinottes, &c.—8, Great Portland-street, Oxford-street.

WORTH ET CIE, Artistes en Corsets, make and fit to the figure, Corsets from 2 to 6 guineas.

Special attention to Deformities, Curatures, &c. Stock Corsets from 10s. 6d. to 42s. Layettes and Trousseaux from 10 guineas. Circulars free.—4, Hanover-street, Regent-street, W.

IMPROVED SPECTACLES.—Mr. HENRY LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, PERSONALLY adapts his Improved Spectacles at his residence, 3, Enderbury-gate, Euston-q., daily, Ten till Four (Saturdays excepted).

Testimonials from Sir John Lubbock, Bart., John Lubbock, Esq., M.P., J.P., Lynn, Physician to H.R.H. Prince of Wales; Ven. Archdeacon Palmer, Chilton; Lieut.-General Macmillan, Brentwood; Rev. Mother Abbess, S. Mary's Abbey, London; Rev. Joseph Hargreaves, Uxbridge; and hundreds of others. In Mr. Laurance's Pamphlet, "Spectacles, their Use and Abuse," post-free.

PETER ROBINSON, OXFORD-STREET.

WINTER STOCK-TAKING SALE.

GREAT REDUCTION IN ALL DEPARTMENTS.

SILKS, VELVETS, SATINS, and BROCADES.

100 pieces Black Striped Velvet .. per yard 3s. 6d.
 200 pieces Rich Coloured Brocade Velvet .. per yard 4s. 6d.
 100 pieces White Brocade Satin 6s. 6d.
 50 pieces of All-Silk Damask 2s. 11d.
 60 pieces Silk Brocade 2s. 6d.
 100 pieces Black Brocade Velvets at a great reduction.
 200 pieces Rich Black Satin Brocade .. per yard 4s. 11d.
 Black Satin Duchesse, per yard .. 5s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and 7s. 6d.
 30 pieces Coloured Satin Duchesse .. per yard 3s. 11d.
 Black Satins, from 1s. 9d.

DRESS MATERIALS.

Foulés, Cashmere, Drap d'Italie, Brocade Cashmere, Satin Stripes, Double Beige, &c., reduced to 6d., 3s., and 1s. per yard.
 Fine Cashmere Merinos, Coloured and Black, at 1s. 6d. and 2s. per yard.
 Very fine Cashmere, new shades, 2s. per yard.
 Best Japanese Silks, in plain colours and with rich Satin Stripes, 1s. per yard.
 200 pieces All-Wool Scarfing Serge, in Navy, Bronze, Dark Green, Brown, and Black, at 8s. per yard.
 Rich Velvet Velvets, very wide, in Black and all the new shades of colour, reduced to 2s. per yard.
 Coloured Brocade Velvets, reduced to 1s. per yard.
 Aberdeen Winceys, the original make, very scarce, reduced to 6d. per yard.
 All last season's best Percales, Brillantes, Gingham, &c., reduced to 3d. and 4d. per yard.
 180 pieces best Satins (Pompadour), last year's printing, reduced to 6d. per yard.

PETER ROBINSON, OXFORD-STREET.

SALE of MANTLES, COSTUMES, &c., being

THE STOCK of WESTROP and CO., 180, REGENT-STREET.

PURCHASED for Cash, and now SELLING at LESS than HALF PRICE.

Circulars of Particulars post-free.

MR. O'DONNELL.

MR. BIGGAR.

THE BAR OF THE HOUSE.

PROCEDURE OF BUSINESS IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

"OBSTRUCTION."

Two or three scenes which must be fresh in the recollection of every member of Parliament may be recalled with a view of proving to demonstration that an efficacious reform of the rules of the House of Commons should gain the cordial approval of both the great political parties in the State.

The late Earl of Beaconsfield on the afternoon of Wednesday, Aug. 1, 1877, was led to revisit the House of Commons to witness the conclusion of one of the longest sittings on record. His Lordship was then at the zenith of his power as Prime Minister of the last Conservative Administration. Taking his seat in the Peers' Gallery, Lord Beaconsfield looked down with much curiosity on the group of arch-obstructionists, and scrutinised with special closeness through his little eye-glass Mr. Parnell and his faithful henchman, Mr. Biggar, who, with the aid chiefly of Mr. O'Donnell and Major Nolan, had kept the House sitting for over twenty-four hours. Sir Stafford Northcote, who joined his chief, had a strange tale to tell. It will be remembered the occasion was the Committee on the South Africa Bill; and it is noteworthy that Mr. Leonard Courtney, the staunchest opponent of the annexation of the Transvaal, was for several hours among the knot of malcontents, who repeatedly moved that progress be reported. Now Mr. Biggar (imperturbably good humoured and cool always) had cultivated Obstruction into a Fine Art. For hours together he had been known to prose on with dogged persistence through blue-book after blue-book, with a pile of which he was wont to arm himself. Prefacing his speech ever with, "Mr. Speaker, Sir!" Mr. Biggar boasted a hard, dry brogue, and monotonous style totally different from the glib manner of Mr. O'Donnell, who in easy audacity, however, had no superior among the guerrillas of the Irish Party. As hour after hour was wasted on that memorable evening, the late Mr. Isaac Butt, then the acknowledged leader, as he was the author, of the Home-Rule movement, warmly repudiated the conduct of Mr. O'Donnell, of whom he was driven to say, "If I thought the hon. member represented the Irish Party, and if the Irish Party represented my country—and he does not represent my country—I would retire from Irish politics as from a vulgar brawl, in which no man can take part with dignity to himself or advantage to his country." But even this stinging philippic had no effect. Throughout the small hours of that August morning the organised opposition was maintained. The dawn found Mr. Raikes still in the chair, and Sir Stafford Northcote and Mr. Lowther gallantly sitting on the Ministerial bench, backed by a hundred true Conservatives at each division carried against the small knot of Parnellites. Breakfast time and the luncheon hour passed, relays on each side being brought up to continue the fight. Not till past two o'clock on the second afternoon of the sitting was the South Africa Bill got through Committee. Yet, still were hon. members kept out of their beds by Mr. Parnell and Mr. Biggar, who next brought their tactics to bear on the Irish Judicature Bill. Ultimately, the House separated at ten minutes past six on that memorable Wednesday afternoon, the sitting having been prolonged by a mere handful of members for twenty-six hours and ten minutes!

Obstruction reached a greater height with the change of Ministry. Skip a few years; and come to 1881. Only after a sitting of twenty-two hours' duration did Mr. Gladstone manage on Jan. 26 to secure precedence for the Coercion Bill over all other business—by 251 to 33 votes. But this little bit of obstruction was simply meant by the small but compact Parnell band to get their hands in. They succeeded better in the debate on the introduction of the Coercion Bill, accomplishing the task of keeping the House sitting continuously for forty-one hours, namely from Monday afternoon, Jan. 31, to nine o'clock on Wednesday, Feb. 2. Well might Mr. Bright be driven to protest against "the grossest case of insult and obstruction, which, in my opinion, has ever been exhibited." Dr. Lyon Playfair, as Chairman of Committees, relieved now and again the long-trying Speaker, who, to the great satisfaction of the House, at length brought the matter to an issue by putting the question. Fresh in the public recollection will be the historic occurrence of the following evening, Feb. 3, when the arrest of Mr. Davitt deprived Mr. Parnell and his followers of all self-control, led them to move that "the Prime Minister be not heard," and necessitated the expulsion of thirty-five of them!

THE NEW RULES OF PROCEDURE.

We have impartially cited these cases of organised Obstruction under first a Conservative and next the present Liberal Administration to prove the need of more power being given to the Speaker. We may now print the text of the New Rules of Procedure which were laid on the Table of the House of Commons by Mr. Gladstone on the first evening of the Session:—

I.—PROCEDURE.

PUTTING THE QUESTION.

1. That when it shall appear to Mr. Speaker, or to the Chairman of a Committee of the whole House, during any debate, to be the evident sense of the House, or of the Committee, that the question be now put, he may so inform the House; and, if a motion be made "That the question be now put, Mr. Speaker, or the Chairman, shall forthwith put such question; and, if the same be decided in the affirmative, the question under discussion shall be put forthwith; provided that the question shall not be decided in the affirmative, if a division be taken, unless it shall appear to have been supported by more than two hundred members, or to have been opposed by less than forty members.

MOTIONS FOR ADJOURNMENT BEFORE PUBLIC BUSINESS.

2. That no Motion for the Adjournment of the House shall be made, except by leave of the House, before the Orders of the Day or Notices of Motion have been entered upon.

DEBATES ON MOTIONS FOR ADJOURNMENT.

3. That when a Motion is made for the adjournment of a debate, or of the House, during any debate, or that the Chairman of a Committee do report progress, or do leave the chair, the debate thereupon shall be strictly confined to the matter of such Motion; and no member having spoken to any such Motion shall be entitled to move or second any similar Motion during the same debate or during the same sitting of the Committee.

DIVISIONS.

4. That when, before a Division, the decision of Mr. Speaker, or of the Chairman of a Committee, that the "Ayes" or "Noes" have it, is challenged, Mr. Speaker, or Chairman, may call upon the members challenging it to rise in their places; and if they do not exceed twenty, he may forthwith declare the determination of the House or of the Committee.

IRRELEVANCE OR REPETITION.

5. That Mr. Speaker, or the Chairman of Committee, may call the attention of the House, or of the Committee, to continued irrelevance, or tedious repetition on the part of a Member; and may direct the Member to discontinue his speech.

POSTPONEMENT OF PREAMBLE.

6. That in Committee on a Bill, the Preamble do stand postponed until after the consideration of the Clauses, without Question put.

CHAIRMAN TO LEAVE THE CHAIR WITHOUT QUESTION.

7. That when the Chairman of a Committee has been ordered to make a report to the House, he shall leave the Chair, without Question put.

HALF-PAST TWELVE O'CLOCK RULE.

8. To add to the Standing Order of Feb. 18, 1879, the following words:—"But this Rule shall not apply to the Motion for leave to bring in a Bill, nor to any Bill which has passed through Committee."

ORDER IN DEBATE.

9. To amend the Standing Order of Feb. 28, 1880, as follows:—"That whenever any member shall have been named by the Speaker, or by the Chairman of a Committee of the whole House, as disregarding the authority of the Chair, or abusing the Rules of the House by persistently and wilfully obstructing the business of the House, or otherwise, then, if the offence has been committed in the House, the Speaker shall forthwith put the question, on a Motion being made, no amendment, adjournment, or debate being allowed, 'That such member be suspended from the service of the House;' and, if the offence has been committed in a Committee of the whole House, the Chairman shall, on a Motion being made, put the same Question in a similar way, and if the motion is carried shall forthwith suspend the proceedings of the Committee, and report the circumstances to the House, and the Speaker shall thereupon put the same Question, without amendment, adjournment, or debate, as if the offence had been committed in the House itself. If any Member be suspended under this order, his suspension on the first occasion shall continue for a week, on the second occasion for a month, and on the third occasion for the remainder of the Session, provided always, that nothing in the Resolutions shall be taken to deprive the House of the power of proceeding against any Member, according to ancient usages.

DEBATES ON MOTIONS FOR ADJOURNMENT.

10. That if Mr. Speaker, or the Chairman of a Committee of the whole House, shall be of opinion that a Motion for the adjournment of a debate, or of the House, during any debate, or that the Chairman do report progress, or do leave the Chair, is made for the purpose of Obstruction, he may forthwith put the Question thereupon from the Chair.

CONSIDERATION OF A BILL AS AMENDED.

11. That on reading the Order of the Day for the consideration of a Bill as amended, the House do proceed to consider the same without question put, unless the member in charge thereof shall desire to postpone its consideration, or notice has been given to re-commit the Bill.

MOTIONS ON GOING INTO COMMITTEE OF SUPPLY.

12. That whenever the Committee of Supply appointed for the consideration of the Ordinary Army, Navy, and Civil Service Estimates stands as the first Order of the Day on a Monday, Mr. Speaker shall leave the Chair without putting any question, unless an amendment be moved or question raised relating to the Estimates proposed to be taken in Supply, on first going into Committee on the Army, Navy, and Civil Services respectively.

II.—STANDING COMMITTEES.

STANDING COMMITTEES ON LAW AND COURTS OF JUSTICE, TRADE, ETC.

1. That two Standing Committees be appointed for the consideration of all Bills relating to Law and Courts of Justice, and to Trade, Shipping, and Manufactures which may be committed to them respectively.

NOMINATION BY COMMITTEE OF SELECTION.

2. That the said Standing Committee do consist of not less than sixty nor more than eighty members, to be nominated by the Committee of Selection, who shall have regard to the classes of Bills committed to such Committees, to the composition of the House, and to the qualifications of the members selected, and shall have power to add and discharge members, from time to time, provided the number of eighty be not exceeded.

COMMITMENT AND REPORT OF BILLS.

3. That all Bills comprised in each of the said classes shall be committed to one of the said Standing Committees, unless the House shall otherwise order; and when reported to the House shall be proceeded with as if they had been reported from a Committee of the whole House.

THE COMMENCEMENT OF A TYPICAL SITTING

may now be briefly described, in order to indicate a few other fruitful sources of delay in the transaction of Parliamentary business. The reader may suppose that the Right Hon. Sir Henry Brand has taken his place in the Speaker's Chair, and that prayers have been duly said; and that he (the reader), armed with a special order, has taken a centre seat in the Speaker's Gallery, which has only the benches reserved for peers and distinguished visitors between it and the House itself. Save on great occasions, members drop in but sparsely at four o'clock. No wonder! Pushing through private bills and presenting petitions are dry work. Petitions have in these days accumulated so enormously in numbers that they have to be summarily disposed of in a huge bag (as sketched in the drawing of Sir Charles Forster at the table); it is to be hoped they afterwards realise a fair price as waste paper. Private business (of which Sir Charles Forster also takes charge) relates not seldom to matters of no more public importance than the construction of a new railway through Little Pedlington. In passing, it may be remarked that if the County Government Bill should become law much of the time spent over private bills would be saved by the House. Say it is now a quarter past four.

QUESTION-TIME

has arrived. The benches below are pretty full. Instinctively, one looks first and longest at the row of grey-haired and middle-aged men on the front Ministerial bench, immediately to the right of the Speaker. Pale, grave, careworn, his grey locks grown thinner, Mr. Gladstone sits in the centre, his rare intellectual acuteness indicated by the animated expression that comes over his face as he answers some question the plump and burly Home Secretary, Sir William Harcourt, is putting to him in a whisper. Earnestness is stamped on the Prime Minister's eloquent features. Who is the much younger Minister leaning well back in his seat, his hat drooping over his eyes, and his hands thrust deeply into his trousers pockets? That full-bearded member is the next hope of the Liberal party, the Marquis of Hartington. Observe his Lordship, a firm and able administrator as Secretary for India, abandons his careless attitude as a veteran statesman with ample white locks, and a handsome English face, unobtrusively enters, and takes his seat by the side of the noble Marquis. The newcomer is Mr. John Bright, the great orator. Unsurpassed though Mr. Bright is as a speaker, he is yet a nervous man to this day, albeit he has passed the age of threescore and ten, and his hand, accordingly, nervously plays with his mouth whilst he gives heed to what Lord Hartington has to say to him. A little further on Sir Charles Dilke and Mr. Chamberlain, the two most efficient and most popular of the youngest Ministerial recruits, are to be seen smilingly chatting together, the latter especially finding it ever difficult to conceal the elation he felt and feels at being permitted to enter the Cabinet. Mr. Forster, rough and unkempt as his speeches are, and Mr. Childers, Secretary for War, both full-bearded, are to be recognised on this side of the Premier, the corner of the bench being filled for the moment by one of the efficient Liberal whips, Captain Hayter. These are the most noticeable figures on the Ministerial bench. Facing Ministers, on the front Opposition bench, are the wary but mild-looking Leader of the Conservatives in the Lower House, Sir Stafford Northcote, with Sir R. A. Cross, the brisk banker, who lately filled the office of Home Secretary, supporting him on one side, and the firm-faced Mr. W. H. Smith seated on the other side. The cleverest of the younger ex-Ministers, Mr. E. Stanhope and Lord George Hamilton, are on the same bench; and so are Lord Sandon and Colonel Stanley and Sir Michael Hicks-Beach. This side of the gangway, still looking to the Speaker's left, are grouped the four active members now known as "The Fourth Party"—the slimmest, with a curled moustache and hair brushed in the most "swellish" military style, is the daring young Leader, Lord Randolph Churchill. He is nursing his knee, and assiduously stroking his moustache, at the extreme corner of the bench. Mr. Balfour, next him, smiles amiably as though he thinks his present political connection is rather a joke than otherwise. But in the every look and gesture of the two elders of "The Fourth Party" (Mr. Gorst and Sir H. Drummond Wolff) may be discerned the keenest hunger for office. Behind this indomitable little clique—the wasps of the Opposition—are seated other Conservative members, and the whole of the irreconcilable Irish Home Rulers who are not in Kilmainham Jail—Mr. Parnell, however, being conspicuous by his absence.

Prominent among the Radical members, seated on the front and second benches this side the gangway on the Ministerial side, are Mr. Dilwyn, Mr. Ashton Dilke, Mr. Henry Labouchere, and Mr. Arthur Arnold, with handsome Mr. Montague Guest, and Sir Wilfrid Lawson and Mr. Peter Rylands.

Listen to the queries put from both sides, and laboriously answered by Ministers! What must be the common-sense judgment passed upon them? Why, that still more valuable time is daily wasted by interrogations of a parochial nature—questions that should either be relegated to the local vestry or kept till the aforesaid County Government Bill becomes an Act of Parliament. Ministers might well, as a rule, be briefer in their replies. But few of the questions are of the Imperial moment, which alone, one would think, should justify a formal inquiry in the House of Commons. Wellnigh intolerable as the increasing number of questions has grown, the nuisance becomes the greater when, as frequently happened last Session, an irate Irish member, dissatisfied with a Ministerial explanation regarding some such trifling topic as the condition of Denis Maloney's potato plot in Killarney, rises to propose the adjournment of the House, merely to air his egotism and to maintain Maloney's ability to cultivate the acre in question. These are a few customs which require reforming in order to maintain the prestige of Parliament. To this end, both parties are pretty well agreed that it is necessary to grant the Speaker more power; and it was with a laudable endeavour to solve the difficulty that the Government introduced the new code of rules to the notice of the House of Commons.

TAKING A DIVISION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The manner in which the votes of the House of Commons are taken upon every question in debate has often been described; but we may here say a little to explain the subjects of our illustrations. A motion having been proposed and seconded, then, if there is no debate, or when the debate has ceased, the Speaker puts the question, which may vary in form; as, "That this bill be now read a second time;" or, if an opposing amendment has been moved, in these terms, "be read a second time this day six months;" or it may be a special declaratory resolution, or a motion to proceed with some particular business, to which opposition has been raised by a direct negative, or by a proposed alteration of its purport, or by moving "the previous question," that is to say, to make the House decide considering the proposition then actually before it. In any case, the Speaker puts the question in the affirmative form, taking the amendment, whatever it is, as a motion to be voted for or against, but never putting two different substantive propositions at once to the vote together. "Those who are in favour of this motion," he says, or of this amendment, "will say, Aye; those of the contrary opinion will say, No." There is a noise of voices, in the first instance, calling out "Aye!" in the second instance, a combined outcry of "No!" The Speaker, usually inclining towards the side of the apparent majority, mildly observes, "I think the Ayes have it." Some member of the opposite party bravely exclaims, "The Noes have it." Then the Speaker, with a dignified air of legislative indifference, issues his order, "The Ayes to the right; the Noes to the left," directing them to pass out of the House, and into the Division Lobbies, by different ways of exit. A paper, with the names of two members selected by each party for its "tellers," or counters of votes, is handed up to the Chair on each side, and the Speaker announces these names, "Tellers for the Ayes, Mr. Baxter and Lord Bunbury; tellers for the Noes, Sir John Wicks and Mr. David Brown." He sits down, with one more order, "Strangers withdraw!" And while the Clerk at the table sets running the sand of a time-glass, the shrill ringing of electric bells sounds through all the apartments of the house, a few minutes being allowed for members to hasten in, to join in the voting, before the outer doors are shut. The members who are in the house must perforce vote, by walking out into one or the other Division Lobby. The Ayes walk up the floor, on the right-hand side of the Speaker's chair, past the Ministerial bench, and go out at the upper end; the Noes walk down the floor, on the opposite side of the table, and go out at the lower end of the house. Presently, when the public, spectators and reporters, are allowed to come in again, the members who have voted returning to their former places in the house, the "Tellers," who have stood at the entrance to their respective Division Lobbies, counting the votes, are seen marching up, two and two, with papers on which the numbers are inscribed. The Speaker, having received and scanned these papers, which are presented by the Tellers with a respectful bow, then declares the result of the voting, "The Ayes to the right are 235: the Noes to the left are 174; the Ayes have it." In this manner it is that a division of the House of Commons is taken; and when the House is "in Committee," with the Chairman of Committees presiding at the table, instead of the Speaker in his stately Chair, the same forms of procedure are observed.

THE BAR OF THE HOUSE.

At the lower end of the floor, beyond the seats of the members, is a line not to be passed, while the House is sitting, by any person who is not a duly elected representative of the people. A brass rod, which slides to and fro across the open space beside the chair of the Sergeant-at-Arms, can be interposed, upon proper occasions, to exhibit the line of demarcation. This is "the Bar of the House," to which persons may be summoned, as to the bar of any other high Court or tribunal, if there be cause to bring their conduct or their testimony into question. Mr. Bradlaugh, as an elected member of the House, was permitted to come above the Bar, and to sit on the benches; but, when his case was judicially before the House, he had to withdraw below the Bar, like any other suitor or claimant.

Several other Illustrations are those of some minor apartments, in that portion of the Palace of Westminster which belongs to the House of Commons, appropriated to the personal convenience and occasional retirement of its members; the Tea-room, the New Smoking-room, and the private corridor; besides the Post Office, in the Central Lobby.

THE REPORTERS' GALLERY.

The task of noting down and writing out for the printer such copious and exact reports of the speeches nightly uttered in the House as the morning papers set before their readers, is one that could only be performed by relays of expert shorthand writers in the gallery, taking their turns so as to get time for the textual preparation, to be done in separate rooms. A deliberate speaker in public can usually be followed by shorthand writing without the loss of a single important word, but the ordinary hand-writing, even when it is mere transcription, is apt to be five or six times slower; and when the report is to be condensed, giving the substance of arguments or statements in an abridged form, some time is required for the necessary intellectual operation. It is therefore found needful to allow each reporter who has taken notes during half an hour not less than two hours and a half, or even three hours, to prepare the text of his report, which goes direct to the compositors at the printing office, and cannot afterwards be revised by its writer before the hour of going to press. A Parliamentary reporter, in the course of one prolonged sitting of the House, from four o'clock in the afternoon to half-past two in the morning, may have to take three turns in the gallery, the latest turns, after midnight, being shortened to a quarter of an hour, or ten or even five minutes, and the intermediate time will be fully occupied in writing out his report. The newspaper reader can easily understand how this may be, when he is informed that one hour of Mr. Gladstone's speaking, reported verbatim, nearly fills three columns of close print in the Times, while the slowest speaker will utter words enough in an hour to fill two columns. Half a column of correct writing, fit for the press, is a good hour's work for the most prompt and rapid literary man. The proper service of House of Commons' reporting, for a journal that provides for itself, without the assistance of any other establishment, cannot be sufficiently performed by a smaller staff than seven or eight competent reporters, besides those who may be engaged in the House of Lords.

It is possible, of course, with fewer heads and hands, by sacrificing the general completeness of the whole debate to the exclusive presentation of three or four leading speeches, to contrive a report that will do for the majority of readers. This practice has of late years become much more prevalent in several of the daily papers—not in the Times or the Standard—than it was at any former period. The result is to give an appearance of partiality and one-sidedness to the reports of what is said in Parliament; since the reporter, though himself no partisan, cannot fail to be aware that he is expected to pay some attention to the speakers on that side to which the journal he serves is especially attached. It is very possible that one of the editors may choose to direct the reader's notice, in a leading article, to the convincing statement of an hon. member, which cannot then be safely omitted from the report. But, if a fair allowance of time and space be denied him, the most impartial and judicious reporter, subject to this obligation in favour of the speakers belonging to one party, will find it physically impossible to do justice to those on the other side. All the time at his disposal before his next turn of shorthand-writing will be absorbed by one or two speeches, to be written out with greater fullness; and he has not leisure even to prepare a compact summary of original arguments or statements of fact uttered by second-rate members of the opposite party. The Parliamentary reporting of thirty years ago, in the Times, the Morning Herald, the Morning Chronicle, and other London papers, was certainly more to be relied upon for a complete view of every incident of a debate, with the contributions of individual members to its progress, showing their various turns of thought and character, and the modifications with which they would adopt the views of political leaders. A higher degree of intelligence was exercised in the discriminating composition of those condensed reports of the less commanding speeches, in which it was sought to present, as briefly and pithily as it could be worded, the logical substance of what had been said, preserving every characteristic phrase, every decided expression of personal sentiment, and every material point of the discussion. Such reporting had a literary value of its own, and proved to be no bad training for the mental powers of men who sometimes rose to eminence at the Bar, on the Bench, or in the world of letters. The use of shorthand for verbatim reporting, with mere swift transcribing from the shorthand into ordinary hand-writing, requires much quickness of perception, as well as mechanical dexterity, but does not call for the same intellectual application. Both the one and the other kind of accomplishment should go towards the production of a good report of an entire debate in the House of Commons.

The Reporters' Gallery, behind the Speaker's Chair, and directly opposite the Strangers' Gallery, must be observed by every visitor to the House. It is divided into a number of boxes, each with a seat and desk for one person, and with a little door or wicket, like the door of a pew in church, but opening behind the seat. At the back of these boxes is a long bench, where the reporters about to take their turns sit in waiting, and where some editors or writers of political commentaries may often be found. In our Illustration, while the reporters in front are busily taking notes, others are stepping forward, with notebooks in hand, at the appointed moment by the great clock opposite, to take their seats, and to follow the speaker who is on his legs, not losing a word of his discourse. The side gallery, shown to the left-hand of our Engraving, is one of those reserved for members of the House. The top of the Speaker's Chair, and some of the hon. gentlemen on the floor of the House, are seen below the Gallery. Another Illustration is that of some thirty or forty reporters, in one of the Committee-rooms which are allotted to their use, hard at work transcribing or digesting their notes. Formerly, above a quarter of a century ago, they had no such convenience, but were obliged to drive to and fro in cabs, from Westminster to Blackfriars or Whitefriars, to the Strand or Fleet-street, and back again, several times in the course of a laborious night. Besides those employed by the London and some provincial morning papers, the Press Association, and the Central News and Reuter's agencies, have their reporters in the Gallery of the House.

THE FRAUDS BY AN ADVENTURESS.

An extraordinary story is told of the woman Fearnoux who is in custody at Birmingham on the charge of obtaining a large sum of money by a singular fraud. It is said that after obtaining large advances from one Fowell, a colliery owner in Cheshire, which reduced him to beggary, she prosecuted him for sending her threatening letters. In a moment of anger he did write one letter, and her declaration that she was in fear of her life led to his being sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment. His term of punishment expired on the 2nd inst., and he is now making known the facts of the case with a view to obtaining some restitution. It is alleged that not only has she forged in more than 150 cases the signature of Lord Coleridge, but also those of Mr. Justice Denman and Mr. Justice Williams.

The examination of the letters which have been discovered in the boxes of the adventuress has considerably aggravated the case against her, and revealed a cunning network of fraud extending over many years for which it would be difficult to cite a parallel. New dupes are being daily brought to light in every part of the country, and the amount of money which the prisoner has obtained by fraudulent pretences and forged documents from various sources is already estimated at little short of £20,000. Most of the 4605 letters which are in the hands of the police evidently had cheques and bank-notes inclosed from the writers, who seemed to consider themselves highly favoured in being permitted to advance money to "his Lordship" pending the settlement of affairs. One hundred and fifty letters from one gentleman had been accompanied by money remittances varying from £10 to £120. The prisoner's capacity for imitating handwriting is most extraordinary. Comparing the letters purporting to come from the Lord Chief Justice with those bearing the forged signature of the late Home Secretary, Sir R. Cross, and Justices Denman and Williams, it is difficult to believe they were written by the same person. Among the letters found was one signed "Cross," dated London, July 13, 1878. It runs as follows:—"Your case is under special jurisdiction, and no doubt a speedy settlement may be relied upon. You will hear from the Court directly any steps may be ordered that will give you interest and freedom in your trying case." The letter is written in red ink, and is a wonderful imitation of Sir R. Cross's handwriting. It is observed that after the death of Sir Alexander Cockburn, the late Lord Chief Justice, prisoner sent out all the letters purporting to come from Lord Coleridge in large black-edged envelopes, bearing an imitation of the Royal arms. The prisoner is proved to be the daughter of a Liverpool policeman, who died some years ago. Since she has been in custody the woman has stated that but for Lord Coleridge she would never have been arrested. In addition to personating Lord Clinton and pretending to be a great heiress, it seems that she has victimised persons under various other aliases. One of the victims not only parted with the whole of his own, but borrowed £1100 from friends to lend her, so certain was he that the woman was the genuine Lord Clinton who was supposed to be dead.

There seems to be no end to the revelations made in connection with this case. It is now asserted that the woman is, by the mother's side, connected with the Butler family, her grandfather having been a brother of the Earl of Lanesborough. Mrs. Fearnoux declares she has been as much deceived by her daughter as any one, and believed her entitled to a vast fortune and large estates.

BIRTHPLACE OF THE MAHRATTA POWER.

Sir Richard Temple read before the Geographical Society on Monday a paper on "The Geography of the Birthplace and Cradle of the Mahratta Power in Western India;" Lord Aberdare, F.R.S., in the chair. The reader described the rise of the Mahratta Power, the advance of a despised and abject race to dominion over what is now the British Empire in India, and attributed it to the possession of martial qualities fostered by the immense military and political advantages afforded by a country studded with mountains, fastnesses, and strongholds. The Deccan was a country of this kind, a fertile and thickly populated strip of land along the seacoast, from which rose a line of precipitous hills to the tableland beyond, in which was built the capital Poonah. Here was situated Lorna, which Savaji, the leader of the Mahrattas, selected as the site of his first stronghold, and Raygash selected by him as defensible, when his exploits rendered such a retreat advisable. From these, by force of mingled treachery and daring, he extended his sway; and his successors, on the foundation he prepared, built up the empire that at one time extended even to the walls of Calcutta itself. The fastnesses are now pierced by the "resources of civilisation" by roads and railways, but even so they presented no trifling difficulties, and in 1879 it required all the power of the Bombay Government to suppress a Mahratta rising. The existence of such a place showed how necessary it was to be ever vigilant if the British Empire in India was to be maintained, for these warlike tribes only required an opportunity to be again as troublesome as they had been in the past.

A discussion, in which Sir Bartle Frere and the chairman took part, succeeded. Sir Bartle Frere, in remarking on the interest and the accuracy of the narrative, expressed the hope that Sir Richard would expand the subject and publish it in a couple of volumes.

The Senatus of the University of Aberdeen notify that the Sir Erasmus Wilson Chair of Pathological Anatomy has now been founded and endowed. The deed has been communicated to the Home Office, and the endowment of £1000 has been received by the University. Sir Erasmus has nominated the Crown as patron of the Chair.

Charles Howard, who has passed under many other names, was charged at the Westminster Police Court yesterday week with endeavouring to obtain, by fraudulent pretences, money from the Duke of Montrose, the Duke of Sutherland, the Duke of Buccleuch, Lord Spencer, and other noblemen. Evidence was given tending to show that the accused, who in 1876 was sentenced to five years' penal servitude for fraudulently obtaining money, and who was liberated only last October, had subsequently planned similar frauds; and it was stated that between five and six thousand letters, complaining of the prisoner's frauds, are now in the hands of the Treasury. He was again remanded.

NOVELS.

Wickedness, if it be confined within the three volumes of novel, is a great attraction; and there is plenty of it in Fanciful Balliol: by Herman Charles Merivale (Chapman and Hall), a work which, though it certainly testifies of the author's intellectual culture and literary ability, leaves upon the mind an impression of his capabilities rather as a writer of melodramatic pieces for the stage than as a novelist. He certainly is not a master of story-telling, else he would know that the constant obtrusion of his own personality, under the totally unnecessary and even absurd alias of "Balbus," when his own name stands out conspicuously on the titlepage, is a great mistake, calculated to irritate the reader, who should be left alone with the characters of the story, to be lost with them in the world of imagination. A mistake of this kind would, from the nature of the case, be impossible in a melodramatic piece intended for the stage. The dialogue, too, the situations, the peculiarities attributed to various speakers, the very catastrophe itself, would all be more effective upon the boards than in the pages of a book. Indeed, in one place the dialogue is actually arranged just as it would be in a printed play. A suspicion, in fact, is excited that a plot and an amount of material which would have been ample for a melodrama to be played before an audience have been spun out to meet the supposed requirements of the novel that is read. The story, which commences with a scene, or with scenes, such as none but a gentleman intimately acquainted with Oxford and its University could have described so well, soon resolves itself into a development of a single character, a Mephistopheles. He is a foreign Count, of course; he exercises a mysterious, magnetic influence over nearly everybody who comes within his range; all "wickedness is print" to him; he fears not God, neither regardeth man; he bets ten thousand pounds against the virtue of a married woman, whose ruin he compasses by the most diabolical means; he has a ring which, though so much is not expressly stated, must have possessed some potent charm, to judge from his use of it on occasions of hesitation, difficulty, or embarrassment; he has no heart, of course, and he cynically expresses a doubt whether he can ever have had a mother; and he comes to a good, old-fashioned melodramatic end, an example of poetical justice. The novel is excellent in parts, powerful in parts, amusing in parts, well written throughout; the hero and heroine are evidently meant to be high ideals of mankind and womankind, and they undoubtedly are models of constant and strictly honourable lovers; but it is difficult to reconcile oneself to the author's manner of dealing with his grand conceptions. The hero does nothing worthy of his reputation either as an intellectual or as a corporeal athlete; and so original a heroine should have had a less commonplace cross to bear: she could never have married such a man as Brent, though the alternative were that the heavens would fall.

Contrast between two sisters is not an unusual subject with novelists, especially lady novelists, who will draw such a despicable specimen of womankind as no man would dare even to conceive in his heart, much less commit to print; and in Jane Caldecott: by J. E. Panton (Remington and Co.), we have such a contrast and such a specimen. It is not Jane, however, but her sister, Clarice Caldecott, who is about the most contemptible little sample of pretty selfishness that ever sold herself to the highest bidder. On the other hand, Jane is scarcely the pink of perfection; she may have been as honest as the day, but she must have been a very disagreeable young person at times; she is expressly stated to have not been ladylike, but then she was scarcely even maidenly in her behaviour to her sister's lover or lovers; and she betrays a very suspicious readiness to be untruthful on the slightest provocation. The story, which is crude, and chiefly remarkable for blunt and strong language, tinged, and more than tinged, with irreverence, as many people count irreverence, tells how one of two sisters played unintentionally into the hands of the other, so that she who did not scheme at all obtained both the husband and the property that should, either one or the other, have fallen to the lot of her who schemed a great deal. An accident, no doubt, will do wonders; but the sudden conversion brought about by the accident which happened to vulgar, grasping, unromantic, self-seeking Tom Holland, deserves a place in the category of miracles. The novel contains some pleasant scenes, some laughable scenes, and one powerful, touching scene, a little spoiled by verbiage; and there is much talk about painting and artists and dealers in pictures, as was to be expected from a writer nearly related (as stated in the dedication) to the painter of "The Derby Day." Perhaps the slightest of all the sketches is the best of all the portraits in the book: there is not much of Mrs. Caldecott, the mother of the two sisters, but what there is could hardly be better done, representing to the life the ordinary mother with girls to marry, and with the conventional morality of nearly all such mothers.

Romances have, to a great extent, given place in these practical days to novels like those of which In Trust: by M. O. W. Oliphant (Longmans) may be considered an excellent sample. They are works of fiction, but, instead of steeping the weary reader's soul in oblivion of ordinary life and taking a flight into the realms of the utterly impossible, no doubt, yet of the bright and consoling, they present a more or less carefully executed sketch of persons, places, things, motives, and actions, all bearing a singular resemblance to common-place reality. In the present instance, however, the reality is, perhaps, not common-place; it is to be hoped that cold, sordid calculation, where affairs of the heart are concerned, is not so characteristic of our age as the novel would lead one to suppose that it is, and, though there may be here and there a pretty little half-selfish, half-generous, wholly unprincipled, traitress like Rose Mountford, such a combination must assuredly be rare. The humour of the writer, exhibited through the medium of Keziah, is extremely amusing; but the tone of the story is by no means pleasing, and the conception of human nature, as it is moulded by the doctrines of the nineteenth century, is more than a little cynical. There are, nevertheless, sweet, pure, honourable, self-sacrificing, or, at any rate, far from self-seeking, personages to act as foils to the sordid; and thus relief is afforded amid the strain of disgust. The novel is noticeable for a reason unconnected with its literary features; the three volumes are published at the price of twelve shillings instead of the usual thirty-one and sixpence. The innovation is the more worthy of remark, because the writer holds a high rank among novelists.

It is stated that the terms of settlement under which all litigation in connection with the Emma Mine, whether in England or America, is finally disposed of, have been carried to completion. According to the terms of settlement, the liquidator, Mr. Alexander D. MacDougall, has registered the "New Emma Silver Mining Company (Limited)," and has caused to be vested in it "the Emma Mine, with a title clear of all claims and incumbrances whatsoever," as shown to the satisfaction of the company's legal advisers.

THE NEW SMOKING ROOM.

MEMBERS' PRIVATE CORRIDOR.

THE TEA ROOM.

THE PETITION BAG.

THE LEADER OF THE FOURTH PARTY.

THE POST OFFICE.

DIVISION BARRIER AND LOBBY.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

THE SENSE OF TOUCH.

Professor McKendrick, began his fourth lecture, given on the 7th instant, by remarking that probably touch was the most primitive of all the senses; and then described its anatomical arrangements in man. These consist of the end bulbs of Krause, the touch corpuscles of Wagner, and the bodies first described by Vater, and usually called Pacinian, after Pacini, their closest examiner. All these minute corpuscles contain a gelatinous-like matter, in which the ends of the nerves are imbedded. Tactile sensations are excited by mechanical contact, pressure, or traction. The mode of excitation varies according as the body is solid, liquid, or gaseous, and sensibility increases with the amount of pressure, till it becomes pain. Inequality of pressure is one of the conditions of tactile sensation; hence the use of papillæ to increase the points of contact, and therefore the delicacy of touch. After illustrating this by the vibrations of tuning forks, and alluding to the sensation caused by contact with fluids and gases, the Professor suggested the probable mode of action of the terminal organs. Mere contact may give rise to sensations differing in quality; such as the touch of metal, wood, and fat. Weber's method of testing the delicacy of touch was described as observing compound tactile sensations. Tactile sensibility increases from the proximal towards the distal end of the limb—e.g., from the shoulder to the fingers. More than four or five points of contact cannot be observed at the same moment. It was shown by experiment that one continuous impression may be produced by about six hundred tactile impressions in a second. The sensation of touch does not correspond exactly to the duration of the excitant; and sometimes is referred to the surface of a body beyond it, as when we touch teeth. In concluding, the Professor explained how there may be a tactile field corresponding to visual field.

CORALS.

Professor H. N. Moseley, F.R.S., gave his fourth and concluding lecture on Thursday, the 9th inst. He began with a description of the structure of the Stylasteridae, the family of Hydrozoan corals, which, together with the Milleporidae, forms the group Hydrocorallina. The Stylasteridae are characterised by the complicated system of division of labour which exists amongst the various members composing the colonies or stocks. In each stock certain members (dactylozooids) are devoid of mouths and stomachs, and are devoted to catching food; others (gastrozooids) receive the food from the former, and digest it, thus nourishing the whole colony by the products of digestion, which are distributed over the entire stock by a complex network of canals. Other zooids perform the sole functions of reproduction. These arrangements vary in different genera. The skeletons of the cyclo-systems very closely assimilate with the calicles of Anthozoan corals in appearance, and were always taken for such till the true nature of the Stylasteridae was discovered by the lecturer. The lecture concluded with remarks on the depths at which various corals grow, and the sensitiveness of some species in this respect, and with an exhibition of some photographed views of coral reef scenery. The third lecture was illustrated by fine specimens of raw and manufactured coral, lent by Messrs. Phillips, of Cockspur-street; and at the fourth lecture Messrs. Greck and Co., of Naples and Rathbone-place, exhibited a valuable and interesting collection.

CLIMATE OF COUNTRY AND TOWN.

Professor Frankland, D.C.L., F.R.S., began his discourse at the Friday evening meeting, on the 10th inst., by remarking that climate is not altogether beyond our volition, though generally so regarded. It is made up of two factors, sun-heat and warmth of air. The amount of sun-heat depends upon the length of the day and on the quantity of suspended matter and aqueous vapour in the air; and the warmth of the air depends upon contact with matter heated by the sun's rays, and upon the stoppage of radiation from the earth by aqueous vapour; and the surface upon which sun-heat falls greatly affects both factors. This was illustrated by throwing the electric light upon various surfaces, such as black paper, green turf, sand of various colours, and whitewash. Dark surfaces warm the air, while white ones keep it cool, but warm it by radiant reflection. The difference is powerfully felt on cloudless summer days near the sea-level and on mountain heights. Thus at Bellagio, where, with comparatively low solar intensity, the heat is oppressive, while at Diavolezza, with a much higher solar intensity, the sensation is cool and refreshing. The conditions most favourable for a genial climate, depending on the solar intensity, are great elevation above the sea-level, and light-coloured ground and background. The conditions depending upon air temperature are dark-coloured ground and background, and slight elevation above sea-level. Common to both are shelter, reception of direct and reflected rays, a clear sun with white clouds, and a clear atmosphere without dust, smoke, or fog. The climate of towns depends much upon a clear atmosphere in winter. We create an impenetrable barrier by smoke or the products of combustion of bituminous coal—viz., soot, tar, and steam. 33,333 tons of bituminous coal are daily consumed in our grates in London in winter, each ton giving off six cwt. of volatile but condensable products. This acts in the production of town fogs, by supplying the basis of all fogs, condensed watery particles, by determining the condensation of atmospheric moisture in the form of fog, and by coating the fog particles with tar, and thus making them more persistent. There are various ingenious smoke-consuming grates; but these can never appreciably replace the 1,800,000 fire-places in London. If 20,000 were so replaced it would be deemed a great success, at a cost of £100,000; but London fog would not thereby be perceptibly less dense. At a cost of 1s. every grate could be made to burn coke or anthracite, which are both abundant and cheap; and it is only by the total suppression of bituminous coal in London that fogs can be abated. Dr. Frankland's statements were substantiated by experiments and diagrams giving the results of observations made with special apparatus.

BEETHOVEN'S PLACE IN MUSICAL HISTORY.

Professor Pauer began his fourth and concluding lecture on Saturday last, the 11th inst., with a glance at the state of music before Beethoven, and then commented on his progress and improvement. In the first period of his work, the influence of Mozart and Haydn, and the social life of Vienna, where music was highly patronised and studied by aristocratic amateurs, is very apparent. In the second period he threw off these bonds and became a free and independent writer, and composed his grandest and most perfect works, attaining qualities never before realised. His work possesses greater originality; and he now describes deep and strong feeling with all the power of his genius. Thus, in Sonata op. 10, he not only portrays melancholy as a feeling, but indicates its origin, development, and various phases. In the musical art he stands as much alone, as completely a giant as Shakespeare in poetry. He never forgets beauty of expression, light and shade, and gradations. In the third period of his life, when deafness overtook him, he deviated from the plain and smooth path of order, and began to think lightly of rules which he had hitherto faithfully followed, and became diffuse and somewhat cloudy, and occasionally unintelligible. In an eloquent peroration Professor Pauer said that Beethoven stands wholly apart in the history of music. Just as Handel in his time reached the highest point of perfection with regard to the oratorio, as Bach succeeded in securing in his fugues the greatest triumph of the scientific part of music, and as Mozart achieved in his operas the greatest dramatic triumph, even so did Beethoven secure for instrumental music the most complete and the noblest victory. The following cantatas were performed as illustrations: Op. 81 (Les Adieux, l'Absence et le Retour), and one in E major, op. 109.

Professor Odling will give a discourse on Sir B. C. Brodie's Researches in Chemical Allotropy.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The prize distribution of the 4th Kent at Woolwich Arsenal last Saturday evening was attended by Lord Chelmsford, who expressed himself pleased with the evidences of the high state of discipline and efficiency to which the regiment, in common with most others of the volunteer army, had now attained.

Last Saturday the first route march of the season of the London Rifle Brigade took place, when this useful practice was pursued under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Haywood, who was assisted by Major Ewens. Some useful drill was performed on the Embankments.

The D company of the London Rifle Brigade held their annual dinner on Monday evening at the London Tavern, under the presidency of their Captain, Earl Waldegrave, whose skill as a marksman had won the gold badge of the regiment for his company during the past year. The exceptional claims of the company as the most efficient in the brigade for three consecutive years secured also the presence of the commandant, Lieutenant Colonel Heywood.

The Lord Mayor presides at the annual distribution of prizes to the 1st London Artillery, at the Guildhall to-day.

The past and present members of the Civil Service Rifle Volunteers will hold a dinner at Willis's Rooms on Wednesday, March 1, in commemoration of the completion of the twenty-first year since the formation of the corps. The Prince of Wales, hon. Colonel of the regiment, will take the chair.

The rifle-shooting "season" in the metropolis will open on March 1 with the first meeting of the North London Rifle Club; that of the South London being fixed to begin on the following day.

At a meeting held at Brighton, under the presidency of the Mayor, it was decided not to invite the commanding officers to hold a review at Brighton this year. This decision was arrived at owing to the Royal Agricultural Society having been asked to hold its show there in June, and to the heavy demands of land occupiers for contingent damages.

A strong effort is being made to hold the Easter Volunteer Review this year at Portsmouth, and the local authorities and the railway companies are working cordially together in making the preliminary arrangements.

During the past week thirty-seven officers, comprising one Lieutenant-Colonel, twelve Captains, eighteen Lieutenants, three Surgeons, and three Chaplains, resigned their commissions in the volunteer force. Against this, however, there are thirty-four new appointments, so that the loss is nearly balanced as far as numbers are concerned. Nearly all the officers who have resigned held certificates of proficiency in their duties, some of them obtained from the military school of instruction.

The annual report of the National Rifle Association refers to matters which will be interesting to riflemen in all parts of the Kingdom and Colonies. The council views with concern the continued decrease during the last few years of the revenue receipts, more especially those derived from annual subscriptions, and attributes the "considerable decrease in entries for prizes" last year to the general depression of incomes throughout the country, and also to the great heat, which at times was so intense as to oblige some of the competitors to abstain from shooting. The arrangements made for interchanging of register keepers worked very well, and that of entering the scores on black boards as well as on the register tickets at the firing points was eminently successful. The council believes that the simple measures adopted were the means of stamping out the feelings of suspicion which had unfortunately been prevalent at some of the former meetings. Referring to the Mullens' competition, which created great interest and was the special feature of the meeting, the council anticipates that the entries this year will be very numerous, and announce that a contest of a similar nature is being arranged between teams of the Army, Militia, Yeomanry, Volunteers, and sailors from her Majesty's men-of-war, for a challenge trophy, presented by Messrs. Brinsmead and Sons. After a reference to the St. George's Vase controversy, and to the intention of Colonel Lindsay to increase the annual donation from his committee to the National Rifle Association from £200 to £300, the council expresses its belief that the proposed contest between Great Britain and the United States will be of the greatest national interest, and they will spare no effort to carry it out in a manner worthy of its importance.

The Board of Trade Returns show that in January last 5369 persons sailed from the Mersey for various places. They included 3402 English, 9 Scotch, 297 Irish, 1418 foreign, and 243 whose nationality was not given. Their destinations were—United States, 4578; British North America, 462; Australia, 7; South America, 145; New South Wales, 2; East Indies, 93; West Indies, 6; China, 13; South Africa, 3; and the West Coast of Africa, 60. The figures show a decrease of 1080 on the emigration of December, and an increase of 1282 on the return for January last year.

SUBSCRIPTION TO THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

AT HOME.

Twelve months (including Christmas Number),	£1 9s. 3d.
Six months, 14s.	Christmas Half-Year, 16s. 3d.
Three months, 7s.	Christmas Quarter, 8s. 3d.

Copies will be supplied direct from the Office to any part of the United Kingdom and the Channel Islands, for any period, at the rate of 6d. for each Number, paid in advance.

ABROAD.

The yearly subscription abroad is 36s. 4d. (on thin paper, 32s.), with the following exceptions:—

To Aden, Borneo, Ceylon, India, Java, Labuan, Mozambique, Penang, Philippine Islands, Sarawak, Singapore, and Zanzibar, 41s. (thin paper, 34s.) To Madagascar (except St. Mary), 45s. (on thin paper, 36s. 4d.)

Subscribers are specially advised to order the thick paper edition, the appearance of the engravings in the thin paper copies being greatly injured by the print at the back showing through.

Newspapers for foreign parts must be posted within eight days of the date of publication, irrespective of the departure of the mails.

Subscriptions must be paid in advance, direct to the Publishing Office, 198, Strand, in English money; by cheque crossed the Union Bank of London; or by Post-Office Order, payable at the East Strand Post Office, to George C. Leighton, of 198, Strand, London.

GOVERNMENT OF LONDON.

Mr. Firth, M.P., has written a treatise for the Cobden Club on "The Government of London, and how to reform it." As it is upon the lines of this work that the Government bill has been draughted, it may be interesting to indicate the nature of its contents. The greater part of the 270 pages is occupied with an ample statement of the powers, functions, and privileges of the Corporation of the City of London and the Metropolitan Board of Works, the remainder being devoted to a statement of the advantages to be derived from the creation of a municipality for the whole metropolis.

It is suggested that "if a general London municipality be established, the Lord Mayor may be usefully elected from amongst the whole body of citizens. If such new corporation were constructed on the principle of extending the City over the metropolis, the new Lord Mayor would at first retain the present functions of the City Mayor, except those which are connected with the administration of justice." In the constitution of an extended municipality it is proposed to abolish the Court of Aldermen, transferring its functions to the central council, to determine the magistracy of aldermen, and appoint stipendiary magistrates in the City; and to vest in the Crown the appointments of the Recorder and Common Serjeant. With regard to special civic privileges, Mr. Firth suggests that all the charters should be repealed, and, "in the Act of Parliament constituting a new Corporation, to re-enact in clear terms such charters as are applicable to existing circumstances and likely to be of advantage to the community. There would be no injustice in claiming for the whole of London the benefit of these ancient charters, whose advantages are now obtained for the City alone. Not merely would it be in exact accord with the principle and precedent of 1835, but an examination of the terms on which many of them were granted conclusively shows that they were intended for the benefit of the entire metropolis."

With regard to the Board of Works, the hon. member points out that "the borrowing of millions of money on the security of London rates is a matter between the Treasury and the Board, but one over which the ratepayers have no control, and of which they have no knowledge. Public criticism in London is unknown and impossible." Mr. Firth contends, however, that not merely finance, but the control, paving, repairing, and cleansing of the streets, and the administration of all the various functions attributed to the Board by a long series of Acts of Parliament, would be easier and more efficient, as well as more directly under public opinion, if they were vested in one body elected by the ratepayers. "As to all municipal functions, the whole scope of the argument, therefore, points to the necessity of establishing a central representative municipal authority, controlling all administration and all expenditure." Long before the practicability of such a solution had been demonstrated, the Municipal Commissioners of 1837 had stated in their report that they failed "to find any argument on which the course pursued with regard to other towns could be justified which would not apply with the same force to London, unless the magnitude of the change in this case should be considered as converting that which would otherwise be only a practical difficulty into an objection of principle."

The "separate municipality idea," with its ten mayors, hundreds of aldermen, and thousands of councillors, is dismissed as impracticable. "If such a scheme were ever carried out, the conflict of jurisdictions, of interests, and of authority would produce a metropolitan chaos even beyond that which we have delineated. Eleven different rating authorities would divide London amongst them, and the most expert statesman would be puzzled to say what jurisdiction should be given to the central body and what to the local bodies. These latter, moreover, would require even more constituting than a central authority, and would interfere more with existing authorities at the time of transition. The number of men to whom the majority of Islington or the aldermanry of Bethnal-green would be an object of ambition would be small. Neither would such a system result in the preservation to the City area of their cherished privileges and property."

Against the objection that a municipality for the whole of London would be too vast properly to supervise an infinity of detail over so large an area, it is argued that the Board of Works and the School Board do, in fact, at present "from single centres control matters of the closest detail affecting the habitations and lives of the people." In reply to a second objection, that the new authority would be too powerful, a sort of imperium in imperio, there are two arguments: first, that the objection is a relic of prejudice rather than of principle; and second, that the larger and more important the attributes of the Corporation to be created, the higher the class of public men to be animated by ambition to become members and officials.

The plan of the new municipality developed in this pamphlet is that of "extending the framework of the existing Corporation of London over the whole metropolis," and of incorporating in it the duties of the Board of Works. Thus, "the well-known Corn, Coal, and Finance Committee of the City Corporation would undertake in the new council the work hitherto done by the Finance Committee of the Board of Works. The Epping Forest Committee of the City would be reconstituted, and take the work of the Parks, Commons, and Open Spaces Committee of the Metropolitan Board. As to the work now done by the Fire Brigade Committee and the Building Acts Committee of the Metropolitan Board, these committees would have to be reconstituted as committees of the Central Council. At first all the City committees would probably be retained. The City Lands, Markets, Police, City of London School, Officers and Clerks, Improvement, Orphan School, Law and City Courts, Local Government and Taxation, and Grain Committee, might all continue the matters now controlled by the committees of the existing Corporation, and such other matters of the same kind throughout the metropolitan area as should be entrusted to the new Corporation. The Library Committee might retain the control over the City Library, and also consider the whole question of free libraries and museums throughout the metropolis. Under the Public Libraries Acts the consent of the majority of ratepayers in a district is now requisite."

At present the Common Council consists of 232 members. It is suggested to raise this number to 240, to be elected by forty wards, into which the whole of London would be divided, each of which might also elect one alderman. The author points out that though the Central Council might be able to manage the whole municipal work, it is not necessary to sweep away the local vestries. "Local councils, as part of the new Corporation, might be established in each ward, meeting monthly, under the presidency of the alderman of the ward, to deliberate on the affairs and requirements of the district, thus ensuring their full recognition by the central authority." It is suggested that tenure of office by all the members of the Corporation might be three years. This is the ideal of the "Future of London" under its reformed government:—

"Under a unified municipal system like that here indicated, we might hope that the capital would rapidly advance to take its true position amongst English municipalities. It was the complaint of the Commissioners of 1837 that 'the highest classes of commercial men do not ordinarily take a share in the management of the Corporation, and a large proportion who might, if they pleased, take an important part in the Corporation felt a repugnance to doing so.' This complaint was echoed by the Commissioners of 1854, and it would not be too much to say that the homines sent up by the wards to advise the City aldermen in the time of King Edward the First occupied a more representative position in the City than the aldermen themselves do to-day. Under a new Corporation we might expect to see this state of things changed. There are in London many thousands of men with leisure, ability, and wide experience who would readily place themselves at the service of the community, and who would bring to it a judgment, a distinction, and a knowledge of affairs which would be of great value. The commercial and trading classes would send representatives of the kind whose absence the Commissioners deplored; the best of our present rulers would be found taking their seats in the council; and, lastly, we might hope for the presence of men understanding the interests and possessing the confidence of London artisans. A Corporation so constituted would rapidly enlist the confidence both of Londoners and of Parliament. With unified, systematic, and representative municipal government the citizens of London would soon learn to take a pride in their city, and, acting together on common lines for the 'common profit of the people'—as the old charters run—would soon elevate her to the position which she is justly fitted to occupy, as the head of the municipalities of the world."

The Metropolitan Board of Works has requested the vestries and district boards to furnish it with information of the works and improvements effected in their respective areas since the commencement of their operations, that it may be laid before Parliament when the Municipal Bill is introduced.

A meeting of delegates from the vestries and district boards of London was held yesterday week at St. Martin's Vestry-Hall to consider the metropolitan water supply. A resolution was passed staying further action until the Ministry had submitted their scheme for providing municipal government for the whole of London.

Some remarkable evidence concerning the manufacture of "genuine Cremonas" was given last Saturday in the Queen's Bench Division. An action was brought against a dealer in musical instruments, of Wardour-street, to recover the loss incurred by paying £55 for a violin which the defendant had represented to be the work of Carlo Bergonzi in 1742. After the purchase the plaintiff was informed that the violin was a comparatively modern one, and in cross-examination the defendant admitted that he had taken a label bearing the name and date from an old violin and placed it inside the one sold. The jury found for the plaintiff, with damages of £70, to include the money paid for the instrument.

A WINTER NIGHT WITH THE POETS.

The glory of the natural world is one great source of the poet's inspiration. The opening days of April, when spring is "leading its earliest green along the lane," when daffodils, that come before the swallow dares, dance in their mirth, and the throats of innumerable birds fill the woods with music—will draw notes of song also from human voices. If at this time of hope and aspiration the young man's fancy "lightly turns to thoughts of love," the poet, susceptible as a lover to all genial influences, makes love also after his fashion; for he too has a mistress, and one who does not grow older with the lapse of years. Gentle spring, however, with its ethereal mildness, is in England sometimes more beautiful in poetry than in fact. If April and May bring flowers in their train, they also bring the bitter east wind. A young May moon is not to be trusted, and we venture to say that even Moore, despite his song, would have preferred spending a moonlight night in May in a well-warmed room than in the chilly avenues of Morna's Grove. For poets, like more prosaic men, are liable to rheumatic fever, and that poor fellow in Gray's Elegy who brushed with hasty steps the dews away in his hurry to meet the sun, paid for his folly with his life.

If spring, notwithstanding its faults, wins the poet's affection, it is in summer and early autumn that he finds his fullest delight. Life is indeed worth something when it can be lived in careless ease out of doors. Mere existence is then a joy; for then the landscape is flooded with beauty, the wealth of nature is scattered freely abroad, and her prodigality, alike soothing and joy-inspiring, satisfies eye and heart. Pictures of summer serenity and of autumnal mellowness abound in our poetical literature. We hear the brook that sings its quiet tune to the sleepy woods—woods from which come "voices of the well-contented doves"—we see the steer leaning his horns into the neighbour field and lowing to his fellow; we feel the heat of summer as we read how the cattle stand, "half in the flood," how in a corner of the buzzing shade the house-dog, with the vacant greyhound, lies outstretched and sleepy; and how the bees think warm days will never cease, "so loaded are their clammy cells."

Much, however, as our poets love summer, the season of restfulness and day-dreams, it cannot be questioned that Winter also, for praise or blame, has received from them an ample share of attention. It is impossible, indeed, to be indifferent about a season that affects so large a measure of our lives; and perhaps one of the uses of the dark days of winter, and the churlish chiding of the wintry wind, is that they give us something to oppose. A smooth course is not necessarily a happy course. Man is a combative animal, indolence is his chief bane; and winter, if only because it demands physical activity, is alike bracing to body and mind. Our poets have felt this, though some of them have uttered hard words about a season which many English men and women consider that they are bound in duty to detest. Shakespeare, a dear lover of summer delights, has not much to say in its favour. He writes of Winter's ragged hand and icy fingers, of old December's bareness, of boughs which shake against the cold—

Bare ruined choirs, where late the sweet birds sang.

And when he wants a symbol of man's ingratitude he remembers the keen tooth of the winter wind, and the biting cold of the bitter sky.

Spenser, too, the poet of the greenwood, shudders when he sees the approach of winter, that "blows the baleful breath," and is the forerunner of death, just as his predecessor, the Scottish poet Gawan Douglas, had done before him. Strange that Douglas, who, as Bishop of Dunkeld, lived for some time in the loveliest district of Perthshire, should have failed to perceive the intense charm of a Highland winter, when the ground is crisp with frost, when the snow, rose-coloured, lies on the hills catching the mild light of a January sun, when the very scent of the keen air gives a feeling of vigour, and the lake, ice-bound, has its firm surface covered with skaters or curlers.

Winter in the streets of great cities is too often a time of mud and slush and misery; but winter among the mountains has a serene beauty, a joyous aspect which may well inspire the poet's song. Wordsworth felt this beauty strongly, and has recorded in memorable lines his boyish glee in skating while the shades of evening closed around him on the Cumberland lake:—

All shod with steel,
We hissed along the polished ice in games
Confederate, imitative of the chase
And woodland pleasures—the resounding horn,
The pack loud chiming, and the hunted hare;
So through the darkness and the cold we flew,
And not a voice was idle; with the din
Smitten, the precipices rang aloud,
The leafless trees and every icy crag
Tinkled like iron.

"The child is father of the man;" and even in those young days the future poet loved at times to escape from his companions to some lonely part of the lake, and there, stopping short after the rapid motion, to watch the cliffs stretching behind him in solemn train,

Till all was tranquil as a dreamless sleep.

Cowper, who deserves in some respects to be called the poet-laureate of winter, never skated on a Cumberland lake in his life, and in his later and poetical days would have been appalled at a feat so daring. His view of winter is that of the man who sees the snow falling, and listens to the howling of the wind while sitting cosily by a bright fire with his feet upon the fender. In his invocation to Winter the poet crowns him "King of intimate delights, fireside enjoyments—home-born happiness." It is not the rough blast and the treacherous snow-storm and the nipping cold that give him poetical delight, but rather the sense that, safe from all discomfort, he can spend his evening twining silken threads round ivory reels," while Mrs. Unwin reads, or Lady Austen, the poet's "Sister Ann," invents subjects for his verse. Not his to ride in the darkness, Tam o'Shanter-like, despising "mosses, waters, slaps and stiles," not his upon a raw and gusty day to plunge like Cæsar into the angry flood, but, well wrapped in broad cloth, he will venture on a bright morning to walk where the snow, intercepted by outspread branches, has left a space clear for him. The desolation of winter has been described with wonderful felicity by Thomson; Cowper, musing in the January sunshine under leafless trees, presents with equal effect some of its softer features. He pictures the bents and coarser grass fledged with icy feathers, the slow-paced swain plunging his broad, keen knife into the haystack, and the cattle waiting for their fodder "in unrecumbent sadness," the woodman leaving unconcerned the cheerful haunts of men for the lonely forest, while his dog,

Wide scampering, snatches up the drifted snow
With ivory teeth, or ploughs it with his snout;
Then shakes his powdered coat and barks for joy.

We see, too, the "feathered tribes" trooping at the housewife's call from some nook in which they have gossiped side by side, "diligent to catch the first faint gleam of smiling day," while the redbreast, flitting from spray to spray, shakes

From many a twig the pendent drops of ice
That tinkle in the withered leaves below.

"Cowper," says Mr. Lowell, "is still the best of our descriptive poets for everyday wear;" and if anyone doubts this let him take up "The Task," which has, perhaps, been lying long upon his shelves unheeded, and read the fourth, fifth, and sixth books, which are dedicated to Winter. The Olney poet, by-the-way, true poet though he be, has his prosaic side, which cannot be said of Keats, whose rich verse, whatever faults it may have, never touches on the verge of prose. He, too, like his great master, Spenser, loves to sing of summer, but his name may not inaptly be recalled upon a winter evening, not because he has written some pretty stanzas on a "drear-nighted December;" but on account of the singularly happy art with which, in his immortal "Eve of St. Agnes," he has managed to give to a wintry season the glory and glow of the summer's prime. The opening lines show in a few touches the icy coldness of the night.

St. Agnes' Eve—Ah, bitter chill it was!
The owl, for all his feathers, was a-cold;
The hare limp'd trembling through the frozen grass,
And silent was the flock in woolly fold;
Numb were the beadsman's fingers while he told
His rosary—

But within doors there is revelry; the chamber "glows" to receive a thousand guests. Madeline, heedless of the gay cavaliers, fixes her "maiden eyes divine" on the floor, brooding on the visions of delight St. Agnes may grant her that evening. Meanwhile young Porphyro, with heart on fire for Madeline, has come across the moors, and is concealed by an old beldame in the girl's chamber. Everybody has read, or ought to have read, the lovely description, as pure as it is beautiful, of the fair creature undressing, and kneeling "for Heaven's grace and boon;" but everyone may not have noticed how the whole picture glows with warm colour. The wintry moon that shines on the casement throws warm gleams on Madeline's breast, rose-bloom falls on her hands, and on her hair a glory like a saint. She unclasps her warmed jewels, and if her nest is soft and chilly, the chill is soon exchanged for the popped warmth of sleep. Once, indeed, the poet describes the room also as chilly, but this is but to make the contrast stronger of the summer beauty that fills it. The frost-wind, too, may blow and the sharp sleet patter against the window-panes, but when Porphyro melts into the maiden's dream, "as the rose blendeth its odour with the violet," the reader feels that "the purple light of love" has changed the rough, stormy season of winter into one of sunshine and calm.

Keats's lovely poem has surely a lesson, which, though not intended by the poet, might be well applied by the preacher. This, however, is not the place for a sermon. Enough to say that all true poetry carries with it a moral significance, which places our greatest poets among the wisest teachers of mankind. With such teachers, not one winter night only, but many, might be spent with infinite advantage.

J. D.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

"Bridget's Reply," written by Herbert Harraden, and composed by Ethel Harraden, is a song with a great deal of quaint character, both in the music and the words, which are well suited to each other. Messrs. Cocks and Co. are the publishers, as also of two effective transcriptions for the pianoforte, in very opposite styles, by F. Lemoine. One is an adaptation of Handel's graceful aria, "Verdi prati;" the other, of the old English song, "The Vicar of Bray;" another similarly elaborated arrangement (from the same publishers) being "Un Souvenir de Beethoven," by W. Smallwood.

Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co. are active promulgators of good and cheap editions of music of permanent value, vocal and instrumental. They have just issued a neat and portable edition (vol. I.) of Schubert's songs for a mezzo-soprano voice; twenty of these exquisite pieces (with English words by Madame N. Macfarren) being given for eighteenpence. In similar form (large octavo) the same publishers have brought out Schumann's beautiful "Mignon's Requiem," in vocal score with pianoforte accompaniment, and a skillfully written "Te Deum," by Mr. W. G. Cousins. Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co. have also begun the publication of the organ works of Bach in a beautiful library edition (full music size, oblong), superintended and revised by Dr. Bridge and Mr. J. Higgs.

A song by B. Tours, entitled "Rosa Clare," is full of pathos, a very happy effect being obtained by the introduction towards the end of the hymn known as "Abide with me." It is published by W. Czerny, as also are a pleasing trio, "Bright the yule logs glow," and a light and airy pianoforte piece, "Andulka," Caprice Bohémien.

From Messrs. Ransford we have "Two Streamlets," a characteristic song by H. Pontet; and "Oftentimes" and "The Rest of the Story," graceful and easy songs, by Cotaford Dick.

"The Organist's Quarterly Journal" (Novello, Ewer, and Co.) has now nearly completed its seventh volume with the number for the new year, which contains a series of well-written pieces by Herr J. Katterfeldt, G. Hepworth, F. Harvey, E. Evans, J. Benson, and E. W. Healey.

"Stray Leaves," twelve little sketches for the piano, by F. Pascal (Joseph Williams), are melodious and pleasing trifles, well calculated to interest juvenile students of the instrument. From the same composer and publisher we have "Deux Airs de Danse," "Sarabande," and "Canarie," characteristic pieces in a pleasing style.

"The Violin Student," by Henry Farmer (from the same publishers), has reached its fifth number, which contains several pieces by Schubert, well and easily adapted for the violin, with pianoforte accompaniment.

"A Wayside Posy," by M. Watson, and "Faithful Evermore," by S. Champion, are melodious vocal pieces lying within easy means of accomplishment; these are also published by Mr. J. Williams, as are a flowing "Barcarolle"—"In a Gondola," and "Christmas Roses," very pretty pianoforte duets, by J. B. Wekerlin.

Great painstaking on the part of Mr. Rimmel to find novelties for this year's Valentines has been attended with corresponding success. Among his designs are some excellent ones—æsthetic, mediæval, and otherwise. There are, besides, suitable gifts as love-tokens by enamoured swains, such as painted fans, scent sachets, and handkerchief satchels, all in most gorgeous array. This notice appears, unfortunately, a day or two after the fair, owing to the packet not reaching us in time to be noticed last week.

Colonel Hill, C.B., of Cardiff, presided yesterday week at the fifth annual meeting of the Chamber of Shipping of the United Kingdom, which was held at the Cannon-street Hotel; and, in moving the adoption of the report, congratulated the gathering on the present position of the shipping trade. At the annual dinner in the evening Sir Thomas Brassey, M.P., in proposing the principal toast, expressed his satisfaction at the general state of the mercantile marine, and recommended the shipping interest to co-operate with the Board of Trade when invited to do so.

ART NOTES.

Mr. Sidney Colvin, of Trinity College Cambridge, Slade Professor of Fine Art at the University, was on Saturday last re-elected for a fourth term of three years.

Yesterday week at a meeting of the Royal Scottish Academy held in Edinburgh, Mr. Robert Gibb, A.R.S.A., was elected an Academician, in the room of the late Mr. William Brodie.

The students' preliminary examination for 1882 was recently held in the hall of the Surveyors' Institution. Of the thirty candidates who entered their names seventeen satisfied the examiners, Mr. E. C. Rundle, of Tavistock, heading the list.

On Monday afternoon the second annual Exhibition of Fine Arts was opened in the Townhall at Bournemouth. There is a good collection of works by celebrated English and foreign artists.

An exhibition of pictures by the late Mr. John Linnell is opened at the gallery of Messrs. A. Tooth and Sons, 5, Haymarket. The collection comprises many choice examples of the master. The proceeds of the exhibition will be devoted to the benefit of the Artists' General Benevolent Fund.

At the meeting on Monday night of the London and Middlesex Archaeological Society, held at its rooms in St. Martin's-place, Mr. C. F. Wadmore read an elaborate paper on old Fulham Bridge, which is about to be demolished by the Metropolitan Board of Works.

An exhibition of arts and industries of Worcestershire is to be opened on July 17 in a large building at Worcester, under the presidency of Earl Beauchamp, Lord Lieutenant of the county. A guarantee fund amounting to close on £3000 has already been raised.

The additions to the Cleopatra's Needle ordered by the Metropolitan Board of Works were last week completed by the fixing of the inscription plates in the pedestal. These, in common with the sphinxes, and cornices, which conceal the dilapidated condition of the base, have been executed in bronze from the designs of Mr. G. Vulliamy, the Board's architect.

The Fine Art Exhibition opened on Monday at Lewes by the Earl of Chichester is, the Sussex Advertiser says, a great success. The arrangements do credit to the committee, and the collection of paintings is worth a visit, even from a distance. The Industrial Exhibition is also interesting. The exhibition, although originally intended to last only a fortnight, will be kept open three weeks.

The Pall Mall Gazette states, with regard to the magnificent collection of china, enamels, &c., bequeathed by the late Mr. John Jones, of Piccadilly, to South Kensington, that until the whole of the art treasures of the deceased have been valued for the purpose of inland revenue nothing will be done towards their transfer to South Kensington Museum. After they have been valued they will be catalogued afresh, and subsequently they will be forwarded to the great national collection which they will do so much to enrich.

DAY CENSUS OF THE CITY OF LONDON.

The application of the Corporation to the Registrar-General, and to the Chairman of the Local Government Board, during the Session of 1880, to include in the Census Bill powers to take a subsidiary day census of the city of London, was not acceded to. The Corporation therefore gave instructions for this important work to be carried out, and the enumeration was effected on April 25 last. The results are in every way striking, and furnish a full and instructive refutation to assertions which are frequently made with the view of degrading the city of London, as regards its relative position as one of the districts of the metropolis.

The City stands second of the thirty-nine parishes and districts represented on the Metropolitan Board of Works as regards population; Islington coming first with 282,628; the City of London and Liberties next with 261,061; Lambeth, 253,569; St. Pancras, 236,203; Wandsworth, 210,397; and then follow Camberwell, Hackney, Kensington, Poplar, Marylebone, Greenwich, Bethnal-green, Shoreditch, Fulham, Newington (Surrey), Paddington, Mile-end Old Town, &c.

As regards the relative position of the City to some of the leading incorporated cities and towns, in respect of population, with the exception of the cities of Liverpool and Manchester, and the towns of Birmingham, Leeds, and Sheffield, the City of London stands at the head of the incorporated Parliamentary boroughs.

With respect to rateable value, as compared with the thirty-nine parishes and districts of the Metropolis, the city heads the list by a very considerable amount; the rateable annual value of the City of London and Liberties is £3,535,494; St. George, Hanover-square, £3,005,358; St. Mary Abbott, Kensington, £1,969,501; St. Pancras, £1,791,099; St. Mary, Islington, £1,750,673; St. Marylebone, £1,650,874; then Lambeth, Wandsworth, Paddington, and Hackney, all about a million and a half; then Camberwell, St. James's, Westminster, Greenwich, &c., which are under a million, but considerably above £600,000; and next follow Chelsea, Fulham, and a long list under £600,000.

It may be further stated that each of the 198 incorporated cities and towns in England and Wales have a less rateable value than the City of London, the rateable value of Liverpool being £3,211,344; Manchester, £2,296,537; Birmingham, £1,454,329; and Leeds, £1,102,691: these four being the only places with a rateable value above £1,000,000.

Testing its fiscal position, the City stands first of all the Parliamentary boroughs of the metropolis as regards the amount of its assessment under the commercial and trading Schedule D of the income tax, as will be seen by the following statement of the net profits charged with income duty for the year 1879-80, under that schedule:—City of London, £30,263,424; Marylebone, £11,744,016; Westminster, £9,476,160; Finsbury, £6,976,056; Southwark, £4,543,776; Lambeth, £2,896,512; Tower Hamlets, £2,563,152; Chelsea, £1,509,792; and Hackney, £1,370,688.

Turning from the Parliamentary boroughs of the metropolis to the incorporated towns and cities, there will be found the same overwhelming commercial and fiscal superiority of the City of London, the net profits charged to income duty, under the commercial Schedule D, for the year 1879-80 being—Liverpool, £9,980,976; Manchester, £8,832,192; Birmingham, £3,421,056; Leeds, £2,127,168; Bristol, £1,927,056; Sheffield, £1,719,792; Newcastle-on-Tyne, £1,618,656; Bradford, £1,648,080; and Kingston-upon-Hull, £1,016,640. Of course this schedule does not include dividends on public stocks and funds.

It was shown in 1866 that the customs duties paid in London in 1864 exceeded by £484,614 those paid in all the other ports of the United Kingdom, and had done so on an average of the nine years then past by £331,149 per annum.

The report presented to the Corporation also gives valuable details as to the occupations in the City—a table of trades, occupations, and professions; a summary of employers and employed; and the scope, extent, and results of the enumeration of the passenger and vehicular traffic.

A DIVISION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS: MEMBERS PASSING THE TELLERS.

THE SPEAKER ON THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

It will be of interest at this juncture to examine the advice which Sir Henry Brand recently gave the House of Commons with regard to the mode of conducting the business of Parliament. On Jan. 31 the Speaker, urbanest of men, addressed his constituents on public affairs at a meeting held in the Board School-room, Cottenham, near Cambridge.

Sir Henry Brand said that the resolution which was then before the meeting related to the rules for the conduct of the business of the House of Commons, over which he had the honour to preside, and he should be wanting in his duty to his constituents if on a subject of that character he was silent. The resolution concluded with a recognition of his services in the House of Commons, which, coming as it did from his constituents, was especially gratifying to him. The duty of the Speaker of the House of Commons, as the servant of the House, was to see that the rules of that House were observed, those rules being laid down by the House itself. Last Session, however, under exceptional circumstances, which were no doubt in their memory, the House called upon the Speaker to frame rules for the conduct of the business of the House while the state of public business was urgent, and he would, with their permission, explain how that inversion of the usual order of procedure was brought about.

On that very day last year there commenced a memorable sitting of the House of Commons, in the course of which it became his duty to close a debate by interrupting it and putting the question. He would not detain them by stating the reasons which induced him to take that step; suffice it to say that he so acted because he knew that the integrity of Parliamentary Government was at stake, and therefore he did not hesitate in the course which he thought it his duty to pursue. What he did he did advisedly, and under like conditions he should do the same again. But he earnestly trusted that such conditions would never recur. On that occasion he stated to the House why he had taken that course, and he then concluded with these words:—"Future measures for ensuring orderly debate I must leave to the judgment of the House, but I may add that it will be necessary either for the House itself to assume more effectual control over its debates or to intrust greater authority to the Chair."

At that crisis it was not convenient for the House to assume more effectual control over its debates, and the House preferred to adopt the other alternative suggested, and to intrust greater authority to the Chair. The House at its next day's sitting conferred upon the Speaker unprecedented powers to frame rules for the conduct of the business of the House while the state of public business was urgent. Under those powers he accordingly framed certain rules, which proved effectual. However, they ceased to be operative when the state of urgency terminated, and they had no longer any vitality.

Now, every man naturally had a partiality for his own offspring, and he confessed to a parental weakness for the rules in question, and he ventured to think that some of them might with great advantage be revived and made permanent. Those rules so framed by him were in three categories. Some of them might be made permanent as they stood without alteration; others might be made permanent after amendment; while those of a more restricted character, framed to meet a grave crisis, might be set aside until such a crisis might again occur. Those rules were on the Journals of the House, and the House would in its wisdom deal with them as might seem fit, and he was persuaded that they might confidently leave the issue to the judgment of the House. In the statement which he made to the House on the eventful sitting to which he had referred, he thought it his duty to put before the House the necessity of assuming more effectual control over its debates. That opinion was deliberately founded upon very careful observation of the debates throughout this and the last Parliament.

It might not be generally known that the House had at present no power to close a debate, and under the existing rules the House was at the mercy of small minorities, who on various grounds desired to obstruct the progress of business.

THE DIVISION LOBBY.

THE TELLERS READING THE RESULT OF A DIVISION.

The will of the House of Commons was expressed by its votes. Every vote involved the putting of a question from the chair, and upon such question every member might speak once and as long as he pleased, provided he spoke to the question, but as by an artifice of debate commonly practised of moving adjournments each member could in effect speak as often as he liked on every question in Committee of the whole House, there was no limit to the number of times each member might speak to each question at every sitting of the House.

The Speaker put from the chair questions by the score, some of them more or less formal, but all of which might become the subject of debate without limit. Neither the House nor the Speaker could close a debate on any one of such questions as long as a member entitled to speak presented himself to address the House. He knew of no power by which a debate might be brought to a close except by the act of the Sovereign when Parliament was prorogued. Face to face with a grave crisis he had closed a debate last Session, but the House had not as yet signified its pleasure as to the action of the Speaker should a similar crisis occur. It was said that freedom of speech might be endangered if the House assumed the power of closing a debate.

Freedom of speech was the breath of the life of the House of Commons, and certainly he would be no party to putting it in peril. But he was persuaded that the House, in its wisdom, might find the way of safeguarding liberty of speech, and of combining order with freedom of debate. Having said these few words with regard to the rules of the House of Commons, he felt that he must now change the subject, otherwise the meeting might regard him as being somewhat obstructive himself.

OBITUARY.

THE EARL OF LONSDALE.

The Right Hon. St. George Henry Lowther, fourth Earl of Lonsdale, in the county of Westmorland, Viscount and Baron Lowther of Whitehaven, and a Baronet, died on the 8th inst. His Lordship was born Oct. 4, 1855, the eldest son of Henry, third Earl of Lonsdale, by Emily Susan, his wife, eldest daughter of Mr. St. George Francis Caulfeild, of Donamon Castle, in the county of Roscommon, and received his education at Eton. He succeeded to the earldom at his father's death, Aug. 15, 1876. He was a D.L. for Cumberland, and Hon. Colonel Royal Cumberland Militia, and was, besides, a Lieutenant in the Naval Reserve. The Earl married, July 6, 1878, Lady Constance Gladys Herbert, daughter of the late Sidney, Lord Herbert of Lea, and sister of the present Earl of Pembroke, by whom he leaves an only daughter, Lady Gladys Mary Juliet Lowther, born April 9, last year. The family titles pass, consequently, to his next brother, the Hon. Hugh Cecil Lowther, now fifth Earl of Lonsdale, who was born Jan. 25, 1857, and married, June 27, 1878, Lady Grace Cecilia Gordon, sister of the present Marquis of Huntly. The family of Lowther is of great antiquity and large possessions in Westmorland, Cumberland, and Yorkshire.

SIR W. H. CLERKE, BART.

Sir William Henry Clerke, tenth Baronet, of Hitcham, in the county of Buckingham, a principal clerk in the Treasury, died on the 8th inst., at 10, South Eaton-place. He was born, Nov. 17, 1822, the eldest son of Sir William Henry Clerke, Bart., by Mary Elizabeth, his wife, only daughter of Mr. George Watkin Kenrick, of Mertyn, in the county of Flint, and succeeded his father Feb. 16, 1861. Sir William married, November, 1849, Georgina, eldest daughter of Mr. Robert Gosling, of Botleys Park, Surrey, and leaves one daughter and two sons. Of the latter, the elder, his successor, now Sir William Francis Clerke, Bart., was born Jan. 16, 1856.

LADY ADELAIDE LAW.

Lady Adelaide Emeline Caroline Law, whose death has just been announced, was born Jan. 31, 1830, the youngest daughter of Charles William, third Marquis of Londonderry, K.G., the distinguished soldier and diplomatist, by his second wife, Frances Anne, only daughter and heir of Sir Harry Vane-Tempest, Bart., of Wynyard and Long Newton, county Durham (and his wife, the Countess of Antrim in her own right). Lady Adelaide was thus half-sister to the late Marquis of Londonderry, K.P., and sister to the present Marquis of Londonderry, K.P., Lord Adolphus Vane-Tempest, M.P., Lord Ernest Vane-Tempest, the Duchess of Marlborough, the late Countess of Portarlington. Her Ladyship was married, Feb. 11, 1852, to the Rev. Frederick Henry Law, M.A., Rector of Lee, Kent.

We have also to record the deaths of—

Mr. C. Chapman Barber, "the father" of the Junior Equity Bar, and a very skilful and experienced Conveyancer.

Mr. Charles Doughty, J.P., at his residence in Lincoln, on the 8th inst., in his sixty-fourth year.

Mr. Arthur William Crichton, J.P. and D.L. for Herefordshire, on the 4th inst. at 11, Eaton-place. He was eldest son of the Rev. W. J. Crichton, of Broadwood Hall, Salop.

Major-General Edward Hope Smith Bowdich, on the 5th inst., at Dr. Hales's house, 58, Harley-street. He entered the Bombay army at the age of sixteen, and served in the Persian campaign under Sir James Outram.

Major-General Robert Vernon Handyside, late Madras Staff Corps, on the 5th inst., in Philbeach-gardens, South Kensington, in his fifty-third year. He entered the Army in 1846; served during the Burmese War, 1852-3; and was some time in the 33rd Madras Native Infantry.

Mr. James Roberts-West, of Alscot Park, county Gloucester, J.P., High Sheriff 1845, on the 6th inst. He was born, April 24, 1811, the eldest son of Mr. James West, of Alscot, who assumed the prefix surname of Roberts, in consequence of his marriage with Anne, only daughter and heiress of Mr. Joseph Roberts, of Newcombe. He married, May 16, 1844, Elizabeth, daughter of J. Moore Boulton, of Springfield House, by whom he leaves issue. The Wests of Alscot Park are a younger branch of the noble house of Delawarr.

Musurus Pasha, the Turkish Ambassador, has completed a translation of Dante into Greek, a copy of which he has presented to Mr. Gladstone.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will of Mr. Henry Spence Fairfoot, of Clement's Inn and Woburn-square, was proved on the 8th inst., the personalty being sworn above £123,000. By the will he appoints his friend and partner Henry Webb and his friend Thomas J. Pearson his executors, and he gives to the former all his shares in the Law Life, Legal and General, and London and Provincial Assurance Societies, and to the latter a legacy of £1000. He gives to his clerks legacies to the amount of £1300; and, after legacies to servants, he bequeaths the following charitable legacies, viz.:—To the Rector of St. George's, Bloomsbury, £200, to be applied at his discretion towards the charitable or benevolent institutions of that parish; and to the Incumbent of Christ Church, Woburn-square, £100, to be applied in like manner towards the benevolent institutions connected with that church and district; to the North London, or University College Hospital, £100; to the Royal Free Hospital, £100; to the hospital for Women, Soho-square, £100; to the Law Clerks' Society, £100; to the Solicitors' Benevolent Society, £100; and to the Bloomsbury Dispensary, £100. The testator then bequeaths considerable legacies to his following friends or members of their families—viz., the Rev. Canon Garbett, the said Mr. Pearson, Mr. Augustus Webster, Mrs. Elizabeth Nicholls, Mrs. Rosa Henderson, and the wife and children of the said Henry Webb, and he devises and bequeaths the residue of his estate, real and personal, to the said Henry Webb. By a codicil (dated Aug. 24 last), after reciting that he had that day married, and after referring to his marriage settlement, he makes further provisions for his wife, and bequeaths to her his house and furniture in Woburn-square. He also gives legacies to his wife's children by a former marriage; and in other respects he confirms his will.

The will (dated Dec. 7, 1878), with a codicil (dated July 16, 1879), of Mr. James Yates, J.P., D.L., late of Oakwood Hall, Whiston, Yorkshire, who died on Dec. 3 last, was proved at the Wakefield district registry on the 9th ult. by Samuel Ratcliffe Carrington, William Edward Carrington, Edward Carrington Howard, Henry Jubb, and John William Pye Smith, the executors, the value of the personal estate being over £100,000. The testator bequeaths £400 to the minister and deacons of the Independent Church at Masbro' upon trust to apply the income, first, in keeping his family tomb in repair, and to distribute the remainder among the poor members of their church; £200 to the same persons upon trust, to distribute the income among the poor of Masbro' generally; £200 to the same persons for evangelistic missionary work at Masbro'; £100 to the mission-room, known as St. Philip's mission, in connection with Broomyard Congregational Church, Sheffield; £200 upon trust, to distribute the income among the poor of Whiston; £500 to the Rotherham Hospital and Dispensary; £200 to the London Missionary Society; and £100 each to the Congregational Church Aid and Home Missionary Society, and the British and Foreign Bible Society. The testator leaves to his daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Ellen Shaw-Yates, £1000 and all his furniture, plate, pictures, books, effects, horses, carriages, live and dead stock, and the use for life of Oakwood Hall and the grounds of about twenty-five acres; he also leaves a sum of £20,000 upon trust to pay the income to her for life, and at her death the capital for her first son who shall attain twenty-one; to his grandson, Ernest Shaw-Yates, £5000; and numerous legacies to his own and his late wife's relatives, servants, and others. As to the residue of his real and personal estate, one half is to be held upon trust for the children of his said daughter, and the other half for his said daughter for life, and then for her children.

The will (dated July 15, 1878) of Francisco José Pacheco, Baron de San Francisco, late of Rio de Janeiro, who died on Oct. 18, 1880, was proved in London on the 18th ult. by his eldest son, Baron de San Francisco, the executor, the personal estate in England amounting in value to over £42,000. The testator's heirs, as to two thirds of his property, are his children, Francisco José Pacheco, Doña Maria Henriqueta, Pacheco Gomez, Joaquim Pacheco, and Eduardo Agosto Pacheco. The remaining third of his property, subject to legacies which he bequeaths thereout to godchildren, one of sons, to several churches, and servants, he gives to his eldest son, Francisco José Pacheco.

The will (dated Dec. 26, 1879), with a codicil (dated June 16, 1880), of General Sir William Erskine Baker, K.C.B., late of the Castle, Banwell, Somersetshire, who died on Dec. 16 last, was proved on the 28th ult. by Dame Frances Baker, the widow, the Rev. John William Colvin, the nephew, and Francis Parker, the acting executors, the personal estate exceeding in value £38,000. The testator leaves to his wife his household furniture and £4500, and the use for life of his plate, books, and pictures. The residue of his real and personal estate is to be held upon trust for his wife for life; at her death, legacies are given to his brother, sister, sister-in-law, nephews, and nieces; and the ultimate residue is to be divided between his five nieces, the daughters of his brother, Captain Vashon Baker.

The will (dated March 30, 1881) of Mr. Thomas Beall, of Oak Villa, Lynton-road, Crouch-end, Horsey, who died Oct. 6, 1881, was proved on Dec. 29, 1881, under £31,000, by his sons, James Beall and Thomas Beall, and his son-in-law, Frederick George King, and Edward Hawes, the executors and trustees. The testator bequeaths to each the sum of £50, free of legacy duty, and to his widow the sum of £100; freeholds and leaseholds in Lynton-road and The Grove, Horsey, to his widow for life; freeholds and leaseholds in Shaftesbury-terrace, and freehold stables in Lambton-road, St. Mary, Islington, to his son James Beall; leaseholds in Harrington-grove, Lambton-road, and Beall-place, St. Mary, Islington, to his son Thomas Beall; freeholds at Watford to his daughter, Emma Ellen; leaseholds in Harrington-grove, Horsey, to his nieces, Eliza, Selina, and Matilda Green, for life. The real and personal residue to be equally divided, after payment of funeral expenses and all debts, &c., between his three children, James Beall, Thomas Beall, and Emma Ellen King.

The will of Captain Robert William Suckling, R.N., late of Albert Villa, Great Malvern, who died on Dec. 24 last, has just been proved by Captain Edward William Frederick Acton, the sole executor, the value of the personal estate exceeding £30,000. The testator, after bequeathing legacies to nephews and great-niece, gives the residue of his real and personal estate to his nephew, the said Captain Acton.

The will (dated June 3, 1876), with two codicils (dated Jan. 17, 1877, and Sept. 17, 1878), of the Rev. Charles Causton, Rector of Lasham, in the county of Southampton, who died on July 28 last, was proved on the 24th ult. by Mrs. Harriet Purefoy Causton, the widow, and William Park Dickens, the executors, the personal estate being valued at upwards of £30,000. The testator gives legacies to his wife, children, and others; £7000 upon trust for his wife for life, and then for his son, Alfred Malcolm; and the residue of the personalty to his wife absolutely. All his fee farm rents he gives to his son Francis Jervoise, and all his other real estate to his son Charles Purefoy.

The will (dated Oct. 22, 1878) of Miss Alice Burbery, late of Leamington Priors, Warwickshire, who died on Nov. 29 last, was proved on the 14th ult. by James Tovey Rowe and John Worsley, the acting executors, the value of the personal estate exceeding £19,000. The testatrix bequeaths legacies and annuities to Mrs. Harriet Jennaway and Mrs. Caroline Gillins; and the residue of her property to Elizabeth Rowe, Henry Burbery Rowe, and John Gillins Worsley.

The will (dated June 25, 1880) of Lady Caroline Georgiana Lascelles, the widow of the Right Hon. William Lascelles, late of No. 62, Eaton-square, who died on Nov. 28 last, was proved on the 18th ult. by Claud George William Lascelles, the son, the acting executor, the personal estate amounting to nearly £7000. The testatrix exercises the power of appointment given to her under the will of the Hon. Edwin Lascelles in favour of certain of her children, and leaves the residue of her property to her said son. The deceased was the eldest daughter of George, sixth Earl of Carlisle, K.G.

The will (dated Feb. 8, 1879), with a codicil (dated July 26, 1880), of Count Louis Marie de Tallyrand Perigord, late of No. 18, Avenue de Villars, Paris, who died on Feb. 25 last, has just been proved in London by Elie Louis Roger de Tallyrand Perigord, Prince de Chalais, the surviving executor, the value of the personal estate in England being over £6000. The testator leaves 500f. to the poor of Breuilpont; 1200f. to the commune of Breuilpont for the purpose of building a parsonage; mementos to friends and annuities to old servants; and he appoints his wife, Marie Therese, residuary legatee. He gives to his great-niece Melaine de Ligne, Countess de Beaufort, the bare ownership of the lands and château of Breuilpont, with its dependencies, and also his mansion and letting-house in Paris, with the furniture and effects, and the usufruct at his wife's death. The testator states that nothing has shocked him more in his life than luxurious funerals, and he therefore desires that his may be as simple as possible.

TEACHERS' TRAINING AND REGISTRATION SOCIETY.

Lord Aberdare presided yesterday week at the fourth annual meeting of the above association, held at the Society of Arts.

The chairman said that the support given to the colleges, the Merton, Newnham, and others for the higher education of women, showed how deep was the hold they were taking on the public mind. The movement was extending to Wales. This showed that a good sound education was far better than the flimsy, superficial education which used to be given years ago. They wanted to see a good education given to all classes. The necessity for this was seen in the theoretical knowledge required in every branch of scientific and industrial pursuits. This, however, could not be accomplished unless they had efficiency in the teachers. The number of scholarships which had been given during the short existence of the society was liberal, for he found that they had six of £25 each, one of £15, and five of £10 each. What they wanted now was notoriety and capital, for he was quite sure that when the benefits arising from these colleges became known they would be largely supported. He concluded by moving the adoption of the report.

Mr. Thomasson, M.P., seconded the resolution.

Professor Goldwin Smith next moved the election of the council for the ensuing year.

Professor Huxley seconded the resolution. He said that his experience of teaching extended over twenty years. One of his first discoveries was that though there was plenty of people to be taught, yet there was a great lack of proper teachers. When he was chairman of the Educational Endowments Committee of the London School Board he wished to see the establishment of such colleges. There were many conditions which went to make a good teacher. It was a different thing altogether to have the thing first hand, and to be able to thoroughly understand what they taught. As an examiner, he often found that teachers, whilst they possessed learning, had not real practical knowledge.

Dr. Bagg and others addressed the meeting.

At the Leeds Assizes last Saturday, Willie Bray, a "comic" vocalist, recovered £1000 from the London and North-Western Railway Company for personal injuries sustained in a collision near Normanton; damages to the amount of £2000 were awarded at the Liverpool Assizes in a similar action, brought by a Liverpool corn merchant named Neville against the Midland Railway Company.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

- ALLEN AND CO.
Athe Pyee, the Superior Country; or, The Great Attraction to Br. Burnside to British Enterprise and Commerce. By Colonel W. F. B. Laurie.
On and Off Duty, being Leaves from an Officer's Note-Book. By Captain S. P. Field Oliver.
Englishwoman's Year-Book for 1882. By L. M. H.
BENTLEY AND SON.
Poems. By Arthur Bridge.
The Garden of Eden. A Novel. 3 vols.
BLACKWOOD AND SONS.
Foreign Classics for English Readers. Edited by Mrs. Oliphant—La Fontaine, and other French Fabulists.
Autobiography of Thomas Allen. By the Author of "Post Mortem." 3 vols.
BOONE.
A Book of Lyrics, including Songs, Ballads, and Chants. By Joseph Skipsay. New Edition. Revised.
CASELL, PETER, AND GALVIN.
Flower Printing in Water Colours. By F. Edward Hildme.
CHAPMAN AND HALL.
Faulstich of Jallio. A Story in Two Parts. By Herman Charles Merivale. 3 vols.
Young Lochinvar; or, The Romance of Real Life. A Novel. 2 vols.
CHATTO AND WINDUS.
Some Private Views. Being Essays from the "Nineteenth Century" Review, with Some Occasional Articles from the "Punch." By James Payn.
Tunis, the Land and the People. By the Chevalier du Hesse-Wartegg. Twenty-two Illustrations.
GOULD AND SONS.
Chronic Sore Throat, or Pollicular Disease of the Pharynx. By Dr. E. B. Shulldham.
GRAHAM SMITH, EDINBURGH.
History of the Chapel Royal of Scotland, with the Register of the Chapel Royal of Stirling. Including Details in Relation to the Rise and Progress of Scottish Music, and Observations Respecting the Order of the Thistle. By the Rev. Dr. Charles Rogers.
HARRISON AND SONS.
Victoria Regina, and Other Verse and Prose. By George Gravener.
Burke's Peerage, Baronetage, and Knightage for 1882.
HODDER AND STOUGHTON.
Canal Adventures by Moonlight. By George Smith. Second Thousand.
HURST AND BLACKETT.
Griffin Alley; A Yacht Cruise to the Levant, and Wanderings in Egypt, Syria, the Holy Land, Greece, and Italy in 1881. By General E. H. Maxwell, C.B.
LONGMANS, GREEN, AND CO.
In Trust. The Story of a Lady and Her Lover. By M. O. W. Oliphant. 3 vols.
LOW AND CO.
James T. Field's Biographical Notes and Personal Sketches. With Unpublished Fragments and Tributes from Men and Women of Letters.
Noah's Ark; or, "Mornings in the Zoo." Being a Contribution to the Study of Unnatural History. By Phil. Robinson.
Schwartz's Search. Sticking in the Arctic in Quest of the Franklin Records. By W. H. Gilder. Maps and Illustrations. Whittier Birthday Book. Arranged by Elizabeth S. Owen.
"Magyarland." Being the Narrative of Our Travels Through the Highlands and Lowlands of Hungary. By a Fellow of the Carpathian Society. 2 vols. With Illustrations.
Waiting. By A. M. Hopkinson. 3 vols.
A Lady Traveller in the Transvaal. By Mrs. Hecker.
Handbook of Pen-Skating. By Neville Goodman and Albert Goodman. With Map of the Fen District. Through Siberia. By Henry Landell. With Illustrations and Maps. 2 vols.
MACMILLAN AND CO.
Flitters, Tatters, and the Counsellor, and Other Sketches. By the Author of "Hogan, M.P."
Songs in Minor Keys. By G. C. Fraser-Tyler (Mrs. Edward Liddell).
Fifty Years of Science. Being an Address Delivered at York to the British Association, August, 1881, by Sir John Lubbock, Bart., M.P.
METZGER AND CO.
The Collected Compositions of His Royal Highness the Prince Consort. Edited by W. G. Cusins.
PAUL AND CO.
England on the Defensive; or, The Problem of Invasion Critically Examined under the Aspect of a Series of Military Operations. By Captain J. T. Barrington. With a Map.
International Scientific Series:—Myth and Science. An Essay by Pito Vignoli.
Mountain Life in Algeria. By Edgar Barclay. With Illustrations.
SMITH, ELDER, AND CO.
Poor Archie's Girl. A Novel. By Kathleen Knox. 3 vols.
SOWING AND SEWING. A Sexagesima Story. By Charlotte M. Yonge.
TINSLEY BROTHERS.
Cynthia. A Tale of Two Lovers. 3 vols. A Costly Heritage. By Alice O'Hanlon. 3 vols.
TURNER AND CO.
The Fate of Madame La Tour. A Tale of Great Salt Lake. By Mrs. A. G. Paddeok.
Prenominia; or, the Etymology of the Principal Christian Names of Great Britain and Ireland. By Richard Stephen Charnock.
WARD, LOCK, AND CO.
Beeton's Dictionary of Universal Information. New Edition. Enlarged, Corrected, and Revised to the Latest Date, with Several Thousand Additional Articles. By George R. Emerson.
WHITE AND CO.
Phyllida. A Life Drama. By Florence Marryat (Mrs. Francis Leam). 3 vols.

NEW BOOKS.

Two volumes printed at Calcutta, but of which Mr. E. Stanford, at Charing-cross, is the London publisher, contain the essays written, in very good English, by a learned native gentleman of Bengal, upon various topics of Indian archaeology. Their collective title is as follows:—Indo-Aryans: Contributions towards the Elucidation of their Ancient and Medieval History: by Rajendralala Mitra, LL.D., C.I.E. The author contributed these essays, at different times, to the discussion of the Bengal Asiatic Society; and he has added one or two chapters on the architecture of India from his large work on the "Antiquities of Orissa." The whole will be of great use to anyone wishing to know the details of daily life in India, as well as the metaphysical and mythological conceptions of the people in ages long past. To those who are acquainted with India at the present day, some of the information in this work may occasion no little surprise, as they may find here that so many practices, which are now considered essential to religion, were quite unknown at a former period. Persons who were familiar with "Gunga-jees" and the dead Hindoos floating down on its surface, will learn from this erudite author that in the Vedic age the body was buried, and that cremation became the general custom at a later date. But then, at first, the ashes were buried, and it was only at a comparatively late date that even these or any part of the body were thrown into the Ganges. At page 122 of the second volume is quoted the hymn from the Rig Veda, which bears evidence to part of these statements. In the same hymn will be found the following verse, which is addressed to the widow of a dead man:—"Rise up, woman, thou art lying by one whose life is gone; come, come, to the world of the living, away from thy dead husband, and become the wife of him who grasps thy hand, and is willing to marry thee." It was known that the Government had the authority of the ancient sacred books when they prohibited Suttee, and that authority is to be found in this verse. There is here a precept enjoining the very opposite of the present Hindoo custom, which forbids the marriage of a widow. Readers who are interested in tracing analogies between the Hindoo and the Greek mythologies, will find much to repay them in Dr. Rajendralala Mitra's work. There is a very short paper on the Origin of the Myth about Cerberus. A hymn in the Rig Veda mentions Yama—the God of Hades—and his "two four-eyed, brindled dogs," under whose guard the spirit of the dead is placed, at the entrance of the roads leading to the Mansion of Yama. The author of these essays thinks that the notion of the dogs, in connection with death, grew out of the primitive custom of exposing the dead; and the dogs performed the same service as that done to-day by the Vultures to the Parsees at Bombay. The dogs were supposed thus to take charge of the dead; and as the corpse visibly disappeared when left to their attentions, the myth of their attending the shade in its passage to the next world originated by a process simple enough. There is another very interesting chapter on the "Yavanas;" this is the word by which the Greeks were denominated in ancient Hindoo writings. Its identity with the Hebrew "Ivan," the Persian "Yunan," and the Greek "Ionia," and its Pali form being "Iona," led to the word being assumed as meaning Greeks, and no other races; but this becomes very doubtful when the subject is thoroughly examined. The chapter on human sacrifices in India is a deeply interesting one. Such sacrifices took place in India till the present century; thus there were the Meria sacrifices in Orissa, and the ideas connected with them seemed to be of a very low type; but the ancient Purushamedha appears to have been a very complicated rite, and to have had a wonderful amount of meaning attached to it. According to the "Satapatha Brahmana," which gives a full description of the ceremony, Narayana, or Vishnu, willed: "I shall abide over all living beings; verily I shall become all this [creation];" and this he did by performing a great Purushamedha. At the time of the great ceremony of proclaiming the Queen as Empress of India at Delhi, few people could understand why it did not take place at Calcutta, the present capital. From an essay in this book, it will be found that the Mahabharata describes an Imperial coronation in the ancient city of Delhi, when Yudhishthira performed a "Rajasuya," upon which he became a Chakravartin, or Paramount Ruler over the whole of India. Hence it was considered that Delhi, or Indraprastha, as it was anciently called, was the right and proper spot for Queen Victoria to be also declared a "Chakravartin"—a word which would have had more meaning to Indian ears than "Kaiser-i-Hind." We also learn from this author that the "Atta and Pan," presented at Durbars, as now in use, was copied by us from the Mohammedans, but that it was adopted by them from the Hindoos. In ancient times, it was called "Arghya," and consisted "of flowers, sandal paste, a few grains of rice, and a few blades of Durva grass, sprinkled with water." The presentation of this compound to a guest was a high mark of honour. Dr. Rajendralala Mitra, in other chapters or essays, goes into the ethnological theory of the primitive Aryan race, the reputed progenitors of the nations of Europe and of Brahmani Indians. He treats of Sanscrit philology, the formation of the existing Hindi language, and of the Gatha and other dialects; he also sketches the life of Asoka, the great Indian monarch who established and endowed the Buddhist religion; and several particular questions of antiquarian or historical interest are discussed in these volumes.

Satisfactory as it is to have reached at length the fourth and concluding volume of The Life of Napoleon III.: by Blanchard Jerrold (Longmans), the satisfaction is mingled with a certain sense of disappointment. Not that the author has omitted any portion of his duty, which, on the contrary, he has discharged, to all appearance, most conscientiously and, as his pages themselves testify, in the style of a very competent writer; but, for some reason or other, the whole biography seems to fall flat, the subject to lack grandeur, the historical events recorded to have almost entirely lost their pristine importance. It is quite startling to find how nearly we had forgotten all about Napoleon III., how very slight an impression he appears to have left upon the world in which he once filled so large a space. When we read of the experiments he made in common with Commandant Minié, the inventor of the rifle that was so celebrated for a while, it is as if we were reading about persons and things as extinct and forgotten as the dodo. And, indeed, it is probably as an example of a wonderful personal career, with strange and touching vicissitudes of fortune, rather than as a monarch, whose deeds decided the course of history, that Napoleon III. will be regarded by posterity. The very disaster with which his reign concluded, which cost France so much in men and money and territory, and which might have kept his memory alive, in melancholy fashion, from generation to generation, was almost effaced, as it were, by the subsequent revolution and the horrors of the Commune. It is difficult to point out anything, beyond the improvement and embellishment of Paris as a habitable city, which is likely to make the name of Napoleon III. remembered as that of a great or even a notable sovereign. There was always, or nearly always, a something wanting to the achievements he attempted. There are many who doubt whether that Crimean campaign in which he joined his forces with ours was much better than a brilliant failure, whether any tangible advantage was gained by it. The war undertaken for Italian Independence was notoriously concluded in a manner which, though it led to the establishment of the present extensive Kingdom of Italy, made the Italians more angry than grateful, despoiled the House of Savoy, as the case is sometimes put, and laid the French Emperor open to a charge, whether just or unjust, of not serving Italy for naught, but requiring a "quid pro quo;" the Mexican expedition is generally considered to have been an inglorious undertaking and a tragic blunder; and as for the Franco-German war, let who may have been to blame for its commencement, it created, reasonably or unreasonably, an almost universal suspicion that the Imperial system had for a long while been rotten to the very core. The main interest of the biographer's fourth volume lies in the pictures given of Napoleon III.'s private life, in the little domestic scenes in which the Emperor and the Empress and the ill-starred Prince Imperial play their parts of father, mother, child, and members of a genial, lively, attractive social circle. There are two portraits of the Prince Imperial, and there are specimens of the remarkable talent he displayed at a very early age in figure-drawing. There is also an elaborate attack upon Mr. Kinglake, both in the text and in the Appendix, for aspersing the character of Napoleon III. and for refusing to retract, or more than barely modify, what are described as unfounded calumnies. At the same time, the biographer does not shrink from admitting and lamenting that the Emperor was surrounded by unscrupulous intimates, from whom he could not or, from mistaken or honourable motives, would not rid himself as our Henry V. got rid of Falstaff. Nothing, apparently, has been neglected to make the volumes as perfect as possible, from the appropriate green and gold "livery" of the covers to the index provided for facility of reference.

Agreeable and welcome to readers of all descriptions are such publications as Griffin Ahoy! by General E. H. Maxwell, C.B. (Hurst and Blackett), though the title may sometimes create a misapprehension about the sort of entertainment provided. In the present instance, lest anybody's mind should be led astray in the direction of a much-abused memorial at Temple Bar, it may be well to state at once that the "griffin" of the title is neither an Indian cadet nor a monstrosity in stone, but "a fine barque-rigged yacht of 315 tons, with auxiliary screw." For, do what we may, say what we will, protest as much as ever we can, people will persist in calling a steam-boat a yacht. In the aforesaid yacht, then, of which there is a portrait given, facing a view of Athens, a pleasant party went for a cruise of six months, beginning in January, 1881, visited Egypt, Syria, the Holy Land, Greece, and Italy, and saw men and cities; and what they did, what they observed, what they enjoyed, what they suffered, is recounted by one of the party in a handsome volume, with nice large easy print, and in the garrulous, familiar style of a friendly gossip who thinks, not perhaps without reason, that the most trivial details will enhance rather than diminish the interest. The adventures the party met with were scarcely of so terrific a character that they would have made the blood of an Othello run cold, but they were of various kinds, from the alarming to the amusing. A pet bear whose acquaintance the party made on board a certain flag-ship must have caused a curious mixture of alarm and amusement: his behaviour, if not indicative of a sore head, was certainly that of a bear whose head had been turned by too much indulgence. The gallant author does not give a very flattering description of Athens, which, by-the-way, he had visited before, when he was a young subaltern, and in which, therefore, he naturally observed many changes, some for the better and some for the worse; and he treats the names of Greek deities with a soldierly indifference which may shock a scholar's sensibilities, thinking nothing, as the Acropolis stares him in the face, of speaking about "Minerva" and "Jupiter" and the temple of "Dionysius." The last word may be merely a misprinted form, but it occurs more than once. However, such trifles are hardly worth noticing; they interfere but little, if at all, with the enjoyment of the narrative, which derives a peculiar charm from the author's own evidently hearty appreciation of the experience it was his good fortune to make.

Shrewd remarks, humorously put, are the chief characteristic of Some Private Views: by James Payn (Chatto and Windus), a very readable volume containing certain essays and articles reprinted from The Nineteenth Century and The Times. Whoever looks into the volume for subtle arguments elaborately worked out, for profound theories exhaustively discussed, or even for striking examples of elegant composition, will look into it in vain; the matter is unsubstantial, the manner is light, the style is almost slipshod. The author, who is nothing if not facetious, and whose native facetiousness is reinforced by contributions exacted from various foreign quarters, especially from the store-house of American profanity, seems to regret as much as anything that what with the scepticism, what with the money-grubbing, what with the general weariness of life, what with the overdone education distinctive of our age, there is nobody left with sufficiently high spirits and sufficiently empty, that is to say, uncrammed, mind to take a joke, at any rate of the sort in which he indulges. If it were so, it were a grievous fault, no doubt; but he is probably mistaken, inasmuch as his book may be warranted to extort a laugh or two from even a money-lender or a metaphysician. The author clearly has suffered in his time a great deal, however transiently, from the public critic and from the candid friend, the volunteer censor, who is styled "the critic on the hearth;" and, though there is no novelty whatever about his representations, he puts them before the reader with irresistible drollery. There is a great amount of truth as well as of fun in the observations he makes concerning the admiration which is often expressed for certain works or certain authors, but is neither more or less than an egregious sham. At the same time, it is quite possible to have a sincere admiration for a work or its author, or both, and yet to know absolutely nothing about the contents of the work. There is the case, for instance, in which two gentlemen at dinner hotly discussed the question whether a certain book were good or bad; and, the vehement supporter of its goodness being pressed upon the point, acknowledged that he had never read a line of the book, but urged that he, as the publisher of it, had sold twenty thousand of it; and if that were not proof of a good book and an admirable author he did not know what was. That Mr. Payn should sneer at the "classics" is not wonderful when we find him writing "spectare veniunt" (p. 201); it is quite clear that he never had any "call" in the direction of classical scholarship; but, nevertheless, there may be more justification than he supposes for the views of those persons who can trace the inspiration of a grand old poet even in "The Seven against Thebes," which Mr. Payn apparently regards as a very low sample of dramatic literature. So that he is doubly funny; when he does and when he does not intend it.

A curious book, with a curious title, is Noah's Ark: by Phil Robinson (Sampson Low and Co.), a substantial volume, containing what is called "a contribution to the study of unnatural history." There is an explanatory sub-title, from which it would seem that the author spent certain "mornings at the Zoo," where he, no doubt, pick'd up material for his literary work. The term "unnatural history" is plainly a playful expression, having reference to the unnatural condition in which the various creatures pass their lives at their home in Regent's Park. Indeed, the author is playful throughout his volume, from the extraordinary preface to the brief but by no means necessary postscript, with a playfulness which sometimes rises to genuine humour, though it generally oscillates between the pretty nonsense of the nursery and the ponderous jocosity of the school-room. He appears, however, to be a naturalist at heart if not by profession, to have studied the subject upon which he has written, if he cannot pretend to be what poor Mrs. Nickleby would have described as "quite a Buffoon," and his knowledge of India, where he seems to have been a resident for some time and to have kept his eyes open and his senses on the alert during his residence, has enabled him to write with that vivid picturesqueness which comes of personal familiarity. There is a fund of information as well as of entertainment in the volume; and the wit is seldom so poor or the English so questionable as in the following specimen:—"a large cat called 'the tiger.' It is not a suitable kind to make a nursery pet of, for its tastes are unreliable." It is only fair, however, to say that the book is presumably intended for children, who like their jokes mild. Some of the stories told have certainly appeared before in other of the author's works; but repetition is no crime, and not every reader will have read the author's other works, though a perusal of the volume under consideration may lead to an inquiry after them.

The Autobiography of Thomas Allen (published by Blackwood) purports to be the private history of a humble individual. As a rule, such private histories are only interesting to a small circle of readers—namely, that of the writer's personal friends—as so many details fail to be amusing, except to those who know and perceive the man himself, with his tricks of gesture, voice, or manner appearing in all he says and does; thus giving to the otherwise often pointless description the life required, but which development of interest fails, of course, to penetrate to the general reader. In the first volume of the autobiography at present under our notice there is much that lacks interest, and falls short of true humour. A steadily-written book, worked fully up to the writer's ability, but not striving after a wit beyond his grasp, which wit unless it comes naturally and easily is painful, is an infinitely more pleasing book to read, even although it be not amusing, than the one in which you feel the struggle to be humorous, peeping perpetually through the "looped and windowed raggedness" of the narrative. When, however, Thomas Allen is well started in the later story of his life he writes in a less strained manner, and hence becomes not only infinitely more readable and interesting, but the narrative is more connected; he improves in style, and arouses the flagging attention of the reader, which he retains to the end of the account of his not uneventful career. Thomas Allen's heroine, whom he meets early in life, continues to be his ideal to the close of the third volume; and hers is a character which exercises, almost unknown to itself, an immense influence for good on those who come within reach of its power. Such a character as Helen Chobham's, though formalised by the method of description adopted in the present book, always forcibly reminds us that

No life
Can be pure in its purpose, and strong in its strife,
And all life not be purer and stronger thereby.

The easily duped father, developing into a senile and crotchety old man; the thoroughly clever rascal, White; and the unfortunate Mrs. Vish are types of human nature which our author has seized and treated in a fairly happy manner. Thomas Allen does not place much faith in Mrs. Vish's marvellous relation of her past life, a sentiment we fully endorse; nor is it probable that she would impose on many, but would deservedly be classed in the category of those who "mentend toujours mais ne trompent jamais."

Internal evidence, orthographical and other, leads to the conclusion that the volume entitled James T. Fields (Sampson Low and Co.), containing "biographical notes and personal sketches," is an importation from the other side of the Atlantic. It is not a continuous narrative, but a desultory, fragmentary work, with scraps of correspondence and portions of a diary, intermingled with a sort of running commentary; and it is, therefore, a little bewildering, though it is decidedly interesting. Mr. Fields was what is called a "literary publisher," whose name is probably better known in connection with trade than with authorship, though the names of both Ticknor and Fields hold an honourable place on the list of authors. At any rate, Mr. Fields, both as an author and a publisher, was brought into intimate relations with many distinguished personages, of whom it is very pleasant to read such reminiscences as he preserved, or as his widow, on his information, has preserved; for it is anything but easy to make out by whom and from what sources the various portions of the memoir have been put together. The memoir, however, gives the reader to understand, almost beyond a doubt, that Mr. Fields died on April 24, 1881; and that he died very greatly respected and lamented is manifest from the many testimonials it has been thought proper to print towards the end of the volume. Mr. Fields, it appears, was born in 1816, at Portsmouth, new Hampshire; at the age of fourteen he went into business, as a bookseller's assistant and clerk, at Boston, United States; became a student and collector, as well as a seller of books; improved in mind and body; prospered in trade, married more than once, paid pleasant visits to Europe, where he formed acquaintances with more or less celebrated men and women, literary, artistic, and domestic; read, wrote, lectured, and ultimately departed this life with the character, apparently, of a good man of business, a good friend, a good writer, a good lecturer, a good editor, a worker who helped himself and at the same time was delighted to help others. Readers may be unable to find anything very striking in his career; but to read an account of it will provide them with some agreeable entertainment.

Messrs. C. H. May and Co. have issued their "Press Manual" for 1882, this being the fifth year of publication.

The edition of Mr. Joseph Foster's "Peerage and Baronetage" for the present year (published by Nichols and Sons) makes its appearance in two volumes instead of in the single volume of the original publication. This is effected by separating the "Peerage" from the "Baronetage and Knighthood," so that each volume is complete in itself.

A revised edition of "Beeton's Dictionary of Universal Information," under the careful editorship of Mr. George R. Emerson, has been issued by Messrs. Ward, Lock, and Co. This dictionary contains a vast amount of geographical, biographical, and historical information. Particulars are added for the first time of distinguished living celebrities. The whole of the matter is classified with a view to ready reference, and the maps show the most recent "rectifications of territory."

SKETCHES IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS: QUESTION TIME.

THE REPORTERS' GALLERY.

THE REPORTERS' ROOM.

A HISTORY OF GREEK SCULPTURE.

It will be remembered that the Committee of Council on Education some months ago resolved to make a beginning in the establishment of a Gallery of Casts of Ancient Sculpture at South Kensington. Mr. Walter Copland Perry, the original promoter and constant advocate of this undertaking, has been employed during the winter on a mission to the principal Galleries of Art maintained by the Governments of France, Germany, and Italy, with a view to procuring casts of the specimens that should find place in our proposed collection. The result, we cannot doubt, will be such as to justify the step taken by her Majesty's Government, though no report has yet been made public, and it is not yet known what will be the first fruits of Mr. W. C. Perry's errand upon official account. He has, in the meantime, produced an independent work of high value relating to this important subject of art-study, in which ample proof will be found that no person could be more thoroughly accomplished and entirely competent to the business intrusted to his care. A Popular Introduction to the History of Greek and Roman Sculpture, in one handsome volume, published by Messrs. Longmans and Co., will be accepted with greater readiness at this time, when the arrangements just noticed promise to invite renewed attention to the noblest remains of ancient art. It is the only complete English treatise upon the subject; for that of which Mr. A. S. Murray has produced only the first volume does not yet arrive at the age of Phidias, though its archaeological study of earlier periods is of high merit. Mr. W. C. Perry, for his part, has steadfastly pursued to the end his chosen task of reviewing, in strictly historical order, all the Greek artists and all the works of Greek art known to have existed in the ages of classical antiquity, down to the Roman Empire under the Antonines. He refrains from noticing the art of other ancient nations, an inquiry of great ethnological and mythological as well as technical interest, which Mr. Murray has taken in hand. The present work is all the more likely to suit its direct purpose of giving precisely that knowledge, and no other, which is required by ordinary educated persons to estimate and to enjoy a collection illustrative of all the extant samples of Greek sculpture. We cannot perceive that it would be possible to improve, with this special purpose in view, upon the plan and method adopted by Mr. Perry; while the accuracy of research, and the critical discernment, with which he has treated a vast and rather complicated theme, may be left to the judgment of professed scholars and connoisseurs. His own previous reputation among both English and German men of learning is a sufficient warrant of implicit confidence in his statements of detail; and his superior taste in art, though none can be infallible, ought to have been assured by his recent mission. The book that he has written is at any rate distinguished by some literary qualities which are the least pretentious, but the most useful and agreeable to readers who want to learn something by what they read. Its multitude of small facts, biographical or historical, descriptive and incidental, are marshalled in strict order, following the course of time in successive epochs, or the line of precedence among masters of different local schools, with the unflinching exactness of a scientific text-book. There is no digression from this progressive order, beginning in Chapter V., after forty pages of short preliminary essays. These briefly descend upon the principles of art in general, and those of Greek art; upon the Greek religion and mythology; upon the reputed works of Dædalus, the pre-Homeric remains at Mycenæ, and the Niobe of Mount Sipylus; upon the Homeric cycle of fables, and the testimony of Homer's poems to the existence of plastic art, chiefly that of Western Asia. The author's main work, substantially consisting of his critical survey of the whole series of known classic sculpture, from the seventh century B.C. to the second century after Christ, is completed in little more than 600 pages. Its coherent compactness of matter and terseness of style keep the reader's attention fixed upon this grand array of particulars, the individual position and characteristics of a great number of artists, their relations to one another, and the qualities of their respective productions. We shall not here attempt to enumerate them; only five or six in a hundred have gained an immortal renown, and their names, and some pieces of their glorious works, are familiar to all cultivated minds in every modern civilised nation. It will suffice to mention, for an example of his arrangement, some divisions of Mr. W. C. Perry's book, which abounds in minute descriptions, and is illustrated by nearly three hundred wood-engravings. He passes in review, through nine centuries of classical antiquity, first, the incipient striving formative art of a dim archaic time, the early schools of Ægina, Sicyon, and Argos, and the Athenian and Æginetan works of the fifth century B.C.; he observes at the next epoch the emancipation of art from some conventional restraint imposed by religious veneration; then, its admission to the finest nude study of nature in the athletic exercises of the public festivals, the Olympian and other national assemblies; he proceeds to the golden age of Pericles and Phidias, and displays a constellation of great masters, renewed in succeeding generations, shining in the heaven of artistic excellence. A special description of all the sculptures of the Parthenon, some part of which we have in the "Elgin Marbles," occupies four most interesting chapters, and the architectural features of that sublime temple are carefully described. The other temples at Athens which were notably adorned with sculpture obtain their due proportion of notice. The great one of Zeus at Olympia, where excavations paid for by Germany have discovered relics of much historical value, and which Mr. Perry has personally visited, has its separate chapter. From the culminating point, which he emphatically designates, in the progress of Greek art, his readers will continue to find pleasure, with instruction, in his thoughtful account of its gradual decline, yet dwelling on the beautiful works of Praxiteles, and a host of later artists, with a refined appreciation of their grace and truth to nature. The social and moral influences of such historical events as the Peloponnesian war, and the political confusion and degeneracy of Athens, with the forfeiture of her liberties, the Macedonian conquest, and, finally, the servitude of Greece to Imperial Rome, are traced in their effects upon the character of latter-day Greek art. It is worth while to peruse again these later chapters of the book; not for the mere sake of art in its technical and aesthetic merits, but for an example of the far higher moral truth that the noble faculties of ideal conception and poetic expression can never flourish save in the atmosphere of public spirit and freedom. Mr. Perry, it is evident, has in his mind a great deal of this kind of sentiment. It finds utterance in occasional reflections, but he does not let it run away with him from the execution of his particular task. In this he has rendered service of permanent utility to the professional as well as the "popular" study of Grecian and Greco-Roman sculpture. His book is dedicated to her Imperial Highness the English Crown Princess of Germany, herself an artist and an intelligent patroness both of art and of learning. The convenience of the volume is improved by a very complete and definite index, filling thirty-five pages, which will enable the reader instantly to find the place of every statement in the entire work.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

T.R.D. (Ryde).—We are obliged for your courteous letter, the contents of which are noted. In Problem No. 1981 Black appears to us to have a good reply to 1. B to R 3rd in 1. R to K 4th.

EMERIE (Berkhamstead).—It is a far cry to Siberia, else we should endeavour to get an answer to your question from the author of No. 1979. The Pawn does not interfere with the solution, so we let it pass.

HON. SEC. ST. GEORGE'S CLUB.—We have pleasure in publishing the information conveyed in your note.

ALPHA.—A "plain cook." See the correction below.

N.L.G. (Victoria).—We are obliged for the trouble you have taken, but the device is not new and is absurd. No player would be permitted to violate a fundamental law of the game by promoting his Pawn to a piece of the adversary's colour.

Dr F. St. (Blandford-square).—Thanks for the problem. The solution is acknowledged this week.

E.N.F. (St John's-wood).—Your problem is sound as a bell. Thanks.

A.F. (Birmingham).—You have not hit upon the key move to Miss Beechey's problem.

J.W. (Liverpool).—Your question was answered last week.

J.M. (Edinburgh).—The problem is too simple in construction. As a general rule, three checks are too many in a three-move position.

ZERO (Woolwich).—A highly interesting analysis of our column. We shall endeavour to find space for some of the most interesting points.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEMS Nos. 1968, 1976, and 1977, received from Rev John Willis (Portland, U.S.A.), and of 1977 from Va (U.S.).

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1979 received from J. Arnold Green, Norman Rumble, Smutich, C. B. Wood, Bosworth, T. R. Dyer, John Perkins, Emmer, J. Buntford, Plevna, John Balfour, Gyp, Dr F. St., R. H. Brooks, E. L. G., W. J. Eggleston, H. V. G., and H. A. L. S.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1980 received from J. Arnold Green, Blair Hamilton, Cochran, C. B. Wood, T. R. Dyer, John Perkins, John Balfour, A. R. Street, H. V. G., and Smutich.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF PROBLEM No. 1981 received from H. B. W. H. Gwynn, J. Arnold Green, J. W. W. C. Warburton, Norman Rumble, Cryptotype, James Dolson, A. N. S. Donald Mackay (aged 15), Bosworth, E. Lenden, J. Buntford, Plevna, J. D. S. (Forest-hill), G. Seymour, S. Lowndes, H. Reeve, L. Sharwood, Ernest Sharwood, N. S. Harris, D. W. Kell, Ben Nevis, M. O. Halloran, Otto Fulder (Ghent), H. Lucas, Harry Springthorpe, A. Wignmore, E. Casella (Paris), Jupiter Junior, Aaron Harper, A. W. Scrutton, L. Wyman, G. W. Law, S. Bullen, T. Greenbank, A. M. Porter, L. Greenwood, Vanderhaeghen (Brussels), S. P. C. K., C. M. Forster, R. H. Brooks, A. Chapman, Walter G. Buck, C. B. Carlson, Carlisle W. Wood, H. V. G., Blair Hamilton, Cochran, John Balfour, W. C. Ferrand, Smutich, R. L. Southwell, Dr F. St., E. N. Frankenstein, J. R. Blyth, Alpha, C. Holstein, Gyp, H. A. L. S., C. S. Wood, Sudbury (Suffolk), Cant, George Shiel, Norman Rumble, and E. L. G. Note.—The author of this problem requests us to state that a White Pawn should be placed at White's Q B 5th square.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF MISS BEECHEY'S PRIZE PROBLEM received from Norman Rumble, John Perkins, E. Lenden, Plevna, E. L. G., Smutich, Otto Fulder (Ghent), A. Wignmore, Jupiter Junior, L. Wyman, S. Bullen, T. Greenbank, L. L. Greenwood, and Henry Wilson.

CORRECT SOLUTIONS OF MR. BODEN'S PROBLEM received from B. Steinway, M. O. Halloran, Otto Fulder (Ghent), E. Casella (Paris), Jupiter Junior, Aaron Harper, A. W. Scrutton, L. Wyman, S. Bullen, A. M. Porter, T. R. Dyer, and E. J. Winter Wood.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1980.

WHITE.
1. K to Kt sq.
2. Kt to B 3rd (ch)
3. Q or P mates accordingly.

* If Black plays 1. Kt to Q sq., White continues as in the main variation; if anything else, then 2. Q to R sq. (ch), and 3. Q mates.

PROBLEM No. 1983.
By FRIDERSWIDE F. BEECHY.
BLACK.

WHITE.
White to play, and mate in two moves.

Played recently at the Divan in the Strand, between Mr. GOSWIP and MASTER ROBERTS, of Dublin. The notes appended to the moves have been contributed by Mr. Goswip.

(King's Bishop's Gambit.)

WHITE (Mr. G.)	BLACK (Master R.)	WHITE (Mr. G.)	BLACK (Master R.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	Q P would have given him a very superior game.
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. B to B 4th	P to Q 4th	20. P takes P	Kt takes P (ch)
4. B takes P	P to R 5th (ch)	21. K to Kt sq	Kt to K 6th
5. K to B sq	P to Q B 3rd	22. B takes Kt	P takes B
6. B to Kt 3rd	B to K Kt 5th	23. Q takes K P	Kt to Q 2nd
7. Kt to K B 3rd	Q to R 4th	24. R to Q 3rd	P to K B 4th
8. P to Q 4th	P to Kt 4th	25. Q to R sq	R to Kt sq
9. P to K R 3rd
A weak move, involving loss of time at a critical point of the game.		26. Q R to Q 2nd	R to Kt 2nd
9. Q to Q 3rd	Kt to Q 2nd	27. Q takes Q R P	Q to R 3rd
10. Q to Kt sq	Castles (Q R)	28. Q to K 3rd
11. K to Kt sq	B takes Kt
12. Q takes B	Q to Kt 3rd	29. Q to R 4th (ch)	Kt to Kt sq
13. Kt to B 3rd	B to Kt 2nd	30. P to Q 7th (ch)	R takes Q P
14. P to K 5th	Kt to K R 3rd	31. K to B sq (a)	Q to R 5th (ch)
15. Kt to K 4th	Kt to Q Kt 3rd	32. K to B 2nd	Q to Kt 5th (ch), Ac.
16. Kt to Q 6th (ch)	R takes Kt	33. K to B 2nd	B to Kt 6th (ch)
Well played.		34. K to B 2nd	Q takes P (ch), Ac.
17. P takes R	B takes P (ch)	29. Q to R 3rd	B to Q 5th (ch)
18. K to R 2nd	B to K 4th	30. K to B sq.
19. R to Q sq	P to Kt 5th

Here Black missed his opportunity. Instead of the move in the text, B. R. takes Kt, and Black resigned.

We have a better specimen of Master Roberts's play than the foregoing, which we purpose publishing next week.

A handicap tournament is being organised at Mephisto's Chess-rooms, 48A, Regent-circus, the entries to be limited to twenty-four. Four prizes will be offered for competition, of the aggregate value of ten guineas. Mephisto must be reckoned among the best chessplayers of our time. He is a most genial personage, on the surface, at all events; and he should be interviewed by such of our country cousins as are bent upon visiting the most curious sights of London.

Under the auspices of the St. George's Chess Club, a complimentary dinner will be given to Mr. Blackburne on March 2 next, in celebration of his success at Berlin last year. The Earl of Dartrey, K.P., will preside on the occasion. The committee of the St. George's Club have wisely determined to invite chessplayers not belonging to their association to join in the compliment to the Champion English Chessplayer, and have arranged that tickets for the festival, at one guinea each (including wines), can be obtained upon application to the manager of the Criterion restaurant, where the banquet will be served.

On the 6th inst. Mr. James Mason, the celebrated American player, encountered twenty members of the City Chess Club, simultaneously, over the chess-board. Mr. Mason won 15, drew 3, and lost only 2 games. The return match between the fourth class of this club and the Oxford University Chess Club is fixed for to-day (Saturday), at Oxford. It is expected that twelve players on each side will take part in the contest.

We have received a copy of "Chess Practice," by Mr. H. E. Bird, and shall take an early opportunity of referring to its contents.

OLD CATHEDRAL CUSTOMS.

Apart from the curious traditions and historical lore that have in the course of past centuries clustered round our cathedrals, we find, too, associated with them numerous old customs which must always be a subject of popular interest from their connection in bygone years with these time-honoured institutions. Although, however, very many of our old cathedral customs have long ago fallen into disuse and become forgotten, yet a few still remain, but which will probably, also, be sooner or later discontinued. Referring to some of those which have ceased to exist, may be mentioned certain curious observances once kept up in honour of the festivals. Thus we are told how, in the days of Old St. Paul's, it was customary on special Saints' days for the Choristers of the Cathedral to ascend the spire, and there to chant solemn prayers and anthems; the last performance of this custom having been in the reign of Queen Mary, when, says Fuller, "After evensong, the Quire of Paul's began to go about the steeple singing with lightes, after the old custom." But one of the strangest of the old ceremonies in which the clergy of St. Paul's Cathedral figured was performed twice a year—viz., on the day of the Conversion, and on that of the Commemoration of St. Paul. On the former of these festivals a fat buck, and on the latter a doe, was presented to the church by the family of Baud, in consideration of certain lands which they held of the Dean and Chapter. The buck on being brought to the steps of the altar, was received with great formality by the Dean and Chapter, appraised in their sacerdotal vestments, with chaplets of flowers on their heads, who at once sent the body to be baked, whilst the antlers of the buck were carried on a pike in procession round the sacred edifice. With this custom, which was continued till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, may be compared one at York, where on Lammas Day the tenants of the Chapter brought up a lamb to the high altar; and also another, at Durham, where an offering of a stag was at one time annually made on St. Cuthbert's Day, in September, by the Nevilles for the manor of Raby. "The stag," says Ormsby, in his "Sketches of Durham" (1846, p. 77), "was an oblation by the Nevilles of great antiquity, and appears to have been brought into the church, and presented with winding of horns."

Again, at Ripon, so late as the year 1790, we read how, on the Sunday before Candlemas Day, the collegiate church was "one continued blaze of light all the afternoon by an immense number of candles;" and in 1628 we find a Bishop of Durham climbing ladders to light up his cathedral with two hundred and twenty candles and sixteen torches. Formerly, on Shrove Tuesday, the doors of York Minster were thrown open all day, when the apprentices and journeymen streamed in to ring the Pancake bell. Passing on to Eastertide, it appears that, in days gone by at York, on Maundy Thursday, after vespers, the primate, dean, and canons, barefooted, washed the feet of the poor, whilst the anthem was sung and gospel was read. On Holy Saturday, says the late Mr. Mackenzie Walcott in his "Traditions and Customs of Cathedrals" (1872, p. 186), at a pillar on the south side of the nave of Salisbury the new or Easter fire was kindled with a flint or crystal, after the procession had sung 'The Lord is my Light.' As, too, is well known, the people in every diocese were once upon a time required to visit the cathedral at Whitsuntide, to pay their Whitsun farthing—an offering which continued to be levied, as at Worcester, in 1825. We may mention here the celebrated Miracle Plays, which in former years held such a prominent place in the religious observances of the year. Thus, by way of illustration, Mr. Mackenzie Walcott tells us how at Lichfield, in the twelfth century, "the Miracle Plays were represented: the Shepherds on Christmas Eve, the Resurrection at the dawn of Easter, the Miracles on Easter night and the next morning, and the Disciples going to Emmaus on Easter Monday; and at York, the Three Kings at Epiphany, the Apparition of the Star on Christmas Eve, and the Salutation of the Shepherds at Bethlehem."

At Durham, on May 29, the choir have been in the habit of ascending the large tower of the cathedral and singing anthems from the three sides of it. This ceremony is said to be observed in remembrance of the monks chanting masses from it in behalf of Queen Philippa when engaged in the sanguinary battle of Redbills with the Scotch King, David I., 1346. The reason assigned why the anthems are only sung from three sides of the tower, not from the fourth, is that a chorister once overbalanced himself, and, falling from it, was killed. A curious custom, also, known as "Push Penny," was once kept up by the Dean and Chapter of Durham on three days in the year—the anniversary of King Charles's death, Royal Oak Day, and Gunpowder Plot. On these days the Chapter caused twenty shillings in pence to be scrambled for in the College-yard by the young people, who never failed to be present. Amongst other similar customs, it seems that on St. Catherine's Day it was once the practice for the Dean and Chapter of Worcester to distribute to the inhabitants of the college precincts a "Cattren bowl" of rich spiced wine. We must not omit to mention, too, the famous "Boy Bishop" who was chosen on St. Nicholas Day (Dec. 6) from the cathedral choir as a mock bishop. For three weeks the boy possessed episcopal honour, the rest of the choir being his prebends. If he happened to die in the time of his prelate he was buried in pontificalibus. Some, too, of the old customs celebrated at Christmas are curious. Thus, at Ripon, the singing boys came into the church with large baskets full of red apples, with a sprig of rosemary stuck in each, which they presented to all the congregation. Stukeley relates how, at York, on Christmas Eve, they carried mistletoe to the high altar of the Cathedral, and proclaimed a public and "universal liberty to all sorts of inferior and even wicked persons at the gates of the city."

Space will not permit us to do more than briefly allude to a few of the old Cathedral customs, such as the "Spur money," which was a fine for entering the choir with spurs on, and is alluded to by Malcolm, who, writing in 1803, speaks of the practice as lingering on in some country Cathedrals. At Durham, the "Dog-Whipper" is a statutory servant, an office which originated in dogs having run into the choir and disturbed the worshippers. In the parish Register of St. Mary-le-Bow, Durham, we find the following entry:—"Brian Pearson, the abbey dog-whipper, buried, April 6, 1722." Over the great north door of Durham, too, it may be remembered, was a chamber for two men, who were always ready to receive any persons who might claim asylum. Whenever the Mayor of Bristol visits the cathedral in state, the long-established custom of strewing the choir with fragrant herbs is still, we are informed, kept up. At Canterbury, it is worthy of note that in seasons of danger bandogs were let loose to guard the shrine. And Worcester, in the year 1666, was provided with an hour-glass. In days of old the Dean of York, at his installation, was invested with a gold ring, and was required to feed ten persons daily. We may conclude by noticing a superstition still current at Peterborough that, if the cathedral bell and the clock of the parish church strike simultaneously there will be a death before very long in the minster-yard.

THE LAW OF CHARITABLE BEQUESTS.

In most countries the power of willing property is limited by law, and testators are not allowed to disinherit their wives and children. The only practical restriction upon an Englishman in making his will is, that he cannot leave anything in the nature of freehold or leasehold property, or any personal estate to be laid out in the purchase of land, for the benefit of any charity. Except where so directed to be laid out, a man may bequeath his whole pure personal estate to charities, despite the claims of his next of kin.

We have to go back to an Act of Parliament passed in the reign of Queen Elizabeth for a list of the purposes which are considered by the law to be charitable. It is tolerably comprehensive: the relief of aged, impotent, and poor people; the maintenance of sick and maimed soldiers and mariners; schools of learning, free schools and scholars in universities; the repair of bridges, ports, havens, causeways, churches, sea banks, and highways; the education and preferment of orphans; the relief, stock, or maintenance for Houses of Correction; the marriages of poor maids; the supportation, aid, and help of young tradesmen, handicraftsmen, and persons decayed; the relief or redemption of prisoners or captives; and the aid or ease of any poor inhabitants concerning payment of fifteens, setting out of soldiers, and other taxes. Charity now is not confined to the objects comprised in this enumeration, but it is held to extend to all cases within the spirit and intendment of the statute.

The validity of a good many legacies often turns upon the question as to whether the object of the bequest is a charitable one; as, if it is not, it can take personality savouring of realty, or even land itself. In reading some of the cases which have been contested on this point, it looks as though the next of kin or residuary legatees, by their counsel, must have argued them something like this:—The testator was a charitable man, the object of his bounty was a charitable one within the meaning of the statute, but the legacy not being of pure personality, it was void under the Mortmain Act; and that the counsel on the other side must have strenuously contended that the testator was not so charitably disposed as it was tried to be made out, that it was only pride or self-glorification on his part, and therefore the legacy was good. On the one side the relatives laud their testator in order to defeat his charitable intention, while on the other they sneer at his charity in order to get his money. We find from these contested cases that among the objects held to be charitable are the following:—Gifts for the erection of waterworks for the use of the inhabitants or for the general improvement of a town; to be applied for the "good" of a place; to the Royal, Geographical, and Humane Societies; for the benefit of the British Museum; for the widows and orphans of poor inhabitants; to churchwardens in aid of a parish poor rate; for the establishment of a life-boat or a botanical garden; for the widows and children of seamen belonging to a particular port; for preaching a sermon, keeping the chimes of the church in repair, playing certain psalms, paying the church singers, and building an organ gallery in a church; for endowing or erecting a hospital; for deserving literary men who have been unsuccessful; to found prizes for essays; for the benefit of ministers of any denomination of Christians; for letting out land to the poor at a low rent; for the increase and encouragement of good servants; for the benefit, advancement, and propagation of learning in every part of the world; for establishing and upholding an institution for the investigation and cure of diseases of quadrupeds and birds useful to man, and for maintaining lectures thereon; in aid of the public revenue of the state; and gifts for any purpose, either of a public or of a religious nature. But gifts for the erection or repair of a monument to perpetuate the memory of the donor, to found a private museum, in aid of a subscription library, or of a friendly society, to one of the chartered companies of the City of London to increase their stock of corn which they were compelled to keep up for the London markets, for certain specified poor families, and to a convent of nuns whose sole object was the sanctifying of their own souls and not performing any external duty of a charitable nature, have been held not to be charitable. It is evident from these examples that to constitute a charity the poor need not be, though they commonly are, its sole or especial objects. The law also draws a distinction between benevolence and charity, and it has decided that "benevolent purposes," to which some funds were to be applied, were not within the Act, as the trustees might apply them to purposes other than charitable.

Pure personality is the only property that may by law be bequeathed for charitable uses, and testators are not permitted to leave anything in the nature of a lien on land for these purposes. The courts have frequently been called upon to decide what is pure personality. In one of the old cases the privilege by a grant from the Crown of laying chains in the river Thames for mooring ships, was settled to be impure personality. Leaseholds, premiums for a lease, money secured on mortgage, growing crops, and the purchase money for real estate contracted or directed to be sold, cannot be given by will to charities. Formerly Metropolitan Board of Works stock, mortgages granted by Canal, Harbour, Dock, and Railway Companies, commonly known as debentures, were held to come within this restriction; but latterly the Courts have relaxed their views, and now such stock and the shares and debenture stock of any trading company holding real estate for the purpose of carrying on its business may be bequeathed for charitable purposes.

It is related that William the Conqueror, demanding the cause why he conquered the realm by one battle, which the Danes could not do by many, Frederick, Abbot of St. Alban's, answered, that the reason was because the land, which was the maintenance of martial men, was given and converted to pious employments, and for the maintenance of holy votaries; to which the Conqueror replied, that if the clergy were so strong that the realm was enfeebled of men for war, and subject by it to foreign invasion, he would aid it. Therefore he took away many of the revenues of the Abbot, and of others also. Land in the possession of a charity was said to be in "mortmain," or a "dead hand," as it was in the hand of an owner who never died, and who would not or could not sell. As the quantity so held was already very considerable and was constantly being increased, as recited in the Act, "by languishing or dying persons," it was deemed sound policy to prevent as much as possible any more land being thus tied up in perpetuity, and in 1736 the Act known as the Mortmain Act was passed "to restrain the disposition of land, whereby the same became inalienable." This Act has been construed to invalidate legacies bequeathed to establish or found schools, hospitals, or slaughter-houses, because they could not be carried out without the purchase of land. Legacies to be applied in paying off a mortgage debt on a meeting-house and on any land already in mortmain have also been held to be invalid. But bequests to support a school; to endow churches or chapels; for the erection of buildings, or the redemption of the land tax on land already devoted to charitable purposes; for the repair or improvement of buildings already in existence and appropriated to charity; and to build a school-house or other building for charitable purposes, "when and so soon as land shall at any time be given for that purpose," have been held valid legacies.

The Mortmain Act recognised, however, the principle that some exceptions should be made by excluding from its operation the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge with their various colleges, and the colleges of Eton, Winchester, and Westminster. In several Acts that have since been passed various public institutions have been specially authorised to take land and money to be laid out in its purchase; or, what in effect is the same thing, the Mortmain Act has been repealed in their favour, but in most cases to a limited extent only. Among the institutions so favoured we find Queen Anne's Bounty, the British Museum, the Bath Infirmary; Greenwich, the Foundling, Westminster, Middlesex, and St. George's Hospitals; the Royal Naval Asylum, the Seamen's Hospital Society, and the Established Church. By the Public Parks, Schools, and Museums Act, 1871, gifts may now be made, by will executed twelve calendar months before death, of land or personal estate to be laid out in its purchase; limited to twenty acres for a park, two for a museum, and one for a school.

C. G. O.

ART BOOKS.

Students of Raphael and all interested in the apogee of Italian art, who may happen to be not quite familiar with French, will be glad to hear that a translation of M. Eugène Muntz's work—Raphael: his Life, Works, and Times, has been published by Chapman and Hall. This is the last and the best biography of the great master. It is satisfactory from various points of view—for research, for judicious arrangement and sifting of the facts, and for critical acumen. M. Muntz has long been known as one of the best art-critics of France; and he has enjoyed exceptional advantages for the prosecution of this particular task as the librarian to the Ecole Nationale des Beaux Arts. The great work of Passavant had already needed correction in many important points, owing to the recent researches of Italian, German, and other critics, including M. Muntz himself, into the documentary records of Italian art, and to the great advance of our critical knowledge of Italian art. We need not dwell, however, on the general merit of M. Muntz's more trustworthy substitute, so well known are they. Yet a few words on what he says touching the "Donna Velata," may be of interest at the moment, seeing that Professor Colvin in last month's Art Journal, in a paper entitled "The Veiled Lady of Raphael," has brought the claims set up for the picture by several Continental critics before the English public. Mr. Colvin presents fairly, and without dogmatism, the evidence for the belief which he himself shares, that the "Donna Velata" of the Pitti Palace is a portrait by Raphael of the mysterious female that he loved through the later years of his life at Rome, and provided for at death; from regard for whom he evaded advantageous chances of marriage proposed to him by his family and friends; and who long after was known as the "Fornarina." For this title, "the Fornarina," there is, however, no authority earlier than the eighteenth century, and it was doubtless an invention. The famous so-called "Fornarina" of the tribune of the Uffizi, formerly ascribed to Raphael, is now recognised as unquestionably the work of Sebastian del Piombo, to whom likewise is now given that other "Fornarina" (representing hardly the same person) which we noticed the other day in our review of the Old Masters at Burlington House. But the "Fornarina" of the Barberini Palace is of a distinctly different type, and may be—nay, apparently is—the same person as that represented in the "Donna Velata." The authorities who believe that this last may, at least so far as the head and other flesh parts are concerned, be from the hand of Raphael are Passavant, Münder, Springer, Dr. Ruland, and others. Among those of an opposite opinion are Burckhardt, in the "Cicerone," and his editor Bode, Mons. F. A. Gruyer, and, lastly, the biographer under notice, M. Muntz, who says that the treatment of the portrait shows certain defects which it is difficult to associate with Raphael; and then quotes the conclusion of Burckhardt and Bode, that the "Donna Velata" is a production of the Bolognese school, inspired probably by some original work of Raphael's. We think, however, that the problem cannot be dismissed so curtly. Mr. Colvin advances cogent reasons for deciding that the portrait can neither be a work of the Bolognese school, nor painted, as it seems to be, directly and emphatically from life without idealization, and without addition of saintly emblems—a copy from an original by Raphael. M. Muntz admits that the features of the young woman rendered in the "Donna Velata" bear a certain resemblance to the "Madonna di San Sisto" on the one hand; and to the Barberini Fornarina on the other. The resemblance to both, but especially to the Sistine Madonna, is certainly a strong one. Mr. Colvin points out that the whole design is virtually identical with that of a picture ascribed to Raphael in the collection of the famous Earl of Arundel that is now lost (unless it be the same as an exactly corresponding picture which Passavant heard of as in the collection of the Marchese Letizia at Naples), but that was engraved by Hollar in reverse. The emblems of St. Catherine were, however, added to this picture; but the palm is placed in the hand in a way that can hardly be credited to Raphael. It was probably, therefore, a copy—an inference rendered probable by the fact that Raphael's portrait of Joan of Aragon was in like manner copied by pupils, with the addition of saintly attributes. All, however, that can be inferred from Hollar's print is that early in the seventeenth century the design of the "Donna Velata," exclusive of the adventitious accessories, was traditionally regarded as Raphael's. But the question as to whether the mistress of Raphael, whose portrait Vasari twice states that he painted (though it is not clear that he meant to say, as Mr. Colvin supposes, that he painted two portraits of her); and whose name, according to an annotator of Vasari in the second half of the sixteenth century, was Margarita, is represented in the Barberini "Fornarina" or the "Donna Velata," is so interesting that we hope the latter picture will be placed where it may be examined more closely by connoisseurs than is possible in its present rather high position in the Pitti, and where the writer saw it five years back. We have only to add that M. Muntz's work is edited carefully (with some few exceptions) by Mr. W. Armstrong, whose memoir of "Alfred Stevens" we lately reviewed; but that the numerous illustrations are often hardly worthy of the text. The original wood engravings also suffer from the blackness of the photographic process employed for their reproduction.

The Art of Decoration, by Mrs. H. R. Haweis (Chatto and Windus), a portly small octavo of over 400 pages, is one of the most provoking books that we have read for some time. The style is smart to flippancy, and "quite too" execrably clever; the treatment is fragmentary, the tone self-assertive; and, while railing at dogmatism in others, the authoress is dogmatic herself, not a little. She contemns the best-known authorities in turn, and seems to regard herself as the final arbitress of taste and the originator of many things which have marked the recent progress of decorative art. With the energy of a Cassandra she denounces wholly or partially the successive styles—Greek, Roman, "Renaissance," Louis XIV., XV., and XVI., Empire, and so-called Queen Anne—or at least the slightest modification, or, if you will, corruption of these styles; forgetting that in such eclectic adoption of some of their elements as she recommends modifications are inevitable. Exception is, however, made in favour of Egyptian ornament and English fourteenth-century Gothic, or very early Renaissance. She would, for instance, have a cottage piano-case constructed somewhat like a Gothic architectural shrine, with Oriental jars occupying the niches instead of saints! Nor do pictures and the painters thereof, however eminent, escape the lash of this severe censor. Yet, after demolishing so much that we might have hoped would have guided us, the process of re-edification seems, in some respects, as unsatisfactory as it is laborious. With regard to many of the suggestions made we would say—well, let them be tried. The reader is further confused by self-contradictions, or what appear very like them, and misconceptions; while the learning displayed betrays every now and then a flaw. Yet, despite all this, the book is evidently the production of an earnest and sincere lover of decorative art; and it contains much sensible and serviceable advice upon a great variety of topics, many of them of immediate interest. A person of ardent temperament and strong conviction when arriving at a sound conclusion will often present that conclusion much more effectively than would one of calmer habit, and moderate, well-balanced mind. Mrs. Haweis's strictures, for example, on the pseudo "Early English," the "Queen Anne" fallacy, and the "Æsthetic craze," are as forcible as they are just. "Alas!" she says—and it is a fair sample of her treatment—"the new faith has assumed a livery quite as forced as the old one: quite as ugly it often threatens to be, with stiff patterns instead of flowing ones, morbid colours instead of gay ones, but equally ill-proportioned, vulgar, and machine-begotten, perhaps more depressing. The new art-furniture at its worst is a very ghastly parody on its name; and, without the wholesome discipline of enlightened discrimination, I fear that it has a future more dismal still than any previous fashion. . . . The cactus or azalea which clothes the hillsides of Turkey or Algiers with pink or scarlet flame, the rose garden in our own England, the golden common alight with furze in bloom, the apple orchard, and the buttercup field rebuke us for our folly. Colour and light and sunshine and shadow, all were made for our pleasure, and the dull lines [hues?] of decay, suitable in their place, ought not to be our main surroundings. Dirt may be valuable to depress some forced or unnatural effect; but dirt is not the only thing that is 'nice.' Colour is not in itself objectionable, but only our ignorant use of it."

Rural England, by L. G. Seguin (Strahan and Co., Limited), with illustrations engraved on wood from designs by many of our best artists, is one of the most enjoyable books, for all, or any, that we know of. Equally delightful is it to read, or to turn over the leaves merely to inspect the charming illustrations which embellish literally every one of its 280 pages; while it would be hard to find a more tasteful ornament for the drawing-room table. The copy of the work before us is one of an édition de luxe, printed on special hand-made paper, with proofs of the illustrations on Japanese paper, and bound in vellum, with coloured ornament, and toolings in gold of excellent design. This edition is limited to 300 copies for England and 300 for America. The author, Mr. Seguin, was already very favourably known by his "Picturesque Tour in Picturesque Lands," and other works calculated to train his eye and store his mind for the present more considerable and admirable performance, in which he takes us with him—to employ the words of the amplified title—in "loitering along the lanes, the common sides, and the meadow paths," and affords us "peeps into the halls, farms, and cottages." Little, indeed, that is characteristic of and endears us to "rural England" escapes his observation. Yet the work is not descriptive merely; it abounds in sensible reflection, and poetical, sentimental, romantic, and pathetic allusions or suggestions, though these are not obtruded, but flow naturally, and are confined within the limits of good taste. The very extensive series of illustrations attain a high average of merit; the sources whence, as already intimated, many are derived guarantee their excellence as designs. It strikes us, however, as a regrettable omission, that the names of the draughtsmen, or the painters of the original pictures or drawings, are not given, at least in the "List of Illustrations."

Two new volumes have appeared of the "Illustrated Biographies of the Great Artists" (Sampson Low, Marston, and Co.) since we last noticed the series to which they belong. One of these is the biography of Albrecht Dürer, by Richard Ford Heath, M.A., to whom we owe the life of Titian in the same series. This is a careful compendious compilation, the materials for which were drawn, as is duly acknowledged, from the excellent biographies of the master by Professor Thausing and Mrs. Heaton. The book is well written, and the facts are concisely stated; but the writer seems to be better acquainted with history, secular and religious, about the period of the Reformation than, judging by some of his technical remarks, with Art.

The other book contains the biographies of Mantegna and Francia, by Julia Cartwright. These are among the best written—the most to the purpose and least pretentious—of this very unequal series; and also the most original. They are, moreover, the most welcome; for no separate biographies of Mantegna or Francia had been published in this country. For the first, the authoress acknowledges her obligations to Dr. Waltham's life of the painter contributed to "Kunst und Künstler," to Mr. Armand Baschet, Canonico Willelmo Braghieroli, and Dr. Karl Brun; and for the second, to Malvasia, Calvi, and other Bolognese writers. But it is evident that she has also herself examined the examples of the masters mentioned, and written the descriptions of them on the spot. It is, perhaps, not easy to overrate the originality and power of Mantegna's genius, and his early works at Padua are very remarkable. Yet the authoress possibly forms too low an estimate of at least the artistic influences that (as in neighbouring Lombard towns) were at work in the "learned city," where Giotto's frescoes in the Arena Chapel had been executed; where the Umbrian, Gentile da Fabriano, and the Florentines, Donatello and Filippo Lippi, had worked; and where, above all, in the great church of the patron Saint Anthony, Jacopo d'Avanzo and Altichieri di Verona had left frescoes the very high merits of which have been in recent years recognised, we might almost say discovered, by Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselli; but which even now are not generally appreciated at their full value. Then, whatever the inferiority of Mantegna's master, Squarcione, as a painter, his promotion of the study of antique remains among his pupils was a very important influence; as also was Mantegna's early connection with the Venetian Bellini family. Some qualifications of other of the biographer's views might be proposed; but if not hypercritical, they would certainly be ungracious. Her critical estimates generally are as discriminating and sound as they are well stated; and we repeat that this book contains two of the most, if not the most, valuable biographies of the series.

THROAT DISEASES.—BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES, which have proved so successful in America for the cure of coughs, colds, hoarseness, bronchitis, asthma, catarrh, or any irritation or soreness of the throat, are now imported, and sold in this country at 1s. 1d. per Box. Put up in the form of a lozenge, it is the most convenient, pleasant, safe, and sure remedy for clearing and strengthening the voice in the world. Children will find them beneficial in cases of whooping-cough. No family should be without them. Some of the most eminent singers of the Royal Italian Opera, London, pronounce them the best article for hoarseness ever offered to the public. Hundreds of Testimonials from some of the most respectable sources may be seen at our office. The genuine has the words "Brown's Bronchial Troches" on the Government stamp around each box.

London Depot, 33, Farringdon-road; and of all Chemists.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Coughs.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Colds.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Hoarseness.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Bronchitis.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Asthma.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Catarrh.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Cure Soreness of the Throat.

CHLORODYNE.
DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S.
THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.
COUGHS, ASTHMA, COLDS, BRONCHITIS, &c.
DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.
Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR and the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. Page Wood stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. Collis Browne was undoubtedly the inventor of Chlorodyne; that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See the "Times," July 13, 1861.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages pain of every kind, affords a calm and refreshing sleep, without headache, and invigorates the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the GREAT SPECIFIC for CHOLERA, DYSENTERY, DIARRHÆA.

The General Board of Health, London, reports that it acts as a charm. One dose generally sufficient. Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of diarrhoea."

"From Symes and Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Medical Hall, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880."
"To J. T. Davenport Esq., 33, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, London."

"Dear Sir,—We embrace this opportunity of congratulating you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself, not only in Hindostan but all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported into the country, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne, in Diarrhoea and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhoea, and even in the more terrible forms of cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours,
"Members of the L'Inm. Soc. of Gt. Britain,
"His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of Epilepsy, Spasms, Pains, &c., and is the true palliative in Neuralgia, Gout, Cancer, Toothache, Rheumatism.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.
The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations. N.B.—Every bottle of genuine Chlorodyne bears on the Government stamp the name of the inventor,
DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE.

Sold in Bottles, 1s. 1d., 2s. 3d., 4s. 6d.—J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, Great Russell-street, W.C., Sole Manufacturer.

"I find Dr. LOCOCK'S PULMONIC WAFERS still rank as affording the speediest relief in Throat and Chest Affections."—W. H. TUNNICLIFFE, M.P.S., Tottenham, Bristol, Jan. 27, 1882.

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.
CURE COUGHS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.
Medical testimony states that no other medicine is so effectual in the cure of these dangerous maladies. One lozenge once gives ease. They contain no opium nor any violent drug. Sold by all Chemists, in Tins, 1s. 1d. and 2s. 3d.

HOOPING COUGH.
ROCHE'S HERBAL EMBROCATION.
The celebrated effectual cure without internal medicine. Sole wholesale agents, W. EDWARDS and SON, 157, Queen Victoria-street, formerly of 67, St. Paul's-church, London, whose names are engraved on the Government Stamp. Sold by most Chemists. Price 4s. per Bottle.

THROAT AFFECTIONS and HOARSENESS.—All suffering from Irritation of the Throat and Hoarseness will be agreeably surprised at the almost immediate relief afforded by the use of BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES. These famous "Lozenges" are sold by all respectable Chemists in this country, at 1s. 1d. per Box. People troubled with a "hacking cough," a "slight cold," or bronchial affections cannot try them too soon, as similar troubles, if allowed to progress, result in serious Pulmonary and Asthmatic affections.

COLDS CURED BY DR. DUNBAR'S ALKARAM, or Anti-Catarrh Smelling-Bottle.

ALKARAM. COLDS.
ALKARAM. COLDS.
ALKARAM. COLDS.

IF inhaled on the first symptoms, ALKARAM will at once arrest them, and cure severe cases in half an hour. Sold by all Chemists at 1s. 1d. per Bottle. Dr. Dunbar, care of Messrs. F. Newbery and Sons, 1, King Edward-st., E.C.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE.
PULVERMACH'S "GALVANISM," NATURE'S CHIEF RESTORER OF IMPAIRED VITAL ENERGY.

In this Pamphlet the most reliable proofs are given of the vast and wonderful curative powers of Pulvermacher's Patent Galvanic Chain-Hands, Belts, &c., in Rheumatic, Nervous, and Functional Disorders. Sent post-free for three stamps on application to
J. L. PULVERMACH'S GALVANIC ESTABLISHMENT, 194, Regent-street, London, W.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."
CLARKE'S WORLD-FAMED BLOOD MIXTURE is warranted to cleanse the Blood from all impurities, from whatever cause arising. For Scrofula, Scurvy, skin and Blood Diseases, its effects are marvellous. In Bottles, 2s. 6d. each, and in cases containing six times the quantity, 11s. 6d. each, of all Chemists. Sent to any address for 3d. or 12d. stamps of the Proprietor, the Lincoln and Midland Counties' Drug Company (late F. J. Clarke), Lincoln.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.
The Pills purify the blood, correct all disorders of the liver, stomach, kidneys, and bowels. The Ointment is unrivalled in the cure of bad legs, old wounds, gout, and rheumatism.

SAD, BUT TRUE.—The history of mankind convinces us that disasters are in reality stepping-stones for higher progress. To prevent disastrous diseases from poisoned blood use ENO'S FRUIT SALT. No one can have a purer or more efficient remedy. By its use the poison is thrown off, and the blood restored to its healthy condition by natural means. I used my FRUIT SALT freely in my last attack of fever, and I have every reason to say it saved my life. ENO'S FRUIT SALT FRUIT SALT WORKS, S.E. CAUTION.—Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed on by a worthless imitation.

Prices, 2s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. Sold by all Chemists.

PETER ROBINSON'S MOURNING WAREHOUSE, REGENT STREET, Nos. 226 to 232.

MOURNING ORDERS SENT AT ONCE UPON RECEIPT OF LETTER OR TELEGRAM.

A large Staff of very competent Dressmakers and ASSISTANTS are kept purposely to receive orders from all parts of the country—no matter the distance—(free of any extra charge whatever to the customer) with a full assortment of Made-up Goods of the most fashionable and suitable description.

FOR A FAMILY MOURNING, and also Mourning for Servants.

Orders, however large, can be completed at very short notice by Dressmakers of the greatest proficiency (either French, German, or English).

Address—PETER ROBINSON'S COURT and GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, 226 to 232, REGENT-STREET, LONDON.

One of the most important Houses of its kind in England. Established as a Mourning Warehouse thirty years.

COUTURIÈRES FRANÇAISES. Experienced and good fitting Dressmakers, Both French and English (charges moderate).

at PETER ROBINSON'S COURT and GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE, 226 to 232, Regent-street.

FASHIONABLE BLACK COSTUMES. Cashmere and Satin de Lyon, or Silk, combined, perfectly New Styles, made to Paris models, from 5 guineas complete.

Also, very useful Costumes, at 2 guineas, with Crapè or otherwise.

At PETER ROBINSON'S, of REGENT-STREET, London, Nos. 226 to 232.

EVENING, DINNER, and BALL DRESSES.

A Magnificent Collection of Handsome Evening Dresses, all considerably Reduced in Price during the Sale.

Black Satin Trimmed Lace, 4 guineas. Black Spanish Net Trimmed Satin, 2 guineas. Brussels Net, at 21s., 22s. 6d., 31s. 6d.

Non-Crushing Tulle, 4s. Cream and Ivory Llama and Nuns' Cloth Trimmed Lace, 31s. 6d. and 35s. 6d.

Striped Grenadine, 18s. 9d. All with ample Materials for Bodice.

Sketches free.

PETER ROBINSON, MOURNING WAREHOUSE, REGENT-STREET, LONDON.

BLACK SILKS. Owing to the Panic in Lyons, Manufacturers have been compelled to realize their Stocks.

PETER ROBINSON has taken advantage of the opportunity, and has purchased for cash upwards of £10,000 worth of the HIGHEST CLASS BLACK SILKS, Plain and Damask.

He is enabled to sell the best goods at the lowest prices.

Plain Black Silks, Black Brocade Velvets, Black Satin Merveilleux, Lyons Velvets.

Patterns free. Address—PETER ROBINSON, MOURNING WAREHOUSE, 226 to 232, Regent-street, London.

"LOUIS" VELVETEENS. CHAS. MECKING and CO., Holborn, supply all qualities of the celebrated "LOUIS" in Black and all Colours at most moderate prices. Patterns free by post.

SHEPHERD SHAWLS.—The Marvel, two yards square, White, 1s. 10d.; Black, Grey, or Cardinal, 2s. The Zephyr, richly fringed, White, 3s. 3d.; Black or Cardinal, 3s. 6d., post-free.—ROBINSON and CLEAVE, Belfast.

CAMBRIC POCKET HANDKERCHIEFS. REAL IRISH CAMBRIC—ALL PURE FLAX. Children's .. 2s. 6d. per doz. Hemstitched. Ladies' .. 3s. 3d. .. 4s. 9d. per doz. Gent's .. 4s. 6d. .. 5s. 6d. per doz.

"The Cambrics of Robinson and Cleave have a world-wide fame."—The Queen. Samples and Price List post-free. ROBINSON & CLEAVE, Manufacturers to the Queen, Belfast.

ESTHETIC. PIESSE and LUBIN.

The Perfume affected by the Esthetics. Drums of Flowers, Hoya Bella, Tuberoses, Jasmijn in tin, abstracted from them while yet in blossom.—Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond-street, W.

FLORIMEL OF PALM. PIESSE and LUBIN.

For the Prevention of Chapped Hands, Rough Skin, Chilblains, &c. Once using will convince the most sceptical that, if daily applied, too much cannot be said in favour of Florimel of Palm for rendering the skin or hands white, soft, and fair. In Glass Jars, 3s. 6d.—Laboratory of Flowers, 2, New Bond-street, London. Sold by the trade generally.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER is perfection for restoring grey, white, or faded hair to its youthful colour, gloss, and beauty. It renews its life, strength, and growth. Dandruff quickly removed. A nutritious Hair Dressing. Its perfume rich and rare. MORE ECONOMICAL, remarkable certainty of prompt action—in fact, every good quality is guaranteed for Mrs. S. A. ALLEN'S WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER.

BRIDAL BOUQUET BLOOM.—A lovely liquid for beautifying the Complexion. Ever young. One trial of it will convince any lady of its great superiority over any other liquid or face powder. In a moment of time it imparts to the face, neck, arms and hands a delicate softness and marble purity, with the tint and fragrance of the lily and the rose. It removes Tan, Freckles, Sunburn, and all roughness and blemishes. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR. If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath. It is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalcules," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly delicious to the taste, and so harmless as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

DINNIFORD'S MAGNESIA. The best remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion, and safest aperient for delicate constitutions, Ladies and Children. Of all Chemists.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.

SUBSTANTIAL ARTISTIC FURNITURE (Regd.)

OETZMANN & CO.,

HAMPSTEAD-ROAD,

NEAR TOTTENHAM-COURT-ROAD.

FURNISH THROUGHOUT.—OETZMANN

and CO., 67, 69, 71, 73, 77 and 79, HAMPSTEAD-ROAD, near Tottenham-court-road, London. CARPETS, Furniture, Bedding, Drapery, Furnishing Ironmongery, China, Glass, Paper Hangings, Pictures, Bronzes, Clocks, Pianos, &c., and every other requisite for completely furnishing a house throughout. Lowest prices consistent with guaranteed quality.

OETZMANN and CO.

DINING-ROOM SUITES.—OETZMANN

and CO.—Handsome Mahogany Dining-Room Suite, consisting of a Couch, Six Chairs, and two Easy-Chairs, well upholstered in best leather, price 20 guineas; superior ditto, in Oak or Spanish Mahogany, with handsome Lounge, Six Stuffed-Backed Chairs, and two Easy-Chairs, upholstered in best leather and finished in a superior manner, price 25 guineas; handsome Early English and Medieval Dining-Room Suites in Oak, consisting of a large Divan Lounge, Six Chairs, and two noble Easy-Chairs, upholstered in best leather and finished in the best possible manner, price 30 guineas.—OETZMANN and CO.

THE MOST ELEGANT and CHEAPEST

CARPET EXTANT.—OETZMANN and CO. are now showing a large stock of handsome Wilton Pile Carpets, in all the newest artistic designs and colourings, at 4s. 11d. per yard, with or without borders. The same quality is usually sold at 5s. 6d. to 7s. 6d. per yard. The quality of inspection is respectfully solicited.—OETZMANN and CO.

DOWN QUILTS.—OETZMANN and CO.'S

EIDER and ARCTIC DOWN QUILTS and CLOTHING combine the greatest amount of warmth attainable with the least possible weight, and are warranted pure. O. and CO. sell only the best make—BOTH and FOX'S. See Trade-Mark on each article. Prices will be found below those usually charged for this favourite make. Reduced Price-List post-free. OETZMANN and CO.

THE ABBOTSFORD TAPESTRY

CURTAINS.—Artistic conventional designs, with double borders, and rich decorated dado in black and gold, dull red, sage green, and peacock blue, in the dead shades of colour so much in vogue, very stout quality; pattern is reversible, requiring no lining. Size, 3 1/2 yards long, by 64 inches wide. 3s. 6d. per pair.—OETZMANN and CO.

FURNISHING IRONMONGERY

DEPARTMENT.—Strong Bronze Fenders, from 1s. 6d. each; super ditto, 3s. 6d.; handsome Drawing-room Fenders, 5s. 3d.; ditto, new designs, from 12s. 6d. to 5 guineas; fire-irons, from 1s. 6d. per set; handsome ditto, 4s. 6d.; burnished steel ditto, from 7s. 6d. to 2 guineas per set; japanned oval Tea Trays, from 3s. 11d. per set of three, 16, 24, and 30 inches; handsome, ditto, chaste pattern, gilt and enamelled, 7s. 6d. per set; elegant ditto, from 12s. 6d. to 5 guineas per set.—OETZMANN and CO.

POSTAL ORDER DEPARTMENT.

OETZMANN and CO.—Orders sent per post, whether large or small, receive prompt and careful attention. Those residing at a distance, or to whom a personal visit would be inconvenient, desiring to leave the selection to the firm, may rely upon a faithful attention to their wishes and interests in the selection. This department is personally supervised by a member of the firm, and O. and CO. continually receive numerous letters expressing the greatest satisfaction with the execution of orders entrusted. For further particulars please send for our Catalogue, sent free on application.—OETZMANN and CO.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE, post-free.

OETZMANN & CO.,

HAMPSTEAD-ROAD.

ELKINGTON and CO.

ELECTRO PLATE. SILVER PLATE. CLOCKS and BRONZES.

ELKINGTON and CO.

TESTIMONIAL PLATE. CUTLERY, &c. Illustrated Catalogue post-free.

EL

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST-OFFICE FOR TRANSMISSION ABROAD.

No. 2234.—VOL. LXXX.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1882.

WITH SIXPENCE.
TWO SUPPLEMENTS! By Post, 6d.

ALI TAHMI BEY, MINISTER OF JUSTICE.

AHMED ARABI BEY, MINISTER OF WAR.

ABDULLAH HALIM BEY, MINISTER OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION.

THE NEW EGYPTIAN GOVERNMENT.—SEE PAGE 182.

THE NEW-BORN TAPIR AND ITS MOTHER, IN THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S GARDENS.—SEE PAGE 182.

BIRTHS.

At Allahabad, India, on the 22nd ult., La Marquise de Bourbel de Montpinçon, of a son.
On the 16th inst., at Tottenham, Middlesex, the wife of W. Tyndale Watson, M.D., of a son.
On the 23rd ult., at Kingston, Jamaica, the wife of John Alexander Duntze, Esq., of a son.

MARRIAGES.

On the 14th inst., at 15, Buccleuch-place, Edinburgh, by the Rev. Dr. Walter C. Smith, John Nicholson, Valparaiso, Chili, to Wilhelmina Elizabeth, fourth daughter of the Rev. James Wood.
On the 2nd inst., at the parish church of St. Marylebone, by the Rector, the Rev. C. J. P. Eyre, assisted by the Rev. P. C. Bevan, Sir George Kellner, K.C.M.G., C.S.I., to Jane, daughter of the late F. B. Carter, Esq., of Shanganagh, in the county of Dublin.

DEATHS.

On the 11th inst., at his residence, 18, Kensington-gore, Hyde Park, William Hurst, aged 61, after long suffering, deeply lamented. Friends will please accept this intimation. Country papers please copy.
On the 4th inst., at his residence, Sydney Villa, Stanhope, in the county of Durham, Major Sydney Dhippon, late of the Madras Artillery, in his 66th year.
On the 12th inst., at Elmore Court, Gloucestershire, after only a few days' illness, aged 31, June Isabella, third daughter of Sir William and Lady Guise.

* * The charge for the insertion of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, is Five Shillings for each announcement.

THE THEATRICAL SEASON AT MONACO, 1882.
Two Troupes are engaged at the Theatre—one for Operetta and Vaudeville (the Troupe of the Bouffes Parisiens, Paris), the direction of which has been entrusted to Mr. Plunkett, Ancient Director of the Palais Royal.
The other, the Italian Opera Troupe, is conducted by M. Jules Cohen, of the Academy of Music.

The following is the Programme of the Representations:—
Saturday, Feb. 25, FAUSTO, by Madame Albani (Marguerite), M. Gayarré (Faust), M. Faure (Mephistopheles), M. Maurel (Valentin), Madame Schallchi (Siebel), Madame Stuarda (Mélisande).
Sunday, Feb. 26, FAUSTO.
Saturday, March 4, LUCIA, by Madame Albani and Messrs. Faure and Gayarré.
Sunday, March 5, LUCIA.
Saturday, March 11, AMLETO, by Mesdames Albani, Schallchi, and Messrs. Faure and Gayarré.
Sunday, March 12, AMLETO, LUCIA, or FAUSTO.
The Opera of "Fausto" will always be played with the extraordinary distribution of Maurel, Faure, and Madame Albani.
After March 15 a Series of Brilliant Concerts will terminate the season.
It will be the first appearance of M. Faure in the role of Adonis in "Lucia," and also for the first time that Mr. Maurel will sing Rigoletto.
These celebrated artists have never appeared together in any theatre.

PIGEON-SHOOTING, MONACO, 1882.

GRAND INTERNATIONAL MATCHES. All demands for information should be addressed to Mr. A. B. BLOUIN, Monaco. Open to all upon a written introduction from a member of the Harlingham Gun Club, London; the "Cercle des Patineurs," Paris; or the "Tir du Bois de la Cambre," Brussels.
Friday, Feb. 24, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, at 25 metres. Prize, ESTERHAZY, Handicap—An Object of Art, added to a Poule of 50 francs each. To the second 30 per cent upon the entrance fees—3 Pigeons.
Monday, Feb. 27, POULE D'ESSAI, 20 francs each—1 Pigeon, at 25 metres. Prize, CAMOUR—An Object of Art, added to a Poule of 50 francs each. To the second winner, 30 per cent upon the entrance fees—3 Pigeons.
Monday, March 6, POULES A VOLONTÉ.
Wednesday, March 8, and Thursday, March 9, GRAND PRIX DE CLOTURE—An Object of Art and 500 francs, added to 100 francs Entrance. The second winner will receive 1000 francs, and 25 per cent on the entrance money. The third winner, 500 francs and 20 per cent. The fourth winner, 15 per cent. The Balance to the First Winner—12 Pigeons.
The First Day, 4 Pigeons, at 25 metres. The Second Day, 4 Pigeons at 35 metres. The Grand Closing Prize will be followed by other Series, up to April 6.
All the Pigeons are to be paid for at the rate of 2 francs each; and English cartridges will be found on the ground.

BRIGHTON.—EVERY SUNDAY.—A Cheap First-Class
Train from Victoria at 10.45 a.m., calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon. Day Return Tickets, 10s.
A Pullman Drawing-room Car is run in the 10.45 a.m. Train from Victoria to Brighton, returning from Brighton by the 8.30 p.m. Train. Special Cheap Fare from Victoria, including Pullman Car, 13s., available by these Trains only.

THE GRAND AQUARIUM AT BRIGHTON.—EVERY
SATURDAY, Cheap First-Class Train from Victoria at 10.45 and 11.50 a.m., and London Bridge at 9.30 a.m. and 12.0 noon, calling at Clapham Junction and Croydon.
Day Return Fare—First Class, Half-a-Guinea (including Admission to the Aquarium and the Royal Pavilion Picture Gallery, Palace, and Grounds), available to return by any Train the same day, except the Pullman Car Trains.

TICKETS and every Information at the Brighton Company's
West-End General Office, 28, Regent-circus, Piccadilly, and 8, Grand Hotel-buildings, Trafalgar-square; also at the Victoria and London Bridge Stations.
(By order) J. P. KNIGHT, General Manager.

INMAN ROYAL MAIL STEAMERS.

LIVERPOOL TO NEW YORK.
City of Brussels .. Thursday, Mar. 2 (City of Richmond .. Tuesday, Mar. 14
City of New York .. Tuesday, Mar. 7 (City of Berlin .. Thursday, Mar. 23
Saloons and State Rooms amidships, with every modern comfort and convenience. Apply to THE INMAN STEAM-SHIP COMPANY, Limited, 22, Water-street, Liverpool; A. H. JOHNSON, 9, Rue de la Harpe, Paris; or to EIVES and ALLEN, 99, Cannon-street, London, E.C.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.—OLD MASTERS
EXHIBITION NOW OPEN, from 9 to 6.30, will CLOSE MARCH 11. Lighted at dusk with the Electric Light.

BIRKET FOSTER.—A LOAN COLLECTION of upwards of 100 WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS, by this eminent Artist, ON VIEW, for a short period only, at J. and W. VOKINS' Gallery, 14 and 16, Great Portland-street. Admission free.

WORKS BY THE LATE JOHN LINNELL.—A Loan
Collection of Choice Pictures by this Master is NOW OPEN at ARTHUR TOOTH and SONS' GALLERY, 5, Haymarket (opposite Her Majesty's Theatre). Admission One Shilling, the proceeds for the Benefit of the Artists' General Benevolent Institution.

WILL CLOSE ON MARCH 4, THE SIXTEENTH
WINTER EXHIBITION OF THE INSTITUTE OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS. Open, from Ten till Six. Admission, 1s.; Catalogue, sd. H. F. PHILLIPS, Secretary. Gallery, 55, Pall Mall.

GROSVENOR GALLERY WINTER EXHIBITION.
The Winter Exhibition at the Grosvenor Gallery NOW OPEN, from Ten till Six, with a Collection of WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS and a COMPLETE COLLECTION OF THE WORKS OF G. F. WATTS, R.A., forming the first of a series of Annual Winter Exhibitions illustrating the works of the most eminent living painters. Admission, 1s.; Season Tickets, 5s.

DORÉ'S GREAT WORKS.—"ECCE HOMO" ("Full of divine dignity."—The Times) and "THE ASCENSION." "CHRIST LEAVING THE PRÆTORIUM." "CHRIST ENTERING JERUSALEM." with all his other Great Pictures.—DORÉ GALLERY, 35, New Bond-street. Daily, 10 to 6. 1s.

ST. JAMES'S HALL, PICCADILLY.
ANOTHER VERY IMPORTANT CHANGE in the Programme of the

MOORE and BURGESS MINSTRELS.
EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT;
MONDAY, WEDNESDAY, SATURDAY, THREE AND EIGHT O'CLOCK.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—CARL ROSA OPERA
COMPANY. LAST WEEK BUT ONE. Monday, Feb. 27, by special request, LAHENGRIIN. Tuesday, Feb. 28, TANHAUSER. Wednesday, March 1, TROVATORE (only time). Thursday, March 2, TANHAUSER. Friday, March 3, MIGNON (last time). Saturday, March 4, at Two, RIENZI; at Eight, MARIANA (last time). POPULAR PRICES. For full particulars see Daily Papers. Box-Office open daily from Ten till Five.

MR. WALTER BACHE'S ORCHESTRAL CONCERT,
ST. JAMES'S HALL, MARCH 2, at 8.30. Franz List—A Faust Symphony (Faust, Gretchen, Mephistopheles). Der Tanz in der Dorfschenke (Mephisto Walzer). Prelude from Liszt's "Faust." Orchestra of 51 Performers. Mr. Ben Davies (of the Carl Rosa Opera). Chorus of 50 Voices (Soprano and Basses). Conductor, Mr. Walter Bache. Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Reserved, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Admission, 1s.

LYCEUM.—Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. Henry Irving,
Every Evening, at Half-past Eight, Albery's TWO ROSES—Mr. Dicky Grant, Mr. Irving, Our Mr. Jenkins, Mr. David James, Messrs. Howe, Terriss, G. Alexander, Misses W. Emery, H. Matthews, Mrs. Pauncefort, Miss Ewell. AT 7.30, THE CAPTAIN OF THE WATCH—Messrs. Terriss, Andrews, Carter; Misses Louisa Payne, H. Matthews. Box-office (Mr. Hurst) open Ten to Five. Seats booked by letter or telegram.

MASKELYNE and COOKE.—EGYPTIAN HALL.—The most mysterious and amusing Illusory Entertainment in the World. Every Evening at Eight, and Wednesdays and Saturdays at Three and Eight. New second part, a Burlesque of Spiritualism, with a Light and Dark séance, and marvellous production of a spirit form enveloped in a cloud of light. Admission from 2s. to 1s. Book seats at the Office; or any Agents.

MR. and MRS. GERMAN REED'S ENTERTAINMENT.—
Managers, Messrs. Alfred Reed and Corney Grain.—ST. GEORGE'S HALL, Langham-place. Monday, Feb. 27, last time of ARTS AND CRAFTS. New second part, CORNEY GRAIN and S. J. 2s. Tuesday, Feb. 28, first time of THE HEAD OF THE TOLL, a new Entertainment, in two parts, by Arthur Law. Music by Euton Fanning; and a new Musical sketch by Mr. Corney Grain, entitled NOT AT HOME.

Now ready,
VOL. 79 ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS,
Elegantly Bound, cloth gilt, price 20s.
CASES, for binding above 2s. 6d.
PORTFOLIOS, to hold Six Months' Numbers 4s. 6d.
READING-CASES, for Single Number 2s. 6d.
198, Strand, W.C.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1882.

Escorted by her father, the Prince of Pyrmont-Waldeck, and by the Duke of Albany, her betrothed, the Princess Helen arrived in England on Tuesday on a somewhat lengthened visit to the Court at Windsor. The cordial welcome given to the fair Princess on landing at Sheerness, and on her arrival at the Royal castle, is an earnest of the warm reception that awaits the fiancée of Prince Leopold from all sections of her Majesty's subjects. Her presence at Windsor for the next week or two will, no doubt, afford a grateful relief to her august hostess in the interval that precedes the trip to the Riviera. At Mentone and its lovely neighbourhood a change of scene and entire rest will, it is to be hoped, so fortify the health and spirits of the Queen that she may be able heartily to participate in the wedding festivities that are to follow on her Majesty's return.

It is unfortunate that the course of events does not at present promise that tranquil political atmosphere which is best suited to such auspicious ceremonials. In a few weeks, however, if not sooner, the threatening storm which disturbs the relations of the two branches of the Legislature will no doubt have passed over. It is natural that the Irish landlords should view with alarm the results of the Act of last Session, and the decisions of the Commissioners and Sub-Commissioners in favour of a reduction of rents, which, on the average, have been equal to twenty per cent on the cases adjudicated by the Courts. Still this Act of Parliament, which received the assent of both Houses after protracted debates, has been only four months in practical operation, and the appeals in some critical cases have not yet been heard. On Friday, however, after a debate of great significance and unusual length, the hereditary Chamber, by a majority of 96 to 53 votes, accepted the motion of Lord Donoughmore for the appointment of a Select Committee to "inquire into the working of recent legislation in reference to land in Ireland, and its effect upon the condition of the country." Lord Carlingford, himself an Irish landlord, protested against such an inquiry as "premature, hasty, and unprecedented," and Lord Chancellor Selborne strongly objected to a course which would "unsettle, disturb, and dissatisfy everybody." The powers of such a Committee are practically unlimited, for they can summon the Commissioners and their subordinates to give evidence in London at a time when they are absorbed in their judicial duties, and thus paralyse the machinery of the new Courts. With a rashness scarcely credible, their Lordships have virtually rescinded the vote which they gave in favour of the Land Act.

The matter was no doubt anxiously considered at the Cabinet Council held on Saturday, and, as the first result, Lord Granville on Monday quietly informed his brother Peers that the Government would refuse their co-operation in the selection of the proposed Committee. In the representative Chamber there was a scene of great excitement, when the Prime Minister gave formal notice that on Monday next he should move a resolution declaring that Parliamentary inquiry at the present moment into the working of the Irish Land Act "tends to defeat the operation of that Act, and must be injurious to the best interests of good government in Ireland." This momentous challenge of the Upper House, amounting to a vote of censure on their Lordships for the course they had taken, was loudly cheered on the Ministerial side, and listened to with stupefied silence by the Opposition. The prolonged wrangle that subsequently took place did not materially alter the aspect of the case. Ministers contended—and their view is supported by common sense—that the action of the Lords will paralyse the Land Act and jeopardise the peace of Ireland. The language of the First Minister of the Crown on the subject could hardly have been more emphatic, and the House of Lords must be prepared either to assume the responsibilities of the Executive—which is absurd—or to recede from an indefensible position, either by rescinding or postponing the Committee. In our representative Chamber constitutional traditions, the growth of many generations, and "broadening down from precedent to precedent," have been strained to the utmost. It is lamentable to see the Conservative Peers following suit by standing upon a technical right in violation of that unwritten law which has so admirably preserved the balance between the several estates of the realm, and the reckless violation of which will most affect the Hereditary Chamber.

After the heated and irregular conversation arising out of the Prime Minister's unexpected announcement, the House of Commons on Monday night quietly settled down to listen to Mr. Gladstone's exposition of the proposed new Rules of Procedure. In a calm, argumentative, and conciliatory speech, the right hon. gentleman traced the gradual development of license of speech and of obstruction, and the growing pressure of legislation; and he insisted that, apart from subordinate changes, the only adequate remedy was to recognise the sound principle that the majority should prevail, as was the case in nearly every Legislature in the world. The safeguards against the tyranny of the majority were the initiative of the Speaker and the limitation of the closure, and Mr. Gladstone stated that the Government are quite ready to assent to a proviso that when the minority is less than forty, the majority must be more than a hundred. Towards the close of his address, the Premier made a pathetic reference to the frail tenure of his life—a life which was rather in the past than in the present. But he would be sorry it should close before the House of Commons, now in great part paralysed in the discharge of its noble duties, had its free power of action restored. The Leader of the Opposition at once took up a definite position by refusing to regard the closure as necessary; the object desired by all being, he thinks, attainable by means of the other Rules, without destroying freedom of speech, the proposed safeguards of which Sir Stafford Northcote regards as illusory. In the debate that followed upon Mr. Marriott's amendment against giving the majority the power of closing a debate, Mr. Goschen an independent Liberal, in a very weighty speech, insisted that drastic remedies must be applied in order that the House might recover the power of dispatching business. In the present state of public feeling, the tyranny of the majority he rightly described as a mere bugbear. It was more probable that the new rules—at least the right of using the closure—would in due time become obsolete, and that the assembly would return to the self-regulating usage which had preserved its dignity and efficiency. Should the House of Lords repent of its recent reckless act, the debate on the Procedure resolutions may be resumed on Monday.

General Skobelev, who is in a sort of honourable exile in Paris, has capped his recent spread-eagle speech relative to the advance of Russia eastward by an address to some Serbian students in that capital which has set Germany in a blaze, and has proved, as the Grand Duke Constantine is reported to have said, "that a man may be a hero in the battle-field and a lunatic in politics." This fire-eating officer avers that the foreigner is everywhere in his country, and his hand in everything. It is a "disastrous influence," that can only be destroyed by the sword. "And," he went on to say, with a blunt frankness devoid of diplomatic decency, "if you wish to know the name of this foreigner, this intruder and intriguer, this enemy so dangerous to Russians and Slavs, I will name him. It is the German. I repeat it, and I beg you will never forget it. This enemy is the German. A struggle between the Slav and the Teuton is inevitable. It will be long, sanguinary, and terrible, but the Slav will triumph." All classes in Germany, from the Emperor downwards, Liberals as well as Conservatives and Clericals, are indignant at this unprovoked and stinging attack, and the official journal of St. Petersburg has felt it necessary to repudiate "private utterances" from persons "having no authority from their Governments," which, it is emphatically declared, cannot affect the good relations of Russia with neighbouring States. Those relations, it is repeated, no doubt with sincerity, "are based not only upon ties of friendship existing between crowned heads and their clear perception of the interests of their peoples, but also upon the strict and mutual observance of existing treaties." Seeing, however, that General Skobelev is the greatest military genius in the Russian army, and the idol of the masses of the population, a vacillating Government and a secluded Czar will not, and apparently dare not, seriously call him to account, although he deals in reckless menaces that outrage a neighbouring people.

Such incidents leave a soreness of feeling which no repudiation or explanation can remove, because it has long existed, and still exists, in a latent form. It may be granted that the Russians, or, to speak more correctly, the enthusiastic Pan-Slavists, hate and despise both Germans and Austrians, but their prejudices can hardly find expression in deeds. It is barely possible that the action of Austria in Herzegovina and Bosnia, where her difficulties are increasing, may resuscitate and raise to a dangerous height the Slav movement which official influence might vainly endeavour to stem. But, to all appearance, Prince Bismarck is "master of the situation," and the Austro-Germanic alliance is an impregnable barrier against Russian aggression. It might be easy enough for these two Powers to deprive the Czar of his Polish provinces, and thus seriously to curtail the Russian Empire. But a Russian attack upon Austria and Germany combined would be ineffectual, and perhaps disastrous. Both are better prepared for war than their excitable neighbour, and Russia would stand no chance in such a conflict unless France should choose to enter the field as her ally, which is highly improbable. We may therefore reasonably hope that international animosities will subside, and that Slav and Teuton, instead of striving for the mastery on the battle-field, will live together in peace and, in a spirit of friendly rivalry, aim to promote the development of European civilisation.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

I have drunk the Queen's health in a balloon at the altitude of one mile from the earth; in a birch-bark canoe on the river St. Lawrence, just as the ice was beginning to "pack"; on the summit of the Rocky Mountains; and in the House of Correction, Dee Island, Boston, Massachusetts (I am glad to say that the Governor kindly let us out again, after dinner); but I never dreamed that it would be my fortune to quaff health and long life to her Most Gracious Majesty at a depth of sixty feet below the bottom of the sea. The bottom, not the level, mind. This submarine experience was successfully accomplished on Saturday last, the 18th inst.; the sea in question being the British Channel; the place, the immediate vicinity of Shakespeare's Cliff, Dover; and the precise locality where the health-drinking took place, a seam of grey chalk, through some eleven hundred yards of which the Tunnel which is to unite England with France has already been drilled.

The pilgrimage was not accomplished without a certain amount of travail. First you had to don a kind of "miner's clothing," in the shape of a canvas jacket and overalls: for the interior of the tunnel is, obviously, not yet cased with concrete; and occasional contact with the chalky sides of the "heading" were far from remote contingencies. Then, in batches of four, you were lowered in a "cage" down a circular shaft a hundred and sixty feet deep; and at the bottom you found yourself in the tunnel itself, which was brilliantly illuminated by the Electric Light, on the Swan system.

The eleven hundred yards or so already excavated have a foot-way and lines of rails running right up to the place where the boring machine is in operation; and as the grey chalk is scooped out an endless "Jacob's ladder" of buckets, resembling the grain elevators at Chicago, empties the "stuff" into trucks, by which it is conveyed to the shaft, and so to upper earth again, where it will be used for making cement—the very cement, perchance, which is to "concrete" the tunnel. For about five hundred yards we sped along the rails on a sort of "trolley" or "dummy" car. The remainder of the distance we traversed on foot. It was rather trying to such of the party as were stout, and over five feet eight in stature; for although the diameter of the circular bore is seven feet—eventually to be enlarged to fourteen feet—the raised footway on which the rails are laid so diminishes the altitude of the tunnel that one had to stoop; and I am acquainted with at least one of the party who has suffered from an uncomfortable aching in the region of the dorsal vertebrae ever since last Saturday.

I have ceased to speculate as to when the Channel Tunnel will be completed, or whether it will be completed in what is commonly (and thoughtlessly) called "our time." How can we tell when "our time" shall end? I would rather not enter into any calculation as to how much money the enterprise, if it be sanctioned by the Government, will cost. I was calmly told the other day that the tunnel could not be made for less than two millions sterling. On the other hand, I heard figures quoted on Saturday to show that the entire works would not entail an outlay exceeding three hundred and fifty thousand pounds. Nous verrons—or our successors will.

As it was, I have heard the "Hip, hip, Hurrah!" and the "One cheer more!" underneath the bed of the sea. If the Mermen and the Mermaids, the Tritons and the minnows could only have known that Sir Edward Watkin and Lord Brabourne, the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor and Sir Myles Fenton, Mr. John Hollingshead and Mr. Edmund Yates, were tossing off bumpers of Heidseck's Dry Monopole "a way, way down" below the "tumbling billows of the main;" below the "thousand fearful wrecks," the "wedges of gold and the great anchors, and the inestimable pearls," all scattered at the bottom of the sea, and some of them lying in dead men's skulls!

So we sped back to town by an express-train; and I went home, and read in an old number of the Quarterly Review a fine old crusted article on a projected railway. Hear the Q. R.—

As to those persons who speculate on making railways generally throughout the kingdom, and superseding all the canals, all the waggons, mills, and stage-coaches, post-chaises, and, in short, every other mode of conveyance by land and by water, we deem them and their visionary schemes unworthy of notice. . . . The gross exaggeration of the powers of the locomotive steam-engine (or, to speak in plain English, the steam-carriage) may delude for a time; but must end in the mortification of all concerned.

The proposed railway was one to connect London with Woolwich; and the promoters of the scheme had the hardihood to assert that the trains would attain a speed of twelve miles an hour. Whereto wrote the indignant Quarterly :—

With all these assurances we should as soon expect the people of Woolwich to suffer themselves to be fired off upon one of Congreve's rocket rockets as to trust themselves to the mercy of such a machine, going at such rate.

Wordsworth, we all know, penned a beautiful sonnet against railways, beginning—

Is there no nook of English ground secure
From rash assault?

Medical men of authority declared that the tunnels would be peculiarly dangerous in producing colds, catarrhs, and consumptions; and that "the deafening peal, the fearful gloom, the clanking chains, the dismal glare of the locomotive," and a thousand other horrors, were so alarming that such inventions ought to be utterly repudiated. But the sweetest deliverance against steam locomotion was made in Parliament by the beloved Colonel Sibthorpe. That gallant M.P. assured the House of Commons that "railways were dangerous and delusive speculations," and that "such schemes were unsatisfactory, and, above all, unknown to the Constitution of this country." And finally, that "he hated the very name of a railway—he hated it, as he hated the Devil." The Channel Tunnel scheme will have to go through a vast amount of opposition of this kind.

Lord John Manners asked Mr. Gladstone in the Commons on Monday a very plain question, to which the Prime Minister returned a curiously obscure and involved answer. Said in effect the noble Lord, "Will the Government during the present Session bring in a bill to permit farmers in the United Kingdom to grow tobacco for sale?"

Mr. Gladstone: The question of the noble Lord does not admit of an absolutely direct answer, because the inquiry whether tobacco can be grown with safety to the vast revenue dependent on it is a question that is in one sense always open. We shall at any time be very glad to find that any plan has been devised under which it could be done with safety with reference to the whole of the United Kingdom, but especially with reference to Ireland. However, I am bound to say that no such plan is at present before us, and I am, therefore, not able to hold out any hope on the subject.

I wonder how many persons in a hundred there are who will fully understand the Premier's complicated reply. Those who fail to comprehend it may be referred to that not very recondite work Haydn's "Dictionary of Dates," in which it is recited that the first duty of six shillings and tenpence a pound was imposed by the Court of Star Chamber in 1614; that the cultivation of the weed was prohibited in England by Charles II. in 1684; that the cultivation was authorised in Ireland in 1779, and prohibited by the 2nd William IV., August, 1831. In the following year all tobacco grown in Ireland was by Act of Parliament bought up and destroyed. I suppose that there was deep financial wisdom in this proceeding. It strikes me that there was an amazing amount of financial wickedness as well. Tobacco grows well in the kindly soil of Ireland. By the side of Irish tobacco farms might have grown up tobacco manufactories, cooperages, saw-mills, and a score more industries connected with the fabrication of smoking-tobacco, snuff, and cigarettes. Tobacco culture might not have proved a panacea; but it would surely have been a valuable palliative to the abounding woes of the Irish people.

I read in the report of an action for libel (the defendant got the best of it) that the presiding Judge, Lord Chief Justice Coleridge, told the jury in his summing that "no doubt it was a libel to call a man 'a cross-grained and ill-conditioned splutterer;' but, if there was no malice on the part of the defendant, the statement was privileged." This dictum of Coleridge, C.J., is certainly worth "commonplacing," and I have inscribed it on the margin of the "slander" section in my Blackstone. The only edition of the immortal "Commentaries" which I possess is the twelfth, in four volumes, with Christian's notes, and the portraits of the Judges of England beautifully engraved in line by Holloway, Neagle, and Collyer. As I am not a lawyer, such a Blackstone is quite good enough for me. By this time the law has been so much altered from what it was in the illustrious commentator's time that a modern edition of Blackstone must resemble Sir John Cutler's silk stockings, which had been so often darned with worsted that scarcely any of the original fabric remained.

I hope, however, that modern editors have not doomed to utter disappearance Christian's highly humorous note on slander, in which he points out that it is not actionable to call a man a thief because he has stolen a cat, the cat not being property, nor its theft, consequently, felony; nor to charge a lady with theft or murder when the accusation is intended as a compliment, or alludes only to the fatal or fascinating influence of her beauty. Quite as rich is Christian's note in which he remarks that "the words scoundrel, rascal, villain, knave; rascal liar, fool, and such like general terms of scurrility, may be spoken with impunity, and are part of the rights and privileges of the vulgar." It was actionable to say that a man was a highwayman, but not that he was worse than a highwayman; the first being a precise, but the second only a vague charge.

I have been brought very low, and affected, indeed, almost to tears, by two woful blunders which crept into the "Echoes" last week. They are comically clerical errors. Of course, "the Pyramid of Caius Curtius" should have been the Pyramid of Caius Cestius; and equally of course the choreographic partner of Petipa should have been Carlotta, and not "Giulia" Grisli. When first I saw these mistakes in print, the thought came over me of going out of town—say, to Arizona or to Afghanistan—until the thing had blown over. I suppose it was my eyes that were to blame. I could not help thinking that it must be those organs, when I read, lately, in the Life of Dr. John Potter, D.D., Archbishop of Canterbury, prefixed to the "Archæologia Græca," the following :—

In the year 1715 he published an edition of the works of Clemens Alexandrinus, in two volumes, folio, which he had begun before he had obtained the divinity professorship, and which Mr. Whiston, in his memoirs, considers as an excellent performance. It is said, however, to be full of typographical errors, for which the following cause is assigned. While the work was printing, a humour fell into his eyes, which obliged him to commit to others the care of correcting the press.

Mem.: The author of Potter's Greek Antiquities, to whom seven generations of schoolboys have been so highly indebted, brought forth that erudite compilation in the year 1697, when he was only twenty-three years of age. Before he was nineteen he had published an edition of Plutarch's De Audiendis Poetis, with the oration of Basil the Great. Much Greek and more "boozing" earned for him at length the Primacy. He was the son of a linen-draper at Wakefield, in Yorkshire; he accumulated a fortune of ninety thousand pounds; and just before he died (at the age of seventy-three) he disinherited his eldest son, "who had mortified the ambition of his father by marrying beneath his dignity." Fancy being Primate of All England, and preaching sermons until you are past three-score and ten, and then cutting your son off with a shilling because he has married the girl of his choice!

Numerous correspondents, chiefly ladies, have sent me indignant protests against the contemplated deportation from Regent's Park to the United States of the old-established and highly popular elephant "Jumbo," who (his intelligence and sagacity surely entitle him to "who" instead of "which") has been sold for a large sum to that eminent showman, Mr. Phineas T. Barnum. One of my fair correspondents qualifies the sale of "Jumbo" as a "disgraceful transaction," and expresses her astonishment that "for the sake of two thousand pounds" the Royal Zoological Society should sell this wonderful and faithful old friend into the hands of a travelling showman.

Supposing the sale of "Jumbo" to be a fait accompli, it may be slightly consolatory to the numerous friends of the gigantic quadruped to learn that Mr. Barnum is a most humane and kind-hearted gentleman—a Church-elder and a Total Abstinence. "Jumbo," at Mr. Barnum's hands, would meet with nothing but the gentlest treatment; and, besides, P. T. B. is an old amateur of elephants. He used to keep one for the purpose of ploughing, many years since, on his farm of Iranistan, in Connecticut. The elephant, harnessed to the plough, served a double object. In the first place, the interests of agriculture were aided by the employment of the colossal creature. In the next, the agricultural elephant was a standing, or rather walking, advertisement of Barnum's Museum, New York. For the rest, why do not my fair correspondents appeal, in re "Jumbo," to Mr. Phil Robinson, author of the delightful "Mornings at the Zoo"? That gentleman probably knows more about "the square animal on four posts with a tail at both ends" than any other journalist living.

Mem.: The Kaffirs eat the elephant; and some portions of the animal are said to be grateful even to the European palate. The foot, especially, when baked, is delicious. This part is cooked by being laid in a hole dug in the earth, over which a large fire has been suffered to burn itself out, and then covered up with earth on which another fire is permitted to burn to extinction. Practically, M. Jules Gouffé would tell us this is "Pied d'Eléphant à la Braise;" only the Kaffir cooks use a natural braising pan instead of a copper one. Otherwise, they proceed just as M. Gouffé would proceed in cooking for the members of the Paris Jockey Club, that superb plat a "perdre aux choux."

I quote the following as a curiosity :—

Sir,—I take the liberty of writing to you to ask you if you know of an Astrolager (sic); if so would you kindly oblige me with the address, as I want to ask him a few questions.—Yours, &c.

A READER OF THE LONDON ALMANACK.

I beg to state, in reply to my correspondent, that I am unable to comply with his request. It does not happen that I have such an article as an "Astrolager" by me just at present. The last "cunning man" that I heard of, who lived in a court somewhere near Red Lion-street, Holborn, was cruelly interrupted in his stellar studies by the police, and got, I believe, "a month on the mill." My friend Mr. E. L. Blanchard once edited, I believe, a journal called "The Astrolager;" but he was compelled to discharge his astrologers for not ruling the planets straight.

And yet, I have little doubt, there are many persons, well educated, and after a fashion intelligent, who believe in astrology, chiromancy, divining-rods, the "Bible and Key" test, the "Sortes Virgilianæ," fortune-telling, and all the rest of it. I am so superstitious myself in many respects that I cannot, in conscience, be very intolerant of those who hold by other delusions. It is not so many years since the Worshipful Company of Stationers published annually the catchpenny prophecies of "Francis Moore, Physician"; and the licensing of "Old Moore" and other almanacks was formerly the prerogative of his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Mem.: Phillips's "New World of Words; or, Universal English Dictionary" (London, 1696), in its titlepage formally recognises "Astrology and Chiromancy," together with Theology, Philosophy, Physiognomy, Horsemanship, Dialecting, Jewelling, Statics, Hawking, Fishing, and Cookery as being arts and sciences; and defines Astrology itself as "a science which teaches a conjectural knowledge, obtained from the observation and position of the stars, of the success of things depending upon celestial influence, to foretell the grand mutations of nature and natural fortune of man, woman, and child." But the most modern English dictionary that I have, Worcester's Walker, defining astrology, contemptuously dismisses as "the pretended science or art of foretelling future events by means of the position of the heavenly bodies."

The communication of my correspondent who is so urgently in need of an "Astrolager" naturally leads one to think of the impudent adventuress who is now in goal for duping I know not how many silly people out of their money under pretence, now of being a dead lordling, lying perdu in the provinces until a "pardon" was granted, and his "estates" restored to him by the Crown; and now of being a high-born lady in difficulties, but entitled to a vast inheritance in money and broad acres. Some of the people cheated appear to have been greedy as well as silly, and are now yelping piteously because the pence which they hoped would become pounds have turned to dry leaves. But let that pass. When justice has dealt with the adventuress (who for all her scheming seems to have led but a squalid, poverty-stricken life), two points will, I take it, remain for philosophic consideration. The first is the astounding quantity of ignorance and credulity which, notwithstanding all our multitudinous schools, mechanics' institutes, working men's colleges, penny readings, penny newspapers, and other manifestations of the schoolmaster being abroad, still exists among us; the next is the intense, the almost insane, snobbishness which is one of the most prominent and one of the most repulsive characteristics of the English bourgeoisie.

The dead lordling was not a reputable person; his name was associated with a horribly notorious case, and he had no money to speak of. Yet his mere name, and the "handle" to it, seem to have acted like a magic spell on the imaginations of the rampant snobs who lent him his fraudulent personator money, and fondled and caressed and lionised her, and liked her boots, so to speak. To grovel in the dust before the tenth transmitters of foolish fables is a traditional foible of the Anglo-Saxon race; nor are our American cousins wholly averse from patrician worship; but this was such a very "hoodlum" lordling, and his name left such a very unpleasant taste in the mouth.

G. A. S.

TRAVELLING IN SIBERIA: CHANGING HORSES AT A POST-STATION.

TRAVELLING IN SIBERIA: RUSSIAN CRIMINALS ON THEIR MARCH IN A SNOWSTORM.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

THE NEW GOVERNMENT OF EGYPT.

The revolution that has lately taken place in the Egyptian Government, though ostensibly with the consent of the Khedive, Tewfik Pasha, results from the military "pronouncement," as such an action used to be called in Spain, headed by Arabi Bey, the Colonel of a regiment, on Sept. 8 last year. It will be remembered that four regiments of insubordinate troops, headed by their rebellious officers, then confronted the Khedive at the gate of his own Palace, and compelled him to dismiss Riza Pasha, his Prime Minister, to grant an augmentation of the Army, and to summon a "Chamber of Delegates," representing the party which is hostile to European interference with the internal administration of Egypt. Sherif Pasha, the successor of Riza Pasha, who had endeavoured to maintain the existing arrangement of the finances under the superintendence of the English and French Controllers, has latterly been forced to resign. The government has now fallen into the hands of Arabi Bey (whose name is spelt Ourabi, we perceive, in some of the newspapers), and whose portrait, with those of two of his colleagues in the Ministry, from photographs by N. Fettel and Co., of Alexandria, appear on our front page. Arabi Bey is a mere soldier, of no military distinction, and the others are persons hitherto unknown beyond their own neighbourhood. The new Constitution or Organic Law has now been approved by the Khedive. It gives the right to vote the Budget to a Committee of Ministers and members of the Chamber, in equal numbers, the Parliament having the casting vote. This changes the system under which the European control was created and served as a guarantee to Europe. A letter has been addressed to the Controllers, Sir Auckland Colvin and M. de Blignieres, by the President of the Council of Ministers, in which he states that it is not the intention of the Government to modify the functions of the Controllers in the discharge of their duty. He assures the Controllers that whatever the Ministry or the Chamber may do with regard to the Budget, they will be very careful to respect existing arrangements with regard to the Public Debt. A renewed protest of the Controllers, dated the 6th inst., at Cairo, was made public last Wednesday. They declare that the action of the new Council of Ministers, and of the Chamber of Delegates, backed by the military chiefs, has destroyed the rightful authority of the Khedive; and that the European control has been rendered quite illusory.

THE NEW-BORN TAPIR.

Visitors to the Gardens of the Zoological Society in Regent's Park during the past fortnight have probably felt an interest, not only in the reluctance of the big African elephant to be transported to America, but in the family affairs of another species of animal, dwelling in the elephant-house. On Sunday, the 13th inst., a female of the ordinary Tapirus Americanus gave birth to a baby tapir. This, we believe, is the first time that a tapir has been born in confinement in Europe. The father of the new arrival is one of the Andean tapirs, and was received in the gardens in 1878. The mother has been in the Society's collection since 1873. The new arrival appears a sturdy little creature, and already seems to enjoy life amazingly. When only a day old it took readily to its bath, and when not following its mother about it frequently indulges in a swim. This new addition to the Society's collection is the subject of an illustration on our front page.

TRAVELLING IN SIBERIA.

Our Special Artist, Mr. A. Larsen, of Copenhagen, who accompanies the New York Herald commissioner in his long journey to the Arctic shores of North-Eastern Siberia, for the relief of the crew of the steamer Jeannette, which was crushed by the ice while engaged in an exploring expedition arranged for by Mr. J. Gordon Bennett, furnished us some time ago with sketches of his previous travels in Siberia. That vast region, extending over the entire breadth of Northern Asia, from the Ural Mountains to the Pacific Ocean, is still but little known even to the European Russians, the majority of whom have little idea of what is going on in the immense Asiatic dominions of their mighty Emperor. A few sketches from everyday life will be not without interest to the English reader, and may succeed in showing to some degree that this country is in many respects far better than its reputation. Our Artist writes as follows upon the subject of the illustrations:—

"Travelling by post is getting more and more rare in Europe; if post-horses are still used now and then, it is merely for short distances, and, on the whole, with comfortable vehicles, on smooth, well-kept roads. It is a different thing altogether in the distant East, in Asia, in Siberia, where you must travel many hundreds of miles in the same carriage—the carriage, which does service as well in capacity of bed-room; and must carry your provisions for many weeks. Nor do the roads in Siberia much resemble our European highways. The rain during the spring and autumn macerates the ground, and makes it a matter of impossibility to travel in carriages mounted on metallic springs. The only practicable driving is with the Russian vehicle called the tarantass. It has no seats; the bottom is filled up with luggage, on the top of which mattresses and pillows are placed. In travelling such distances it would be impossible always to sit upright, but by lying down one is enabled to drive day and night without stopping to rest. By this arrangement, on tolerably good roads, driving in a tarantass will be found very agreeable. Six young birch-stems, on the middle of which the coach is fastened, connect the fore and hind axes; these poles are about twenty feet long, and very elastic, so that the vehicle is able to cross ditches and clear other hindrances without upsetting. The post-stations lie at a distance of about twenty-five versts (thirteen English miles) from each other. Without a 'podorozhnaja,' a paid document, entitling the bearer to obtain post-horses, the travelling is connected with many difficulties and much loss of time.

"The station is reached at last: and the post-clerk, roused by the loud ringing of the bell at the middle horse, is already waiting in the doorway. The 'podorozhnaja' is handed up to him; the 'yemstchik,' or coachman, quickly takes out the horses, and the man next on duty brings the fresh team. And splendid horses they are! Once put in, they are held by three men standing by, until the passengers and coachman have taken their seats. 'All right? Go!' The three men jump quickly aside, and off start the horses at a pace of seven or eight miles an hour, often keeping on galloping, till they reach the next station. Let us wish 'good luck' to our travellers, and in the meantime step inside to have a look at the post station.

"The first room is the office. Here the mail correspondence is handed in and out, the fare paid, and the travellers' names entered. The second room is for passengers, large, clean, furnished with huge sofas and a set of chairs. The walls look rather bare, the only ornaments are tables of fares, a small looking-glass, and half a dozen penny pictures, generally representing somebody of the Imperial family or some famous military commander. The faces look as if surprised that one is able to recognise them; but the circumstance that their names have been put under each of them considerably assists the visitor in the task of recognition. Still you examine every one of them with as much interest as you would some chef-d'œuvre of art, these being the only things to look at.

"Notwithstanding this want of artistic entertainment, it would be most desirable if all Siberian hotels would try to resemble these poor post-rooms with respect to cleanliness and decency. It has been mentioned that the traveller is bound to carry all provisions with him, but in summer time, when nothing keeps fresh for a long time, he can hardly get anything but milk and eggs; so that if here and there some speculative wife of the station-master understands how to prepare dinners and other repasts for the traveller, she makes a splendid business by it, for the hungry man is willing to pay the price."

The other sketch represents what a traveller in Siberia occasionally meets on the road; a party of Russian convicts drearily marching to the appointed place of penal servitude. An illustration of this subject—namely, the scene on the banks of the Yenisei, where some of the same class of prisoners, with their military escort, were awaiting passage by the ferry across that great river—was given in the Extra Supplement to this Journal two or three weeks ago, and was accompanied by a sufficient account of the matter.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE WATERLOO CUP.

The Waterloo Cup has almost invariably proved a disastrous affair for favourites; but backers never had a worse time of it than they suffered last week, when, of the last eight dogs left in the stake, Witchery was the only one that had been supported to any extent by the general public. The series of unpleasant surprises began with the sixth course, in which the hitherto invincible Mary Morrison was led to the hare and defeated by Special Express. Then Marshal MacMahon scarcely scored a point against Rhodora; and all the hopes raised by Alec Halliday's Gosforth Park successes were blighted in a very unlucky trial with Palm Bloom, in which the Irish champion made two mistakes at the drains, and, though doing all the work at the finish, had no chance of wiping off the long score against him. Enone, who was by no means herself, made a poor show with Death or Glory; but the "most unkindest cut of all" was when Princess Dagmar, after having the speed of Clyde Pearl, was fairly outworked by her. Last year's winner was perhaps a little unlucky in this course, still she ran in slovenly style, and is evidently nothing like so good as she was. The first ties only made matters worse for the backers of favourites. Rhodora had done so well in her first spin that very few were prepared to see her go down before Snowflight in a thoroughly genuine trial; and then the speedy Debonnaire bungled at a drain, and struck herself so heavily that Banchory had won well when she killed. Clyde Pearl proved too clever for Bishop, and thus put out the winner and runner-up in 1881, one after the other. The course between Witchery and Rosewater was undoubtedly the most interesting feature of the second ties. The latter has a tremendous turn of speed, but is not a close worker, and dies away at the finish of a long course, so that the Worcestershire representative had plenty in hand when she finished up with a grand kill. Whipsnake had not much chance against Snowflight; and, after an undecided, old Hornpipe fairly outstayed Banchory. In the third ties, Witchery was unlucky enough to run a second undecided before she could dispose of Planet, and thus, when she met Snowflight, had run six courses to the latter's four, which fully extenuates her defeat. The final trial, between Snowflight and Hornpipe, had to be run over three times before Mr. Hedley could decide in favour of the former, who was slightly favoured by the hare at the "third time of asking." The Purse and Plate were deprived of much of the interest that would have attached to them by the withdrawal of so many dogs that were being reserved for more valuable prizes. Princess Dagmar showed a little of her old fire in the former; still, Mr. Keilly was glad to part with her for £300, less than a fourth of the sum he refused for her a few weeks ago; and Debonnaire had matters all her own way in the Plate, thus repeating her success of 1880. We append the result of the final course for each event:—

THE CUP.

(E) Capt. Ellis's b p Snowflight, by Rothal Park—Curiosity, beat (S) Earl of Haddington's bk b Hornpipe, by Beddellow—Hornet (1).

THE PURSE.

Mr. J. G. Winder (Mr. A. Coke) ns b d Macpherson, by Master Sam—Annie McPherson, beat Mr. W. Reilly's w bd b Princess Dagmar, by Parmigan—Gallant Fox.

THE PLATE.

Mr. L. Pilkington's be b Debonnaire, by Master Sam—Death, beat Mr. M. Morrison (Mr. J. Shelton) ns r f b Maid Marian, by Woodman—Reckless.

Some illustrations will be found in another part of the paper of various incidents in connection with coursing. The slipper, a most important official, appears to have got his dogs off on very even terms, and his responsibility now ceases until the next brace are delivered into his care. Each dog has a small collar—the one red and the other white—fastened round his neck, and the judge is provided with handkerchiefs of corresponding colours. Directly the course is over, won, let us say, by the dog with the red collar, the judge displays his red handkerchief to the flag steward, who immediately hoists the red flag, and a reference to their cards at once shows the spectators which dog has won.

The programme at Sandown Park this week was not of a very interesting character, still the beautifully mild and open weather, and the presence of the Prince of Wales, ensured a very large attendance on each day. Only four runners turned out for the Prince of Wales's Steeplechase, which was won by Valahaka (11 st. 12 lb.), who had little trouble in disposing of old Quibble (10 st. 9 lb.) and his other two opponents. The Sandown Grand Prize, to which no less than £500 was added, also proved a comparative failure, and only produced another quartet of starters. Piraeus (11 st. 9 lb.), who was said to have taken very kindly to jumping, was backed for a great deal of money; but Scot Guard (11 st. 5 lb.), eventually started favourite, and carried the Duke of Hamilton's colours successfully: Falmouth (10 st. 10 lb.), proved to be as great a deceiver over hurdles as he used to be on the flat, and Piraeus nearly came down at the last jump. St. Anthony beat a large field for the Metropolitan Hunters' Flat Race, after a grand finish with Hackness, and the remaining events call for no comment.

On Monday afternoon H. C. Thatcher, about the fastest walker of the day, succeeded in beating the wonderful record made by W. Perkins for three hours, and covered the extraordinary distance of 22 miles 456 yards in that time. Thatcher's style of going was scrupulously fair throughout.

The Dowager Duchess of Cleveland completed her ninetieth year on the 17th inst., and is in the enjoyment of good health.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

Once the Charing Cross, next the Folly—in previous stages of existence, devoted once to the illustration of the "Varieties" of Mr. Woodin, and afterwards to the orisons of the Brethren of the Oratory of St. Philip Neri (whose extensive shovel-hare, like unto the head-gear of Don Basilio, in the "Barbiere di Siviglia," caused a considerable commotion in King William-street about thirty years ago)—the dainty little salle now re-christened "Toole's" Theatre affords to my mind a convincing proof that, the Shakspearean dictum to the contrary notwithstanding, there is something, and often a great deal, in a name. It is as much in accordance with the fitness of things that Toole should have his theatre as that, in days gone by, Mathews should have had his "At Homes," George Alexander Stevens his "Heads," Tom Hood his "Own," and Albert Smith his "Mont Blanc." Mr. John Lawrence Toole has long since acquired the right to stamp his individuality distinctly on a theatre of his own. He is known not only as a comedian of rare and precious qualities—as the possessor of a faculty of humour which is never coarse, and of pathos which is not strained—moving us now to mirth in the "Upper Crust," and now to tears in "Uncle Dick's Darling;" but he is also renowned, admired, and beloved to boot, as the Prince of Good Fellows, as a marvellous mimic, and an almost unmatched raconteur, and as a most upright, humane, and charitable man. So there is no reason, I take it, why "Toole's" Theatre should not go down to posterity together with "Booth's" and "Wallack's" and "Laura Kerne's," with the "Théâtre Déjazet" and the "Théâtre Comte."

Toole's Theatre was reopened, after a long recess, on Thursday, the Sixteenth instant. The interior of the house and its approaches have undergone numerous alterations and improvements; and if, indeed, the enterprising lessee and manager was precluded by circumstances over which he had no control from presenting his patrons with a Christmas pantomime or a burlesque, he may at least plead that, in the middle of February, he has produced a very brilliant transformation scene. Mr. J. J. Thomson, the architect of the estate, has done wonders in converting that which was formerly a cribbed, cabined, and confined area into a theatre with plenty of air, elbow-room, and means of ingress and egress. A wide staircase, of handsome proportions, leads directly to a foyer overlooking King William-street; new staircases and passages have been constructed; the roof of the theatre has been raised; and the pit has been widened and extended. Access to all parts of the house has been made "as easy as lying"—easier, even; for, in politics at least, most of the good old "stock" lies have been so often told that the politicians are beginning to grow ashamed of telling them over again; and it is difficult to invent new ones. Outside the main entrance to Toole's Theatre (no longer "Toole's Folly") an elegant awning or canopy of glass and iron has been constructed to afford shelter to those who alight from, or who are waiting after the performance for, their carriages. I have heard it whispered that the local authorities were, in the first instance, somewhat "exercised" at the aspect of Mr. Toole's "balconchino;" but, it having been ascertained that he was a comedian and not a kiffanalist, the little architectural difficulty was amicably arranged. I may add that the decorations, as well as the structural alterations, have been intrusted to Mr. Thomson, and the result is that the interior of the theatre wears a most tasteful and radiant appearance. The pretty ceiling is embellished with a Wedgwood design in carton pierre; and surmounting the staircase wall is a frieze representing the Procession of Ceres. The decorations have been executed by Messrs. Bettiscombe and Harris; and Mr. William Glover has painted a vigorous view of Loch Katrine for an act-drop, in which the distant mountains have been slightly too much insisted upon, and look like gigantic rolling stones ready to tumble bodily into the stalls and "flutter the Volscies" there.

The staple of the entertainment of Thursday was the comedy of "Paul Pry." I suppose that at this time of day nobody expects me to criticise "Paul Pry;" yet, were I not afraid of having a very large ebony ruler thrown at my head by the estimable editor of this Journal, and of the letter-carrier breaking down under the weight of post-cards penned in hot haste by passionately protesting readers of the "Playhouses," I could write a good deal, say a couple of columns, concerning the changes in English manners which have taken place since "Paul Pry" first achieved popularity. Those manners, as presented by the actors to a modern audience, seem as antiquated as those depicted in the "School for Scandal" or the "Rivals"—as obsolete, almost, as the faintest gaites of the personages in Vanbrugh's "Relapse" or Wycherly's "Plain Dealer;" yet in the days when gentlemen really went about in pigtail, frills, striped nankeen inexpressibles, hessian boots with tassels, and white hats with the brims turned up with green; when the waists of ladies' dresses were just beneath their armpits and their shoes were sandalled; when military officers off duty wore their full uniforms (witness the scrubby young subaltern carrying the patten in Wilkie's picture of the "Reading of the Will"), and when the landlords of village inns were on terms of respectful familiarity with the Squire and his friends (nothing was more common than for a gentleman travelling alone to have Boniface up after dinner and "crack" a bottle with him)—in those days which must seem so dark and so distant to the "gilded youth" of the period—the still happily extant Mr. W. J. Thoms, who is eighty, was grown up and hard at work on the public business, and the still living Miss Kelly, who is ninety-two, was fascinating all playgoing London in "The Maid and the Magpie."

Mr. Toole was, of course, Paul Pry, and in his highest spirits. Mr. Billington as Colonel Hardy, in powder and full martial "fig," looked like Sir Joshua's portrait of Lord Heathfield, and bore himself as testily as the doughty defender of Gibraltar might possibly have done had he been plagued by a sly little daughter and a saucy chambermaid; and Miss Effie Liston as Eliza was the prettiest and slyly demurest of daughters; and Miss Eliza Johnstone as Phoebe, a paragon of saucy soubrettes. Miss Emily Thorne filled with ease and grace the part of that very designing "party" Mrs. Subtle—the "Lady Tartuffe" of the English stage; and Mr. Cheeseman as Old Stanley looked, with his bent shoulders, his flowing white locks, his fatuous smile, and his subdued voice, so mildly superannuated and senile, as to remind one of the patriarch in the American story of the party of emigrants on board a Missouri steamer on their way to found a new township out West. "That's our minister," explained the leader of the party to an inquiring passenger; "that's our bank manager; that's our telegraphic operator; that's our schoolmaster; and that's our newspaper editor." And the nice old gentleman with the white hair, leaning on his stick? "pursued the inquisitive passenger. "Oh," replied the gentleman who was "bossing" the band of pioneers; "you mean the old cuss yonder. Well; we intend to open our new cemetery with him."

"Paul Pry" was preceded by an amusing and sparkling little trifle, in the shape of a new and original comedy, by May Holt (Mrs. Fairbairn), called "Waiting Consent." It is a piece of matrimonial equivocation, divertingly played by Mr. H. Elmore, Mr. E. D. Ward, and Miss Ada Mellon. Mr. G. Shelton was admirably racy as an Irish waiter at a Grand Hotel. Mr. Toole made a speech at once funny and sympathetic to his crowded audience at the conclusion of "Paul Pry"; and the pleasant evening's entertainment wound up with the always welcome farce of "Domestic Economy," Mr. Toole, of course, as John Grumley, Miss Johnstone as Mrs. Grumley, and Miss Emily Thorne as Mrs. Shackles.

I could not attend the first performance of Mr. Burnand's farcical play in three acts, "The Manager," founded on "Le Mari de la Débutante," at the Court Theatre, on Saturday, the Eighteenth. I had been all the afternoon underneath the bottom of the sea at Dover; and had not quite regained my "tone" when it was time to go to the play at night. I went instead, on Tuesday, to see "The Manager"; and I was told that considerable alterations and improvements had been made in the play since its first representation, which had somehow failed to give entire satisfaction to the critics. I will be brief and frank in what I intend to say about "The Manager." There is a world of good, healthy, humorous writing in it. Jokes and "funniments" of all shades of drollery, save the unseemly, are so abundant that you begin to imagine that the sands of life in Mr. Burnand's hour-glass are exclusively composed of diamond dust. There is really excellent character drawing in Mr. Cliff, Vestryman, Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, and Income Tax "Commissioner"—I suppose collector is meant—and proprietor of the Palladium Theatre; in Joe Vinton, the vulgar but good-hearted warehouseman at Blakely's stores; in Nellie Millsom, the débutante; and in the retired "chorus-lady," Mrs. Barker, her aunt. Some of the situations are excruciatingly funny; and, indeed, there is scarcely a dull five minutes in the piece; and the praise for all this belongs undoubtedly to Mr. Burnand and the clever artists who interpret his version of the "Mari de la Débutante." But the play itself is desperately weak and flabby, with a muddled plot, insufficient motive, and an inadequate dénouement. Blanche St. Clair, the capricious prima donna at the Palladium, who should be the romantic heroine of the play, is a heartless jilt, who plays fast and loose with the only real gentleman in the play, Lord Tandem; and when the long farce ends the audience are left in perplexity as to whether Blanche intends to remain permanently in a state of single blessedness, or to accept the hand of her feather-brained admirer, Pulverstock; or to marry the gasman. Were I a gasman I would have nothing to do with the unfeeling and uninteresting coquette. Miss Linda Dietz tried her hardest, with the aid of nods and becks and wreathed smiles, winning ways, graceful attitudes, and superb toilettes, to make Blanche less repulsive than the dramatist had made her. Mr. John Clayton has carefully studied every aspect of the by no means easy character of Mr. Cliff, the manager; and in my opinion his rendering of the character is a most successful one. Mawworm, Chadband, and the vulgar tradesman in "Our Boys," enter largely into the components of Mr. Cliff's character; but they were blended and developed most skilfully by Mr. Clayton. Mr. G. W. Anson's Joe Vinton was a distinctly original creation, full of fun and "go." Mr. Kemble as Mr. "Justice" Bunby, the warehouseman's uncle, a kind of Mr. Lillivick, without a Henrietta Petowker, has nothing whatever to do with the plot of the piece; but he was very droll. Mr. D. O. Boucicault is a decidedly clever young gentleman, and he capered about in a very entertaining manner as Pulverstock, the stage-struck admirer of Blanche St. Clair. Mr. Boucicault is as yet a little exuberant, and wants "presence;" but when he has toned down a little, and put some more ballast in the car of his very volatile balloon, he will be a welcome recruit to the dramatic ranks. Miss Lottie Venn sang and acted to admiration as Nellie Millsom; and Mrs. Leigh was admirable as Mrs. Barker. Why Miss Meador should have been induced to disguise her pretty face and form, and hide all her comeliness and sprightliness under the rugs and wrinkles of a horribly deaf and rheumatic old charwoman, I cannot for the life of me determine; save on the ground that young and good-looking people are sometimes fond of playing at being old and ugly. They think it quite a comical thing to be old. They will cease to see the fun of the thing when age really comes upon them.

"The Manager" was preceded by a very artistically-written lever de rideau called "My Little Girl." The author is Mr. D. O. Boucicault, and the little gem (for it is nothing less) was most touchingly presented on the stage by, among others, Mr. John Clayton, Mr. Boucicault himself, Miss Meador and Miss Carlotta Addison. I shall have something more to say about "My Little Girl" next week. G. A. S.

Next Tuesday, Messrs. Alfred Reed and Corney Grain will produce at St. George's Hall a new entertainment in two parts, entitled the "Head of the Poll," written by Arthur Law, the music by Eaton Fanning; and Mr. Corney Grain will give a new musical sketch, entitled, "Not at Home."

MUSIC.

THE CARL ROSA OPERA COMPANY.

Since the successful production of an English version of Wagner's "Tannhäuser," for the first time in this country (as recorded by us last week), the performances at Her Majesty's Theatre have included its repetition; the only hearing, this season, of Sir J. Benedict's "Lily of Killarney;" and "Faust" for the first time at this series. The cast of Sir J. Benedict's opera was an efficient one, having included, as heretofore, Misses Gaylord, J. Yorke, and G. Warwick, and Messrs. C. Packard, D. Thomas, L. Crotty, and C. Lyall in the principal characters. In Saturday evening's rendering of "Faust," Madame Fernandez-Bentham appeared as Margaret, and was well received; Mr. McGuckin having been a very efficient Faust, and Mr. Snazelle a picturesque Mephistopheles. Mr. Pew conducted on the first-named occasion, and Mr. Randegger in the other instance.

The announcements for this week were operas as recently given. The season will close on the week after next.

THE BACH SOCIETY.

The first of this year's concerts took place at St. James's Hall on Thursday week, when the choral performances were of special excellence. The selection was of great and varied interest, having ranged from the middle of the sixteenth century to the present day. Palestrina's "Missa Papæ Marcelli," a noble specimen of the early Italian Church style, was given for the first time entire, we believe, in this country. Anthems by Byrd, Greene, and the Rev. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, Bart.; madrigals and part-songs by ancient and modern composers; and a fine double chorus from a cantata by Bach, were all admirably rendered.

Miss Robertson and Madame Fassett sang, with much effect, one of Handel's charming "chamber duets" ("Conserve"), these artists and Messrs. Frost, Beckett, Shakspeare, Kempton, and Tremere having rendered the incidental solos in some of the full pieces.

Bach's sonata in E flat, for pianoforte and flute, effectively played by Mr. S. Kemp and Mr. Svendsen, and a sonata for violoncello by Boccherini finely played by Signor Patti, formed an agreeable contrast to the vocal music. The second concert takes place on April 26, and will include Bach's "Missa Brevis" in A—for the first time—and the third act of Gluck's "Armida."

The Crystal Palace Saturday afternoon concerts were resumed last week, after the usual interval allowed for the Christmas entertainments. The concert referred to was the eleventh of the twenty-sixth series, and the performances included the first hearing in England of the overture, a soprano air, and ballet-music from Mr. C. V. Stanford's opera, "The Veiled Prophet," a work that has been produced in a German version on the stage of the Hanover Court theatre. In the extracts given on Saturday there is much skilful and effective writing, which would be heard to greater advantage with the intended stage surroundings. The second of the ballet movements, an "Allegretto" in G minor, pleased the most, and was greatly applauded. The air, "There's a bower of roses," which has a touch of Oriental character, was sung by Miss M. Davies, with much refinement. Mr. W. H. Brereton (his first appearance here) was well received in his delivery of Handel's air (with recitative), "Sorge infausta." Miss Agnes Zimmermann gave an artistic performance of Sterndale Bennett's pianoforte concerto in C minor, and some unaccompanied solo pieces, other items of the programme not calling for mention.

The Guildhall Orchestral Society gave a concert at the Guildhall on Saturday afternoon, when Mendelssohn's unfinished oratorio, "Christus," and a very effective "Ode to Music" (for orchestra, chorus, and solo vocal quartet), by Herr J. O. Grimm, were well rendered. A cleverly written anthem, "Ponder my words," by A. C. Tattersall, a pupil of the Guildhall School of Music, gave evidence of the good course of instruction pursued there. Mr. Weist Hill, Principal of the Guildhall School of Music, conducted; and the performances afforded fresh proof of the great progress made by this important City Institution.

The specialty at this week's Monday Popular Concert was the first appearance this season of Herr Joachim, whose performances were of the same transcendent excellence as heretofore. In the first of Beethoven's three "Kassanowski" quartets, in a "Romance" of the player's own composition, in a "Caprice" by Paganini, and in a Prelude (unaccompanied) by Bach, the great violinist proved his undiminished excellence. Miss Marie Krebs contributed some brilliant pianoforte solos; and vocal pieces were well rendered by Misses A. Marriott and E. Millar.

Mr. Geaussen's second concert took place at St. James's Hall on Tuesday evening, when an interesting vocal selection was rendered by his excellent choir and some eminent solo singers. Mendelssohn's eight-part psalm, "Judge me, O God;" Spohr's cantata, "God, Thou art great," and some secular pieces, were finely sung by the well-trained chorists. The solo vocalists in the cantata were Misses M. Davies and McKenzie, Mr. E. Lloyd, and a member of the choir, who supplied the place of Mr. Oswald, in consequence of his indisposition. The three first-named artists also contributed to the miscellaneous selection, which likewise included Mr. Charles Halle's fine performance of Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata "Pastorale," and pieces by Brahms and Chopin. Mr. Geaussen conducted ably.

Ash Wednesday was commemorated by sacred concerts at the Royal Albert Hall and St. James's Hall. In the first-named building the Albert Hall Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Barnby, gave "The Messiah," with Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Orridge, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Signor Foli as soloists; the other concert having consisted of a miscellaneous selection, the programme of which comprised the names of Misses M. Davies, Santley, and Dunham, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Messrs. Maas, Santley, and Maybrick as solo vocalists.

The second concert of the Philharmonic Society's seventieth season took place at St. James's Hall on Thursday evening. Of the performances we must speak next week.

Messrs. Ferdinand and Hermann Corri gave a Matinée Musicale on Thursday at Steinway Hall.

The concert of the Sacred Harmonic Society yesterday (Friday) evening comprised a new "Te Deum" composed by Mr. W. G. Cousins, in addition to Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, and Mr. Arthur Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch." During Sir Michael Costa's illness Mr. Sainton acts as conductor.

Mr. W. Macfarren's orchestral concerts begin this (Saturday) evening, with a good programme.

St. David's Day is to be celebrated next Wednesday evening, at the Royal Albert Hall, by a concert of a national character, conducted by Mr. W. Carter.

Herr Bonawitz's "Requiem" is to be performed, with full orchestra and Mr. W. Carter's choir, at St. James's Hall on March 7, at a concert to be given, under the patronage of the Duke of Albany, Princess Frederica of Hanover, Princess Mary, and other distinguished personages, in aid of the funds of Princess Frederica's Convalescent Home.

The Sacred Harmonic Society has issued a report from which it appears that the losses incurred by its excellent concerts have been so great that the performances cannot be continued after the current season, unless guarantors are found to help to maintain the institution. Its discontinuance would be nothing less than a national disgrace, considering the great and wholesome influence it has exercised for half a century on musical taste in this country.

THE BIRMINGHAM TRIENNIAL MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The programme of this year's celebration is now matured in all its essential features. The performances will begin, on Tuesday morning, Aug. 29, with "Elijah," the concert in the evening including Sir J. Benedict's new cantata, "Graziella," a "Grand Marche Nuptiale," for orchestra and organ, composed by M. Gounod for the marriage of the Duke of Albany, and Mr. F. H. Cowen's "Suite de pièces" for orchestra. Wednesday morning will bring forward Gounod's oratorio, "Redemption," composed specially for the festival; and at the evening concert a new cantata, "The Holy City," by Mr. Gaul, an orchestral serenade by Mr. C. V. Stanford, and Berlioz's overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," will be performed. "The Messiah" will be given on the Thursday morning, the evening concert including the production of Herr Gade's new cantata, "Psyche." The performances of the Friday morning will consist of Cherubini's mass in C, Mozart's symphony in G minor, Brahms's "Triumph-Lied," and Beethoven's "Mount of Olives." The festival will close, on the Friday evening, with a repetition of Gounod's oratorio.

The principal vocalists will be Mesdames Albani and Marie Roze, Miss A. Williams, Mesdames Patey and Trebelli, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Maas, Mr. Santley, Signor Foli, and Mr. F. King. It is proposed to light the Townhall, during the festival, with the Crompton-Windfield electric light.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

(From our Own Correspondent.)

Paris, Tuesday, Feb. 21.

Every year at this date the praisers of the past raise lamentable cries, saying that the Carnival is dead, the traditions of the past forgotten, the anniversaries of the calendar disclaimed, the old French gaiety a thing of the past, like the promenade of the fat ox through the streets of Paris on Shrove Tuesday. There is much truth in these lamentations. Nowadays it is Carnival all the year round, and pleasure by order of the calendar has consequently disappeared, as an inevitable consequence of the spread of democracy and the generalisation of comfort. Why should people reserve and store up their desire for pleasure, to spend the stock only on fixed days, Christmas Eve, Candlemas Day, the jours gras, Mid-Lent, or Easter? The conditions of modern life are such that people take their pleasure when they feel inclined, and the Carnival exists no longer as the revenge, the Saturnalia, of long days of privation; it exists simply as a curiosity, a relic of the past. There are still masked balls at the Opera, at Bullier, and similar establishments, but the masks are paid to dance and divert the spectators, just as on ordinary nights the singers and acrobats are paid. The days are gone when d'Alton-Shée, a peer of France, went to the ball of the Variétés disguised as a skeleton, and when Gustave Doré appeared at the Opera as a Monsieur Doré with his face and shoulders covered with a coating of gold-leaf. This freak might have cost the artist his life. He was taken out of the ball-room almost asphyxiated, and the difficulty was to ungild this "Monsieur Doré." But that was years ago, when Gavarni and Chicard and Brididi were at the height of their glory. Now the Carnival is reduced to a few children's balls, a few advertising vans, a melancholy tooting of horns at the street corners, and a few masks, so rare that everybody stops to look at them as they pass.

The horn-blowing is one of the most curious features, as well as one of the most disagreeable, of the jours gras. It is only on these days that the sounding of the cor de chasse is allowed in the public highways. During the rest of the year the amateurs of the instrument dear to Saint Hubert descend into the bowels of the earth and indulge in their favourite amusement deep down in the cellars of the wine-shops. In every quarter of Paris there is some wine-shop where the horn-blowers meet to practise and take lessons on certain days of the week under the guidance of a professor, who lives by his profession. In the Rue de la Grande Truanderie there is a wine-shop with immense subterranean dependencies. This is the rendezvous of the "Amis de Saint-Hubert," and a veritable academy or conservatory of the hunting-horn. It is there, at the "Caveau de la Jeune France," that the annual competitions between the professors take place.

Before leaving this subject of the Carnival and its choreographic developments, I must mention the final disappearance of a place whose fame was almost as universal as that of Paris itself, the Jardin Mabille. On Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of this present week all the material of Mabille will be sold by auction—the dancing-salons, the chairs, the tables, the champagne, the jeux, the paraphernalia of the hermit, the zinc and bronze palm-trees, and all that strange metallic decoration that was one of the curiosities of the establishment. Like Frascati, Valentino, Château-Rouge, the Grande Chaumière, the Prado, and a dozen other famous balls, the Jardin Mabille is destined to be absorbed in the growth of Paris, and doubtless this time next year the land will be covered with splendid six-story houses. The Bal Mabille has existed for half a century. The founder of it was a fashionable dancing-master under the Restoration. It was then a modest affair, admission 50 centimes. The splendour of Mabille dates from 1844, when the sons of old Mabille reorganized the ball and started it on a splendid footing with gas-lights, fine music, and metallic glitter. One of these brothers, Charles Mabille, who died in 1858, was a dancing-master at the Opera; the other, Victor, was a poet. Victor died in a lunatic asylum. The grandeur of his schemes affected his reason.

The Exhibition of the Society of French Water-Colour Painters is the success of the moment, not so much on account of the merit of the works exhibited, which is not extraordinary, as on account of an incident which is destined to have its dénouement in a court of law. The incident is this. In 1879 M. Alexandre Dumas rendered a service to the painter Gustave Jacquet, then in rather straitened circumstances, by buying for 15,000*fr.* a picture called "La Première Arrivée," which was exhibited in the Salon. Some months ago M. Dumas sold this picture, as he had, of course, a perfect right to do. But M. Jacquet thought differently. He is of opinion that if amateurs trade in their pictures they ought to be classed as traders and pay a license. M. Jacquet forgets that his argument cuts both ways, and that, if anybody ought to have a license, according to French commercial law, it is the painters. With very few exceptions, all the French painters nowadays have but one idea, that of earning money. They are not artists of the French school, but of the Bank-note school. However, M. Jacquet determined to be revenged, so he painted a water-colour representing M. Dumas as a Jewish merchant clad in a caftan. This picture was hung in the Water-Colour Exhibition under the title of "Marchand Juif." M. Dumas immediately demanded a referee, and the caricature was provisionally removed two days after the opening of the exhibition. Meanwhile, several thousand people had flocked to see it; all the papers were full of the incident, and, to make matters more complicated, M. Lipmann, the son-in-law of M. Dumas, had smashed the glass with his cane and damaged the picture. Hence a scandal, a law-suit, and claims for damages.

In the political world nothing of great importance is happening. The Gambettist journals, in order to keep their hand in, have raised a cry of battle: "the return of the Jesuits." The alarm is entirely without foundation, but M. de Freycinet has nevertheless sent orders to the Prefects to be on the watch day and night. And so the Gambettists are laughing together over the success of their trick. T. C.

The returns of metropolitan pauperism for the past week show that 53,787 indoor and 45,778 outdoor paupers were relieved. The number of vagrants relieved last week was 718.

Mr. Arthur George Macpherson has been appointed Secretary of the Judicial and Public Department of the India Office, in the room of Mr. William Macpherson resigned.

The chair of agriculture at the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester, vacant at the close of the present session, has been accepted by Mr. Herbert J. Little, of Coldham Hall, Wisbeach.

Polling at Taunton on the 16th inst. resulted in the return of Mr. Allsopp, the Conservative candidate. There voted for Mr. Allsopp, 1144; and Lord Kilcoursey, 917. This makes no change in the state of parties.

The London School Board have received a report of a committee in favour of asking Parliament to pass a bill to utilise a large portion of the charitable endowments of the city of London for purposes of education.

1. Going to the meet. 2. Waiting for the "draw." 3. "Drawn blank." 4. "Tally ho!" 5. Full cry.—The Empress leading. 6. Thrown out.

A DAY WITH THE EMPRESS OF AUSTRIA AND SIR WATKIN WYNN'S HOUNDS.—SEE PAGE 184.

REGIMENTAL BALL OF THE HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

A DAY WITH THE EMPRESS OF AUSTRIA.

"Morning, Lennox!" was the salutation, as a man on a dark-brown horse reined in to speak to another, on a roan, who had cantered up the Row. "So you are back from Worcester-shire, and have a new mount, too?"

"Yes," was the answer, as he shook hands with him; "park hack and hunter. He was a known fine fencer and a water-jumper; and he answered expectations. Seen Gordon lately?"

"No; he is not in town. In Cheshire, so they told me at the club. Off, no doubt, to hunt up the Empress."

"She seems, so far, to have had a good time of it; a pleasing contrast from this time last year, which was a bad season, too, for me, as it made me drop some money. Why there's the man you mentioned, as now 'in Cheshire.' Gordon, by all that's good!"

"How are you, Lennox; and how do, Hesketh?" said Captain Gordon, as they drew up to him, where, at the rails, he was gossiping under the trees. "Still doing the daily up and down?"

"Seems like it," Lennox said; "though until three days ago it was on turf—away in Worcestershire."

"Same here. I, too, have crushed the daisies, but in Cheshire."

"As Hesketh told me. When did you return?"

"This morning, early. Business in town; and going back shortly."

"In chase of Royalty?"

"In the wake of Royalty, but in chase of fox."

"Then you really had a decent day?" said Lennox.

"Or 'morning,' rather, as the hounds left early. Yes, fairish. A twenty minutes' ring, with a run to ground, and a kill, after a very fast five and fifty." Then, pressed for details, he gave them thus:—

"You see, Whitchurch was the fixture, so in going to the meet there we got sold at starting, for, after doing the dangers of a road-side mob—tinkers and tailors, and cabinet makers—and shaving narrowly strange things on wheels, we got at last to our journey's end, and waited for the draw. But no sooner was Sir Watkin in the saddle than he nodded to Payne, and off we were for a five miles ride to Sandford! Thus, rid of the bulk of the hired-hack riders, and leaving the foot people far behind, we in due time reached the Squire's, where lords and ladies were as thick as peas, waiting for the Empress, who soon came up, with her gallant pilot, Major Rivers-Bulkely, and her pad groom, Healy. Then, having saluted her, the master signalled, and we followed the hounds to the Willows. 'Drawn blank!' was the word, but, as soon as uttered, a shrill 'Tally-ho!' proclaimed a find, and out the fox went; but, being mobbed at the start, I got thrown out, and did not get to them till Payne again found at Brown Moss, when, with a turn round the gorse, the fox went away, and it was 'Full cry, and the Empress leading!'"

"She really goes well, does she?"

"Yes, very well. Square set, light hands, good judgment, and good nerve; and could hold her own with the best of our English ladies. Well, quick the pace was, and I got well placed, as we left Ash for the Twenlows woods, and slightly checked. Then, buck for Brown Moss again; when, bearing to the left, over the Ightfield road, they settled to the scent, and the end drew nigh; and ere Reynard could reach the Rifle Butts, they pulled him down in the open. Then, as the pack went home, though but half-past two, her Majesty left for a run with her drag-hounds. Since then she has had, with some longer days, good sport, and is pleased with the country, of which I hope to see more in a very short time. Now, as you, are fond, Lennox, of a good pack of hounds, and know, when you see it, what is the finest of riding, you cannot do better than come back with me for a day with the Empress of Austria."

S. B.

THE HONOURABLE ARTILLERY COMPANY.

This ancient and efficient body of City of London Volunteers was honoured on Friday week by the presence of its Honorary Colonel, the Prince of Wales, and of the Princess of Wales, at the Regimental Ball which took place in the Armoury, City-road, Finsbury. Their Royal Highnesses came about eleven o'clock, when they were received by the Duke of Portland, Lieutenant-Colonel of the regiment, Major Taylor, Major Jones, Lieutenant-Colonel Barton, Adjutant, Captains Hesham, Durrant, and Rawlins, and Mr. J. W. Sherman, the secretary. The Duke of Cambridge, Princess Mary (Duchess of Teck), and the Duke of Teck, had arrived shortly before, and the Royal party proceeded at once to the ball-room, where a quadrille set was formed, the Princess of Wales dancing with the Duke of Portland, the Prince of Wales with the Baroness Bolsover, and the Duchess of Teck with Colonel Sir R. J. Loyd-Lindsay. The Princess of Wales wore a pale lavender-grey silk, with a demi-train, under tulle and lace sown with pearls and trimmed with frosted silver. Her Royal Highness wore diamonds and pearls for ornaments. In attendance on the Prince and Princess of Wales were Lady Emily Kingscote and the Hon. E. Tyrwhitt-Wilson, and among others present were the Marchioness of Salisbury and the Ladies Cecil, Countess Spencer, the Earl of Aylesford, the Right Hon. Hugh Childers and Mrs. Childers, Mrs. Wheeler, Major-General Higginson, Admiral Carr-Glynn, Sir Allan Young, Colonel Bateson (in attendance on the Duke of Cambridge), the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, and Mr. Sheriff Ogg. The scene was extremely bright and animated. The interior of the ball-room was draped in white and gold, with a frieze of red and white, and well lighted by gas from glass chandeliers; and as the upright supports of the roof were inclosed in plate-glass and mirrors were placed at short distances apart round the sides of the marquee, the ball-room seemed even larger than it really was. The red uniforms of the battalion diversified by the dark-blue tunics of the Artillery divisions of the corps, the scarlet and gold uniforms of many officers of "the regulars" who were guests of the hospitable company, lent more than the usual variety of colour characteristic of a military ball.

On the 16th inst. the Lady Mayoress (Mrs. Whittaker Ellis) gave a ball at the Mansion House, the state apartments of which were decorated with ferns and flowers, and lighted with the electric light.

Earl Brownlow presided on Tuesday over the twenty-second annual meeting of the National Rifle Association. The report alluded to the success of the last Wimbledon meeting in every respect save that of finance, and the chairman stated that the Duke of Cambridge thoroughly approved of the new regulations as to positions. Sergeant Gratwicke, of Exeter, to raise a discussion on these rules, moved an amendment to the report, which was debated at considerable length, several volunteers arguing for a relaxation of the new regulations. The chairman, Lord Elcho, Sir Henry Halford, and others gave cogent reasons for maintaining the new rules, and eventually the report was adopted. The Duke of Cambridge was unanimously re-elected president of the Association.

THE COURT.

The arrival of her Majesty at Buckingham Palace last week was disturbed by the fractious horse of an outsider throwing its horseman, but no serious consequences resulted; and the Queen during the afternoon gave audience to Earl Granville. Mr. Gladstone, from indisposition, was prevented having an audience. The Princess of Wales visited her Majesty, as also Prince Alfred, and Princesses Marie, Victoria, and Alexandra of Edinburgh. Princess Louise of Lorne dined with the Queen, and Princess Beatrice went to the Savoy Theatre.

Yesterday week her Majesty held the first Drawingroom of the season, as announced on page 194; and also paid visits to the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh at Clarence House, and to the Duchess of Cambridge at St. James's Palace. The Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and Princess Christian joined the Queen at dinner; and Princess Beatrice went to the Haymarket Theatre.

Princess Louise of Lorne lunched with her Majesty on Saturday; and the Prince of Wales visited her, as did also his daughters. At half-past four the Queen left the palace, with Princess Beatrice, for Windsor, being escorted to Paddington by a detachment of the 2nd Life Guards.

Divine service was performed on Sunday by the Rev. Canon Rowsell, at which her Majesty and the Princess were present in the private chapel of the castle. Princess Christian and her daughters Victoria and Louise visited the Queen.

Lord Kensington had audience of her Majesty on Monday, and presented the Address from the House of Commons in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Major-General Sir Evelyn Wood arrived at the castle, and was invested by the Queen with the insignia of a Knight Grand Cross of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. The Duke of Connaught was present. Sir Evelyn Wood and Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Sir H. Ponsonby joined the Royal dinner circle.

The event of the week to her Majesty has been the arrival of the Duke of Albany from Aroslen, with his betrothed, Princess Helen of Waldeck, who was accompanied by her father, the Prince of Waldeck and Pyrmont. The distinguished travellers arrived in Sheerness Harbour shortly after nine on Tuesday morning. Major-General Du Plat (Equerry to the Queen) was in attendance from Flushing, and the Dowager Marchioness of Ely, representing her Majesty, received the Princess on landing from the Royal yacht at Queenborough, and accompanied her to Windsor. Princess Beatrice met the Royal party at the railway station, and drove with them to the castle, where the Queen, attended by the ladies and gentlemen in waiting, received the Princess and Princes at the entrance, the bells of St. George's pealing merrily from the Curfew Tower.

Her Majesty has received from the Prince of Wales, as President of the Royal Commission of the Sydney Exhibition, a copy of the report issued by the Commission.

With the Queen's accustomed consideration for her subjects who are suffering, she had daily telegrams from Constantinople concerning the state of Captain Selby until his death. Her Majesty has also sent to Sloane-street making inquiries for Mr. Charles Villiers; and has sent sympathising messages to Sir Michael Costa.

The date of her Majesty's departure is fixed for March 13, when the Queen and Princess Beatrice will leave Windsor at ten a.m. for Portsmouth, embarking thence in the Victoria and Albert for Cherbourg, en route for Mentone, where her Majesty will sojourn at Mr. Hentrey's villa, this gentleman having also placed his residence at the service of the Queen during her visit to Baveno. The Court returns to Windsor during the third week in April, when, within a week after, her Majesty will receive the Duke of Albany's bride elect for her marriage.

Sir J. H. D. Villiers, Knt., Chief Justice of the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope, is made K.C.M.G.; Lieutenant-Colonel W. E. Montague, the Connaught Rangers, to be C.B.

The second Drawingroom of the season will be held by her Majesty at Buckingham Palace next Wednesday.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

Vice-Admiral the Earl of Clanwilliam visited the Prince and Princess of Wales on his return home from commanding the detached squadron, to give special news of the Royal Princes during their long and successful cruise. The Prince attended the second Royal Amateur Orchestral Society concert at St. Andrew's Hall, Newman-street; and their Royal Highnesses were present at the ball given by Lieutenant-Colonel the Duke of Portland and the officers and members of the Hon. Artillery Company at the Armoury House, Finsbury, yesterday week. The Duchess of Teck lunched with the Prince and Princess on Saturday; and in the afternoon the Princess went to the Saturday Popular Concerts at St. James's Hall. Their Royal Highnesses, with Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud, attended Divine service as usual on Sunday. The Prince presided at the final meeting of the Royal Commission for the Australian International Exhibitions held at Marlborough House on Monday. A children's party was given the same afternoon by the Prince and Princess to celebrate the fifteenth anniversary of the birthday of their eldest daughter, Princess Louise. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and the Duchess of Teck, with their families, joined the gathering. In the evening the Prince and Princess, with Princess Louise of Lorne and the Duke and Duchess of Teck, went to the Royal Albert Hall, and remained some time looking on at the fancy costume ball of the Bolingbroke Pay Hospital. The Empress Eugénie visited the Prince and Princess on Tuesday. His Royal Highness was present at the christening, in St. James's Palace, of the eldest son of the Earl and Countess of Rosebery, and stood sponsor to him. The names given were Albert Edward Harry Meyer Archibald. The Prince dined with Lord Rosebery at Lansdowne House. His Royal Highness, after holding the Levée on Thursday, dined with the Gentlemen at Arms at their mess at St. James's Palace. The Prince and Princess have been to the Lyceum and the St. James's Theatres. The Prince is one of the godfathers of Mr. Leopold de Rothschild's son and heir. His Royal Highness has visited Sir Michael Costa since his severe illness.

Autograph letters have been sent by the Prince to the principal provincial towns in the kingdom inviting their respective Mayors to attend the meeting on the 28th inst., at St. James's Palace, for the establishment of a national school of music for all classes.

The British Government has notified to the Khedive its acceptance of his offer of the Kasr-en-Nousha Palace for the use of Princes Albert Victor and George of Wales during their stay at Cairo. A special steamer will also be placed by the Khedive at the disposal of their Royal Highnesses for visiting places of interest on the Nile.

The first annual general meeting of the London Sanitary Protection Association will be held at the Society of Arts this (Saturday) afternoon. Professor Huxley, Professor Fleeming Jenkin, Dr. Acland (of Oxford), Dr. Andrew Clark, Dr. Lander Brunton, Mr. Timothy Holmes, Mr. Knowsley Thornton, the Hon. and Rev. Mr. Fremantle, and Sir W. Tyrone Power are among the speakers expected to address the meeting.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

SPAIN.

The King and Queen, accompanied by the Ministers of State and Marine, left Madrid on Monday night for San Lúcar, where they are the guests of the Duc de Montpensier, who has arranged a grand hunting party in their Majesties' honour. King Alfonso and the Queen will visit the fleet at Cadiz; and will thence proceed to Xeres, Seville, and Cordova on their way back to Madrid, where they will arrive on March 9. A Cabinet Council will be held on the King's return, at which the date of the reopening of the Cortes will be fixed.

ITALY.

On Monday night King Humbert and Queen Margherita honoured Sir Augustus and Lady Paget with their presence at a ball at the British Embassy. The ball opened with the customary quadrille d'honneur, in which the Queen danced with Sir A. Paget. The English is the only Embassy their Majesties have honoured with their presence this season.

The Chamber of Deputies has adjourned until March 2 for the usual Carnival recess.

Pope Leo XIII. appeals to the Italian Bishops to rouse themselves, to develop lay work, to protest in favour of Papal independence, and extend the scope and influence of the Catholic press. His Holiness is somewhat alarmed at the assembling of a Free Thought Congress in Rome, which must increase his difficulties.

The marble headstone erected over the grave in the Protestant cemetery at Rome, to which the remains of Joseph Severn have been removed, was unveiled on the 16th inst., in the presence of Sir A. Paget, the British Ambassador; Lord Houghton; and Mr. Walter and Mr. Arthur Severn, two of the sons of the deceased. Representatives of the Roman Municipality, and a large number of English and American residents and visitors also attended. The grave is dug beside that of John Keats, the friend of Joseph Severn, in conformity with the wish expressed by the latter during life.

GERMANY.

The Crown Prince has informed the Czar that it is his desire to be present at the coronation of his Majesty at Moscow.

The excitement produced throughout Germany by General Skobelev's anti-German speeches continues unabated.

The Lower House of the Prussian Diet on Monday, after a prolonged discussion extending over two sittings, agreed to the vote for the Secret Service Fund by 240 votes to 73.

Leopold von Ranke, the eminent German historian, celebrated on the 13th inst. the fiftieth anniversary of his election to a membership of the Berlin Academy of Sciences. Ranke, although the German Emperor's senior by two years, is still in the enjoyment of robust health and unimpaired faculties. He is the oldest Doctor of Laws in Prussia.

